for other concurrent insurance" while the other form provided for "necessary alterations and repairs and for additional construction, this policy to cover same, and for other insurance." All the policies contained the following coinsurance clause; "It being optional with the assured and the assured having elected to accept a coinsurance clause in this policy in consideration of a reduced rate of premium, the assured hereby agrees to maintain insurance, during the life of this policy, upon the property hereby insured, to the extent of fifty per cent of the actual cash value thereof, and that if at the time of the loss the whole amount of insurance on said property shall be less than such fifty per cent this company shall, in case of loss or damage less than such fifty per cent, be liable for only such portion thereof as the amount insured by this policy shall bear to the said fifty per cent of such cash value of such property. When this clause is attached to and made a part of a policy covering two or more items, this clause shall be construed as applying separately to each item of the policy." It was held that the policies which did not purport to cover subsequent construction covered property in the process of construction at the time they were issued, and that the other policies of like form issued prior to commencement of the work of construction did not cover such property. It was also decided that a provision requiring percentage coinsurance was satisfied, though such coinsurance did not cover all of the property insured by the defendants, it being sufficient in amount and there being no provision that such coinsurance should be concurrent and cover the property as a whole. The insurance policies being Wisconsin contracts, and the governing law of Wisconsin not being pleaded nor proved, and the Minnesota statute being without application, this construction was given without reference to the Minnesota statute or the local law of Wisconsin; also that the "average" or "distribution" clause contained in some of the policies, providing that the amount insured should attach in the proportion that the value of the property covered by the policy contained in each of certain places where locatake less than the amount of his loss and thus become a coinsurer for the difference. The defendant pursuant to its apportionment clause, is entitled to the benefit of all other insurance, whether made by another company alone, or by a contract between another company and the insured, by which, in case of partial loss, each stands part as a coinsurer.

"We think that the 'whole insurance' was $60,000, the face value of all the policies, and that the judgment appealed from should, therefore, be reversed and judgment ordered for the defendant on the merits with costs."

As to reinsurance and pro rata clause, see Home Ins. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co. 180 N. Y. 389, 73 N. E. 65, 34 Ins. L. J. 331.

ted bore to the value of all of it, has no application where the insured property is in one place.[9] Under another and earlier case [9] Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Boston Ins. Co. 131 Minn. 19, 154 N. W. 513, 46 Ins. L. J. 715. The court, per Dibell, C., Id. 720, said: "The defendants appealing contend that the provision for coinsurance could be satisfied only by insurance covering the whole property the same as did their policies. The question presented is not free of difficulty. It is entirely different from a question of concurrent insurance. A provision for concurrent insurance is a privilege extended to insured which, as usually framed, results in a forfeiture of the policy if the insured exceeds the privilege. A provision for coinsurance is an obligation imposed upon the insured to keep a specific amount or a percentage of additional insurance in force; and if he fails to do so he becomes a coinsurer to the extent of the omitted insurance. There was no requirement that the insurance be concurrent; that is, that it cover all of the property covered by the policies containing the coinsurance clause. The policies did provide that when the requirement of coinsurance was in a policy covering two or more items the requirement for coinsurance should be construed as applying separately to each item of the policy. The construction which we are required to adopt is one favorable to the plaintiff and one which will afford it indemnity rather than put it to a loss. We are not cited to authority, nor do we find any, which serves as a precedent or is persuasive as an argument. When the adjustment company representing the appealing companies made the adjustment, it made two computations, one on the basis that all companies contributed ratably, and the other upon the basis that form 2 companies paid all the loss. No question was made at the time that there was a lack of coinsurance, nor does it seem to have been suggested up to the time of action brought. This is perhaps of some, though not great, importance as a practical contemporaneous construction; but it in no sense amounts to a waiver of the provision in the policies, for at the time of the adjustment a nonwaiver agreement was signed. Nothing that occurred at the trial, as we view it, is of force as a practical construction, though so urged by counsel.

"In view of the rule of construction favorable to the insured, the uncertainty of the precise application of the language of the coinsurance clause, and the disfavor with which the law regards provisions for coinsurance the trial court properly held that the condition as to coinsurance was satisfied.

"The insurance contract under consideration are Wisconsin contracts and the law of Wisconsin is the governing law. They are not to be construed as Minnesota policies would be. Myers v. Chicago, St. Paul, M. & O. R. Co. 69 Minn. 476, 65 Am. St. Rep. 579, 72 N. W. 694. It may be conceded that the coinsurance clause would be invalid in Minnesota. G. S. 1913, sec. 3322. The governing law of the policies, that is, the Wisconsin law, is not pleaded nor proved, and we determine the question presented without reference to the local law of Wisconsin or the statute of Minnesota. We make this plain so that confusion will not arise in a subsequent construction of policies governed by the Minnesota statute.

"Three of the policies contained an 'average' or 'distribution' clause as follows:—

" 'It is understood and agreed that the amount insured by this policy shall attach in each of the above-named premises in that proportion of the amount hereby insured that the value of property covered by this policy contained in each of said places shall bear to the value of such prop-in the same state, if the coinsurance clause as permitted by a statute is attached to a fire policy and insurance is maintained by insured on the building to the amount which he is by such clause required to carry, in case the loss is total the insurable value as stated in the policy, and not the actual value at the time of the fire, is the basis of determining the amount recoverable under the policy. Where the loss is partial insured may recover the actual amount of his loss, and this cannot be based on the insurable value.[10]

§ 2496b. Effect of three-fourths value provisions: valued policy laws: concurrent insurance: other or double insurance: coinsurance: prorating.—The rule as to forfeiture for overinsurance will not be strictly applied to a policy on a stock of goods of fluctuating value under a policy permitting other concurrent insurance not to exceed at any time three-fourths of the cash value of each item covered.[11] And where a "rider" stated that since the statute prohibited it from taking a risk at a ratio greater than three-fourths of the value of the property insured it was a condition of the policy that the total insurance on the property was limited to three-fourths of its cash value, such clause constitutes a permit for other insurance up to said limit.[12] So other concurrent insurance to the amount of two thousand five hundred dollars is permitted by an indorsement slip containing a description of the property insured, with the amount of insurance thereon and the clause: "Two thousand five hundred total concurrent insurance permitted," bear-erty contained in all of above-named premises.'

"This clause has no application to the present situation. It can apply only when different portions of the insured property have different locations. If the policies had covered the superstructures on the company's docks across the harbor at Duluth along with those on its Superior docks, there might then be an argument for its application. There is none now."

[10] Oppenheim v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 119 Minn. 417, 138 N. W. 777, 42 Ins. L. J. 297. "We hold that the mere attaching of the 'coinsurance' clause to the policy, though with the consent of both parties to the contract, did not wipe out the 'insurable value' stated in the policy, and render the policy an open one, and that under such a clause, the insurer becomes a coinsurer within the purview of G. L. 1907, c. 446, only where he fails to take out concurrent insurance to the amount specified and required by such clause."—Brown, J. Rev. Laws 1905, sec. 1642, as am'd by Gen. Laws 1907, c. 446, Rev. L. Supp. 1909, sec. 1642.

[11] Burge Bros. v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 106 Mo. App. 244, 80 S. W. 342.

[12] Sheets v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 153 Mo. App. 620, 135 S. W. 80, 40 Ins. L. 955; Teter v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 74 W. Va. 344, 82 S. E. 40. See Palatine Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 Fed. 111, 34 C. C. A. 236, 28 Ins. L. J. 461; Wynn v. Caledonian Ins. Co. 100 S. Car. 46, 84 S. E. 306.

On statutory provisions regulating valued policies as affecting provisions of policy for prorating loss in case of concurrent insurance, see note in L.R.A.1916F, 997.

ing the same date as, and attached to, a policy of insurance for two thousand five hundred dollars on two buildings, which contained a clause providing that the entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed on the policy or added thereto, should be void if the insured had or thereafter procured any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on the property covered by the policy; notwithstanding another indorsement slip stating the insurable value of the property to be two thousand five hundred dollars, this being attached in compliance with a Florida statute requiring the insurable value to be fixed by the insurer and written in the policy, as the measure of damages in case of loss.[13]

Under a Mississippi decision its valued policy law cannot be waived by coinsurance, three-quarters valuation, or any other clauses which are contrary to the statute and, therefore, a policy stipulation would not be sustained which provided that in consideration of a reduction of rates insured should maintain insurance to an amount not less than the cash value of the whole property insured, and that in case of loss insurer should be liable only for such proportion of the whole loss which should not exceed said actual market value as the amount of the insurance bore to the cash market value of the whole property at the time of the fire, and it was also stipulated that assured agreed to waive the benefits of the statute which provided that in case of total loss of property, real or personal, except personal property constantly changing in specifics and quantity, the insurer should pay the amount named in the policy; and in case of partial loss of such property, insured must pay the amount of actual damage, not to exceed the policy amount, and that insurer should not be permitted to deny that the insured property was worth at the time of issuing the policy the full value upon which the insurance was calculated, with the same prohibition as to a three-quarters valuation clause.[14] A coinsurance clause is also void as being contrary to the valued policy law making insurer liable for the full estimated value of the property insured, as said value is fixed in the policy, and providing that in case of partial loss insurer's liability shall not exceed insured's actual loss, except that the estimated value may be diminished to the extent of its depreciation.[15] So where a provision of a statutory policy not only conclusively fixes the value of insured real property, but also establishes conclusively the absolute liability of insurer to pay a fixed sum, such standard policy fixes the value of real property on total loss by the total amount of all the insurance, that is, the amount of the policy and the concurrent insurance, and the total amount of the loss is the sum total of all the insurance, and each insurer must pay, as to such loss, no more and no less than the amount of his own policy, and, therefore, the different policies cannot be prorated as the value of the property is conclusively fixed at a sum equal to the loss, and this was so held although the code provided in case of double insurance for ratable contribution, as the case was not one of double insurance.[16]

[13] L'Engle v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 48 Fla. 82, 67 L.R.A. 581, 111 Am. St. Rep. 70, 37 So. 462; Fla. act May 31, 1899, c. 4677, p. 31.

[14] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Shlenker, 80 Miss. 667, 32 So. 155, 31 Ins. L. J. 938, under Laws 1896, c. 56, amd'g L. 1894, c. 63. See Darden v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 109 Miss. 501, 68 So. 485, L. 1912, c. 224.

[15] Sachs v. London & Lancashire

Under the valued policy statute of Louisiana, however, a stipulation for coinsurance may be validly made and is not against public policy.[17] And a coinsurance clause does not contravene a statute which provides for a recovery of the full amount of the loss, provided it is within the amount insured, but that if there are several policies on the same property a pro rata recovery as to the insured amount may be had from each insurer and also providing that all stipulations in such policies to the contrary shall be void.[18] And where by statute insurers are limited to writing policies for not more than the value of the property which value is to be stated in the policy and to be fixed before or at the time it is issued, and it also provides for contributive insurance and that if the aggregate of all the insurance exceeds such fixed value then each insurer shall be liable pro rata in case of total or partial loss, it was held that the policy sued on should be prorated with other insurance.[19]

§ 2497. Where policies of different dates attach and property subsequently diminished.—If several policies of different dates are issued by different insurers and all of the policies have attached, and if subsequently the property is so diminished that at the time of the loss the amount of insurance in the earlier policies will fully cover the property insured, the question has arisen whether the first insurer is liable to the full amount of the policy, or whether he can claim contribution from the subsequent underwriters. As we have seen, the common law is now settled both in England and the United States that the insurer may recover from Fire Ins. Co. of London, 113 Ky. 88, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2397, 67 S. W. 23, 31 Ins. L. J. 426.

[16] Lawver v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 25 S. Dak. 549, 127 N. W. 615, 39 Ins. L. J. 1588; Sess. L. 1905, c. 126; Code secs. 1877, 1878.

[17] Simon v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 120 La. 477, 45 So. 396, act La. 1900, p. 209, No. 135.

[18] Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Pekor, 106 Ga. 1, 31 S. E. 779, 28 Ins. L. J. 953, Code sec. 2110.

[19] Cave v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 57 S. Car. 357, 35 S. E. 577, 29 Ins. L. J. 452, 22 Stat. at L. p. 113.

any underwriter the amount of loss to the full extent of the policy, and that the insurer may enforce contribution from the other insurers. Consequently, this question will now only present itself in those cases where the policies provide that the insurers shall only be liable for the deficiency between the amount of the prior insurance and the actual amount or value of the property at risk. In American Insurance Company v. Griswold,[20] this question arose, and it was there held that where goods are insured to a specified amount on a trading voyage under a policy on time, and the value of the whole cargo exceeds the sum insured, the insurer is liable to the full amount of the subscription if after landing a portion of the cargo in safety the residue is totally lost by one of the perils insured against, provided that at the time of the loss the goods on board equaled in amount the sum insured, and the subsequent insurers are not liable for contribution. The facts were as follows: Goods to the value of forty-seven thousand and ninety-six dollars were shipped on board a vessel for South America; the plaintiff in error insured the cargo for twenty thousand dollars by a policy containing the American clause. Subsequently, other insurance was effected in other companies, one policy being for ten thousand dollars and the other for fifteen thousand dollars. All were for eighteen months, and were similar to the prior policy in all respects except date. The policies all attached. Before the vessel reached the end of the voyage she was seized, having already disposed of her cargo to the amount of twenty-one thousand dollars. The loss was apportioned by an underwriter in proportion to the amount each had underwritten. The two latter companies paid, but the American refused to. An action was brought in the supreme court, and was again referred by consent to a broker for adjustment, who subsequently submitted it to the court of errors for decision. The insurers claimed they were only liable in proportion to the amount which their policy (twenty thousand dollars) bore to the value of the entire property when the insurance was effected, which was forty-seven thousand and ninety-six dollars.

This case was considered at great length, and presents an elaborate discussion of the principles involved, and was concurred in by a large majority of the court. Senators Jones and Tracy only dissented, while twenty senators concurred in the opinion. Mr. Phillips criticizes this decision [1] and asserts that the better doctrine is, that in such case, the loss shall "be ratably apportioned to the several policies." From a careful examination of the case, however, and of the opinion there given both by the majority and the minority of the court, we must say that the opinion as expressed by the majority seems clearly the better law. In those cases where the policies contain such a clause as was before the court for construction, it would hardly seem that any other rule could properly be applied than was there stated by the court. The clause in question provided for a ratable return of premium for so much as they should be by prior insurance exonerated from, and also provided for liability without right of contribution from subsequent insurers. This clause is one in most frequent use and we fail to see how a different construction could have been given. If there were only a provision that the insurer should only be liable for so much as the amount of such prior insurance might be deficient toward fully covering the subject insured, and there were no further provisions as to the premium, or as to liability "without right of contribution" from subsequent insurers, then the dissenting opinion would certainly be of much weight. Mr. Phillips considers the clause in reference to the return premium as sustaining his rule, but with all due deference to that learned author we fail to see how it so operates. He says[2] "The construction that a diminution of the amount affects the policies proportionately seems conclusively to result from the usual provision that the premium shall be returned upon so much of the sum insured as the underwriter shall be exonerated from by the prior insurance, thus specifically providing for a concurrence of the exoneration from risk and return of premium, and requiring the return in case of exoneration." The provision in the policy is that the assurer shall be answerable only for so much as the amount of such prior insurance may be deficient toward fully covering the subject insured, and shall return the premium upon so much of the sum by them assumed as they shall be by such prior insurance exonerated from. We think that the construction contended for by Mr. Phillips cannot reasonably be given to this clause. If construed as worded and as apparently intended, the rule stated in American Insurance Company v. Griswold,[3] is the proper one. But we have the further provision of this clause as an aid, and the entire clause must be construed as a whole. The clause is this: In case of subsequent insurance "the assurers shall nevertheless be answerable for the full extent of the sum by them subscribed, without right to claim contribution from such subsequent assurer, and shall accordingly be entitled to retain the premium by them received in the same manner as if no such subsequent insurance had been made." The clause construed as a whole certainly evidences a clear intention to hold the prior insurers liable for the full loss, without right of contribution from subsequent underwriters. And Mr. Phillips, in speaking of this condition, says [4] "Under this provision the amount of interest in respect to the subsequent policy against the same risks is the excess of the value over the amount insured by the previous policies." This is undoubtedly the true rule in all cases, and it is in conformity to the established practice in this country. In marine insurance the liability of the several insurers for a total loss, whether actual or constructive, where the policies are not simultaneous, is in the order of the dates of the several policies; no liability attaching to the second or other subsequent policy except as to the excess of the loss over the amount of all previous policies on the same interest. If two or more policies bear date upon the same day, they are deemed to be simultaneous, and the liability of the insurers in simultaneous policies is to contribute ratably with each other. The insolvency of any of the insurers does not affect the proportionate liability of the other insurers. The liability of all insurers on the same marine interest for a partial or average loss is to contribute ratably.[5] Although, as noted above,[6] the rule laid down in American Insurance Company v. Griswold [7] has been criticized, yet we think it clearly in accord with the expressed intention of the parties, and both reasonable and just.

[20] 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399.

See marine ins. act 1906, of England, sec. 80, given in note 6, under § 2496 herein.

[1] 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) sec. 1261.

[2] 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 126. [3] 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399.

§ 2498. Presumption as to basis of settlement where settlement made with one of two insurers.—Where the insured, in case of double insurance, accepts one half the loss from one of such companies, after deducting certain set-offs, he will be deemed prima facie to have elected to adjust the loss against the other upon the same basis.[8]

§ 2499. Double insurance for "whom it may concern."—Insurers have no insurable interest in the property insured by them regarded in the light of owners, and therefore can have no action on a policy of double insurance made for the benefit of "whom it may concern." [9]

[4] 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 1251.

[5] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2642.

[6] Referring to Mr. Phillips criticism.

[7] 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399.

[8] Wiggin v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 145, 29 Am. Dec. 576.

[9] Alliance Marine Assurance Co. v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 8 La. 1, 28 Am. Dec. 117.

TITLE X.

VOID AND ILLEGAL INSURANCES AND EXCEPTED RISKS AND LOSSES.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

VOID AND ILLEGAL INSURANCES.

§ 2506. General principles as to void or illegal contracts.
§ 2507. Distinctions to be observed.
§ 2508. Sanitary inspection of buildings not within insurance law.
§ 2509. Life insurance a valid contract.
§ 2509a. Policy payable to "estate" valid.
§ 2509b. Policy on life of minor.
§ 2509c. Policy issued to person over age limit: statute.
§ 2509d. Insurance without insured's consent.
§ 2510. Stipulation valid suspending policy while matured premium note remains unpaid.
§ 2511. Waiver of condition rendering policy void from inception: title insurance.
§ 2512. Insurance contract based on fraud invalid.
§ 2513. Marriage insurance.
§ 2514. Constitutionality of statute regulating printing conditions in policies.
§ 2515. Statute requiring insurer to pay losses in full constitutional.
§ 2516. Illegality of contract insuring mercantile credits.
§ 2517. When insurance of growing grain ultra vires.
§ 2518. When endowment insurance by beneficiary association ultra vires.
§ 2519. Stipulations limiting place of bringing suits: ousting courts of jurisdiction.
§ 2520. Statute may affect right of recovery by enlarging rights of assured under its stipulations.
§ 2521. Where assured has no such interest as statute requires.
§ 2522. Navigation and convoy acts of England.
§ 2523. Effect upon valid contract of statute laying embargo.
§ 2524. Effect of subsequently enacted statutes upon void or illegal insurances.

§ 2525. Whether policy void: stamp, when required by statute.
§ 2526. Engaging in trade in expectation of repeal of existing law interdicting it.
§ 2527. Effect of subsequently enacted prohibitory law.
§ 2528. Same subject: case.
§ 2529. (Omitted).
§ 2530. Effect of arbitration clauses.
§ 2531. Insurances contrary to policy of the law: public policy.
§ 2531a. Insurance against capital conviction or execution for crime is void.
§ 2531b. Fidelity guaranty: validity of.
§ 2531c. Usury.
§ 2532. Condition upholding suicide is void.
§ 2533. Insurance by common carrier against losses from negligence, etc., not against public policy.
§ 2534. Policy executed on Sunday.
§ 2535. Newspaper company cannot carry on accident insurance business.
§ 2536. Where traffic insured unlawful, or unlawful business carried on upon insured property: fire risk.
§ 2537. Illegal use of property when susceptible of legitimate use: public policy.
§ 2538. Illegal occupation of insured: life risk.
§ 2539. Goods the importation or exportation of which are prohibited.
§ 2540. Trade prohibited by foreign laws: effect of treaties.
§ 2541. Exportation otherwise legal may become illegal by subsequent execution of agreement in evasion of revenue laws.
§ 2542. Effect of prohibitory statute imposing penalty: collateral acts.
§ 2543. Trade which would otherwise be invalid because interdicted may be valid through necessity.
§ 2544. Contract of indemnity against embargo: when valid.
§ 2545. Effect of violation of embargo.
§ 2546. Cargo procured with proceeds of former illegal cargo: prior separate voyage illegal.
§ 2547. Trade with enemy: prior valid character of cargo.
§ 2548. Where prior part of same voyage is illegal.
§ 2549. Illegality after risk attaches "at and from."
§ 2550. Where subsequent part of same voyage is illegal.
§ 2551. Effect of partial illegality upon contract.
§ 2552. Last rule qualified where illegality removed as to part of cargo by permission of government.
§ 2553. Partial illegality: shipowners under same policy.
§ 2554. Insurance by common agent covering goods of hostile and neutral owner.
§ 2555. Effect of illegal employment of ship where neutral goods transported therein.

§ 2556. Goods of several owners under same policy effected by common agent.
§ 2557. Transportation by same vessel: lawful and unlawful goods.
§ 2558. Effect of intention to do illegal act.
§ 2559. Trade with enemy, absence of intent to violate law no excuse.
§ 2560. When possibility of executing illegal intention is removed.
§ 2561. Insurance upon a cartel ship while employed as such.
§ 2562. Insurance to ports some hostile some not.
§ 2563. Contract excepting interdicted port unlawful.
§ 2564. Subject of one or two or more allied powers may not trade with common enemy.
§ 2565. Trade with port occupied by enemy's forces: power of government to determine what are hostile relations.
§ 2566. Illegality to which insurer is in privity may affect his rights.
§ 2567. Goods shipped to neutral port.
§ 2568. Insurances on contraband of war.
§ 2569. What articles contraband of war.
§ 2569a. Same subject: British Orders in Council, etc.
§ 2570. Definition of license and authority conferred thereby.
§ 2571. By what authority license granted.
§ 2572. Misdescription of land on which building located does not avoid policy.
§ 2573. When failure to name destination does not avoid marine risk.
§ 2574. Policy to himself by agent of insurer and receiver void.

§ 2506. General principles as to void or illegal contracts.—(a) As we have noted elsewhere, contracts are presumed to be made with reference to the laws and constitution of the land existing and in force at the time the contract is entered into, so far as such laws are applicable, and also with reference to valid and subsisting commercial treaties between this country and foreign states, so far as the same may be applied.[10] So also the power of Congress under [10] See § 194, herein. As to the binding force of treaties upon subjects of the contracting powers, see The Eenrom, 2 C. Rob. 1, 6, where it is said: "Every treaty is a part of the public law of the country, which has entered into that treaty, and is as binding on the subjects as any part of their municipal laws," per Sir William Scott. The Neutralitet, 3 C. Rob. 295, 296; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th ed.) 18; Wilson v. Marryat, 8 Term Rep. 31, 1 Bos. & P. 430. But see Leber v. Fletcher, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 61, and examine note on this case in 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 693, as to how far existing law enters into and forms part of the contract. It is said in 2 Story on the Constitution (5th ed.) secs. 1383, 1384: "But much diversity of opinion has been exhibited on another point, how far the existing law enters into and forms a part of the contract. It has been contended by some learned minds that the municipal law of a place where a contract is made forms part of it, and travels with it wherever the parties to it may be found. If this were admitted to be true, the consequence would be that all the existing laws of a state, being incorporated into the contract, would constitute a part of its stipulations, so that a legislative repeal of such laws would in no manner affect it. . . . Although the law of the place acts upon a contract and governs its construction, validity, and obligation, it constitutes no part of it. The effect of such a principle would be a mischievous abridgment of legislative power over subjects within the proper jurisdiction of states by arresting their power to repeal or modify such laws with respect to existing contracts. . . . The law acts upon contracts. It performs the office of interpretation. But this is very different from supposing that every law applicable to the subject matter as a statute of limitations or a statute of insolvency enters into the contract and becomes a part of the contract; such a supposition is neither called for by the terms of the contract, nor can be fairly presumed to be contemplated by the parties as matters ex contractu. The parties know that they must obey the laws, and that the laws act upon their contracts, whatever may be their intention." " 'The obligation of a contract,' it is said, 'consists in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends upon the laws in existence when it is made. These are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and forming a part of them as the measure of the obligation to perform them by one party and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by which to ascertain the extent of either than that which the terms of the contract indicate according to their settled legal meaning:' " Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (4th ed.) pp. 349, *285, citing McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (43 U. S.) 612, 11 L. ed. 228; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 213, 259, 6 L. ed. 606, per Washington, J. "Contracts made within a state where an insolvent law exists between citizens of that state are to be considered as made in reference to the law, and are subject to its provisions:" Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (4th ed.) pp. 360, *294. See §§ 194 et seq. herein.

But notwithstanding any previous or existing treaty provisions on the same subject an act of Congress passed after a treaty takes effect must be respected and enforced (Alvarez y Sanchez v. United States, 216 U. S. 167, 30 Sup. Ct. 367, 54 L. ed. 432) and must be upheld when clear and explicit, even though such act does override an earlier treaty. Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 37 L. ed. 905, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016; Horner v. United States, 143 U. S. 570, 36 L. ed. 266, 12 Sup. Ct. 522; Botiller v. Dominguez, 130 U. S. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. 525, 32 L. ed. 926; The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. (78 U. S.) 616, 20 L. ed. 227; Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Pratt, 101 Minn. 197, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 105, 112 N. W. 395. See The Chinese Exclusion case (Chae Chan Ping v. United States) 130 U. S. 581, 32 L. ed. 1068, 9 Sup. Ct. 623; Head Money Cases (Cunard Steamship Co. v. Robertson, Coll.; Edye v. Robertson, Coll.) 112 U. S. 580, 28 L. ed. 798, 5 Sup. Ct. 247.

If an act of Congress has been wholly or partly superseded by a subsequent treaty with a foreign nation, like principles control as in cases of alleged inconsistent statutes, that is, effect must be given both if by any reasonable interpretation it can be done. United States v. Lee Yen Tai, 185 U. S. 213, 46 L. ed. 878, 22 Sup. Ct. 629.

the constitution extends[11] to the regulation of navigation, and also to every species of commercial intercourse between the United States and foreign nations, and among the several states; it further extends to all vessels, whether propelled by the instrumentality of steam machinery or winds and sails.[12] But, as we have stated elsewhere herein, a policy of insurance is not commerce under the Federal constitution, even though the parties reside in different states; the contract is merely one of indemnity. When Congress has, under the constitution, a right to legislate upon a subject, the exercise of the right by Congress renders inoperative a state law upon the subject.[13]

(b) In matters relating to the form or stipulations of the contract, the express provisions of the law may be varied from where they are not prohibitory and concern neither the essence of the contract, nor public property, nor good morals, but if the law is prohibitory, and relates to matters which are of the essence of the contract itself, it must be conformed to in effecting the contract.[14] The contract, therefore, may be void because it violates the prohibitory law,[15] or for the same reasons stipulations of the contract may be

[11] Art. 1, § 8.

[12] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 1, 6 L. ed. 23, per Marshall, C. J. See Lord v. Steamship Co. 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. ed. 224, as to how far this power is exclusive. See Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th ed.) 595, 720–32.

[13] Caldwell v. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. 1 La. Ann. 85.

Insurance business not commerce, see Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (75 U. S.) 168, 19 L. ed. 357; State v. Phipps, 50 Kan. 609, 18 L.R.A. 657, 31 Pac. 1097.

As to state regulation: insurance business, see §§ 327, 328a et seq. herein.

[14] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. ii. sec. 7, p. 48; White v. Connecticut Life Ins. Co. 4 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 177, Fed. Cas. No. 17,545.

That stipulations in violation of prohibitory terms of statutes are void, see Dugger v. Mechanics & Traders Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 245, 28 L.R.A. 796, 32 S. W. 5; citing Wall v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. 32 Fed. 273, aff'd 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. 822; Fletcher v. New York Life Ins. Co. 13 Fed. 526, s. c. 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. 837; White v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 4 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 177, Fed. Cas. No. 17,545; Emery v. Piscataqua Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 52 Me. 322; Oshkosh Gaslight Co. v. Germania Ins. Co. 71 Wis. 454, 5 Am. St. Rep. 233, 37 N. W. 819; Thompson v. Citizens' Ins. Co. of Missouri, 45 Wis. 388; Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552; Bammessel v. Brewers' Fire Ins. Co. of America, 43 Wis. 463.

Whether common and statutory law part of contract, see §§ 176, 194 et seq. herein.

When statute not a part of policy, see Equitable Life Assurance Soc. v. Babbitt, 11 Ariz. 116, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1046 (annotated on effect of statute providing for application of reserve to the purchase of extended or paid up insurance), 89 Pac. 531.

[15] See Greene v. Walton, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 102, 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 881. 13 N. Y. Supp. 147; Buckley v. Humason, 50 Minn. 195, 16 L.R.A. 423, unenforceable. So a contract may be illegal because contrary to positive law, as in case of a statute against insurance of lottery tickets; such insurance is, however, of itself against public policy;[16] or an agreement may be void both on the ground of public policy and because contrary to a statute;[17] or a statute may affect the validity of acts of the assurer, as in case of making assessments;[18] and a contract based upon an illegal contract is void, although in case of the latter contract money paid to one party for the benefit of the other may be recovered by the party for whose benefit it was paid.[19] And as to the form of the contract it may be instanced that a policy issued in the adopted name of the applicant rather than that given him by his parents is valid.[19a]

(c) In these and in numerous other cases noted throughout this work statutory provisions may naturally affect the question of the validity of the contract, and the right to enforce the same, or the rights acquired and obligations to be performed. But the contract must depend upon the laws in existence when it was made. These, as above stated, are necessarily referred to in every contract, and form a part thereof as the measure of the obligation to perform them by one party and the rights acquired by the other, and such laws are not retroactive, nor may they impair the obligation of contracts.[20]

(d) The Marine Insurance Act of 1906, of England, also contains certain provisions relative to the legality of contracts.[21]

(e) In connection with what is above stated, as to a contract being void because it violates the prohibitory law, we will state that the British "Trading with the Enemy Proclamation" of Sept. 9, 1914, was amended on Oct. 8, 1914, by an "Order in Council"

52 N. W. 385, 36 Am. St. Rep. 637; Arkansas Stave Co. v. State, 94 Ark. 27, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255, 125 S. W. 1001.

[16] Mount v. Waite, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 434. See 2 Story on Constitutional Law (5th ed.) secs. 1383, 1384. As to contracts in violation of statutes, see 1 Story on Contracts (5th ed.) p. 719, secs. 750 et seq. See § 2531 herein.

[17] Reichard v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 31 Mo. 518.

[18] Naill v. Kansas Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. 47 Kan. 223, 27 Pac. 854; Davis v. Oshkosh Upholstery Co. 82 Wis. 488, 52 N. W. 771.

[19] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Houston. — Tex. —, 116 S. W. 36.

[19a] Smith v. United States Casualty Co. 197 N. Y. 420, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1167, 90 N. E. 947. See §§ 177, 310 herein.

[20] Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 213, 259, 6 L. ed. 606, per Washington, J.; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (43 U. S.) 612, 11 L. ed. 228, per Mr. Justice Baldwin; Trustee of Internal Improvement Co. v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 112, 81 Am. Dec. 194; Hope Mutual Ins. Co. v. Flynn, 38 Mo. 483, 90 Am. Dec. 438.

[21] See sec. 3 (1), and sec. 41 of said enactment given in Appendix C, herein.

which prohibited transactions, treaties, or contracts with an enemy in respect to marine, life, fire, or other policy or contract of insurance or reinsurance, and this covered not only new contracts, but affected also those current at the outbreak of the war to which the enemy was a party and included those with an enemy having a branch locally situated in British, allied, or neutral territory.[22]

After the entry of our Country into the "Great War" the President of the United States, on July 13, 1917, issued a Proclamation, prohibiting branch establishments of insurance companies incorporated in Germany and engaged in the transaction of business in the United States, under the laws of the several states, from continuing the transaction of the business of marine and war risk insurance, either as direct insurers or reinsurers; also prohibiting insuring or reinsuring such risks with said branch companies, no matter where located, and, subject to certain exceptions, suspending existing contracts during the period of the war. There are also certain provisions as to the payment of premiums and return of premiums, the disposition of funds, of such German companies, etc. The reason, however, for issuing this Proclamation, as stated therein, is to prevent information of the movements of ships and cargoes from reaching alien enemies, whereas the British Proclamation or Order apparently goes to the illegality of such contracts in that [22] The British "Trading with the Enemy Proclamation," of date Sept. 9, 1914 (3 Statutory Rules & Orders, 1914, p. 326), was amended (Id. p. 329) Oct. 8, 1914, by the following Order in Council whereby "all persons resident carrying on business or being in Our Dominions" were warned "6. Not to make or enter into any new marine, life, fire or other policy or contract of insurance (including re-insurance) with or for the benefit of an enemy; nor to accept, or give effect to, any insurance of, any risk arising under any policy or contract of insurance (including re-insurance) made or entered into with or for the benefit of an enemy before the outbreak of war; and in particular as regards treaties or contracts of re-insurance current at the outbreak of war to which an enemy is a party or in which an enemy is interested not to cede to the enemy or to accept from the enemy under any such treaty or contract any risk arising under any policy or contract of insurance (including re-insurance) made or entered into after the outbreak of war, or any share in any such risk. . . . 5. Notwithstanding anything contained in Paragraph 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation, No. 2, where an enemy has a branch locally situated in British, allied or neutral, territory, which carries on the business of insurance or re-insurance of whatever nature, transactions by or with such Branch in respect of the business of insurance or re-insurance shall be considered as transactions by or with an enemy."

As to effect of subsequently enacted prohibitory law, see §§ 2527, 2528 herein.

As to effect of war on pre-existing valid contract, see §§ 289–291 herein.

That subject of one of two or more allied powers may not trade with common enemy, see § 2564 herein.

it places the making thereof under the classification of "Trading with the Enemy." [23]

[23] "[Marine and war risk insurance by the German companies prohibited]. By the President of the United States of America, a proclamation.

"Whereas, certain insurance companies, incorporated under the laws of the German Empire, have been admitted to transact the business of marine and war risk insurance in various States of the United States, by means of separate United States Branches established pursuant to the laws of such States, and are now engaged in such business under the supervision of the Insurance Departments thereof, with assets in the United States deposited with Insurance Departments or in the hands of resident trustees, citizens of the United States, for the protection of all policy-holders in the United States;

"And whereas, the nature of marine and war risk insurance is such that those conducting it must of necessity be in touch with the movements of ships and cargoes, and it has been considered by the Government of great importance that this information should not be obtained by alien enemies;

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the powers vested in me as such, hereby declare and proclaim that such branch establishments of German Insurance Companies now engaged in the transaction of business in the United States pursuant to the laws of the several States are hereby prohibited from continuing the transaction of the business of marine and war risk insurance either as direct insurers or re-insurers; and all individuals, firms, and insurance companies incorporated under the laws of any of the States or Territories of the United States, or of any foreign country, and established pursuant to the laws of such States and now engaged in the United States in the business of marine and war risk insurance either as direct insurers or re-insurers are hereby prohibited from re-insuring with companies incorporated under the laws of the German Empire, no matter where located; and all persons in the United States are prohibited from insuring against marine or war risks with insurance companies incorporated under the laws of the German Empire or with individuals, firms, and insurance companies incorporated under the laws of any of the States or Territories of the United States or of any foreign country and now engaged in the business of marine or war risk insurance in the United States, which re-insure business originating in the United States with companies incorporated under the laws of the German Empire, no matter where located.

"The foregoing prohibitions shall extend and operate as to all existing contracts for insurance and re-insurance which are hereby suspended for the period of the war, except that they shall not operate to vitiate or prevent the insurance or re-insurance of, and the payment or receipt of, premiums on insurance or re-insurance under existing contracts on vessels or interest at risk on the date of this proclamation, and such insurance or re-insurance, if for a voyage, shall continue in force until arrival at destination, and if for time, until thirty days from the date of this proclamation, but if on a voyage at that time, until the arrival at destination.

"Nothing herein shall be construed to operate to prevent the payment or receipt of any premium, return premium, or claim now due or which may become due on or in respect to insurances or re-insurances not prohibited by this proclamation.

"That all funds of such German

§ 2507. Distinctions to be observed.—In considering however, the question of illegal and void insurances, there is a difference between those cases where the invalidity of the contract rests upon some law which relates to the contract itself, and the rights acquired and obligations to be performed thereunder, and those cases where the illegality or invalidity rests upon some law which does not define, or attempt to define, the rights and duties of the parties.[1] There is also a distinction between an agreement to do a thing which cannot be performed without violating the law and an agreement to perform in an illegal manner a contract which can be legally performed. In the latter case the intention to break the law must be shown.[2] A distinction further exists between those cases where by the terms of the insurance it is made a necessary condition that the illegal act shall be done, or which are in effect insurances of an illegal traffic, and cases where the subject matter insured is susceptible of a lawful use, and concerning which no one can be held to contract concerning it in an illegal manner, unless the contract itself is for a directly illegal purpose. Collateral contracts in which no illegal design enters are not illegal because remotely connected with an illegal transaction.[3] In certain cases a contract may be valid, even though it is connected with an independent illegal transaction which it in no way is designed to aid companies now in the possession of their managers or agents, or which shall hereafter come into their possession, shall be subject to such rules and regulations concerning the payment and disposition thereof as shall be prescribed by the insurance supervising officials of the State in which the principal office of such establishment in the United States is located, but in no event shall any funds belonging to or held for the benefit of such companies be transmitted outside of the United States, nor be used as the basis for the establishment, directly or indirectly, of any credit within or outside of the United States to or for the benefit or use of the enemy or any of his allies without the permission of this Government.

"In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the District of Columbia this thirteenth day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second.

Woodrow Wilson.

"By the President:
Frank L. Polk
Acting Secretary of State."

[No. 1386.]

The use in this Treatise of the above copy of the President's Proclamation is permitted through the courtesy of the Honorable William C. De Lanoy, Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

As to license and authority conferred thereby, see §§ 293, 2570, 2571 herein.

[1] See 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 314.

[2] Waugh v. Morris, L. R. 8 Q. B. 202, 208. 28 L. T. 265, 42 L. J. Q. B. 57, 21 W. R. 438, per Blackburn, J.

[3] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124, per Campbell, J.

or promote.[4] There is also a distinction between contracts founded on a transaction malum in se, or which is prohibited by statute on the ground of public policy, and which influences the public welfare, and contracts founded on transactions prohibited for the benefit of particular individuals, as distinguished from the public at large, and which are not intended to affect the general welfare; as in case of a statute designed solely for benefit of the ship's crew, such as carrying a certain quantity of water under deck, and providing a remedy in favor of the crew.[5]

§ 2508. Sanitary inspection of buildings not within insurance law.—The business of "inspection and certification as to the sanitary conditions of buildings and premises" is not within the purview of the insurance law of the state of New York, and is not authorized to be carried on by a corporation under the statute providing for the organization of casualty insurance companies, and the attorney general may refuse to attach his certificate of approval to the declarations and charter which specify such business as a part of that proposed to be carried on.[6]

§ 2509. Life insurance a valid contract.—(a) A policy of insurance upon life is a valid contract.[7] And the validity of a policy or certificate constituting a contract between a benefit society and a member thereof is not destroyed by the adoption of some impracticable scheme for the execution of the contract.[8]

(b) Invalidity of rider: war risk excepted: life policy: partial illegality: statute. A rider is invalid, under a New York decision, where, although attached to the policy it does not comply with and is in violation of the statute of that state governing standard accident and health policies in that it has not been filed with or approved by the superintendent of insurance prior to the delivery of the policy and does not bear the signature of an executive officer of the company; nor is the rider made legal by the fact that assured signed such rider, as a provision of the policy which does not comply with and is expressly forbidden by the statute, cannot be made valid by agreement of the parties; and this applies where said rider provides that the policy "does not cover any loss

[4] Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 157, 10 L. ed. 105, per Story, J.; citing Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (24 U. S.) 258, 6 L. ed. 468.

[5] Warren v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 13 Pick. (30 Mass.) 518, 25 Am. Dec. 341, per Wilde, J.; Ward v. Wood, 13 Mass. 539, 546. See § 2542 herein.

[6] People ex rel. Woodward v. Rosendale, 142 N. Y. 126, 36 N. E. 806, 58 N. Y. St. Rep. 629, aff'g 57 N. Y. St. Rep. 447, aff'g 76 Hun (N. Y.) 103, 27 N. Y. Supp. 837.

[7] Lord v. Dall, 12 Mass. 115, 7 Am. Dec. 38. See Preliminary chapter, § VII. herein.

[8] Failey v. Fee, 83 Md. 83, 32 L.R.A. 307, 34 Atl. 839.

or disability resulting from bodily injuries caused directly or indirectly by any act of any of the belligerent nations engaged in the present European war." The illegal part, however, may be discarded and the legal part retained and the policy be enforced where the intent of the statute, by the terms of a subdivision thereof, is to preserve the validity of the policy even though provisions inserted therein which violate the statute are not invalidated by said subdivision; and in case the illegal parts have been issued in wilful disobedience of the law the party so issuing the policy is subject to punishment under the statute.[8a]

§ 2509a. Policy payable to "estate" valid.—A policy insuring the "estate" of a deceased person against loss by fire is valid and enforceable.[9]

§ 2509b. Policy on life of minor.—A policy issued on the life of a minor, payable to him if living at maturity, and his executors, administrators, or assigns in case of death before maturity, is not absolutely void nor are notes given by him for premiums void, although the insured has power to elect to avoid both on arriving at majority; nor is his written assignment of such policy during minority necessarily void.[10]

§ 2509c. Policy issued to person over age limit: statute.—A policy issued by a mutual life association upon the life of a person over the age limit prescribed by statute, is ultra vires and void.[11] Under a Nebraska decision fraternal benefit societies are not permitted to take members above the age limit and to do this indirectly by purchasing the business and risks of a similar society and consolidating both constitutes a violation of law.[12]

[8a] Hopkins v. Connecticut General Life Ins. Co. 160 N. Y. Supp. 247, 174 App. Div. 23, under sec. 107 of the Insurance Law as added by the laws of 1913, c. 155. See Letts v. Excess Ins. Co. 32 T. L. R. 361,—Bailhache, J. (considered elsewhere herein); Coxe v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 85 L. J. K. B. 1557 (1916) 2 K. B. 629 (1916) W. C. & I. Rep. 250, 114 L. T. 1180, 32 T. L. R. 664—Scrutton, J. (considered elsewhere herein).

As to standard policy; stipulations contra, additions, changes, etc., see § 176b, herein.

As to partial illegality, see §§ 2551 et seq. herein.

[9] Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5. "My estate" as beneficiary, see § 776 herein.

[10] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 63 Ohio St. 478, 53 L.R.A. 462, 59 N. E. 230.

Infants as parties to contract, see §§ 307–307b herein.

Infants as beneficiaries, see §§ 788, 808 herein.

As to warranties by infant, see § 1976a herein.

[11] Brenner v. Kansas Mutual Life Assoc. 6 Kan. App. 152, 51 Pac. 303. See Gray v. National Benefit Assoc. 111 Ind. 531, 11 N. E. 477. See §§ 1992 et seq. herein.

[12] State v. Bankers' Union of the World, 71 Neb. 622, 99 N. W. 531. Examine Catheart v. Equitable Mu-

§ 2509d. Insurance without insured's consent.—It has been broadly stated that insurance taken out by a person upon the life of another without the latter's consent, is against public policy and void, and generally speaking such a proposition ought to be supported on general principles. The cases which are generally cited as sustaining this assertion may, however, be divided into the following classes: (1) Those wherein the action was brought, not to enforce an illegal contract of insurance or any right arising thereunder, but was instituted to recover back premiums, assessments or dues paid, or in other words to recover money paid insurer without any consideration, upon the ground that the alleged contract had no inception and was void from the beginning; (2) where the contract was taken out by one without any insurable interest in the life insured and without the latter's knowledge or consent and, therefore, was within what are denominated as wager policies; (3) where the policy was issued by fraud to which the nominal insured was not a party and in case of assignment it was to one holding in good faith and not in pari delicto; (4) where the policy was issued contrary to the rules and regulations of the insuring society or association which expressly or in effect prohibited insurance upon another's life without his or her consent; (5) where the policy was taken out by the husband upon the life of the wife without her consent, or by the wife upon her husband's life without his consent; (6) where some prohibitory or permissive statute is involved; and (7) in cases where there is a question whether insured has consented to substituted insurance in place of a canceled or about to be canceled policy and, therefore, whether he has taken out other insurance. While these points have been considered elsewhere herein certain decisions which have been relied on as unqualifiedly supporting the statement made at the beginning of this section will be presented here for the purpose of showing in what connection such an assertion or determination was made, the extent to which it is of force and its limitations, and in accordance with all rules they carry weight only upon the points decided.

In an Indiana case the policy insured the life of one without his knowledge or consent, but it was held void and against public policy because of want of insurable interest in the life insured and in addition the statute made it a felony to knowingly secure a policy upon another's life without that other's knowledge and consent, but the case also involved the right of an assignee, induced by fraud of insurer's agent to take an assignment of the policy, to recover assessments paid which right was sustained as said assignee was not in pari delicto.[12a] In an Ohio case the action also was for a return of premiums paid and judgment was recovered therefor and affirmed. The insurance was taken out by the wife upon her husband's life without his knowledge or consent, or without his actual signature to the application, although it purported to be signed by him. He was never examined by any physician, never consented, did not know of the existence of the policy until about eight years after it was issued. None of the acts in obtaining insurance were in compliance with the rules and regulations of the society which provided that no policy on an adult life should be binding "unless the person against whose death it insured is aware of the insurance, consents to the same, is examined by a physician and personally signs the examination form after the answers in said form are recorded and not otherwise." So insurer did not incur any liability.[12b] In a Massachusetts case the plaintiff's claims that the policy was void and never attached, by reason of failure to comply with certain rules of assurer which required that assured should have knowledge of the insurance and should sign the application, was held to be sustained and that recovery of premiums paid could be had unless there was a wagering contract or plaintiff was a party to a fraud in procuring insurance.[12c] In Maine, however, the court does not go to this extent but declares that rules and regulations of insurer which make null and void a policy issued upon the life of a wife for the benefit of her husband without her knowledge and consent and examination by insurer's physician, and unless she personally signs the application, means voidable only and not void ab initio, and also that such rules and regulations may be waived as they are inserted for insurer's benefit. The case so asserting the law was, however, also one for return of premiums, the policy having been taken out by a husband upon his wife's life without her knowledge or consent.

tual Life Assoc. of W. 111 Iowa, 471, 82 N. W. 964.

As to effect of consolidation or merger, etc., see §§ 350r et seq. herein.

[12a] American Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bertram, 163 Ind. 51, 64 L.R.A. 935, 70 N. E. 258, 33 Ins. L. J. 491; act 1883, p. 203, sec. 9.

As to necessity of insurable interest in beneficiary, see § 729 herein.

As to necessity of insurable interest in assignee, see §§ 914 et seq. herein.

As to statutes, see also §§ 879, 1410c herein.

[12b] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Felix, 73 Ohio St. 46, 75 N. E. 941.

[12c] McCann v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 177 Mass. 280, 58 N. E. 1026.

As to insurable interest: wager policy, see §§ 894 et seq. herein.

As to return of premiums, etc., where insurance without consent of insured, see § 1410b herein. Same subject: statutes, see § 1410c herein, see also as to consent, statutes, §§ and it was held that the action could not be sustained.[12d] It is declared in a Kentucky case that it is against public policy to procure a policy of insurance on the life of another without such one's knowledge or consent, even though the party procuring the insurance has an insurable interest in insured's life, and this applies to a policy obtained by a wife upon a husband's life without his consent or one procured by a husband upon the life of his wife without her consent. But although this was the basic principle upon which the decision rested the action was for a return of premiums paid by the wife out of his money on a policy so procured on his life.[12e] Under an Alabama decision if the statute permits wives to insure their husband's lives for their exclusive benefit, a policy is valid though taken out and kept by the husband without the wife's knowledge.[12f] In a Maine case it is declared, per Foster, J. that: "'He had not applied for or assented to any other insurance, had no knowledge that other insurance was contemplated, and had not at the time of loss any right of action against the defendant company.'"[12g] This quotation is from a New Hampshire case and applies where a policy may have been issued in good faith by insurer's agent as a substitute for another, but there is no such acceptance as to give the policy operative force, differing from an acceptance of an application in that the alleged insured had no knowledge of the existence of the policy prior to the fire.[12h]

§ 2510. Stipulation valid suspending policy while matured premium note remains unpaid.—A condition in an insurance policy that in case a premium note is not paid in full at maturity the policy shall be inoperative so long as it remains unpaid is a valid condition, and is a good defense to an action on the policy for a loss occurring during the period of default.[13]

879 et seq. herein, and Grems v. Travers, 148 N. Y. Supp. 200, 27 Misc. 644, 44 Ins. L. J. 226, aff'd 149 N. Y. Supp. 1085, considered under § 879 subd. (s) herein.

[12d] Malhoit v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 87 Me. 374, 47 Am. St. Rep. 336, 32 Atl. 989.

[12e] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Monahan, 102 Ky. 13, 42 S. W. 924.

As to statutes exempting policy proceeds from creditors' claims for protection of wife and children, see §§ 879 et seq. herein.

[12f] Felrath v. Schonfield, 76 Ala. 199, 52 Am. Rep. 319; Code sec. 2733. See also §§ 879 et seq. herein.

[12g] Clark v. Ins. Co. of North America, 89 Me. 26, 35 L.R.A. 276, 35 Atl. 1008.

As to cancelation: when other insurance or substituted policy does not attach, see § 1655a, herein; when other or substituted policy attaches, see § 1655b herein.

That insurance by stranger will not constitute other insurance, see 2471 herein.

[12h] Stebbins v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 65.

[13] Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Garbacz

§ 2511. Waiver of condition rendering policy void from inception: title insurance.—If a policy contains a condition which renders it void from its inception, the insurer having full knowledge thereof from the recitals of the policy or otherwise at the time of issuing the policy, he thereby waives the right to insist on the condition, and this rule applies to a policy of title insurance, and where it appears from certain contracts referred to and made a part of policy that the insurer must have known certain warranted representations to be false at the time of assuming the risk, it waives its right.[14]

§ 2512. Insurance contract based on fraud invalid.—In conformity with the general principle that fraud vitiates all contracts, a contract of insurance based on fraud is invalid;[15] as in case of a life risk where the policy is delivered in fraud of the company.[16]

§ 2513. Marriage insurance.—A contract of insurance is in effect a contract in restraint of marriage, where an association agrees with a member that he will not marry for two years, or will pay a certain sum to his wife.[17] So a contract to pay a certain sum of money to A on his marriage with B, on condition that A shall give the prom-

48 Neb. 827, 67 N. W. 864. See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Coleman, 6 Dak. 458, 6 L.R.A. 87, 43 N. W. 693.

When stipulation is that policy void or risk suspended for nonpayment of note, see § 1209 herein.

Validity of condition as to forfeiture for nonpayment of premium note at maturity, see § 1205 herein.

[14] Quigley v. St. Paul Title Inv. & Trust Co. 60 Minn. 275, 62 N. W. 287, aff'd 64 Minn. 149, 66 N. W. 364.

As to waiver by delivery of policy; agent, see §§ 543 et seq. herein.

As to notice to and knowledge of agent; when insurer bound, when not, see §§ 515 et seq., 535 herein.

As to false representations, see §§ 1894 et seq. herein.

That warranties must be strictly true, etc. see §§ 1970 et seq. herein.

As to assurer's knowledge of facts; concealment, see §§ 1850 et seq. herein, also (marine risks) §§ 1806 et seq. herein.

[15] United States. — See Claflin v. Commonwealth Mutual Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 76, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507, per Matthews, J.; Alsop v. Commercial Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 451, Fed. Cas. No. 262.

New Hampshire.—Leach v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. 58 N. H. 245; Hersey v. Merrimack County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 7 Fost. (27 N. H.) 149.

New York.—Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Lumar, 1 Sand. Ch. (N. Y.) 91; Goix v. Knox, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 341, per curiam.

Pennsylvania. — Nassauer v. Susquehanna Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 100 Pa. St. 507, 509.

England.—Prince of Wales Assoc. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605; Barker v. Walters, 8 Beav. 92; Foster v. Charles, 7 Bing. 105, 8 L. J. (O. S.) C. P. 118, 31 R. R. 446; Haigh v. De La Cour, 3 Camp. 319, 13 R. R. 813, per Posanquet, J.

[16] Piedmont & Arlington Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610.

[17] State v. Towle, 80 Me. 287, 14 Atl. 195. When mutual, etc., societies or associations are and are not insurance companies, see §§ 344, 345 et seq herein.

isor "the exclusive right to carry the marriage benefit insurance" on A and B, is void.[18]

§ 2514. Constitutionality of statute regulating printing conditions in policies.—By a statute of the state of Virginia[19] it was provided that no violation of any of the conditions of an insurance policy issued after the date when such statute took effect should be a valid defense to an action on the policy, unless such condition or conditions as were relied on as a defense were printed either in type as least as large as that known as "long primer," or were written upon the policy, and it was held that such statute was legal, and not in conflict either with the United States constitution or that of the state of Virginia.[20]

§ 2515. Statute requiring insurer to pay losses in full constitutional.—A statute which provides that insurance companies shall pay losses in full not exceeding the amount of insurance expressed in the policy, and that stipulations to the contrary shall be null and void, does not deprive any person of his property without due process of law, and is not in violation of the federal constitution, section 1 of the fourteenth amendment, since the right to contract is not unlimited, but is subject to limitations imposed by public policy or the exercise of the police power, and is therefore to this extent the subject of legislative control.[1]

§ 2516. Illegality of contract insuring mercantile credits.—Under the Massachusetts statute[2] no authority is given to any insurer, domestic or foreign, to insure mercantile credits or accounts, [18] James v. Jellison, 94 Ind. 292, 48 Am. Rep. 151.

[19] Code Va. sec. 3252.

[20] Dupuy v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 63 Fed. 680, 24 Ins. L. J. 161.

As to statutory requirements, size of type, etc., see § 176e herein.

It was early declared that insurance companies should print restrictions of their liability in policies in type large enough to arrest the attention of the assured. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 404, 20 L. ed. 444. Cited in Levi v. New Orleans Mutual Ins. Assoc. 2 Woods, 63, 69, Fed. Cas. No. 8,290; Reaper Ins. Co. v. Jones, 62 Ill. 458, 460. And it was also said that insurance companies should declare their exemptions from liability in policies, in terms which cannot admit of controversy. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 404, 20 L. ed. 444.

[1] Dugger v. Mechanics & Traders' Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 245, 28 L.R.A. 796, 32 S. W. 5, per Beard, J. (a well-considered case). In support of the general principle the court cites German Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 36 Neb. 461, 19 L.R.A. 707, 54 N. W. 856, 8 Am. Rail. & Corp. Cas. 115; Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 47 Ohio St. 409, 9 L.R.A. 45, 24 N. E. 1072; Truss v. State, 13 Lea (81 Tenn.) 311; Taylor v. Taylor, 12 Lea (80 Tenn.) 490; Coleman v. Satterfield, 2 Head (39 Tenn.) 259, 264.

As to valued policies: statutory regulations, etc., see §§ 163 et seq. herein. See also §§ 1392, 3027 herein.

[2] 1887, c. 214, sec. 78.

and an insurance which purports to bind the insurer, in consideration of a sum paid, to purchase at a fixed price the accounts which during one year a certain business firm should have against ascertained insolvent debtors or judgment debtors against whom execution should be returned unsatisfied, is invalid. and although the illegality of the contract is not set up as a defense nor noticed in the court below, yet the court will not consciously lend its aid for the enforcement of such illegal contract, such question having been brought to the attention of the counsel on argument, and an opportunity to file briefs being given.[3] Outside of any prohibiting statute, however, contracts of this character are valid, at least in so far as they constitute insurance contracts.[4]

§ 2517. When insurance of growing grain ultra vires.—Where neither the statute nor the articles of incorporation of a mutual company authorize the insurance of standing or growing grain, and the statute by its terms expressly forbids it, the insurance of standing grain against loss by hail is ultra vires and void.[5]

§ 2518. When endowment insurance by beneficiary association ultra vires.—If the act under which a beneficiary association is incorporated provides only for payment in case of death, or for payments in case a member is disabled by sickness or other disability, such society is not authorized to conduct an insurance payable at the expiration of a fixed period, that being an endowment insurance.[6] And where the certificate of incorporation of a mutual

[3] Claflin v. United States Credit System Co. 165 Mass. 501, 52 Am. St. Rep. 528, 43 N. E. 293, per Barker, J., citing on last point Snell v. Dwight, 120 Mass. 9; Dunham v. Presby, 120 Mass. 285; Riley v. Jordan, 122 Mass. 231, 233; Low v. Peers, Wilm. 364, 378. See also Rosenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 64 N. J. L. 34, 44 Atl. 966.

[4] Lauer v. Grey, 55 N. J. Eq. 544, 37 Atl. 53, 26 Ins. L. J. 956. "No question has been or could be made against the validity of the issuance of the certificate of guaranty or policy of insurance to the appellants."—Lippincott, J.; State v. Phelan, 66 Mo. App. 548. See People v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co. 166 N. Y. 416, 60 N. E. 24. See § 339h herein.

[5] Same case Delaware Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Wagner, 56 Minn. 240, 57 N. W. 656; Delaware Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Knuppel, 56 Minn. 243, 57 N. W. 656.

[6] Walker v. Giddings, 103 Mich. 344, 61 N. W. 512, 26 Ins. L. J. 632, Laws Mich. 1869, How. Stats. c. 118, act No. 104; National Protective Legion v. O'Brien, 102 Minn. 15, 17, 112 N. W. 1050, 1051 (Rev. L. 1905, secs. 1594, 1703, construed. See also Calkins v. Burup, 120 Mich. 335, 6 Det. Leg. N. 182, 79 N. W. 491 (society incorporated under pub. acts 1869, act No. 104); State (ex rel. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Union of America) v. Orear, 144 Mo. 157, 45 S. W. 1081. Compare State (ex rel. Clapp) v. Educational Endowment Assoc. 49 Minn. 158, 12 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 N. W. 908. Examine Boyd v. Southern Mutual benefit company declares its particular purpose to be that of giving "financial aid and benefit to the widows, heirs, or devisees of deceased members," certificates which undertake to pay a sum of money to members on arriving at a certain age are ultra vires and void such company not being an insurance company under the statute and the plea of ultra vires is maintainable by such a corporation as a defense to an action for such endowment insurance, by a member charged with knowledge of the want of power to make the contract, and whose payments of assessments had not been retained by the corporation to increase its property, but had been paid to those entitled thereto.[7] Nor can mutual assessment companies levy assessments to pay endowment policies where the statute prohibits applying assessments to any other purpose than death losses unless the purpose and object of such assessment are specially stated in the notice therefor.[8] But in a Federal case certain "five-year combination option policies" were claimed to be endowment policies because "the company undertook to pay or make return of a specified sum of money at the termination of certain designated periods during the lifetime of the assured," but they were declared not endowment policies in that they lacked some of the essential features of such contracts and that they were not so far variant from ordinary policies issued on the co-operative or assessment plan as to warrant a ruling that a company restricted to business on the assessment plan exceeded its power in issuing them.[9]

§ 2519. Stipulations limiting place of bringing suits: ousting courts of jurisdiction.—If a marine insurance contract issued in a foreign country provides that suits on the policy shall be prosecuted only in a specified foreign court, such stipulation is invalid.[10] So stipulations generally giving jurisdiction where the law has not given it are, as a rule, invalid;[11] although clauses conferring such jurisdiction have been upheld, especially in case of a mutual com-

Aid Assoc. 145 Ala. 167, 41 So. 164 (ten-year policies: association no power under charter to issue or levy and collect assessment to repay certificate amounts).

[7] Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benefit Soc. 129 Ill. 440, 21 N. E. 794, aff'g 26 Ill. App. 141, s. c. 2 L.R.A. 420, 19 N. E. 710.

[8] Abraham Lincoln Mutual Life Ins. Co. (Opinion of Atty. Gen.) 35 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 585.

[9] Haydel v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 104 Fed. 718, 44 C. C. A. 169, 30 Ins. L. J. 289.

As to charter: corporate powers: ultra vires, see §§ 334, 350 herein.

As to powers as to other business, see § 350k, herein.

[10] Slocum v. Western Assurance Co. 42 Fed. 235.

[11] Hall v. People's Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 185, per Shaw, C. J.; Nute v. Hamilton Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 174.

Whether arbitration clauses oust courts of jurisdiction, see § 2530 herein.

pany or benefit order where the clause exists in the company's charter.[12]

A Lloyd's fire policy stipulating that no action shall be brought thereon except against attorneys in fact representing all the underwriters, each of whom agrees to abide by the result of such suit, is not invalid as an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the courts, but may be upheld as tending to prevent a multiplicity of actions, where the attorneys in fact are not mere agents, but are themselves parties to the contract as underwriters.[13] And requiring the establishment of the accidental nature of an injury by a gunshot wound before liability attaches thereto under an accident policy is not against public policy as an attempt to modify or control the procedure of courts of justice.[14]

§ 2520. Statute may affect right of recovery by enlarging rights of assured under its stipulations.—The right of the assured to recover under the contract may be enlarged by statute, whereby a less limited construction is given to warranties and stipulations and the effect of misrepresentations than would otherwise be given; as where a statute provides that neither misrepresentations nor warranties shall affect the right of assured to recover unless material to the risk and fraudulent;[15] or a statute may provide when a contract may be avoided for mistake, etc.[16]

§ 2521. Where assured has no such interest as statute requires.—A contract may not be enforceable because the assured has not such an interest in the subject matter as the statute requires,[17] or because a statute prohibits insurance thereof.[18]

[12] Eggleston v. Centennial Life Assoc. 19 Fed. 201, s. c. 18 Fed. 14; Arnet v. Mechanics' Mutual Ins. Co. 22 Wis. 516; Boynton v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 4 Met. (45 Mass.) 212; Portage County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Stukey, 18 Ohio, 455.

As to exhausting remedies within association and by-laws excluding resort to civil courts, see §§ 352–352c, 372 et seq. herein.

[13] Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. Law, 16, 55 L.R.A. 193, 42 Atl. 1063.

[14] Roch v. Business Men's Protective Assoc. 164 Iowa, 699, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 221 (annotated on validity and construction of provision requiring the fact or circumstances of loss to be established by eye witness), 145 N. W. 479.

[15] Kenton Ins. Co. v. Wigginton, 89 Ky. 330, 12 S. W. 668, 7 L.R.A. 81, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 539.

As to representations and warranties under statutes, see § 1916 herein.

[16] Sleeper v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. 56 N. H. 401.

[17] Southern Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lewis, 42 Ga. 587; Muma v. Niagara District Mutual Ins. Co. 22 U. C. Q. B. 214. As to wager policies, see §§ 148–55 herein.

[18] Murphy v. Bell, 4 Bing. 567, 1 Moore & P. 493, 6 L. J. (O. S.) C. P. 118, 29 R. R. 630; Edgar v. Fowler, 3 East, 222, 7 R. R. 433; Lees v. Smith, 7 Term Rep. 338; Booth v. Hodgson, 6 Term Rep. 405. For other decisions upholding the principles under this section, see under 19 Geo. II. c. 37, sec. 1; Mortimer v. Broad-

§ 2522. Navigation and convoy acts of England.—In England, there are certain decisions concerning the construction of certain navigation laws now repealed, as well as of certain acts arising out of the French Revolution, and continuing in force only during the hostilities which occasioned their passage, and it was held that traffic and voyages carried on in contravention of the navigation laws were illegal, as well as insurances on risks contravening the convoy acts.[19]

§ 2523. Effect upon valid contract of statute laying embargo.—If, after a valid policy has attached upon a risk which was valid in its inception and origin, an act is passed laying an embargo, the contract is not dissolved,[20] and the arrest or detention, whether the embargo be that of the assured's own government or of any other government, is a peril covered by the policy, and a valid ground of abandonment.[21] And in case of a vessel detained in wood, 20 L. T. 398, 17 Week. Rep. 653; under 6 Geo. III. c. 18, sec. 12; Branton v. Taddy, 1 Taunt. 6; under 14 Geo. III. c. 48; Dowker & Armour v. Canada Life Assurance Co. 24 U. C. Q. B. 591; Patterson v. Powell, 9 Bing. 320, 2 Moore & S. 399, 2 L. J. C. P. 13; Evans v. Bignold, 4 L. R. Q. B. 622, 38 L. J. Q. B. 293, 20 L. T. 659, 17 W. R. 882; under 30 Vict. c. 7, In re Arthur Average Assoc. (Ex parte Hargrove) 44 L. J. Ch. 569, 32 L. T. 525, 23 W. R. 939, 10 L. R. Ch. 542.

On validity of contract in violation of statute, see note in 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 612.

[19] See I Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 711, *708 et seq., 719, *717 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 695 et seq.; (where navigation laws in force are noted); Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) p. 936, sec. 748.

[20] Upon this point in general, although several factors are involved in the determination of such questions, it is held that a subsequent law making unlawful an otherwise lawful contract to do a thing operates as a repeal of the contract obligation in ordinary contracts: Bradford v. Jenkins, 41 Miss. 328. See Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 55 L. ed. 297, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297 (contract to issue annual passes unenforceable after prohibitory act passed); Edward Grey & Co. v. Tolme & Runge, 59 S. J. 218, 31 T. L. R. 137, 551 (contract incapable of performance by outbreak of war and embargo so that goods could not be shipped) contract also illegal as embargo was placed by Germany upon goods.) Compare State v. Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. Co. 99 Tex. 516, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 783, 91 S. W. 214 (combinations formed before prohibitory statute enacted).

Statute may provide that repeal of statute shall not affect any right which has accrued under it. Henley v. Meyers, 76 Kan. 723, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 779, 93 Pac. 168.

See §§ 2506 subd. (b), 2527, 2528, 2692 herein.

[21] Francis v. Ocean Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404, per Sutherland, J.; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 299, 318, per Kent, C. J.; Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 312, Fed. Cas. No. 10,423. See also Green v. Young, 2 Ld. Raym. 840, 2 Salk. 444; Touteng v. Hubbard, 3

port under a policy "at and from," the underwriter would be liable for the arrest and detainment.[22] If, however, the restraint will probably only be temporary, the assured may elect to prosecute the voyage when it is removed.[23]

§ 2524. Effect of subsequently enacted statutes upon void or illegal insurances.—An insurance which covers a risk void and illegal in its inception and origin, because contrary to an express law or prohibition of law, is not validated by a subsequently enacted law which expressly or impliedly repeals the former statute, since the validity of the policy must be judged by the statute in force when made. In applying this rule, however, to marine insurance consideration must be given to the fact whether the voyage insured is entire.[1] But cases of this character differ from those where the defense to a contract is based upon some information which does not affect the substantial equities, and which some subsequent statute in the nature of a retrospective law takes away by giving the contract a different effect than that which it has under the law under which it was made; for a party has no vested right in a defense of such a character.[2]

Bos. & P. 291, 302, 6 R. R. 791, per Lord Alvanley; Hagedorn v. Whitmore, 1 Stark. 157; Bazett v. Meyer, 5 Taunt. 824, 829. "From the moment of capture or arrest the owners are considered as having lost their power over the ship and cargo and are deprived of the free disposal of them; because in the opinion of the merchant his right of disposal being suspended or rendered uncertain is equivalent to a total deprivation:" 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *510, 563a, citing Lord Mansfield's judgment in Goss v. Withers, 2 Burr. 683, 696, 2 Ld. Ken. 325. See also Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 1, 30, 424.

[22] Green v. Young, 2 Salk. 444; Rotch v. Edie, 6 Term Rep. 413, 3 R. R. 222.

[23] I Duer on Ins. (ed 1845) 351, sec. 39. See Hadley v. Clarke, 8 Term Rep. 259, 4 R. R. 641, as to obligation to prosecute the voyage when the restraint is removed, the contract being a charter-party.

[1] Morck v. Abel, 3 Bos. & P. 35, reported in Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 647; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 373. The above rule is in conformity with that applicable to other contracts: Roby v. West, 4 N. H. 285, 17 Am. Dec. 423 (in this case the act was prohibited under penalty, and it was held not validated by the mere repeal of the statute); Banchor v. Mansel, 47 Me. 58; McCauley & Tevis v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; Gilliland v. Phillips, 1 S. C. 152; Murrel v. Jones, 40 Miss. 565. "It is also, at least, doubtful whether the intention to cover a future voyage prohibited by a law then existing but not yet in force would be sufficient to avoid the contract should the law be repeated before the contemplated voyage is begun:" 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 372.

[2] Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th ed.) 454 et seq., 460 et seq.; Pryce v. Security Ins. Co. of N. Y. 29 Wis. 270.

§ 2525. Whether policy void: stamp, when required by statute.—It is held that an instrument is not void for want of a stamp when required unless there be an intent to defraud the government,[3] and there are numerous cases which hold that unstamped papers are admissible as evidence, and also that Congress has no power to exclude unstamped papers from use as evidence in state courts, and that the law must be confined in its operation to the Federal courts.[4]

[3] Dudley v. Wells, 55 Me. 145; Mitchell v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Iowa, 421; citing Campbell v. Wilcox, 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 421, 19 L. ed. 973; Latham v. Smith, 45 Ill. 29; Hunter v. Cobb, 1 Bush (64 Ky.) 239; Sayles v. Davis, 22 Wis. 225, see cases cited in next note. See also Weltner v. Riggs, 3 W. Va. 445; Hitchcock v. Sawyer, 39 Vt. 412; Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 167; Howe v. Carpenter, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 382; New Haven & Northampton Co. v. Quintard, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 128 (contra to last case); Steeley's Creditors v. Steeley, 23 Ky. L. R. 996, 64 S. W. 642.

As to resettlement of estates based upon life policies: covenants to pay premiums and keep up policies: indentures when chargeable with ad valorem duties on full value of policies and not merely their value at date of indenture: under English Stamp Act 1891, sec. 104, see Northumberland (Duke of) v. Inland Revenue Comrs. [1911] 2 K. B. L. R. 343, 81 L. J. K. B. 240, 105 L. T. 485—C. A.

[4] United States.—Twitchell v. Commonwealth, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 321, 19 L. ed. 223.

Alabama.—McElvain v. Mudd, 44 Ala. 48, 4 Am. Rep. 106.

Arkansas.—Bumpass v. Taggart, 26 Ark. 398, 7 Am. Rep. 623.

California.—Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240.

Connecticut.—Griffin v. Ranney, 35 Conn. 239.

Illinois.—Bowen v. Byrne, 55 Ill. 467; United States Express Co. v. Haines, 48 Ill. 248; Craig v. Dimock, 47 Ill. 308; Jacquin v. Warren, 40 Ill. 459.

Iowa.—Bashey v. Ivins, 22 Iowa, 163.

Kentucky.—Hunter v. Cobb, 1 Bush (64 Ky.) 339.

Maine.—Dudley v. Wells, 55 Me. 145.

Massachusetts.—Green v. Holway, 101 Mass. 243, 3 Am. Rep. 339; Carpenter v. Snelling, 97 Mass. 452; Trull v. Moulton, 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 396.

Michigan.—Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170.

Mississippi.—Davis v. Richardson, 45 Miss. 499, 7 Am. Rep. 732.

New York.—Gustavous v. Dahlmer, 163 N. Y. Supp. 132, 98 Misc. 462; Moore v. Moore, 47 N. Y. 467, 7 Am. Rep. 466.

North Carolina.—Haight v. Grist, 64 N. C. 739.

Vermont.—Hitchcock v. Sawyer, 39 Vt. 412.

Virginia.—Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 75.

Contra, Charteers & Robinson Turnpike Co. v. McNamara, 72 Pa. St. 278; Charters Turnpike v. Bridge, 7 Alb. L. J. 56, and note on p. 49; McLean v. Skelton, 18 La. Ann. 514; Maynard v. Johnson, 2 Neb. 16; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th ed.) 592n, 2; May on Ins. (3d ed.) sec. 25. For English decisions under stamp acts, see Allan v. Morrison, 3 Moody & R. 70, 8 B. & C. 565, 7 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 106; Hill v. Patten, 8 East, 373, 1 Camp. 72, 9 R. R. 469, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 595; Caldwell v. Dawson, 5 Exch. 1, 14

§ 2526. Engaging in trade in expectation of repeal of existing law interdicting it.—If insurance is effected upon a vessel intended to be engaged in a trade in violation of a law prohibiting it, and some act, such as commencing the voyage, is done in furtherance of the illegal intent, the expectation that such law will be repealed is not sufficient to validate an insurance thus void in its inception and origin, even though such expectation rests upon a possible contingency that the law may be repealed.[5]

§ 2527. Effect of subsequently enacted prohibitory law.—An insurance covering a risk valid in its inception and origin is not rendered void by a subsequently enacted law making the risk illegal if the prohibited acts are done, unless there be notice, express or implied, in the sense that actual knowledge may fairly be presumed. Where such presumption cannot reasonably be held to exist, it would seem that it would be incumbent upon the party seeking to avoid the contract obligation to sustain the burden of proof, but the fact that mere vague reports and loose, uncertain rumors heard by one whose relation to the assured is not such as to make his acts or knowledge binding upon assured, is not sufficient of itself to subject the latter to the consequences of an intentional violation of the prohibitory act; such, at least, is the rule deductive from a New York decision cited below.[6]

§ 2528. Same subject: cases.—In the case relied on as supporting the rule stated under the last section a valued policy "at and from" was effected on December 18th. The embargo act of Congress of 1807 was passed December 22d, but was not known at the port of New York, whence the ship sailed, at the time of the commencement of the risk, although there was a vague and uncertain rumor of an embargo having taken place of which the pilot, it seems, had heard on the morning the ship sailed, but no actual knowledge of the embargo was brought home to the master or owners. The vessel a few hours after she had sailed, and while within the harbor limits, was detained by the collector of

Jur. 316; Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East, 273, 9 R. R. 438; Ramstrom v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 267; Rapp v. Allnutt, 15 East, 601; Examine 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 255 et seq.; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 31 et seq. pp. 45 et seq.

On effect of omission to stamp an instrument on which the law requires a stamp, or to cancel the stamps on such an instrument, see note in 48 L.R.A. 305.

[5] Gray v. Sims, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 276, Fed. Cas. No. 5,729, per Washington, J.; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 369–73, secs. 59–61.

[6] Walden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 310, 4 Am. Dec. 359, see § 2506, subd. (d) herein.

On effect of passage before expiration of time for performance of contract of statute rendering performance impossible, see notes in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 415; 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 559, and L.R.A.1916F, 66.

the port on the day he received intelligence of the embargo, and the insurers were held not released.[7] There are two views which may be taken of this decision. The rule above stated, although seemingly in conflict with the general rule excluding a showing of an ignorance of a law which one has violated, and although an intentional violation of the prohibited law would in the case here relied on have been a criminal act, yet the insurer's right to the premium had become fixed by the attachment of the risk, and there was no intentional violation of the law, unless such intent could be presumed under the circumstances of the case, and the rule seems a fair and equitable one under the circumstances of the case. Taking another view of the case, however, a question might fairly exist whether the voyage was not commenced with a knowledge of the existence of the prohibitory law and therefore avoided the contract of insurance. Again, the query is pertinent if an equitable exception be admitted to exist in such a case whether the courts would not be justified by such a precedent in extending an equitable exception to other cases, and the difficulty would arise as to where the line of demarcation should be drawn. Certainly, if the court was justified in its decision in this case, why could it not be urged as justifying the exercise of some like rule in other cases where a like departure from the rules of law would under the circumstances seem equally reasonable. It is true that any decision other than the one given in this case would have operated as a hardship against the assured, but that of itself is no sufficient excuse justifying such departure. We can see no difference between a case of this character and one where the risk commenced after the law becomes of force, but the assured has no actual knowledge of its existence. In the case in question the act of sailing violated the embargo. There is no difference between such a violation and the violation where the policy attaches after the law becomes of force and effect, and the assured has no actual knowledge of the law's existence because of its recent passage.[8]

[7] Walden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 310, 4 Am. Dec. 359. But see Tucker v. Jubel & De Longuamare, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 19, 20.

[8] Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (C. C.) 320, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433; per Washington, J.; American Ins. Co. v. Dunham & Wadsworth, 12 Wend. (N.Y.) 463, aff'd 15 Wend. 9; Dunham v. American Ins. Co. 2 Hall (N. Y.) 422; Tucker v. Jubel & De Longuamare, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 20; Morck v. Abel, 3 Bos. & P. 35; Lubbock v. Potts, 7 East, 449. Examine The Merrimack, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 317, 3 L. ed. 575; The Compte de Wahrenzoff, 1 C. Rob. 205, on the point of ignorance; 1 Duer on Ma-

§ 2529 (omitted).

§ 2530. Effect of arbitration clauses.—The question whether arbitration clauses in policies of insurance are valid has been, and still is, the source of constant discussion by the courts, and will be fully considered hereafter. It may be stated here, however, that in so far as such clauses are so worded as to be against public policy, or the language is such that they would if enforced have the effect of ousting courts of jurisdiction, they are invalid and unenforceable.[9] There are numerous cases, however, where arbitration clauses are so worded that they have been held valid and enforceable,[10] especially where the charters of mutual companies or benefit societies provide for a resort to arbitration.[11]

§ 2531. Insurances contrary to policy of the law: public policy.—An insurance is illegal if it be contrary to public policy, equally if it contravenes a positive law.[12] So it is held that a provision in a certificate of insurance issued by a mutual society, organized rine Ins. (ed. 1845) 354, 355, 402; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 134, sec. 218, n. 3, pp. 492, 493, sec. 907.

What constitutes embargo. See §§ 2762 et seq. herein.

Apprehension of embargo, see §§ 2776 et seq. herein.

Effect of embargo upon valid contract, see § 2523 herein.

[9] United States.—Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Morse, 20 Wall. (87 U. S.) 445, 22 L. ed. 365; Trott v. City Ins. Co. 1 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 439, Fed. Cas. No. 14,189; Crossley v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 27 Fed. 30.

Maine.—Stephenson v. Piscataqua Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 54 Me. 55; Robinson v. Georges Ins. Co. 17 Me. 171, 35 Am. Dec. 239.

Massachusetts.—Reed v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 572; Rowe v. Williams, 97 Mass. 163.

Nebraska.—German-American Ins. Co. v. Etherton, 25 Neb. 505, 41 N. W. 406.

North Carolina.—Pioneer Manufacturing Co. v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 110 N. C. 176, 28 Am. St. Rep. 673, 14 S. E. 731.

England.—Gilmour v. Caledonian Ins. Co. (Scot. Ct. Sess. 1891) 28 Scot. L. Rep. 899. See chapter on arbitration, herein.

[10] Hamilton v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 242, 34 L. ed. 419, 10 Sup. Ct. 945; Western Assurance Co. v. Hall, 112 Ala. 318, 20 So. 447.

As to validity of arbitration and award clauses, see §§ 3232 et seq. herein.

[11] Reeves v. White, 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 332, 21 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) 169, pt. 2.

On submission to arbitration as condition precedent to action on policy, see notes in 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1055 and 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 104.

[12] Mount v. Waite, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; O'Hara v. Carpenter, 23 Mich. 410; Roebuck v. Hammerton, Cowp. 737; Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1909, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 501, 1 W. Bl. 593. See §§ 148–54 herein. A stipulation that assured shall not bring any action to enforce the provisions of the contract except against the attorney in fact representing all the underwriters is null and void as against public policy, but the underwriter is nevertheless obligated to pay in case of loss: Knorr v. Bates, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1060, 14 Misc. Rep. 501, 67 N. Y. St. Rep. 592, aff'd 70 N. Y. St. Rep. 686. Insurance of lottery or lottery prize unauthorized: Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2532.

As to wager policies: public policy, see §§ 894 et seq. 914 et seq. herein.

under a statute which provides that the directors shall be jointly and severally liable for its debts, to the effect that such directors shall assume no liabilities by reason of the issue of such certificate, is void, as in contravention of the statute and of public policy.[13] So an agreement by a member of a building and loan association to insure his life and permit the policy to be used as collateral security for a loan to the association is void as against public policy.[14] But an annuity contract of insurance is not contrary to public policy.[15] Nor is a contract forbidden by public policy, which requires the return of a life policy, duly receipted within six months after default in payment of premiums, to entitle the holder to a paid-up policy for a proportionate amount, and providing that if this is not done, the policy shall cease and all premiums paid thereon be forfeited.[16] And it is not at variance with law or against public policy for a society or association to stipulate that the benefits shall go as directed by the laws of the order, and

[13] Greene & Veeder v. Walton, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 102, 13 N. Y. Supp. 147, 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 881.

[14] Tate v. Commercial Building Assoc. 97 Va. 74, 45 L.R.A. 243, 45 Ins. L. J. 243, 33 S. E. 382. See chapters on insurable interest, §§ 887 et seq., 912 et seq. herein.

On insurance on life of officer of corporation for benefit of the corporation, see notes in 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1020, and L.R.A.1915F, 979.

Accumulative endowment certificates, or tontine debenture certificates, or contracts of investment security, are fraudulent, contrary to public policy, and unlawful, where the premiums thereof as to maturity contain such elements of chance as to constitute a lottery, or where it cannot reasonably be expected that a reserve fund will be accumulated equal to the stipulated endowment values within the stated period without aid from lapses or appropriations from premiums on new business, State (ex rel. Sheets) v. Interstate Savings Investment Co. 64 Ohio St. 283, 52 L.R.A. 530, 60 N. E. 226 (although these certificates contained certain provisions covering principally dues, premiums, apportionment of funds, liability, being nonforfeitable, tontine funds, reinstatement, surrender value, loans, maturity of certificates, transfer, death of owner, authority of agents, loss, etc., the court declared that it was not "now called upon to draw the line of demarcation between such insurance and investment methods as have been approved by law and the schemes under consideration. We are not considering life insurance methods, tontine or other, building and loan associations or investment companies in general. We are only concerned with the question whether the methods of this company are lawful or not"). This case is cited and considered in Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599, 618, 62 L.R.A. 93, 120, 44 S. E. 320.

[15] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 184 Fed. 1, 106 C. C. A. 593, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 439, rev'g Smith v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 178 Fed. 510.

[16] Collman v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 133 Iowa, 177, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1019, 110 N. W. 444.

On effect of failure to apply for paid-up insurance within time stipulated, see notes in 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1044.

shall not be controlled by will.[16a] Nor is a policy contrary to public policy which insures against violation of a city ordinance by employees of a taxicab company.[17]

As very pertinent, however, to what is above stated, it is held that public policy is not a safe or trustworthy ground for legal decision; accordingly it is declared that "a contract or other transaction which is against public policy i. e. the general interest of this country is illegal;[17a] but public policy is a very unstable and dangerous foundation on which to build until made safe by decision." And this is applied in a case which holds that a contract of insurance is valid and not against public policy whereby a subject of a foreign government insures treasure with British underwriters against capture during transit from the foreign state to England even though war is threatened or imminent, and the foreign government in contemplation of war and in order to use the treasure in support of the war seizes it in transit but before war was declared between it and Great Britain, that is, there was a seizure by said foreign government of the property of its own subject; and such a contract is enforceable in an action in England against the underwriters after the restoration of peace.[17b]

[16a] Thomas v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 126 Wis. 593, 105 N. W. 922, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 904.

As to designation, etc., of beneficiaries by will, or disposal of certificate, or policy by will, see §§ 733 et seq. herein.

[17] Taxicab Motor Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 73 Wash. 631, 132 Pac. 393.

[17a] Citing Egerton v. Earl Brownlow [1853] 4 H. L. Cas. 1, 161, 195, 196, 23 L. J. Ch. (N. S.) 348, 18 Jur. 71, 24 Eng. Rul. Cas. 118.

[17b] Janson v. Driefonstein Consol. Mines [1902] A. C. 484, 71 L. J. K. B. (N. S.) 857, 87 L. T. (N. S.) 372, 18 T. L. R. 796, 7 Com. Cas. 268, 5 B. R. C. 810, 832,—Lord Lindley (who also refers, on this point, to "the weighty observations of Alderson, B., and Parke, B., in Egerton v. Brownlow, [1853] H. L. Cas. 106, 123"), aff'g (1901) 2 K. B. 419, 70 L. J. K. B. (N. S.) 881, 49 W. R. 660, 85 L. T. (N. S.) 104, 17 T. L. R. 604, 6 Com. Cas. 198, s. c. [1900] 2 Q. B. 339, 69 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 771, 48 W. R. 619, 83 L. T. (N. S.) 79, 16 T. L. R. 438, 5 Com. Cas. 296. See this case under § 299a herein. See also §§ 281 et seq. herein.

This point of validity of the contract and public policy was clearly in issue in the principal case as it was claimed by counsel for appellants that "the gold was seized for the purpose of waging war against this country, and a contract of indemnity against such a loss is invalid" and that the "contract is void whether or not it was made in contemplation of war." On the other hand counsel for respondents claimed that: "The loss of the gold was within the express words of the policy caused by arrests of princes and peoples. . . . The construction of the appellant would be an undue extension of the authorities by which the insurance of alien enemies is forbidden. The original foundation of the rule was not public policy, but the primitive conception of war which imputed mutual hostility to the individual subjects of belligerent powers. . . . Public policy is a very insecure justification of breach of contract. In Nordenfelt v.

§ 2531a. Insurance against capital conviction or execution for crime is void.—An attempted insurance against capital conviction in the established courts of competent jurisdiction, in the event

Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co. [1894] A. C. 535, at p. 553, Lord Watson said: 'A series of decisions based upon grounds of public policy, however eminent the judges by whom they were delivered, cannot possess the same binding authority as decisions which deal with and formulate principles which are purely legal.' See also Jessel, M. R., on the 'paramount public policy' of not lightly interfering with freedom of contract. Printing and Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson (1875) L. R. 19 Eq. 462–465, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 705, 32 L. T. N. S. 354, 23 Week. Rep. 463, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 696."

In addition to what is above quoted from Lord Lindley, Halsbury, L. C., said (5 B. R. C. 817, 818, 822): "Now, as I have said, I understand the judgment of Vaughan Williams, L. J., is put upon the sole ground that this policy is against public policy. He puts it at various parts of his judgment in different ways. He calls it a contravention of public interests, injurious to the country, inconsistent with public duty, repugnant to the interests of the state, and no doubt there are equivalent phrases to be found in many judgments where their application is expounded; but the learned judge, beyond using these phrases, does not go on to explain in what sense they are used, and how and on what principles of law the policy in question was unlawful.

"I do not think that the phrase 'against public policy' is one which in a court of law explains itself. It does not leave at large to each tribunal to find that a particular contract is against public policy. If such a principle were admitted, I should very much concur with what Serjeant Marshall said in the first edition of his work on marine insurance a century ago; 'To avow or insinuate that it might, in any case, be proper for a judge to prevent a party from availing himself of an indisputable principle of law, in a court of justice, upon the ground of some notion of fancied policy or expedience, is a new doctrine in Westminster Hall, and has a direct tendency to render all law vague and uncertain. A rule of law, once established, ought to remain the same till it be annulled by the legislature, which alone has the power to decide on the policy or expedience of repealing laws, or suffering them to remain in force.' . . . But I do not think the law of England does leave the matter so much at large as seems to be assumed. In treating of various branches of the law, learned persons have analyzed the sources of the law, and have sometimes expressed their opinion that such and such a provision is bad because it is contrary to public policy; but I deny that any court can invent a new head of public policy; so a contract for marriage brokerage, the creation of a perpetuity, a contract in restraint of trade, a gaming or wagering contract, or, what is relevant here, the assisting of the King's enemies, are all undoubtedly unlawful things; and you may say that it is because they are contrary to public policy they are unlawful; but it is because these things have been either enacted or assumed to be by the common law unlawful, and not because a judge or court have a right to declare that such and such things are in his or their view contrary to public policy. Of course in the application of the principles here insisted on, it is inevitable that the particular case must be decided by a judge; he must find the facts, and he must decide whether the facts so found do or do not come within the principles which I have endeavored to describe, —that is, a principle of public pol-

that such conviction is unwarranted by the evidence and unjust will not be upheld by the courts as it is void as contrary to public policy which forbids the insertion of conditions which tend to induce crime and which, therefore, are not the basis of a lawful contract.[18]

§ 2531b. Fidelity guaranty: validity of.—A contract guaranteeing the honesty of employees is not void as being against public policy.[19] But where a foreign insurer has not complied with the icy, recognized by the law, which the suggested contract is infringing, or is supposed to infringe. . . .

"My Lords, I conclude by reading the words of Parke, B., on this subject, when advising your Lordship's House in Egerton v. Lord Brownlow and others [1853]4 H. L. Cas. at p. 123: 'To allow this to be a ground of judicial decision would lead to the greatest uncertainty and confusion. It is the province of the statesman, and not the lawyer, to discuss, and of the legislature to determine, what is the best for the public good, and to provide for it by proper enactments. It is the province of the judge to expound the law only; the written from the statutes; the unwritten or common law from the decisions of our predecessors and of our existing courts, from textwriters of acknowledged authority, and upon the principles to be clearly deduced from them by sound reason and just inference; not to speculate upon what is the best, in his opinion, for the advantage of the community. Some of these decisions may have, no doubt, been founded upon the prevailing and just opinions of the public good; for instance, the illegality of covenants in restraint of marriage or trade. They have become a part of the recognized law, and we are therefore bound by them, but we are not thereby authorized to establish as law everything which we may think for the public good, and prohibit everything which we think otherwise.'

"It is not necessary to go through all the principles of law which may make a contract altogether illegal. As a wagering contract is illegal, so wills creating a perpetuity have no operation in that respect, but it is enough for the purpose I have in hand. They are defined legal principles, known to and absolutely fixed as part of our law, and a judge is called upon to bring the instrument he has to construe to the test—whether it is or is not within such principles; but I do not think he has any jurisdiction to bring into the discussion his own views of what he may consider an inexpedient thing in his own peculiar view of public policy. To permit such a discussion to arise it must be a question of some public policy recognized by the law."

Lord Macnaghten said (5 B. R. C. 823): "It is not, I think, for private individuals to pronounce upon the foreign relations of their Sovereign or their country, and to measure their own responsibilities arising out of civil contracts with foreigners by a standard of public policy which they set up for themselves."

Lord Davey said (5 B. R. C. 826): "Public policy is always an unsafe and treacherous ground for legal decision, and in the present case it would not be easy to say on which side the balance of convenience would incline."

See Nigel Gold Mining Co. v. Hoade, 70 L. J. K. B. 1006, [1901] 2 K. B. 849, 85 L. T. 482, 50 W. R. 108, 6 Com. Cas. 268.

[18] Burt v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 419, 44 C. C. A. 548, 59 L.R.A. 393, aff'd 187 U. S. 362, 47 L. ed. 216, 23 Sup. Ct. 139. See §§ 833 et seq. herein.

[19] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 30 L.R.A. 586, 56

state law as to transacting business, a bond insuring it against the dishonesty of its manager in said state is void and recovery is precluded.[20]

§ 2531c. Usury.—If a borrower from an insured procures a loan upon a lawful rate of interest, giving a real estate mortgage as security and also a life insurance policy procured by him on a life in which he has no insurable interest, and for which he signs premium notes with the insured in order to give value to the policy as collateral security for the loan, the premiums paid and agreed to be paid upon such policy cannot be regarded as additional interest for the loan so as to render it usurious.[1]

§ 2532. Condition upholding suicide is void.—Mr. Bunyon is of opinion that a stipulation to uphold suicide would be contrary to sound policy, and would take away "one of the restraints operating in the minds of men against the commission of crimes by the interest which they have in the welfare and prosperity of their connections. . . . For a policy, moreover, to remain in force when death arose from any such cause would be a fraud upon the insurers, for a man's estate would thereby benefit by his own felonious act."[2] And it is declared by the Federal supreme court that a contract of life insurance expressly providing for payment if the assured, in sound mind, takes his own life, would, even if not prohibited by statute, be against public policy as tempting or encouraging suicide to make provision for those dependent upon the insured, or to whom he was indebted, and would be subversive

Am. St. Rep. 464, 65 N. W. 351. See § 2766 herein.

On character of and rules governing contracts by corporations engaged for profit in business of guaranteeing the fidelity or contracts of other persons, see note in 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 513; on guaranty of fidelity of employees as insurance, see note in 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294.

[20] McCanna & Fraser Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 76 Fed. 420, 24 C. C. A. 11, 39 U. S. App. 333, 35 L.R.A. 236, 6 Pa. Dist. Rep. 25.

When notes given surety company to cover defalcation in consideration of promise not to prosecute for embezzlement are void as against public policy, see United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Charles, 131 Ala. 658, 31 So. 558.

[1] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 63 Ohio St. 478, 53 L.R.A. 462 (annotated on validity of life insurance to secure debt to insurer), 81 Am. St. Rep. 644, 59 N. E. 230.

[2] Bunyon on Life Ins. (2d ed.) 72; relying upon Amicable Society v. Bolland, 4 Bligh (N. S.) 194, 2 Dow & Clark, 1, per Lord Lyndhurst. But he adds (Bunyon on Life Ins. [2d ed.] 74) that when the insurance is on the life of a nominee, the insurance can be no inducement to the criminal act, and may be construed to cover this as well as every other risk. Provision to pay suicide or not is void: Amicable Ins. Co. v. Bolland, 2 Dow & Clark, 1, 4 Bligh (N. S.) 194; Moore v. Woolsey, 4 El. & B. 243, 3 C. L. R. 207, 24 L. J. Q. B. 40, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 468, 3 W. R. 66. See §§ 2641, 2643, 2644, 2650 herein.

of sound mentality, endanger public interests and ought never to be upheld.[3]

§ 2533. Insurance by common carrier against losses from negligence, etc., not against public policy.—While a common carrier will not be permitted by contract or otherwise to exempt himself from liability for losses caused by his own negligence or the negligence of his servants, there is no reason of public policy which prohibits him from contracting with a third person for insurance against the very same losses. Therefore, he may by insurance indemnify himself against loss or injury to property intrusted to his care, even where the loss or injury is caused by his own or his servant's negligence.[4]

§ 2534. Policy executed on Sunday.—If the policy and premium note are executed on Sunday, the contract is void, and no re-

[3] Rotter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300, cited in Hart v. Modern Woodmen of America, 60 Kan. 678, 681, 72 Am. St. Rep. 380, 57 Pac. 936; Campbell v. Supreme Conclave Independent Order of Heptasophs, 66 N. J. L. 274, 276, 54 L.R.A. 576, 577, 49 Atl. 550.

On conflict of laws as to suicide of insured, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 867; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981; and 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 284; on suicide while sane as defense to an action on a policy or certificate containing no provision as to effect of suicide, see note in 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1124.

[4] American Casualty Ins. Co's Case (Boston & A. R. Co. v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co.) 82 Md. 535, 576, 38 L.R.A. 97. See opinion of McSherry, J. That common carrier may insure goods in possession as "goods in trust as carriers to the full value, and in case of loss by fire may recover the full amount, even though by statute or by special contract the carrier is not responsible for losses by fire, see London & Northwestern Ry. Co. v. Glyn, 28 L. J. Q. B. 188, 5 Jur. (N. S.) 1004, cited in Macnamara on Carriers (ed. 1888) p. 94. See also Minneapolis, St. Paul & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 64 Minn. 61, 66 N. W. 132; Trenton Passenger R. Co. v. Guarantor's Liability & Indemnity Co. 60 N. J. L. 246, 44 L.R.A. 213, 37 Atl. 609. Common carriers or telegraph companies upon which a public use is impressed are subject to legislative interference, and cannot by contract exempt themselves from liability for negligence of their employees: Merchants Dispatch Transportation Co. v. Block, 86 Tenn. 392; Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co. 85 Tenn. 529. The last case decides that a telegraph company cannot by contract absolutely exempt itself from all liability for damages arising from the negligence of its servants. See in this last connection Joyce on Electric Law (2d ed.) secs. 16, 722.

As to limitation of liability: carriers: right to proceeds of insurance on cargo for account of whom it may concern, see Symmers v. Carroll, 207 N. Y. 632, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 196, and note, 101 N. E. 698.

As to limitation of liability act of Congress, June 26, 1884, sec. 18 and act March 3, 1851, c. 43, and that owner's liability cannot be limited merely to value of vessel and freight, etc., see Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mills Transportation Co. 155 Fed. 11, 83 C. C. A. 607, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 769, and note, s. c. 207 U. S. 596, 52 L. ed. 357, 28 Sup. Ct. 262.

covery can be had on the note even though both note and policy be postdated, there being no subsequent ratification of the act.[5]

§ 2535. Newspaper company cannot carry on accident insurance business.—A company organized with power to publish a newspaper and conduct a general printing business cannot, it is held, insure against accidents, and as a coupon printed in a daily newspaper by which the publishers agree that, in case any person meeting death by accident, and having a copy of the newspaper on his person with his name signed in the blank space in the coupon, they will pay to the heir of such person a certain sum, constitutes an accident policy, it is beyond the powers of the company to issue it.[6]

§ 2536. Where traffic insured unlawful, or unlawful business carried on upon insured property: fire risk.—If one is engaged in a business which the law legalizes only upon the performance of certain conditions, an insurance upon such traffic while it continues unlawful, by reason of noncompliance with the statutory requirements legalizing it, would undoubtedly be void,[7] and if at the time of effecting a policy on his stock in trade, and until after the contract of insurance is completed, a part or the whole of such stock consists of goods in which it is unlawful to traffic except the act be legalized, by conformity with certain statutory requirements, and it has not been so legalized, the policy will not attach, such use being also prohibited therein or the traffic increasing the risk.[8] Cases of the above character rest upon the principle that the property insured, or a part thereof, is used in connection with the carrying on of an unlawful traffic, unlawful until legalized, or

[5] Heller v. Crawford, 37 Ind. 279. But see note to Myers v. Meinrath, 101 Mass. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 368; note to Allen v. Duffie, 43 Mich. 1. 38 Am. Rep. 159; Robeson v. French, 12 Mete. (53 Mass.) 24, 45 Am. Dec. 237; 2 Parsons on Contracts (7th ed.) bottom page 898 et seq. and note.

But compare upon the general point of validity of a contract made on Sunday or a holiday, article by Edward H. Decker vol. 22, Case & Comment, pp. 545–552.

[6] So held in Commonwealth v. Philadelphia Inquirer (Pa. C. P.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 742.

But compare Hunter v. Hunter (Ct. Sess.) 7 F. 136 (substantially same proposition and money was paid to sister as "next-of-kin:" suit was brought by brothers against her, but it was held they had no right to share in the fund).

[7] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124, per Campbell, J.; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (24 U. S.) 258, 6 L. ed. 468, and cases cited, and cases under this section.

On validity of fire insurance on property illegally used, see note in 40 L.R.A. 845; on validity of insurance on intoxicating liquors as affected by liquor laws, see note in 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873.

[8] Lawrence v. National Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 557; Johnston v. Union Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 555. Chapter LXIII. herein.

used to aid or further the same, and where the intent of the contract substantially effects a violation of or encourages or advances acts in violation of law.[9] But if the insurance be merely upon the property in which such illegal traffic is carried on, or in which such unlawful goods are kept, a question may exist whether the insurance is not within that class of cases where the contract may be valid, even though it is connected with an independent illegal transaction which it is in no way designed to aid or to promote, and it has been so held.[10] But even in a case of this character, where the premises are insured and they are kept solely or partly for carrying on an unlawful business, the question is pertinent whether the insurance is not so closely connected with the illegal or unlawful use that it does in fact operate as a cover for the unlawful purpose, and so taint the contract itself with illegality. If it does tend to assist or abet the wrongdoer in transgressing the laws, and if it does in reality aid or promote the illegal transaction, and encourages an abatement of the laws, there are strong reasons for holding that the insurance is illegal, and not a mere collateral valid contract in which no illegal design enters.[11] Again, the main

[9] Boardman v. Merrimack Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 583. See also Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,-832; Russell v. DeGrand, 15 Mass. 35; Swanger v. Mayberry, 59 Cal. 91 ("well established that contract founded on an illegal consideration, or which is made for the purpose of furthering any matter or thing prohibited by statute, or to aid or assist any party therein is void. This applies to every contract which is founded on a transaction malum in se, or which is prohibited by statute on the ground of public policy"); United States v. Sherman, 98 U. S. 565, 25 L. ed. 235.

[10] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

[11] See as to principle, Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 157, 10 L. ed. 105, per Story, J.; Bartle v. Coleman, 4 Pet. (29 U. S.) 184, 7 L. ed. 825 (fraud will not be aided by the courts); Patton v. Nicholson, 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 204, 4 L. ed. 3711. Johnson v. Union Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 555; Ward v. Wood, 13 Mass. 539; Warren v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 13 Pick. (30 Mass.) 518, 25 Am. Dec. 341, per Wilde, J.; Campbell v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 213; Boardman v. Merrimack Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 583. Mutual Benefit Ins. Co. v. Davis, 12 N. Y. 569; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Wright & Son, 55 Vt. 526, s. c. 60 Vt. 515 (presumed that foreign insurer had duly complied with the laws and that the secretary of state had performed his duty and issued license). Carruthers v. Gray, 15 East, 35, 3 Camp. 142; Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 5 R. R. 468, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 547, per Lord Kenyon, C. J.; Johnson v. Hudson, 11 East, 180 (a question of breach of mere revenue regulation, there being no fraud thereon). Examine chapter LXIII. herein.

The words of Mr. Duer in relation to contracts of marine insurance are of force in this connection. He says: "The statutory provision, the breach of which discharges the insurers, must bear a direct and immediate relation to the voyage insured. It must operate either by its terms or by a necessary inference as a pro-question is not solely one whether the contract is susceptible of legal performance, or that the premises insured are susceptible of lawful use, but whether there has actually been an unlawful use which the policy is intended to actually cover, or would in fact cover if it were admitted to be a lawful use. It is true that if the contract is susceptible of a double construction covering both a lawful and unlawful use or performance, that the law presumes a lawful intent, or at least admits proof of a lawful performance, but if an unlawful use or illegal performance is proven, then the contract will be void.[12] hibition of the voyage, where no such connection subsists between the actual voyage and the provisions of the statute, where consequently the relation between the illegal act and the policy is not direct, but remote and incidental, so that neither the design nor tendency of the latter is to aid and promote the commission of the former, and the validity of the contract is not impaired or affected:" 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 360, secs. 50 et seq.

[12] Waugh v. Morris, L. R. 8 Q. B. 202, 208, 42 L. J. Q. B. 57, 28 L. T. 265, 21 W. R. 438, 1 Asp. M. C. 573; Russell v. De Grand, 15 Mass. 35; Haines v. Busk, 5 Taunt. 521, 1 Marsh. 191; Holland v. Hall, 1 Barn. & Ald. 53, 18 R. R. 428; Gill v. Dunlop, 7 Taunt. 193; Thornton v. Lance, 4 Camp. 231. See Brown on Parol Evidence (ed. 1893) p. 61, sec. 34. And as bearing somewhat upon the question involved herein, it may be stated as a general rule that, in other than insurance contracts, if the property concerning which the contract is made is ordinarily susceptible of a lawful use, the contract is not validated by the mere fact that the person contracting to do some matter or thing in or about the property knew that the premises were intended to be applied to an unlawful use, unless the services rendered under the contract were furnished directly for this purpose of aiding or abetting and furthering the illegal act. Maddox v. Thornton, 2 Cranch (U. S. C. C.) 260, Fed. Cas. No. 1363. See also:

United States.—Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 157, 10 L. ed. 105, per Story, J.

Arkansas.—Tatum v. Kelly, 25 Ark. 209, contract void when in aid of rebellion.

Missouri.—Michael v. Bacon, 49 Mo. 474, 8 Am. Rep. 138.

New York.—Tracy v. Talmadge, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 162, illegal use of property.

Ohio.—Spurgeon v. McElwain, 6 Ohio, 442, keeping a ninepin alley unlawfully.

England.—Lewis v. Davison, 4 Mees. & W. 654.

The mere fact that a foreign vendor knew that the goods were intended to be smuggled by the purchaser will not of itself avoid a recovery of the contract price; he must have aided or abetted the act, as in case where he aids in packing the goods for smuggling: Holman v. Johnson, Cowp. 341; Gibson v. Service, 5 Taunt. 433, 1 Marsh. 119, 15 R. R. 541. But if the services rendered are of a character which clearly evidence that they were intended to be rendered in aid and furtherance of the unlawful or prohibited act, or if the statute provides for the doing of certain acts to render the service lawful, and the law is not complied with, the contract cannot be enforced. The Pioneer, Deady (U. S. D. C.) 72, Fed. Cas. No. 11,177; Chadwick v. Collins, 26 Pa. St. 138; Badgely v. Beale, 3 Watts (Pa.) 263; De Begnis v. Armistead, 10 Bing. 107, 3 M. & Scott, 511, 2 L. J. C. P. 214; Duke of Brunswick v.

It is held that noncompliance by foreign insurance companies with certain statutes in respect to doing business in a state, or concerning the appointment of agents vitiates contracts made by them in such state,[13] although there are numerous decisions otherwise.[14]

The keeping and sale of liquor without license is using the premises for an unlawful purpose when the law requires such license.[15] But a contract of insurance of whisky stored in Iowa is not void because it tends to assist the insured to violate the public policy and laws of Iowa against the possession and sale of intoxicating liquors therein, where the statute does not expressly forbid or avoid such contracts.[16] And insurance upon merchandise kept for an illegal business, such as a stock of drugs and liquors, kept by a dealer who does not have the required permit under the law to sell them is not void as against public policy.[17] Under the Mississippi code requiring a privilege tax license of a merchant, authorizing the carrying of a stock of goods not exceeding a certain amount, if the stock exceeds such limit the business becomes eo instanti illegal, and if thereafter an insurance is effected on the Crowl, 4 Exch. 492, 19 L. J. Ex. 112, 13 Jur. 1058 ("an attorney cannot recover for business done, unless he has obtained a certificate, which was in force for the period when the work was done").

[13] United States.—Lamb v. Lamb, 6 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 420, Fed. Cas. No. 8,018, 7 Chic. Leg. News, 411.

Illinois.—Cincinnati Mutual Assurance Co. v. Rosenthall, 55 Ill. 85.

Indiana.—Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Harrah, 47 Ind. 236; Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 46 Ind. 44; Hoffman v. Banks, 41 Ind. 1; Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 20 Ind. 520.

Kentucky.—Franklin Ins. Co. v. Louisville & Arkansas Packet Co. 9 Bush (Ky.) 590.

Massachusetts.—Williams v. Cheney, 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 206; Roche v. Ladd, 1 Allen (83 Mass.) 436.

New Hampshire.—Haverhill Ins. Co. v. Prescott, 42 N. H. 547.

Wisconsin.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 11 Wis. 394. See § 333 herein.

[14] United States.—The Manistee, 5 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 381, Fed. Cas. No. 9027.

Massachusetts.—Provincial Ins. Co. v. Lapsley, 15 Gray (81 Mass.) 262.

Michigan.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt Manufacturing Co. 31 Mich. 346.

Missouri.—Columbus Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 18 Mo. 229.

New York.—Huntly v. Merrill, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 626.

Ohio.—Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. McMillen, 24 Ohio St. 67.

Pennsylvania.—Thornton v. Western Reserve Farmers' Ins. Co. 31 Pa. St. 529. See §§ 332 et seq. herein.

[15] Kelly v. Worcester Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 284.

[16] Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. C. A. Hoover Distilling Co. 182 Fed. 590, 105 C. C. A. 128, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873 (annotated on validity of insurance on intoxicating liquors as affected by liquor laws). See Kellogg v. German American Ins. Co. 133 Mo. App. 391, 113 S. W. 663.

[17] Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583. Examine Kellogg v. German-American Ins. Co. 133 Mo. App. 391, 113 S. W. 663.

stock, it is a contract "made in reference to the business" thus illegally "carried on," and is void.[18]

The placing by a dealer of a musical instrument in a house of ill fame, with a hope of selling it to the proprietor, is not so far against public policy as to avoid a policy upon the instrument.[19] So a policy may cover furniture in a bawdyhouse since the unlawful business is not thereby increased.[20] Again, a policy on a house leased by the owner to a lewd woman, with knowledge on his part that it is to be used by her for purposes of prostitution, is held not void so as to preclude recovery in case of loss, in the absence of any policy stipulation under which the immoral use of the house vacates the contract. In such case the insurance contract does not grow out of, nor is it connected with, the immoral and illegal use of the house and it is clearly disconnected from the contract of rental for such use.[21]

§ 2537. Illegal use of property when susceptible of legitimate use: public policy.—The fact that insured property susceptible of a legitimate use is used for an illegal or unlawful purpose does not avoid the risk as contrary to public policy.[1]

§ 2538. Illegal occupation of insured: life risk.—The fact that the party whose life was insured was engaged in an illegal trade will not of itself deprive the one for whose benefit the policy was effected of the right to recover on the policy, he not having known of such illegal employment, nor having participated therein.[2]

§ 2539. Goods the importation or exportation of which are prohibited.—Goods the importation or exportation of which are forbidden by the laws of this country cannot form the lawful subject of a contract of insurance here. The contract is vitiated by the illegality to the extent that the court at once when the fact is disclosed will refuse its enforcement, even though the insurer had full information of the character of the risk assured. No tribunal can by its decree impart life to a contract which tends so directly to a subversion of its laws, or which if permitted to stand would only encourage the direct violation of the laws of revenue and trade, but would

[18] Sun Mutual Ins. Co. v. Searles 73 Miss. 62, 18 So. 544, Miss. Ann. Code, 1892, c. 108.

[19] Electrova Co. v. Spring Garden Ins. Co. 156 N. Car. 232, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1216, 72 S. E. 306.

[20] Conithan v. Royal Ins. Co. 91 Miss. 386, 45 So. 361, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 214.

[21] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Clay, 101 Ga. 331, 65 Am. St. Rep. 307, 28 S. E. 853.

On insurance on bawdyhouse or furniture therein, see notes in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, and L.R.A.1917B, 257.

[1] Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583 (case on policy on stock of drugs and liquors).

[2] Lord v. Dall, 12 Mass. 115, 7 Am. Dec. 38.

secure an indemnity to the transgressor. These principles are well settled.[3] And if the traffic in which the ship is to be engaged is forbidden by the law of this country, a policy on the ship for the voyage is void, as well also as an insurance covering freight.[4]

As a war measure but, as declared by the President of the United States, for the purposes merely of export control and of public safety, rather than of export prohibition, and in the interests of facility and expediency, the President, acting under authority of a law enacted by Congress on June 15, 1917, issued a Proclamation of date August 27, 1917, whereby the export of practically all articles of commerce from this country is prohibited. Two lists are made; the first, applicable to the enemy and his allies, the second covering all the other countries of the world. This Proclamation also adds a few articles to the list of commodities controlled by an earlier Proclamation of July 9, 1917. License is required for shipment from the United States to the allies and to all other countries. The effect of these prohibitions or control of exports is evidently intended to stop leakages into Germany through neutrals, which is the same purpose that is endeavored to be accomplished by Orders in Council in England, or by proclamations in that country relating to contraband or to contraband of war and ulterior or ultimate destination. Insurances therefore which contravene said prohibitions come within the rule first above stated; that is, that goods the importation or exportation of which are forbidden by the laws of this country, cannot form the lawful subject of a contract of insurance here, etc., and this would apply to all the articles enumerated in said Proclamation except so far as those goods are shipped under license

[3] Gray v. Sims, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 276, Fed. Cas. No. 5,729; Russell v. De Grand, 15 Mass. 35; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92. See generally Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (24 U. S.) 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Hannay v. Eve, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 242, 2 L. ed. 427; Johnson v. Hudson, 11 East, 180, 10 R. R. 465; Ritchie v. Smith, 6 Com. B. 462, 18 L. J. C. P. 9, 13 Jur. 63; Holman v. Johnston, Cowp. 341; Cope v. Rowlands, 2 Mees. & W. 149, 2 Gale, 231, 6 L. J. Ex. 63; Catlin v. Bell, 4 Camp. 183; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. viii. sec. 5, p. 169; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 55 et seq.; 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 262; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed.) 1850) *704 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 693 (citing Cushing's Laws; consolidation act 1876; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36); 1 Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 741 et seq., pp. 931 et seq.; Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 315 et seq. See U. S. Rev. Stats. sec. 3082; Acts Cong. June 22, 1874, c. 391.

When adventure not illegal: edict of Persian government of 1881, forbidding importation of arms into Persia, but never enforced: insured believed prohibition dead letter: goods seized and confiscated: also held no concealment. Fracis v. Sea Ins. Co. 79 L. T. N. S. 28, 47 Wkly. R. 119, 8 Asp. 418.

[4] Gray v. Sims, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 276, Fed. Cas. No. 5,729.

or, as stated in the statute, and said Proclamation, where they are shipped "under such regulations and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress." [5]

§ 2540. Trade prohibited by foreign laws: effect of treaties.—In determining the legality of a contract the courts will not, subject to the exceptions herein noted, consider the prohibitory laws of revenue or trade of a foreign country under the common form of policy, and insurances here in contravention thereof are valid, provided the policy is written with the full knowledge of the intended trade, and also conditioned that such risk is not expressly excepted. But if the contract be against the usual risks, and there is no knowledge of the contemplated breach of the foreign laws of trade or revenue, the underwriters cannot be presumed to have taken the risk of condemnation from breach of the trade laws of such country, unless the voyage be to a place where no legal trade can be carried on, or there are other facts which show that such illegal trading was evidently within the contemplation of the parties.[6] In the application of this rule a distinction should be observed between [5] For text of Proclamation and list of articles which is important not only because insurances on prohibited articles are illegal as stated in the text, but also because of the like nature or character of certain of the prohibited goods and those of contraband of war in that arms and ammunitions and the ingredients of their manufacture, and other articles which might contribute to the aid and support of the enemy and their continuance of the war are covered. See Appendix G, herein.

As to contraband of war, see §§ 2568–2569a herein.

As to ulterior or ultimate destination of goods, see §§ 2567, 2569a herein.

The subject of embargo is fully considered elsewhere herein under the several headings to which it properly belongs.

[6] United States.—Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 6, 17, Fed. Cas. No. 374, per Story, J.; Seton v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,675.

Maryland.—Maryland & Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Battlehurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 159.

Massachusetts.—Archibald v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 3 Pick. (20 Mass.) 70, 73; Parker v. Jones, 13 Mass. 173; Richardson v. Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92; Pollock v. Babcock, 6 Mass. 234; Cook v. Essex Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 122.

New York.—Gardner v. Smith, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 141; Blagge v. New York Ins. Co. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 549.

South Carolina.—McFee v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 2 McCord (S. C.) 503, 13 Am. Dec. 757.

England.—Planche v. Fletcher, 1 Doug. 251, reported also in 1 Park on Ins. (8th ed.) 360; Lever v. Fletcher, reported in 1 Park on Ins. (8th ed.) 506; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 61.

See also Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. viii. secs. 5 et seq.; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 60 et seq.; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 657, sec. 1117; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 706 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 693; Id.

insurances which contravene merely the laws of revenue and trade of a foreign country and those which are opposed to subsisting treaties between this and foreign countries, since if by such treaty a certain trade or trade in particular commodities is prohibited, the subjects of each country thereto are bound the same as if by municipal law, and insurances upon voyages in contravention of the treaty are illegal and void.[7]

§ 2541. Exportation otherwise legal may become illegal by subsequent execution of agreement in evasion of revenue laws.—Although the goods may be exported in conformity with the requirements of the laws of the country, yet if in pursuance of an agreement made here prior to the exportation and consummated while the voyage exists as an entire voyage there is a fraudulent evasion and breach of the revenue laws, the contract of insurance is vitiated. If the agreement to evade the revenue laws is made here, it is immaterial at what point of an entire voyage insured it is to be executed. It nevertheless makes the exportation of the goods unlawful.[8] This

(9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 742 et seq., pp. 932 et seq.

See as to principal involved, Kohn v. Schooner Renaissance, 5 La. Ann. 25, 52 Am. Dec. 577; Ludlow v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 94; Holman v. Johnson, Cowp. 341; Lightfoot v. Tenant, 1 Bos. & P. 551, 4 R. R. 735. But see 3 Kent's Commentaries (13th ed.) *263, *265; Story's Conflict of Laws (7th ed.) secs. 255–57.

As to prohibition by twenty-one countries but not from the United States of export of wheat: partial prohibition: distinction between a total prevention of shipment: sellers right to cancel, under agreement, see Ford & Sons Ltd. v. Leethan & Sons Ltd. 84 L. J. K. B. 2101, 21 Com. Cas. 55, 31 T. L. R. 552.

[7] The Eenrom, 2 Rob. Adm. 6; The Neutralitet, 3 Rob. Adm. 296; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 349, sec. 38. Mr. Marshall says: "Even where the trade insured is to be carried on by British subjects not only contrary to the laws of a foreign state, but contrary also to the express provisions of a treaty to which Great Britain was a party, yet if the insurers subscribe the policy with full knowledge of the nature of the trade, the contract will bind him:" 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 60, reporting Lever v. Fletcher, Park on Ins. (8th ed.) 506, per Lord Mansfield. Mr. Maclachlan (2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 693, note) says this statement of Mr. Marshall's "is an error of long standing:" see also Id. 697. "The Constitution and laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made or which shall be made under authority of the United States are declared to be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every state are to be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding:" Const. U. S. art. vi. See also Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th ed.) 18. "Validity of an insurance in contravention of the laws of a foreign country:" Article 21, Amer. Jur. 138 (1839), translated from article by Dr. Lewis Duncker, University-Syndic at Marburg, published in the Archiv für die Civilistiche Praxis, vol. 21.

[8] Gibson v. Service, 5 Taunt. 433, 1 Marsh. 119, 15 R. R. 541. See Sturges v. Bush, 5 Day (Conn.) 452; Pond v. Smith, 4 Conn. 297.

conforms with the general rule of law that courts will not uphold a mere device for carrying into effect that which the legislature has said shall not be done, nor can one by an indirect and circuitous evasion of the law effect legally that which cannot directly be accomplished in the face of a prohibitory law, whether the prohibition be express or implied.[9]

§ 2542. Effect of prohibitory statute imposing penalty: collateral acts.—If a statute prohibits under a penalty the carrying of certain materials on vessels, the noncompliance with such statute by the owners of the vessel does not affect the insurance on the vessel or cargo.[10] So if a statute provides that a certain quantity of water shall be carried on board vessels, and in case of noncompliance that the crew shall have a remedy against the owners and masters, the voyage is not rendered illegal by noncompliance.[11] It will be observed from an examination of the cases that there is a distinction between a statute which, although it contains no prohibitory words, yet by imposing a penalty implies a prohibition, and makes, therefore, a contract concerning the act so impliedly prohibited unlawful and unenforceable,[12] and those cases where it is clearly evident from the enactment that it was not intended to render unlawful the prohibited act, and the statute may reasonably be held to be directory. The whole purpose of the statute is subserved by imposing the penalty, especially so where the statute is intended for the benefit of particular persons having no influence upon the public welfare, nor being founded upon reasons of public policy. In this class of cases the court will construe the contract so as to effect the [9] Brown's Legal Maxims (7th Am. ed.) sec. *489, citing Morris v. Blackman, 2 Hurl. & C. 912, 918, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 520; Booth v. Bank of England, 7 Clark & F. 509, West. 298, 6 Bing. (O. S.) 415; Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. (37 U. S.) 524, 9 L. ed. 1181, per Mr. Justice Thompson; Hughes v. Statham, 4 Barn. & C. 187, 193, 6 D. & R. 219, 3 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 179; Mouys v. Leake, 8 Term Rep. 411, 415, per Lord Kenyon, C. J.

[10] Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co. 1 Cinc. (Ohio) 193, 13 Ohio Dec. 495, rev'd 25 Ohio St. 50.

[11] Warren v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 13 Pick. (30 Mass.) 518.

[12] Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J.; The Pioneer, Deady (U. S. C. C.) 72, Fed. Cas. No. 11,177; Swords v. Owen, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 176, 2 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 277; Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. St. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699; Suart v. Powell, 1 Barn. & Adol. 266, 8 S. J. (O. S.) K. B. 371, per Lord Tenterden; Bartlett v. Vinor, Carth. 252, per Lord Holt; Drury v. De Fontaine, 1 Taunt. 131, 136, per Tindal, C. J.; Bensley v. Bignold, 5 Barn. & Ald. 335; De Begnis v. Armistead, 10 Bing. 107, 3 M. & Scott, 511, 2 L. J. C. P. 214, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 338; Law v. Hodson, 11 East, 300, 2 Camp. 147, 10 R. R. 513; Blachford v. Preston, 8 Term Rep. 89; Farmer v. Legg, 7 Term Rep. 186; Johnston v. Sutton, 1 Doug. 254; Gallini v. Laborie, 5 Term Rep. 242; Ribbans v. Crickett, 1 Bos. & P. 264.

purpose contemplated, and will not extend it so as to invalidate the contract itself, and, applying the rule to insurances, the voyage or trade will not be held illegal by reason of noncompliance with the statute.[13]

We have elsewhere given consideration to the question whether by the violation of some statute expressly or impliedly prohibiting an act the insurable interest is devested at that moment the illegal act is done, or not until seizure or perhaps until forfeiture declared;[14] and where a statute expressly or impliedly prohibits an act, the question arises whether the noncompliance therewith at the inception of the voyage makes the subsequent voyage or trade illegal. In Ocean Insurance Company v. Polleys[15] the register was obtained without conforming to the requirements of the laws of the United States relating thereto, and it was held that the insurance was not avoided thereby. In Clark v. Protection Insurance Company,[16] a chain cable was smuggled aboard subsequently to the insurance, and it was held that the infraction of the law was covered by a penalty, and the vessel was not liable to forfeiture for receiving smuggled goods, and that the insurance was not avoided, and also that an insurance on the chain cable was good. In Carruthers v. Gray,[17] the insurers were held not released because of the fact that the goods insured were not mentioned in the ship's manifest contrary to the provisions of the statute. In Redmond v. Smith[18] the statute was passed for a collateral purpose, and there was a penalty for noncompliance therewith, and it was held that the voyage was not illegal because of a failure to have shipping articles.[19]

§ 2543. Trade which would otherwise be invalid because interdicted may be valid through necessity.—If a trade with a foreign [13] Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832; Warren v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 13 Pick. (30 Mass.) 518, and cases cited; Ward v. Wood, 13 Mass. 538, 539; Brown v. Duncan, 10 Barn. & C. 93, 5 Man. & Ry. 114, 8 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 60, per Lord Tenterden.

See as to general rule: Fackler v. Ford, 24 How. (65 U. S.) 322, 16 L. ed. 690; Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. (53 U. S.) 79, 13 L. ed. 901; Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Iowa, 546; Oneida Bank v. Ontario Bank, 21 N. Y. (7 Smith) 490. See § 2168 herein, as to statutes requiring pilot to be employed under penalty for noncompliance. "The same consequence," viz., avoiding the policy, "does not follow from the violation of acts of parliament which, though connected with the trade and navigation of this country, are yet passed for a collateral purpose:" 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *765, sec. 266; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 697.

[14] Examine § 904 herein.

[15] 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 157, 10 L. ed. 105.

[16] 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832.

[17] 3 Camp. 142, 15 East, 35.

[18] 7 Man. & G. 457; 13 L. J. C. P. 159, 2 D. & G. 280, 8 Scott (N. R.) 250, 8 Jur. 711.

[19] See Farmer v. Legg, 7 Term Rep.

power be interdicted by an act of Congress, and a vessel is forced by stress of weather into a port of such power, and is obliged to land her cargo and is prevented by that government from reloading, she is not obligated to abandon and seek redress from her own government, but may take a new cargo in exchange therefor, or a cargo purchased with the proceeds of the sale thereof, and the policy is not vitiated by such act: in such case the offense is not intentional. This was so held under the nonintercourse law of 1798.[20]

§ 2544. Contract of indemnity against embargo: when valid.—A contract to indemnify against an embargo which the government of the parties may impose at a future time is not against the policy of the law and is valid.[1]

§ 2545. Effect of violation of embargo.—A trade carried on in contravention of an embargo is illegal, and an insurance of such trade is void.[2] If the voyage is begun with a knowledge of its being prohibited or illegal, the policy is void, and the policy having at-

186. Certain qualifications were required of the master engaged in voyages for slave trading under a penalty upon both master and owners for noncompliance, and the certificate not being in exact conformity with the requirements of the statute, it was held that the voyage was illegal and the policy void. Mr. Duer, who exhaustively considers this question, concludes that "where the prohibited act, whatever may be the nature of the penalty imposed, renders the subsequent voyage or trade illegal, as a necessary consequence it vacates the policy," but he makes the distinction that if no forfeiture is created by the law, it being limited to the punishment of the offender, "the participation or privity of assured is necessary to be proved in order to avoid the policy:" 1 Duer on Ins. (ed. 1845) 318, 319 et seq., 377–87. As to what acts regulating trade and navigation were in force in 1887, see 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 695.

[20] Hallett v. Jenks, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 210, 2 L. ed. 414. See, as to distinctions between a case of this character and excuse for traffic with an enemy, opinion of Marshall, C. J., in above case: Hallett v. Jenks, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 210, 2 L. ed. 414; The Seyerstadt, 1 Dod. 241; The Catharina Maria, 1 Ed. Adm. 337. See The James Wells, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 22, 3 L. ed. 256, considered in note to § 2545 herein), aff'g s. c. 3 Day (Conn.) 296.

[1] Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 312, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433; Francis v. Ocean Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 299; Lorent v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 505; Simeon v. Blazett, 2 Maule & S. 94, per Lord Ellenborough.

[2] Delmada v. Motteux, 1 Term Rep. 85 N. reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 82. See Edward Grey & Co. v. Tolme & Runge, 59 S. J. 218, 31 T. L. R. 137, 551 (contract incapable of performance by reason of embargo by Germany on the goods, which could not be shipped: also further performance illegal as trading with enemy).

As to goods, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited, see § 2539 herein.

The evidence of that necessity which will excuse the violation of an embargo must be very clear and positive, The James Wells, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 22, 3 L. ed. 256, aff'g s. c. 3 Day (Conn.) 296.

tached "at and from," a breach of the embargo is such a violation as to render the subsequent voyage illegal, and release the insurers; certainly so if the violation is followed by seizure.[3]

§ 2546. Cargo procured with proceeds of former illegal cargo: prior separate voyage illegal.—The fact that the cargo insured is purchased with the proceeds of an illegal cargo exported in contravention of law on an illegal voyage to the port "at and from" which the insurance is effected, the antecedent voyage being separate and distinct from that insured, does not render the insurance illegal and void, even though the ship by her previous illegal commerce was subject to seizure and confiscation; in such case the subsequent voyage cannot be affected by the illegality of the prior separate one.[4]

In case of contraband of war, if the return voyage is separate, distinct, and independent, the illegality of the preceding voyage will not generally attach upon the cargo of the return voyage, although such cargo be the proceeds of the prior illegal one, nor will such illegality attach upon the ship upon a distinct return voyage.[5] It

[3] Delmada v. Motteux, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 82; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 351, 352, citing Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 312, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 299; Walden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 299, 310; Delano v. Bedford Mutual Ins. Co. 10 Mass. 347, 349, 6 Am. Dec. 132 and other cases.

[4] Kemble v. Rhinelander, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 130; Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 566, 5 R. R. 468, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 547, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 74; Bell v. Gilson, 1 Bos. & P. 345, 4 R. R. 823, 353, per Butler, J.

[5] Carrington v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 495, 521, 8 L. ed. 1021, per Story, J. In the case so holding the ship insured, when seized, had not unloaded all her outward cargo, but was still in the progress of the outward voyage, originally designated by the owners; she sailed on that voyage from Providence, Rhode Island, with contraband articles on board, belonging, with other parts of the cargo, to the owners of the ship, with a false destination and false papers, which yet accompanied the vessel; the contraband articles had been landed, before the policy, which was a policy on time, designating no particular voyage, had attached; the underwriters, though taking no risks within the exception, were not ignorant of the nature and objects of the voyage; and the alleged cause of the seizure and detention was the trade in articles contraband of war by the landing of powder and muskets, which formed a part of the outward cargo. It was held that: by the principles of the law of nations, there existed, under these circumstances, a right to seize and detain the ship and her remaining cargo, and to subject them to adjudication for a supposed forfeiture, notwithstanding the prior deposit of the contraband goods; there was a legal and justifiable cause of seizure. It was further declared that according to the modern law of nations, for there has been some relaxation in practice from the strictness of the ancient rules, the carriage of contraband goods to the enemy, subjects them, if captured in delicto, to the penalty of confiscation; but the vessel and remaining cargo, if they do not belong to the owner of the contraband goods, are not subject to the same penalty; the penalty is ap-is further decided that an augmentation of force, or illegal outfit, does not affect any capture made after the original cruise, for which such augmentation or outfit was made, is terminated although as to captures made during the same cruise they are infected with the character of torts and the original owner is entitled to restitution when the property is brought into our jurisdiction.[6] But it is held that the ship is liable to seizure in port after the determination of the entire voyage.[7] None of the cases, however, extend the doctrine beyond the completion of the entire voyage, so as to taint subsequent separate and distinct voyages with the illegality, and undoubtedly an insurance on such new and distinct voyage would be legal. So where the trade is with an enemy, the ship must be taken during the voyage, or during some part of a continuous and entire voyage during which the offense is committed: it is not enough, however, that the voyage may be separated into parts. The court will consider its true character, and if the trade is circuitous and the voyage entire, or if the continuity of the voyage is broken by the master's making an intermediate trade, the vessel is nevertheless subject to confiscation.[8] plied to the latter, only when there has been some actual co-operation on their part, in a meditated fraud upon the belligerents, by covering up the voyage under false papers and with a false destination. This is the general doctrine, when the capture is made in transitu, while the contraband goods are yet on board; but when the contraband goods have been deposited at the port of destination, and the subsequent voyage has thus been disconnected with the noxious articles, it has not been usual to apply the penalty to the ship or cargo upon the return voyage, although the latter may be the proceeds of the contraband; and the same rule would seem, by analogy, to apply to cases where the contraband articles have been deposited at an intermediate port, on the outward voyage, and before it had terminated; although there is not any authority directly in point. But in the highest prize courts of England, while the distinction between the outward and homeward voyage is admitted to govern, yet it is established, that it exists only in favor of neutrals who conduct themselves with fairness and good faith in the arrangement of the voyage; if, with a view to practice a fraud upon the belligerent, and to escape from his acknowledged right of capture and detention, the voyage is disguised, and the vessel sails under false papers and with a false destination, the mere deposit of the contraband, in the course of the voyage, is not allowed to purge away the guilt of the fraudulent conduct of the neutral.

See also The Imina, 3 C. Rob. 167, 168, per Sir W. Scott; The Nancy, 3 C. Rob. 122, 127; The Christiansberg, 6 C. Rob. 376, 381, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Rosalie & Betty, 2 C. Rob. 343, 348; The Jonge Pieter, 4 C. Rob. 79, per Sir Wm. Scott; Kent's Commentaries (12th ed.) *151n. See Wheaton's International Law (6th ed.) 568.

[6] The Santissima Trinidad and The St. Ander, 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 283, 5 L. ed. 454.

[7] The Caledonian, 4 Wheat. (17 U. S.) 100, 4 L. ed. 523.

[8] The Joseph, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 457, 454, 3 L. ed. 621; The Jonge

The rule is deduced from these cases that a prior illegal voyage will not invalidate an insurance on a subsequent legal voyage which is separate and distinct from the prior, and in no way constituting with it an entire continuous voyage.[9]

But it is declared, that the general rule acted upon in England is that if a neutral vessel carries contraband goods they are subject to confiscation if captured in delicto, and that the vessel also is subject to the same penalty if it belongs to the same owner, or if the owner has been implicated where it is covered by false papers or other deceitful devises. If however the goods have been deposited at the port or place of destination the ship and cargo on the return voyage are exempt from the penalty. But exceptions are made where the outward voyage was made under false papers, or with a false destination, or under circumstances of deceit and fraud as to the belligerent. And it is held that if a vessel which had been used by its owner by means of false papers, with false destination and any such doubtful practices intended to elude the right of capture by belligerents, to carry contraband goods to the enemy, and which had delivered such goods on the outward voyage, remains confiscable upon the return voyage also; and what would constitute the return voyage would be a question of fact.[10]

§ 2547. Trade with enemy: prior valid character of cargo.—(a) If the importation of goods is illegal, because of trade with an enemy, the prior valid character of the goods constituting the illegal cargo, or of the funds with which they are purchased, does not validate the offense of trading with the enemy or make the goods the less subject to the illegality.[11] This rule does not, however, preclude proof that the property seized is innocent, and is owned by a neutral who has no share nor interest in the illegal transaction.[12]

(b) Trading with enemy: valid contract: effect of imminent war upon legality of. A point of considerable importance as relevant to the subject under consideration is presented by an English case

Pieter, 4 C. Rob. 79, 84, per Sir Wm. Scott.

[9] See also Sewell v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 4 Taunt. 856; Muller v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 610, 12 R. R. 753; Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, 126, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J.

[10] The Alwina (1916) L. R. Prob. Div. 131, 85 L. J. P. 199, 2 P. Cas. 186, 114 L. T. 707, 60 Sol. J. 540, 32 T. L. R. 444; Art. 38, Declaration of London, Orders in Council, Aug. 20, 1914, and Oct. 29, 1914.

[11] The Lady Jane, cited in 1 C. Rob. 202; The Juffrow Louisa Margaretta, cited in 1 C. Rob. 203; The Alexander, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 169, 3 L. ed. 524; The Rapid, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 295, Fed. Cas. No. 11,576, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 155, 3 L. ed. 520; Potts v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 548, 2 Esp. 612, 5 R. R. 452, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 654.

[12] See The Franklin, 6 C. Rob. 127.

which holds that an expected or imminent war does not render illegal an otherwise valid contract of insurance between citizens of the two nations between whom war is anticipated.[13]

(c) Valid contract: where outbreak of war makes performance illegal and impossible: partial performance: transfer to neutral during transit. In case of a charter party where cargo is shipped on board two ships, German and English, the outbreak of the war makes the former vessel that of an alien enemy and her seizure makes the further performance of the contract impossible as to her although the contract as to the English ship and cargo is legally capable of performance, and a tender of bills of lading and insurance policy will be good as to her, while the tender of documents will be bad so far as the cargo on the German vessel is concerned.[14]

[13] Janson v. Driefonstein Consolidated Mines, Ltd. (1902) A. C. 484, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 857, 87 L. T. N. S. 372, 18 T. L. R. 796, 7 Com. Cas. 268, 5 B. R. C. 810 aff'g [1901] 2 K. B. 419, 70 L. J. K. B. N. S. 881, 49 W. R. 660, 85 L. T. N. S. 104, 17 T. L. R. 604, 6 Com. Cas. 198 (see Driefonstein Consolidated Gold Mines, Ltd. v. Janson, West Rand Consolidated Gold Mines Co. Ltd. v. De Rougemont (1900) 2 Q. B. D. L. R. 339). The proposition is not justified that "expected wars render a contract illegal between citizens of the two nations between whom war is anticipated, and to lay down such a rule would be to establish an entirely new code, for which there is no authority in the law."—Earl of Halsbury, L. C. (Id. 5 B. R. C. 822). "The law recognizes a state of peace and a state of war, but . . . it knows nothing of an intermediate state which is neither one thing nor the other,—neither peace nor war."—Lord Macnaughten (Id. 5 B. R. C. 823). "There are as it seems to me, but two categories,—war or not war; and the difference between the two things is essential. . . . To extend the law's prohibition of trading with the King's enemies to future or contingent enemies, would be subversive of the broad and palpable distinction between peace and war, would be unworkable in practice, and productive of endless uncertainty and loss . . . the question whether it is workable or salutary is one of the tests of any legal doctrine, and I am satisfied that the law against trade with enemies is inapplicable to the events now in question."—Lord Robertson (Id. 5 B. R. C. 830). "But threatened war or anticipated war or imminent war is peace which may not after all result in war; and to apply the rules of war to insurance against loss before war breaks out would paralyze commerce and often without real necessity."—Lord Lindley (Id. 5 B. R. C. 835).

On liability of insurer under policy of marine insurance for losses arising out of state of war, see note in 5 B. R. C. 4.

[14] Weis & Co. Ltd. v. Credit Colonial & Commercial Co. 13 Mar. L. C. N. S. 242. See also Duncan Fox & Co. v. Schrempft & Bonke, 84 L. J. K. B. 2206, [1915] 3 K. B. 355, 113 L. T. 600, 20 Com. Cas. 337, 13 Asp. M. C. 131, 59 S. J. 578, 31 L. T. R. 491 (in such cases of goods carried on enemy ship, tender of documents after outbreak of war may be refused as being trading with enemy in violation of Proclamation of Aug. 5, 1914 as to trading with enemy).

As to effect of war on pre-existing valid contract, etc., see §§ 289 et seq. herein.

It is somewhat pertinent here, in

It is also held that if the outbreak of war renders illegal and impossible the performance of a contract which is partly performed before the event, and there is no agreement as to part performance, the loss lies where it falls and the parties are relegated to their relative positions, and this applies as to freight pro rata itineris, discharge of cargo at an intermediate port, and the clause as to restraint of princes, etc.[15] But if goods in transit are sold bona fide by enemy subjects to neutrals while war is imminent, but before its actual outbreak, the cargo although seized as prize will be released.[16]

§ 2548. Where prior part of same voyage is illegal.—It is declared by eminent authority that it is exceedingly difficult to distinguish connection with this point of prior valid cargo, and the right to discharge the same, after the outbreak of war, that after the termination of diplomatic relations between this country and Spain, on April 20, 1898, and after the proclamation on April 23, 1898, by Spain of an existing state of war, the President of the United States, on the 26th of the same month, by Proclamation declared that "5. Any Spanish merchant vessel which, prior to April 21, 1898, shall have sailed from any foreign port bound for any port or place in the United States, shall be permitted to enter such port or place and to discharge her cargo, and afterwards forthwith to depart without molestation; and any such vessel, if met at sea by any United States ship, shall be permitted to continue her voyage to any port not blockaded." Although the said above part of said Proclamation was directly involved, the points decided, however, were that Havana was an enemy port and not "a port or place within the United States," so as to prevent capture of a Spanish vessel after discharging her cargo there, although she had arrived there from Antwerp, April 17th, discharged and left for Santiago, April 22d; that it must be assumed that she was advised of the impending war, or strained relations existing between the United States and Spain; also that the nationality of the underwriters was immaterial. The Pedro, 175 U. S. 354, 44 L. ed. 195, 20 Sup. Ct. 138. See The Carlos P. Roses, 177 U. S. 655, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 803, a Spanish vessel which sailed from Barcelona, Spain, to Montevideo, Uruguay, discharged her cargo, took on one of jerked beef and garlic, sailed from there on March 16, 1898, for Havana and, on May 17, was captured, condemned as enemy's property, and her cargo being perishable was sold and proceeds ordered paid to claimants a British company doing business in London and it was held that the presumption that the cargo was enemy's property could only be overcome by clear and positive evidence contra.

[15] St. Enoch Shipping Co. v. Phosphate Mining Co. 86 L. J. K. B. 74, [1916] 9 K. B. 624, 21 Com. Cas. 192.

[16] Southfield, The, 85 L. J. P. 78, 1 P. Cas. 332, 113 L. T. 656, 13 Asp. M. C. 150, 59 S. J. 681, 31 T. L. R. 577. Examine Parchim, The, 1 P. Cas. 579 (vessel chartered prior to war by German firm: goods sold during transit, but property in cargo held not passed: also the continuing performance with enemy charterers after war commenced was held illegal: vessel seized: rights of allies: prize case).

As to vendee of vessel: sale by belligerent to neutral, see § 2135 herein.

between an illegality in a former voyage and that in a prior part of the same voyage where the policy covers only the part which is legal.[17] The rule seems to be, however, that if there is such a legal infirmity at the inception of a voyage as to make it illegal, and the voyage, although it consists of separate or successive parts, is nevertheless an entire and continuous one, the original illegality extends to and taints every part of the subsequent voyage, and makes the entire voyage illegal.[18]

§ 2549. Illegality after risk attaches "at and from."—If the risk on the ship has actually attached under a policy "at and from," and is so far tainted with the illegality that the insurer could have then avoided the policy on this ground, the subsequent voyage is affected with such illegality to the extent of avoiding the insurance thereon.[19]

§ 2550. Where subsequent part of same voyage is illegal.—We believe that we may fairly deduce from the authorities the rule that if a subsequent illegality arising in the course of the same voyage be in furtherance or a necessary consequence or a consummation of a proven illegal intention existing at the inception of the voyage, this is such an infirmity in a part of an integral voyage that the whole voyage is rendered illegal. But if there is no illegal intention at the inception of the voyage, and the voyage exists as a valid one until the illegality arises, the rule does not apply.[20] It is declared

[17] Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, 126. Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J. See last section.

[18] Bird v. Pigon, 2 Selw. N. P. 991, 1009 (Phil. ed. 191) (9th ed.) (11th ed.) 966n, per Lord Kenyon; Camden v. Anderson, 6 Term Rep. 725, 1 Bos. & P. 272; 1 Duer on Ins. (ed. 1845) 336, sec. 27.

[19] Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 5 R. R. 468, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 547. We have cited this case in support of the rule in the text, and think it does support it to the extent specified. The risk had certainly attached on the ship and she had on board, one illegal cargo from the voyage to the place "at." She however disposed of this cargo before the ship sailed, and the new cargo was entirely distinct and separate. In the argument the policy on the ship was abandoned by plaintiff's counsel because the illegal goods were on board "at." The immediate voyage insured could not be severed, and the whole was an illegal adventure. Lord Kenyon said: "It is now very properly admitted that the policy on the ship must be abandoned, because during part of the time that the parties intended that the policy should attach . . . there was something illegal in the transaction," but the policy on the goods was upheld under the rule stated under §§ 2544, 2546 herein. This case is reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 74.

[20] Wilson v. Marryat, 8 Term Rep. 31, 1 Bos. & P. 430, as reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *68; Sewell v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 4 Taunt. 856; Gill v. Dunlop, 7 Taunt. 193; 1 Duer on Ins. (ed. 1845) 343, sec. 31. It is said by Mr. Justice Lawrence that "in order to render the insurance illegal the illegality should exist during the course of the voyage insured:" Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 5 R. R. 468. And it seems to be the rule in England that any illegality at the commencement or in the course of the voyage makes it illegal: 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 702, *699; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1886) 688, 689, citing Wilson v. Marryat, 8 Term Rep. 31, 46, per Lord Kenyon; Bird v. Pigou, 2 Selw. N. P. 1000 (Phil. ed. 191); Id. 2 Selw. N. P. (11th ed.) 966n. Lord Kenyon says: "I admit that if there had been any infirmity in any part of the integral voyage it would have made the whole illegal, so that the assured could not recover upon a policy or any part of it." But he also declares in the same case, referring to the intention existing at the commencement of the voyage: "Everything, therefore, relating to these different plans, though a fair subject of investigation and discussion, may now be laid out of our consideration, as it does not appear what precise voyage the parties had in contemplation at the inception of the voyage from America. Then if the voyage insured be not infected by what was done in America, it was a legal voyage;" and Mr. Marshall, who reports the case in which this language occurs, digests this portion of it so as to refer the illegality which would afford a basis for avoiding the contract to the commencement of the risk: Wilson v. Marryat, 8 Term Rep. 31, 1 Bos. & P. 430, as reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 68. Mr. Justice Story refers to the first above quoted part of Lord Kenyon's remarks as a "mere obiter dictum" substantially overturned by a subsequent decision: Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, 126, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J., the subsequent case referred to being Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 5 R. R. 468, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 547.

by eminent authority in this country that the voyage should be at the commencement wholly or in part illegal as to trade and objects in order to avoid an insurance, and in the same case the same judge further declares that a subsequent illegality will not affect an insurance upon an originally valid voyage, so far as concerns losses on property not tainted with such illegality, though connected with the independent illegal transaction, and that a mere liability to forfeiture will not avoid the insurance or prevent a recovery for a loss by an independent peril.[1] Mr. Duer, however, doubts the soundness of this decision, in that it implies that a subsequent illegality does not avoid the contract from the time it arises, and is of opinion that a subsequent illegality not connected with an original illegal intent avoids the insurance from the time it occurs.[2] We incline, however, to the belief that the better opinion favors the rule stated by Mr. Justice Story in all cases.[3]

[1] Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J.; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 157, 10 L. ed. 105. See §§ 904, 2507, 2538 herein.

[2] 1 Duer on Ins. (ed. 1845) 344, 345, secs. 31, 32. See Chalmers v. Bell, 3 Bos. & P. 604.

[3] "If the contract is on its face legal, and the passage or adventure contracted about is legal, the weightier authority seems to be in favor of the validity of the contract, though the subject contracted about may be on one side or the other precedent or consequent to something not sanctioned by the law:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 142, sec. 231. See Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Feagin, 62 Ga. 515, 575.

§ 2551. Effect of partial illegality upon contract.—The question as to the effect of a partial illegality upon the contract is one of much difficulty, and concerning which no certain rule can be stated. If it be assumed that the contract is entire, the way to a solution is comparatively clear, but there arises at once the question, When is the contract entire so that the rule "void in part void in toto" will apply? In fire risks, where real and personal property is covered by one contract, or there are several distinct and separate buildings insured, or several distinct and separate articles of personal property, or there is a separate valuation, the authorities are conflicting whether the risk is entire or severable. In fire risks, however, the point arises chiefly under conditions requiring disclosure as to title or encumbrances, or of circumstances relating to the condition, situation, or value of the property, or under warranties or stipulations in the policy, or concerning alienation, other insurance, and the like, so that we have in these risks an element which affects the construction, and that is whether the intention of the parties was to extend the condition in all its force to the entire contract and the entire property covered, and in some cases the condition itself is so worded as to extend specifically to all or any of the property. We have, however, considered elsewhere this question in its relation to fire risks.[4] The question whether the contract is entire or divisible would undoubtedly be eliminated if the illegality is such as to pervade the whole contract, and the same would be true in case of the illegal act of assured in shipping prohibited goods. Beyond this point it is equally as difficult to formulate a rule in marine as in fire risks concerning what is an entire and what a divisible contract, although it would seem that the courts will not, on general principles of construction, extend the rule so as to forfeit the rights of the assured, unless the circumstances are such as clearly warrant it, and if in marine policies there are different articles, or specific and different kinds of property separately valued, a reasonable construction would justify a finding that the contract is so far divisible that an illegality as to part may exist, and the property nevertheless be valid as to part, provided the ownership does not make the insurance illegal; that the illegality does not pervade the whole contract. The following rule may, however, be safely stated as to marine risks: If a party insured goods together generally under one policy, the risk being entire, as where they are included in one valuation, and some of the goods are illegal and the voyage is void as to them, the whole contract is illegal and void.[5]

As to partial illegality: life risk, see § 2509, subdiv. (b) herein.

[4] See §§ 1931, 2253, 2256 herein.

[5] Parkin v. Dick, 11 East, 502, 2

§ 2552. Last rule qualified where illegality removed as to part of cargo by permission of government.—The illegality which would otherwise exist as to the entire cargo may be removed as to part of the cargo where such part is lawfully carried under express permission of the government; as in case of goods the lawful carrying of which requires a government license, here the license will protect so much of the cargo as it covers, and that part which is in excess will be separated, and the policy will be valid as to the lawful part, even though all the goods are those of the same shipper covered by the same policy.[6] This rule rests upon the grounds that the goods protected by the license are lawfully shipped and cannot be forfeited, and that the excess can be easily repaired.

§ 2553. Partial illegality: shipowners under same policy.—If an insurance be effected under one policy on account of all the owners of the ship, it may be stated as a general rule that the contract is so far entire that an illegality at the inception of the voyage as to one of the owners affects all the owners with the consequent invalidity.[7]

§ 2554. Partial illegality: insurance by common agent covering goods of hostile and neutral owner.—Where the goods of hostile and neutral owners, between whom there is no common or joint interest, are insured by a common agent in one policy, there being no fraud or consent thereto, or other act of participation separate and distinct, the mere act of the agent in effecting such a policy does not extend the illegality attaching to the hostile goods to those which are neutral so as to avoid the insurance thereon.[8]

§ 2555. Effect of illegal employment of ship where neutral goods transported therein.—The illegal employment of the ship in trans-

Camp. 221, 11 R. R. 258, per Lord Ellenborough. See Camelo v. Britten, 4 Barn. & Ald. 184; Shiffner v. Gordon, 12 East, 296, per Lord Ellenborough; The Staadt Embden, 1 C. Rob. *27, 31; Gordon v. Vaughan, 12 East, 302n; The Jonge Tobias, 1 C. Rob. 329.

[6] Keir v. Andrade, 2 Marsh. 196, 6 Taunt. 498, 16 R. R. 660; Shiffner v. Gordon, 12 East, 296. See The Jonge Clara, 1 Edw. Adm. 371. See § 1818 herein. The decision itself in Keir v. Andrade, 6 Taunt. 498, 2 Marsh. 196, 16 R. R. 660, has, however, been subjected to both adverse and favorable criticism; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 390–93, adversely criticized, although he says, "It were indeed to be wished . . . that the decision in Keir v. Andrade could be sustained;" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 144, sec. 233, who says, "The rule adopted by that court is certainly recommended by very strong equitable considerations." See Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J.; Pieschell v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 792, per Gibbs, C. J.

[7] Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832.

[8] Hagedorn v. Bazett, 2 Maule & S. 100, per Lord Ellenborough.

porting enemy's goods will not invalidate an insurance upon goods of a neutral transported thereon.[9]

§ 2556. Goods of several owners under same policy effected by common agent.—The mere accidental circumstance of several owners having employed one common agent, and that he effects a policy covering their interests, does not communicate to the others the vice belonging to the property of one of the assured where there is no common or joint interest or partnership in the whole subsisting in the different owners, and no fraud; that is, the unlawfulness which would avoid one separate interest will not extend to and invalidate the interests of those others who have in no way a common interest, and who have not consented to or participated in the unlawful act through the common agent or otherwise. But it is said that if consent had been given to the employment of a common agent, the rule might be otherwise, and if the interests of the owners be joint and connected, or if they have a common interest in the loss or gain which may arise, the illegality which affects one affects all.[10]

§ 2557. Transportation by same vessel: lawful and unlawful goods.—If unlawful goods belonging to one owner are transported by the same vessel on which are lawful goods belonging to another owner, and the lawful goods are covered by a separate and distinct policy, the illegality of the voyage will not of itself extend to and avoid the policy on the lawful goods of the innocent owner.[11] It is held, however, as to contraband goods, that the contamination of such articles extends to noncontraband of a cargo belonging to the same owner, and the noncontraband must share the fate of the contraband.[12]

§ 2558. Effect of intention to do illegal act.—It may be stated as a general rule that the mere intention to do an illegal act which would if done avoid the policy is not of itself alone sufficient to invalidate the contract, the intent never having been consummated by any act; especially so where the actual subject matter described in

[9] Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283, 9 R. R. 558; Visger v. Prescott, 5 Esp. 184, 8 R. R. 846.

[10] Hagedorn v. Bazett, 2 Maule & S. 100, per Lord Ellenborough. In this case the policy was on goods thereafter to be valued, the hostile owner was interested one-sixteenth and the neutral one-fourteenth, but they were separately interested in the goods and the contract could be disturbed: Story v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 190, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832.

[11] The Jonge Clara, 2 Edw. Adm. 371, per Sir Wm. Scott; Pieschell v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 792.

Whether, in cases where the assured knows or ought to know that his goods are to be transported by the same vessel with unlawful goods, he ought to disclose such facts. See §§ 1807, 1818 herein. See The Bermuda, 3 Wall. (70 U. S.) 180, 18 L. ed. 200.

[12] The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. (72 U. S.) 28, 18 L. ed. 564.

the policy is not per se illegal, and the contract itself contains no stipulation which evidences an intent to perform an illegal act, and such absence of illegal intent may be shown where the facts are such as to warrant an explanation.[13] So in case of an implied exclusion arising from the acts of government, such implied exclusion may, it is held, be rebutted by the facts and circumstances of the case.[14] But if the ultimate purpose of the voyage is evidenced at the outset by some act done in furtherance thereof and in preparation therefor, the voyage is then illegal, even though the act done is not the act prohibited.[15]

§ 2559. Trade with enemy, absence of intent to violate law no excuse.—Where either ship or goods are engaged in illegal traffic with the enemy, it is no excuse that there was no intent to transgress the law, or even that the illegal acts were done in good faith.[16]

§ 2560. When possibility of executing illegal intention is removed.—Where the possibility of executing the intention to trade with the enemy is removed by the intervention of peace or some cause which makes the country no longer enemy's country, the crime of trading with the enemy not being consummated at the time, the intent of itself is not punishable as a crime.[17] This rule applies to a case of an intent to proceed to a blockaded port where the blockade has ceased.[18] The rule, however, would undoubtedly not extend to and validate an insurance which had been effected prior to the happening of such an event, where the voyage was commenced with the intent to do the illegal act: for, as we have seen, a voyage which is illegal in its origin and inception is void where some

[13] Clark v. Protection Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 109, 124, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832, per Story, J.; Waters v. Allen, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 421; Fontaine v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 293; Holland v. Hall, 1 Barn. & Ald. 53, 18 R. R. 428; The Abby, 5 C. Rob. 251, per Sir Wm. Scott; Sewell v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 4 Taunt. 856; Gill v. Dunlop, 7 Taunt. 193, 204.

[14] Simeon v. Bazett, 2 Maule & S. 94.

[15] Lubbock v. Potts, 7 East, 449. Even in the slave trading cases there must be some evidence of a criminal intent to employ the vessel in the illegal trade, shown by the preparation or fitting out, and the vessel could be seized so soon as the intention to sail was apparent, such unlawful intent existing; The Slavers, 2 Wall. (69 U. S.) 350, 358, 17 L. ed. 878; The Emily and Caroline, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 381, 6 L. ed. 116; Strolum v. United States, Taney (U. S. C. C.) 413. Fed. Cas. No. 13,539; United States v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 460, 6 L. ed. 693; The Plattsburg, 10 Wheat. (23 U. S.) 133, 6 L. ed. 284.

[16] The Hoop, 1 C. Rob. 196, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Joseph, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 451, 3 L. ed. 621, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 545, Fed. Cas. No. 7,533; The Vriendschaft, 4 C. Rob. 96, 99.

[17] The Abby, 5 C. Rob. 251. See The Trende Sostre, 6 C. Rob. 390n; The Imina, 3 C. Rob. 167.

[18] The Leisette, 6 C. Rob. 387, 390.

act is done, such as commencing in furtherance of the intent, even though the act be not the one prohibited.[19]

§ 2561. Insurance upon a cartel ship while employed as such.—As the employment of a vessel as a cartel ship entitles her to protection under the law of nations, an insurance thereon would undoubtedly be valid, but inasmuch as such vessels may not engage in trade with a belligerent, the doing of such act would logically, because of the consequent forfeiture of her privileges and liability to confiscation, render the insurance void.[20]

§ 2562. Insurance to ports some hostile some not.—If an insurance be to port or ports, some of which are hostile and at war and others not, the law implies an exception in favor of the nonhostile ports, and the policy is prima facie valid;[1] although it may be proven in such case as a defense to the policy that the voyage was intended and made to such interdicted port.[2]

§ 2563. Contract excepting interdicted port unlawful.—If a port is interdicted by the laws of this country, it is not competent to stipulate an exception of such interdicted ports; such a contract is unlawful.[3]

§ 2564. Subject of one of two or more allied powers may not trade with common enemy.—The rule which prohibits trading with an enemy makes illegal the trade of a subject of one of two or more allied powers with the common enemy.[4]

§ 2565. Trade with port occupied by enemy's forces: power of government to determine what are hostile relations.—Acquisitions of territory made during the war, and of which the conqueror retains possession and control, are, as a general rule, a part of his domain for every commercial and belligerent purpose, although they are not permanent possessions until confirmed by treaty.[5]

[19] See § 2558 herein.

[20] See The Daifjie, 3 C. Rob. 139; The Venus, 4 C. Rob. 355; The Mary, 5 C. Rob. 200; La Glorie, 5 C. Rob. 192.

[1] Wright v. Welbie, 1 Chitty, 49, 22 R. R. 792. See § 2506 herein. See Blackburn v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 61, 13 R. R. 382; Johnson v. Greaves, 2 Taunt. 344.

[2] Russell v. De Grand, 15 Mass. 35.

[3] Russell v. De Grand, 15 Mass. 35.

[4] The Nayade, 4 C. Rob. 251; The Eenhigheid, 1 C. Rob. 210. See § 2506, subdiv. (e) herein.

[5] Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 191, 3 L. ed. 701, per Marshall, C. J.

As to territories acquired by war: when civil government takes effect; that territory so acquired belongs to the government of the United States, consisting of the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives; and as to right to establish temporary or permanent or military or civil government, see Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 45 L. ed. 1088, 21 Sup. Ct. 770.

As to "contributions, requisitions, and compulsory service in occupied territory." See article by James W. Garner, 11 Amer. Jour. of Internat. Law (Jan. 1917) pp. 74 et seq.

During the time of the Berlin and Milan decrees, however, the English court asserted the principle that it is within the power of a state to determine the relations sustained by it to other countries, and that courts will be bound thereby and will recognize the national character thus established, and declared that the fact that a trade is carried on with a port occupied by enemy's forces does not make it illegal where the government where the insurance is made does not deem it expedient to pronounce such as hostile, and to enforce against the coerced government the rigors of war, preferring to consider such port friendly or neutral rather than hostile; especially where its commerce is attempted to be excluded by decrees not in conformity with the law of nations, and insurances covering a vessel to such ports have been declared legal.[6]

So the acts of the executive branch of the government in declaring a fact concerning the sovereignty of any island or country concludes the judicial department, and excludes the question whether such act of the executive is right or wrong, otherwise there would be constantly recurring and irreconcilable differences between these two departments upon questions of foreign jurisdiction; and, therefore, where this government had refused to recognize the sovereignty of Buenos Ayres and extending to and including the Falkland Islands, and a vessel which had proceeded to those islands on a sealing voyage, for which she was insured, was seized for an alleged violation of the law of Buenos Ayres in fishing there, it was held that the insured was not bound to regard unlawful threats of any individual assuming such unrecognized authority, and that the insurers were liable, and that the master had the right in behalf of his owners, and in the exercise of a proper and reasonable discretion, to persist in asserting and maintaining a national right common to citizens of this country.[7]

§ 2566. Illegality to which insurer is in privity may affect his rights.—It is not competent for the owner to stipulate contrary to express or implied prohibitory laws affecting the legality of the trade or voyage, and if he does so he may not recover his premium. This rule also applies to those cases where proof of the knowledge or privity of the insurer in the illegality depends upon extrinsic evidence.[8]

[6] Hagedorn v. Bell, 1 Maule & S. 450, 459, 14 R. R. 497; Miller v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 610, 12 R. R. 753; Donaldson v. Thompson, 1 Camp. 429, 10 R. R. 717; Johnson v. Greaves, 2 Taunt. 344. See The Manilla, Edw. Adm. 1; Gelston v. Hoyt, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 587; Blackburn v. Thompson, 15 East, 81, 3 Camp. 61, 13 R. R. 382; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 730, *728 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 144, 704–06; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 757, p. 943.

[7] Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 415, 10 L. ed. 226, aff'g 3 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 270, Fed. Cas. No. 17,738. See Rose v. Hime-

§ 2567. Goods shipped to neutral port.—(a) Ulterior or ultimate destination. The fact that goods intended for the enemy are first shipped to a neutral port does not of itself legalize the trade where it is proposed to forward them thence to the enemy, even though the goods are unladen, and the mode of conveyance thence to the ulterior destination makes no difference, and inasmuch as the legality of the voyage is referred to the commencement thereof where such ulterior unlawful destination was then intended,[9] any insurance covering such voyage would necessarily be invalid.

(b) Distinction where consignee is resident of country occupied by enemy. A case of the above character differs from one where a neutral is resident at the time of a country in the occupation of the enemy, for in such case goods are insurable although consigned to such neutral to be delivered to him at a neutral or friendly port.[10]

(c) Distinction between "continuous voyage" or "continuous transportation" and ultimate hostile destination of contraband. A distinction is also made between the doctrine of "continuous voyage" or "continuous transportation;" and the doctrine of ultimate hostile destination of conditional and absolute contraband respectively and it is declared as to the former, or "continuous voyage" that it was first applied by the English prize courts to unlawful trading and that there is no reported case in the courts of that country where the doctrine is applicable to the carriage of contraband, but that it was so applied and extended by the United States courts against England at the time of the American Civil War, and its application was acceded to by the British Government of the day, and was, moreover, acted upon by the International Commission which sat under the treaty between these two countries in 1891, and has been a clearly recognized doctrine under United States decisions and also in England. This matter is, however, more fully presented in the exhaustive discussion of the subject in the noteworthy case of The Kim, which is hereinafter considered under the subject of contraband with excerpts from the opinion in said case.[11]

ly, 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 241, 272, 2 L. ed. 608.

[8] Russel v. De Grand, 15 Mass. 35; Gray v. Sims, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 276, Fed. Cas. No. 5,729; Craig v. United States Ins. Co. Pet. (U. S. C. C.) 417, Fed. Cas. No. 3,340.

[9] The Jonge Pieter, 4 C. Rob. 79, per Sir Wm. Scott. Examine Wilson v. Marryat, 8 Term Rep. 36, 1 Bos. & P. 430.

As to Proclamation of President of the United States prohibiting exports for purpose of stopping leakages into Germany through neutrals, see § 2539 herein.

[10] Bromley v. Hesseltine, 1 Camp. 75, 10 R. R. 635. See § 2569a herein.

[11] The Kim; The Alfred Nobel; The Bjornsterjne Bjornson; The Fridland, 85 L. J. P. 38, [1915] L. Prob. D. 215, 1 P. Cas. 405, 113 L. T. 1064, 60 Sol. J. 9, 13 Asp. M. Cas. 178, 32 T. L. R. 10, considered under § 2569a herein.

Inasmuch as certain important Federal Supreme Court decisions are cited in the opinion in the Kim case,[12] it is proper to state here what was decided respectively in those cases; In the Peterhoff case,[13] which was one of those cited, it was held that the blockade of ports by the national government during the civil war did not include the mouth of the Rio Grande, occupied on one bank by neutrals with complete rights of navigation; and that neutral commerce with Matamoras a neutral town on the Mexican side of the river, was entirely free except as to contraband destined to the enemy; also that no blockade was violated by a vessel destined for a neutral port with no ulterior destination for the ship or none by sea for the cargo to any blockaded place; accordingly trade between London and Matamoras, both neutral places, the last an inland one of Mexico close to the Mexican boundary with intent to supply from the latter place goods to Texas, then an enemy to the national government, was not unlawful as a violation of blockade; furthermore that the trade of neutrals with belligerents is absolutely free as to articles not contraband, except so far as interrupted by blockade, but the conveyance of contraband articles by neutrals to belligerents is always unlawful, and such articles may always be seized during transit by sea. It was said in this case, per Mr. Chief Justice Chase that "it is an undoubted general principle," recognized in several cases, "that an ulterior destination to a blockaded port will infect the primary voyage to a neutral port with liability for intended violation of blockade." In the Bermuda case,[14] also cited in the Kim decision, it is held that no trade can be lawfully interrupted by belligerents where said trade is honestly carried on between neutral ports, whether of the same or different nations, but that good faith must govern such commerce, for enemy commerce under neutral disguises has no claim to neutral immunity; also, that goods of every description may be conveyed from neutral ports to neutral ports, provided it is actually intended to discharge them at a neutral port to be brought into the common stock there of merchandise, but an intention, real or pretended, to touch at intermediate neutral ports will not protect ship or cargo from seizure where the voyage from neutral ports is intended for belligerent ports; that although goods of any description, may be conveyed by a neutral to belligerent ports not under blockade, still contraband of war is always subject to seizure when its destination, whether by direct or indirect voyage, is a belligerent

As to continuity of voyage; vessel and cargoes protected under President's Proclamation or instructions (Act Aug. 28, 1812). See The Mary, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 126, 3 L. ed. 678.

[12] See § 2569a note herein.

[13] 5 Wall. (72 U. S.) 28, 18 L. ed. 564.

[14] 3 Wall. (70 U. S.) 514, 18 L. ed. 200.

one. The seizure is, however, confined to actual contraband, and except in cases of fraud or bad faith on the owner's part or of the master with the owner's sanction, does not extend to the ship or other cargo: but the liability to seizure and condemnation does extend, from the commencement to the end of the voyage to cases of vessels conveying contraband cargo to ports not under blockade when the circumstances show fraud or bad faith, also where cargo of any description is being conveyed to belligerent ports under blockade. It was also decided that, whether the destination be ulterior or direct, and whether with or without the interposition of one or more intermediate ports, and whether to be performed by one vessel or several employed in the same transaction and in accomplishment of the same purpose, the voyage from a neutral to a belligerent constitutes one and the same voyage; and, finally, seizure and condemnation of ship and cargo in voyage to ports of blockade are justified by destination alone; and seizure of contraband in voyage to ports not under blockade is equally justified by destination alone, except that in such case ship and cargo which are not contraband are free from seizure, unless in cases of fraud or bad faith. It was said, per Mr. Chief Justice Chase, that "It makes no difference whether the destination to the rebel port was ulterior or direct: nor could the question of destination be affected by transhipment at Nassau, if transhipment was intended, for that could not break the continuity of transportation of the cargo. The interposition of a neutral port between neutral departure and belligerent destination has always been a favorite resort of contraband carriers and blockade runners. But it never avails them when the ultimate destination is ascertained. A transportation from one point to another remains continuous so long as intent remains unchanged, no matter what stoppages or transhipments intervene." [15] In the case of The Springbok [16] also cited in The Kim as above stated there was no sufficient proof that the owners, who were neutrals, had any knowledge of the unlawful destination of the cargo, and they had no interest therein, nor had they in any way previously violated neutral obligations, and the stipulations of the charter party in favor of said owners were apparently in good faith; the vessel was also neutral and was on a voyage to a neutral port under a charter party, sailing under genuine and regular papers as to which there was no concealment or spoliation; and it was decided that in such case the vessel would not be condemned because the neutral port to which it was bound had been constantly and notoriously used as a port of call and transhipment by persons engaged in systematic violation of blockade and in the conveyance of contraband of war, and the owners of the cargo intended that it be so used in regard to it; but, inasmuch as the vessel was sailing to such a port, the cargo was condemned for intent to run a blockade. It appeared, however, that the bills of lading and the manifest made the cargo deliverable to order and the letter of instructions to the master directed him to report himself on arrival at the neutral port to a certain person "who would give him orders as to the delivery of his cargo." The bills of lading disclosed the contents of only about one third the number of packages which made the cargo, the greater proportion being undisclosed, and a certain fraction of the cargo whose contents were undisclosed was especially fitted for the enemy's military use, and a larger part was capable of being adapted thereto. There were also other relevant facts which tended to show the intent, such as blockade running, etc.

[15] The Bermuda, 3 Wall. (70 U. S.) 551, 553, 18 L. ed. 200, quoted in The Pedro, 175 U. S. 354, 374, 44 L. ed. 195, 20 Sup. Ct. 138, per Mr. Justice White.

[16] 5 Wall. (72 U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 480.

It will be seen therefore that the first two decisions covered more especially the case of an actual enforceable blockade, a belligerent destination and the interposition of a neutral port to break the continuity of the voyage, but the decision clearly refers to cases where the ulterior destination intended was that of a belligerent, while the last decision covered an attempt of the owners of the cargo under a consignment thereof deliverable to order to run a blockade with contraband goods, although the vessel owner had no knowledge of the intended illegal destination for enemy's use.[17]

§ 2568. Insurances on contraband of war.—(a) If in time of war between this country and another goods which are contraband of war are sent by a neutral to aid the enemy, they are not capable of a valid insurance here.[18]

(b) But so far as a neutral is concerned an insurance on contraband goods may validly be made and enforced in the neutral coun-

[17] As to goods shipped by neutral on enemy vessel to enemy port, on voyage commenced before war declared, "to order, for account and risk," etc., see The Carlos F. Roses, 177 U. S. 655, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 803, considered under § 2748 herein.

[18] 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 81a; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 623, 642 et seq. See Gibson v. Service, 5 Taunt. 433, 1 Marsh. 119, 15 R. R. 668.

As to contraband of war, see 2 Halleck's Internat. Law (ed. 1908) pp. 243 et seq. As to history of contraband trade, see Taylor's Internat. Law (ed. 1904) pp. 725 et seq., secs. 653 et seq. See also discussion as to development of the law of contraband, in article by William C. Morey, in Vol. 10 Amer. Jour. Internat. L. (1916) pp. 467, 491.

On effect of carriage of contraband upon marine insurance, see note in 5 B. R. C. 58.

try, for it is not, with respect to the neutral, an illegal commerce, although the goods may be subject to seizure and confiscation by a belligerent.[19]

(c) In connection with the above assertion and upon the assumption that goods or articles which are lawfully the subject of commerce or trade may be insured, we will state that it does not constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of international law for a corporation carrier to contract for the exportation of contraband, as in case of lead, to be delivered in the port of a belligerent, since it is not illegal to export contraband articles even though said articles and ship are subject to the risk of capture and forfeiture.[20] In the case of The Bermuda,[1] the court, per Mr. Chief Justice Chase, said: "Neutrals in their own country may sell to belligerents whatever belligerents choose to buy. The principal exceptions to this rule are, that neutrals must not sell to one belligerent what they refuse to sell to the other, and must not furnish soldiers or sailors either; nor prepare, nor suffer to be prepared within their territory armed ships or military, or naval expeditions against either. So, too, except goods contraband of war, or conveyed with intent to violate a blockade neutrals may transport to belligerents whatever belligerents may agree to take. And so, again, neutrals may convey on neutral ships, from one neutral port to another, any goods whether contraband of war or not, if intended for actual delivery at the port of destination, and to become part of the common stock of the country or of the port. . . . Very eminent writers on international maritime law have denied the right of neutrals to sell to belligerents, even within neutral territory, articles made for use in war, or to transport such articles to belligerent ports without liability to seizure and confiscation of goods and ship. And this is not an illogical inference from the general maxim that neutrals must not mix in the war. International law, however, in its practical administration, leans to the side of commercial freedom, and allows both free sale and free conveyance by neutrals to belligerents, if no blockade be violated, of all sorts of goods except contraband; and the conveyance even of contraband goods, will not, in general, subject the ship, but only the goods to forfeiture." [2] Again, it was decided in1822 that the sending of armed vessels, or of munitions of war, from a neutral country to a belligerent port, for sale, as articles of commerce, is unlawful, only as it subjects the property to confiscation on capture by the other belligerent; also, that no neutral state is bound to prohibit the exportation of contraband articles and it is not prohibited by the United States. Furthermore,

[19] The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 283, 5 L. ed. 454, per Story, J.; Richardson v. Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92; Bowne v. Shaw, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 489; Harratt v. Wise, 9 Barn. & C. 712, 4 M. & Ry. 521, 7 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 309; Rhodes v. Hunter, 2 Hud. & B. 581; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. viii. sec. 5, p. 170. See discussion of this subject in 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 750 et seq. Examine Acts Congress 1794, re-enacted 1818.

[20] Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. American Trading Co. 195 U. S. 439, 49 L. ed. 269, 25 Sup. Ct. 84.

[1] 3 Wall. (70 U. S.) 514, 551, 552, 18 L. ed. 200.

[2] Art. 3 of Declaration of Paris of 1856 provides that "neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag." See § 2128 herein. And in the Carlos F. Roses, 177 U. S. 655, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 803, it is said that the President's proclamation of April 26, 1898, declared that the policy of the Government in the conduct of the war would be to adhere to the rules of the Declaration of Paris, one of which was Art. 3, above set forth.

See further as to augmentation of armament of belligerent ships as breach of neutrality, the following cases: United States v. Quincy (1832) 6 Pet. (31 U. S.) 445, 8 L. ed. 458 (indictment charging being knowingly concerned in fitting out in this country a vessel with intent to employ her in service of foreign "people" the United Province of Buenos Ayres, against subjects of Emperor of Brazil with whom the United States were at peace); The Gran Para (1822) 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 471, 486, 5 L. ed. 501 ("The principle is now firmly settled that prizes made by vessels which have violated the Acts of Congress, that have been enacted for the preservation of the neutrality of the United States, if brought within their territory, shall be restored," per Mr. Chief Justice Marshall. The point was also covered as to the intention with which a vessel was equipped); United States v. Grassin (1811) 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 65, Fed. Cas. No. 15,248 (illegal augmentation of force of French privateer; what constitutes); The Betty Cartheart (1795) Bee Admr. 292, Fed. Cas. No. 9,742 (augmenting armament; what equipment of guns and men is breach of neutrality); Moodie v. The Brothers (1795) Bee Admr. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 9,473 (when equipment for war in neutral port does not take place by alterations and repairs); Neutrality Law, 13 Opinion of Attorney General 541; violation of neutrality 4 Opinion of Attorney General 336; De Wütz v. Hendric (1824) 9 Moore 586, 2 Bing. 314, 3 L. J. (O. S.) C. P. 3, 27 R. R. 660 (action of trover for certain papers; illegal for residence of Great Britain to raise money by way of loan to assist in prosecuting war against government in amity). As to goods for enemy's use in neutral port, see 2 Halleck's Internat. Law (ed. 1908) p. 249.

See article "Sale of munitions of war" by William C. Morey, in Vol. 10 Amer. Jour. Inter'l. L. (1916) pp. 467–491. See also article by Charles Noble Gregory, Id. pp. 543–555 on "Neutrality and Sale of Arms;" also article as to sales and exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerents, 10 Amer. Jour. Int. L. (1916) pp. 749–797, article by James W. Garner.

That citizens of neutral country may sell contraband to belligerent government or its agent, subject to enemy's right to prevent articles sold reaching destination but neutral government itself cannot sell; but that right of said citizens does not extend to outfitting or furnishing vessels in American ports, etc. See circular of Department of State of United States, Oct. 15, 1915, published in 9 Amer. Jour. Internat. L. (1915) suppl. p. 124.

in connection with the same principle, in the case of an illegal augmentation of the force of a belligerent cruiser, in the ports of this country, by enlisting men, the onus probandi is on him to show, that the persons enlisted, were subject of the belligerent state or belonging to its service, and then transiently within the United States. It is also declared in said case that "There is nothing in our laws, or in the law of nations, that forbids our citizens from sending armed vessels as well as munitions of war to foreign ports for sale. It is a commercial adventure which no nation is bound to prohibit, and which only exposes the person engaged in it to the penalty of confiscation."[3] If the seizure and detention of a vessel for trade in contraband of war are bona fide, a sentence of condemnation or acquittal, or other regular proceeding, is unnecessary to discharge the underwriters, for, when discharged from the primary hostile act, they are discharged from the consequences of it. So the clause in a policy that the judgment of a foreign consular or colonial court shall not be conclusive as to the fact of there being articles contraband of war on board, or as to the fact of an attempt at illicit trade, will be interpreted as introduced to enable the assured to disprove the existence of justifiable cause for seizure or detention by showing that the facts did not warrant it.[4]

(d) It is also held that "contraband goods of war" do not vitiate a policy warranted to be on goods that are "lawful." The insured are not bound to disclose that the goods insured are "contraband of war."[5] And when it is understood by the parties that the voyage is illicit by the laws of the country to which the vessel is destined, the warranty against contraband goods is to be extended to such goods only as are contraband of war, not such as are contraband by the laws of that country,[6] or to contraband as distinguished from contraband of war.[7]

§ 2569. What articles contraband of war.—The term "contraband of war" has reference to the existence of war.[8] Outside of those international treaties which settle what articles are contraband of

[3] The Santissima Trinidad; The St. Andre (1822) 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 283, 5 L. ed. 454.

[4] Carrington v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 495, 8 L. ed. 1021.

[5] Seton v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 1. See Rhinelander v. Juhel, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 120, 487 and note. Comments on these two cases; 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 268.

As to disclosure that goods are contraband; belligerent risks, see § 1818 herein.

[6] Vandervoort v. Smith, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 155.

As to warranty against illicit, prohibited or contraband trade; against seizure therefor, see § 2682 herein.

[7] Compare Cucullu v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 5 La. N. S. 464, 16 Am. Dec. 199, 8 La. O. S. 613.

[8] Wilbraham v. Wartnaby, Lloyd & W. 144, 8 L. J. K. B. 255.

war,[9] it is difficult, if not impossible, to precisely specify them. It is not merely the fact that the goods may aid the enemy. It is always undoubtedly a pertinent inquiry whether there is a breach of that strict impartiality which a neutral nation is bound to observe, and whether the neutral has rendered aid to one belligerent to the detriment of the other by furnishing him goods or articles which are intended clearly to subserve the purposes of war, and to this end the character of the goods themselves in certain cases are peculiarly indicative of the intent. Of this class are arms, ammunition, and other implements and munitions of war of every description, or articles which may immediately be used for the purposes of war by land or naval forces. So ships for war, materials for shipbuilding, and naval stores have been declared contraband of war, and sometimes, though not generally, provisions have been held such, and contributions not designed to aid hostilities, but in good faith, and to relieve distress of a belligerent, are held not a breach of neutrality; and augmenting the armament of belligerent ships of war is an offense against neutrality, although making repairs is not necessarily so. Commodities which are supplied one neutral may be supplied another, even though useful in war. In cases of doubt where the articles are susceptible of a civil use as well as a warlike one, the character of the port of destination has been deemed important, although not a certain test, and where the goods are not adapted to warlike uses, the test does not apply. So goods which might otherwise partake of the character of contraband of war are not such when excepted by particular treaties.[10] It is de-

[9] In the first commercial treaty between this country and France contraband goods were defined as solely munitions of war: Schuyler's American Diplomacy, 368. So also does the Ordonnance of Louis XIV. of 1681. In the treaty of 1794 between this country and Great Britain materials for shipbuilding were declared contraband except unwrought iron and fir planks. See United States Statutes at Large for treaties.

[10] The Carlos F. Roses (1899) 177 U. S. 655, 675, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 303 ("It is true that by the modern law of nations, provisions, while not generally deemed contraband, may become so, although belonging to a neutral, on account of the particular situation of the war, or on account of their destination, as if destined for military use, for the enemy, or navy of the enemy, or ports of naval or military equipment," per Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, citing The Benito Estenger, 176 U. S. 568, 44 L. ed. 592, 20 Sup. Ct. 489; The Panama, 176 U. S. 535, 44 L. ed. 577, 20 Sup. Ct. 480; The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. (72 U. S.) 28, 18 L. ed. 564; Grotius De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. III. c. I. sec. 5; Hull sec. 236); The Benito Estenger (1899) 176 U. S. 568, 44 L. ed. 592, 20 Sup. Ct. 489 (provisions not generally contraband, but may become so if destined for the enemy's army or navy, his ports of naval or military equipment); United States v. Diekelman (1875) 92 U. S. 520, 23 L. ed. 742 (money, silver plate, and bullion when destined for hostile use, or for the purchase of clared, however, that the classification of goods as contraband or not contraband which is best supported by American and English hostile supplies, are contraband); United States v. Sheldon (1817) 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 119, 4 L. ed. 199 (living fat oxen, etc., are articles of provision and munitions of war within Act of Congress of July 6, 1812, but driving said oxen, etc., on foot is not a transportation thereof within said enactment prohibiting American vessels from proceeding to or trading with enemies, etc.); The Commercen (1816) 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 382, 4 L. ed. 116 (provisions neutral property, but the growth of the enemy's country and destined for the supply of the enemy's military or naval forces are contraband; but such provisions if destined for the general supply of human life in the enemy's country are not contraband; and it makes no difference that the enemy is carrying on a distinct war in conjunction with his allies, who are friends of the captor's country, and that the provisions are intended for the supply of his troops engaged in that war, and that the ship on which they are transported belongs to a subject of one of the allies); United States v. Barber (1815) 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 243, 3 L. ed. 719 (fat cattle are provisions or munitions of war within Act of Congress, July 6, 1812, to prohibit American vessels from proceeding to or trading with enemies, etc.); Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle (1815) 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 191, 3 L. ed. 701 (the produce of an enemy colony is hostile property so long as it belongs to the owner of the soil, regardless of his national character in other respects, or his place of residence); The Steamship Frosida (1871) 4 Ben. Admr. 452, Fed. Cas. No. 4,887 (violation of neutrality enactments; vessel and cargo consisting of arms and munitions of war; landing of cargo contraband of war on shore of country of one belligerent at a point not blockaded, is not an act of hostility against other government); Maisonnaire v. Keating (1815) 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 325, Fed. Cas. No. 8,978 (provisions when destined to port of naval equipment of the enemy, and a fortiori, if destined for supply of his army, become contraband and subject vessel and cargo to confiscation by the other belligerent, more especially if the country of the captured vessel be at war with the country to which she is destined). In the English cases cited below it will be observed that certain of the decisions determine whether particular articles used in shipbuilding at the time of wooden ships of war were contraband. The chief value of these decisions depends, however, at the present day, upon such of the principles underlying them as are in force here upon the point that articles are contraband of war when intended to aid one belligerent to the detriment of another, etc., as stated in the text: The Zelden Rust (1805) 6 C. Rob. 93 (Dutch cheese condemned); The Richmond (1804) 5 C. Rob. 325 (pitch and tar concealed: condemned); The Charlotte Kaltzenburg (1804) 5 C. Rob. 305 (masts, particularly those of large dimensions, are: nature of port immaterial; unless protected by treaty); The Nostra Signora (1804) 5 C. Rob. 97 (rosin not contraband when to a port not of military equipment); The Evert (1803) 4 C. Rob. 354 (hemp, contraband: incumbent on claimant to show that it was of growth of districts the produce of which was usually employed in ordinary course of their trade); The Twee Juffrowen (1802) 4 C. Rob. 242 (tar and pitch, not produce of exporting country, is contraband: onus probandi on claimant); The Apollo (1802) 4 C. Rob. 158 (hemp generally contraband but being neutral property and on board neutral ship destined to Amsterdam: excepted); The Gute Gesselschaff Michael decisions, divides all merchandise into three classes: (1) Articles manufactured and primarily or ordinarily used for military purposes in time of war. (2) Articles which may be and are used for purposes of war or peace according to circumstances. (3) Articles exclusively used for peaceful purposes. Merchandise of the first class destined to a belligerent country or places occupied by the army or navy of a belligerent is always contraband; merchandise of the second class is contraband only when actually destined to the military or naval use of a belligerent; while merchandise of the third class is not contraband at all, though liable to seizure and condemnation for violation of blockade or siege. Parts of cargo described in a ship's invoice as cases of "artillery harness," as "men's army Bluchers," as "artillery boots" and as "government regulation gray blankets" come within the first class.[11]

(1801) 4 C. Rob. 94 (hemp of inferior quality and not fit for naval purposes: not contraband); The Edward (1801) 4 C. Rob. 68 (wines with false destination condemned); The Neptunus (1800) 3 C. Rob. 108 (tallow not contraband on destination to great mercantile port as well as port of naval equipment; sail cloth contraband even to ports of mere mercantile equipment); The Haabet (1799) 2 C. Rob. 175, 182 (cargo of corn decreed to be restored after being seized and brought into England); The Sarah Christina (1799) 1 C. Rob. 241 (pitch and tar generally contraband, with relaxation of rule where produce is of claimant's own country and real destination is not concealed; ship was also condemned as property of same owner); Jonge Margarita (1799) 1 C. Rob. 196 (except under certain circumstances provisions are not contraband, as where they are the product of the country which exports them, but if the product of another country and that a hostile one, and the claimant has not only gone out of his way to supply the enemy but has assisted the enemy's ally in the war by taking off his surplus commodities they are contraband: cheeses held contraband); The Staadt Emden (1798) 1 C. Rob. *22, 26 (masts also innocent parts of the cargo, how affected); The Endraught (1798) 1 C. Rob. 25 (cargo of ship timber going to an enemy port of naval equipment: treaty with Denmark).

Examine, generally, Taylor's Internat. Law (ed. 1904) secs. 655 et seq., pp. 727 et seq.; Abbott on Shipping (6th Am. ed.) 347 et seq.; Wheaton's International Law (6th ed.) 535, 546, 551 et seq.; Hall's International Law (ed. 1880) 564, 565, 578–83 et seq.; Davis' International Law (ed. 1887) 336–365; Walker's International Law (ed. 1893) 433, 446, 506–08, 510–12; 2 Halleck's International Law (ed. 1861) c. 24; Id. (ed. 1908) secs. 14 et seq., pp. 250 et seq.; 3 Geneva Award. Rep. St. Dep., pt. 1, 11, 49, 74; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *736, *741; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 708–12; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 761–764, pp. 947 et seq.; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 623–43; 3 Vattel on the Law of Nations, sec. 104.

As to augmentation of armament of belligerent ships as breach of neutrality, etc., see notes to § 2568, subdiv. (c) herein.

[11] The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. (72 U. S.) 28, 58, 18 L. ed. 564.

Contraband goods sent by mail or post, not protected: also not protected by Art. I. of Eleventh Hague Convention. The Turantia, 32 L. T. 529.

So goods destined to supply the fleet of one belligerent are contraband of war.[12] But the above rule does not preclude shipping goods to supply the forces of the shipper's own country, although destined for an enemy's port, where there is reasonable ground for belief that they are in possession, or there is actual knowledge of such fact, and an insurance effected in the shipper's country on such goods is valid.[13]

The term "contraband" is also applicable to goods only and not to persons, in the absence of something in the context pointing to another meaning, or unless the words are used in connection with some place or trade usage in which they have acquired a secondary meaning.[14]

§ 2569a. Same subject: British Orders in Council, etc.—Shortly after war was declared between Great Britain and Germany, the former issued a Proclamation or Order in Council, specifying the articles which should constitute contraband and contraband of war. These Orders have been added to, amended and revised from time to time by numerous other Orders or Proclamations. The list of articles covered, is, however, given in the Appendix herein, in juxtaposition to the Declaration of London where it can be readily compared with the list of contraband, contraband of war, absolute and conditional contraband, and noncontraband given in said Declaration,[15] although, on October 29, 1914, the provisions of that Convention, which had been adopted with certain additions and modifications on August 20, 1914, were, as to the lists of contraband and non-contraband, excluded by Order in Council on account of the changed conditions of commerce etc.; other rules were also subsequently promulgated, abrogating other provisions of said Declaration.

The following Orders in Council show the position taken by Great Britain, on the several dates specified, with relation to the present very important questions which concern contraband, the

As to correspondence concerning "noncontraband character of Hydroaeroplanes;" United States and Germany, see 9 American Jour. of Inter'l. Law (special No.) pp. 366–368.

[12] The Commercen, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 382, 388, 4 L. ed. 116, 2 Gall. (C. C.) 261, Fed. Cas. No. 3,055; Maisonarie v. Keating, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 325, Fed. Cas. No. 8,978.

[13] See Calhoun v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 293; Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236. See § 2558 herein. See §§ 2136 et seq. herein, as to breach of blockade.

[14] Yangtsze Ins. Assoc. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assur. Co. [1908] 2 K. B. 504, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 995, 24 T. L. R. 687, 13 Comm. Cas. 283, 99 L. T. N. S. 498, 32 Sol. J. 550, 5 B. R. C. 53, aff'g Bigham, J., [1908] 1 K. B. 910, 24 T. L. R. 381, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 392, 32 Sol. J. 315 (considered under § 2682 herein).

[15] See Appendix F herein.

Declaration of London, ultimate destination, etc. By Proclamation in England dated August 5, 1914, British vessels were prohibited from carrying from one foreign port to any other foreign port any article comprised in the list of contraband of war, "unless the ship-owner shall have first satisfied himself that the articles are not intended ultimately for use in the enemy's country." Any such vessels acting in contravention of said Proclamation were declared to be liable to capture and to be taken before the Prize Courts of that country for adjudication and British subjects acting in contravention of the Proclamation were made liable to penalties.[16] On August 20, 1914, by Orders in Council, Great Britain acting in co-operation with Russia and France, declared that "during the present hostilities the Convention known as the Declaration of London shall subject to" certain "additions and modifications be adopted and put in force" by the British Government "as if the same had been ratified by" it. These additions and modifications related generally to lists of absolute and conditional contraband; capture of neutral vessels on return voyages after carrying contraband to the enemy; evidence and proof as to destination of conditional contraband to the enemy with false papers; presumptions where consignee agent of enemy State, etc.; blockades; and interpretation of the Declaration.[17] On October 29, 1914, "The Declaration of London Order in Council No. 2, 1914, was promulgated whereby the prior Order of August 20, 1914, was re-enacted "with amendments to minimize, so far as possible the interference with innocent neutral trade occasioned by the war" and accordingly "during the present hostilities the provisions" of said Declaration of London "shall, subject to the exclusion of the lists of contraband, and noncontraband, and to the modifications" set out in said Order, "be adopted and put in force." The modifications were; that a neutral vessel with papers indicating a neutral destination, which, notwithstanding, proceeded to an enemy port, was liable to capture and condemnation if encountered before the end of her next voyage; that destination of conditional contraband for use of enemy's forces was presumed to exist where consigned to or for an agent of the enemy State; that conditional contraband was liable to capture when on vessels bound to a neutral port and "consigned to 'order,' or if the ship's papers do not show who is the consignee of the goods, or if they show a consignee of the goods in territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy;" and in these cases "it shall lie upon the owners of the goods to prove that their destination was innocent." [18] The Order of Council of March 11, 1915, called the "Reprisals" Order in view of the military area or war zone declaration of Germany,[19] also provides that "6. A merchant vessel which has cleared for a neutral port from a British or allied port, or which has been allowed to pass, having an ostensible destination to a neutral port, and proceeds to an enemy port, shall, if captured on any subsequent voyage, be liable to condemnation." [20] By the "Declaration of London Order in Council, 1915," of date October 20, 1915, in lieu of Article 57 of the Declaration of London, which was abolished, British Prize Courts were directed to apply the rules and principles formerly observed in such courts.[1] By "The Declaration of London Order in Council, 1916" of date March 30, 1916, The Declaration of London Order in Council, No. 2, 1914," of date October 29, 1914, was modified as to the capture of conditional contraband on board a vessel bound for a neutral port and ulterior destination, but affirming the right of capture whether the carriage of the goods to their destination be direct or entail transhipment or a subsequent transport by land; certain provisions of the former Order were also declared to be applicable to absolute as well as conditional contraband, but as to Article 33 of the Declaration of London, as to conditional contraband being liable to capture if destined for the use of armed enemy forces, etc., subject to certain exceptions, said destination "shall in addition to any presumptions" in said Order be presumed to exist "if the goods are consigned to or for a person who, during the present hostilities, has forwarded imported contraband goods to territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy;" also declaring that the burden of proof of innocent destination is upon the owner of goods. There were also other provisions as to capture and blockade.[2]

[16] Statutory Rules & Orders, 1914, Vol. I. ("Published by authority") p. 248, Appendix F herein. See §§ 2139a, 2567 herein.

[17] The Articles of the Declaration of London to which the additions and modifications related were Arts. 22, 24, 32, 33, 34, 35. See Appendix E herein.

On July 7, 1916, by the "Maritime Rights Order in Council, 1916" the "Declaration of London Order in Council, No. 2, 1914" and all orders subsequent thereto amending said Order were withdrawn, although the validity of anything done thereunder was not to be affected. The belligerent rights at sea in accordance with the law of nations of Great Britain and its allies was reasserted and [18] Statutory Rules & Orders 1914, Vol. I. ("Published by authority"), p. 248. Order in Council article of Aug. 20, 1914, adopting Declaration of London, etc., repealed. See Appendix F herein.

[19] See § 2139a herein.

[20] See Order of March 11, 1915, Appendix F herein.

[1] See "Declaration of London, Order in Council, 1915," Appendix F herein.

[2] See "Declaration of London, Order in Council, 1916," Appendix F herein.

further provisions were directed to be observed: "(a) The hostile destination required for the condemnation of contraband articles shall be presumed to exist, until the contrary is shown, if the goods are consigned to or for an enemy authority, or agent of the enemy State, or to or for a person in a territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy, or to or for a person who, during the present hostilities, has forwarded contraband goods to an enemy authority, or an agent of the enemy State, or to or for a person in territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy, or if the goods are consigned 'to order' or if the ship's papers do not show who is the real consignee of the goods. (b) The principle of continuous voyage or ultimate destination shall be applicable both in cases of contraband and of blockade. (c) A neutral vessel carrying contraband with papers indicating a neutral destination, which, notwithstanding the destination shown on the papers, proceeds to an enemy port, shall be liable to capture and condemnation if she is encountered before the end of her next voyage. (d) A vessel carrying contraband shall be liable to capture and condemnation if the contraband, reckoned either by value, weight, volume, or freight, forms more than half the cargo." [3]

[3] See "Maritime Rights Order in Council, 1916." Appendix F herein.

As to ultimate enemy destination; shipowner's knowledge; full cargo of contraband: subject to condemnation, see The Maricairo; The Hakan [1916] L. R. Prob. D. 266, 86 L. J. P. C. (1916) P. 266, 115 L. T. 639, 61 Sol. J. 87, 33 T. L. R. 48. As to "The continuous voyage doctrine during the civil war and now" see Article by Simeon E. Baldwin, 9 Am. Jour. of Internat. Law (1915) pp. 793–801. See also Article "The Doctrine of Continuous Voyage in the Eighteenth Century" by Harmodia Arias, 9 Am. Jour. of Internat. Law (1915) pp. 583–593.

As to "British Orders in Council & International Law," see Article by James Brown Scott (Editor in Chief) 10 Am. Jour. of Internat. Law (1916, "Editorial comment") pp. 560–569.

As to "International Law as applied by England in the war" covering Maritime Capture; neutral character of ship and cargo: lists of contraband; by Norman Bentwich, 9 Am. Jour. of Internat. Law (1915) pp. 17–44.

As to contraband, right of search and continuous voyage, see Article by James W. Garner, 9 Am. Jour. of Internat. Law, pp. 372–401. "By way of conciliating neutrals and mitigating their hardships, which result from maritime capture, the British Government have adopted the practice of pre-emption, or forcible purchase, as a substitute for absolute confiscation, and have also recently introduced an innovation in regard to condemned prizes." Phillipson's International Law and The Great War (1915) p. 338. It is declared by a recent writer in discussing the British Order in Council of March 11, 1915, that: "The right of a belligerent thus to intercept trade between neutrals, merely because the goods may subsequently find their way to the enemy is, however, a serious encroachment upon the rights of neutrals, and no publicists have condemned the assertion of such a claim more strongly than Hall, Westlake,

In an English case chrome ore was declared absolute contraband by Order in Council after the vessel sailed. Such chrome ore had,

Bentwich, Baty, Atherly-Jones and other English writers. To allow a belligerent such a right is to make him the judge of the destination of neutral ships and their cargoes; it is to allow him to determine in a particular case whether a cargo destined in good faith to a neutral port is intended for local consumption or, whether it is intended to be transhipped to the enemy. Manifestly, no belligerent is able to determine, for example, what proportion of American goods going to Holland today is intended for local use and how much is intended for transhipment to Germany and Austria. To attempt such a line must of necessity be arbitrary and dangerous to the rights of neutrals and to provoke serious controversy. The only rule by which the rights of neutrals may be insured is the full recognition by belligerents of the freedom of trade between neutrals. . . . The right of blockade liberally interpreted, is a right to cut off all the sea-borne commerce of the enemy; so far as it applies to commerce direct between the oversea neutral and the enemy, has never been contested. The same reason upon which this right is founded must apply with equal force to indirect commerce, that is to say, oversea trade which reaches the enemy through neutral ports situated near his frontier. The resulting benefit of such trade to the enemy is the same in both cases and so is the corresponding injury to the blockading belligerents. . . . International law allows a belligerent two means of preventing wholly or in part sea-borne commerce between his enemy and neutral states. These are: first, the right to seize and confiscate absolute contraband goods destined to enemy territory and conditioned contraband intended for the use of the armed forces or government of the enemy state; and second, the right to blockade the ports and coasts of the enemy and thereby to prevent commercial intercourse with him in all articles whether contraband or not." Article by James W. Garner in 9 Amer. Jour. Internat. L. (1915) pp. 818, 850, 854.

Validity of Orders in Council. The Order in Council August 20, 1914, October 29, 1914, as to Declaration of London, is valid. See The Zamara, 86 L. J. P. 89 (1916) 2 A. C. 77, 2 P. Cas. 1 (noted below). The British Order in Council of March 11, 1915, generally called the "Reprisals" Order, which provides in addition (see Appendix F and § 2139a herein) to what is above stated, that every merchant vessel which sailed from her port of departure after March 1, 1915, on her way to a port other than a German port, carrying goods with an enemy destination or which are enemy property may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port. Any goods so discharged in a British port "to be placed in custody of the Marshall of the Prize Court," and, unless they are contraband of war, shall, if not requisitioned "be restored by order of the Court, upon such terms as the Court may in the circumstances deem to be just, to the person entitled thereto." It is decided that said Order does not entail upon neutrals a degree of inconvenience, unreasonable considering all the circumstances of the case; that it is lawful as an Order enjoining reprisals in accordance with the principles of international law and whatever inconvenience may inevitably or necessarily be caused, neutrals must suffer that delay and that inconvenience as the consequence of the exercise of legitimate belligerent rights. The Stigstad, 85 L. J. P. 196, [1916] P. 123, 2 P. Cas. 179, 114 L. T. 705, 60 Sol. J. 496, 32 T. L. R. 472.—Evans, P.

Extent of binding force upon Eng- under a contract of sale to a German company entered into in the preceding year, been shipped by a Norwegian vessel which sailed from New Caledonia to Rotterdam some four months prior to such declaration of contraband, and about one month prior thereto she had put into Pernambuco, under alleged average and proceeded under instructions to Gothenburg via the North of Scotland and in the month following said Order declaring such ore contraband she was seized and taken into Glasgow. It appeared, however, that she had no knowledge at the time of capture that chrome ore was contraband, although she knew that war existed. It was held that the goods had passed to the German company and the cargo was condemned, but freight was allowed and the shipowners were also held entitled to contribution from the cargo, although the claim for delay was disallowed. It was further decided that Article 43, of the lish Prize Courts of "Orders in Council." In England this distinction is made that the law which its Prize Court is to administer, is not the national, or as it is sometimes called, the municipal law, but the law of nations or international law. And as to Orders in Council the Prize Court will take judicial notice of every such Order material to the consideration of matters with which it has to deal and will give the utmost weight and importance to every such Order short of treating it as an authoritative and binding declaration of law. "Thus an Order declaring a blockade, will prima facie justify the capture and condemnation of vessels attempting to enter the blockaded ports but will not preclude evidence to show that the blockade is ineffective and therefore unlawful. An order authorizing reprisals will be conclusive as to the facts which are recited as showing that a cause for reprisals exists, and will have due weight as showing what, . . . are the best or only means of meeting the emergency; but this will not preclude the right of any party aggrieved to contend, or the right of the court to hold that these means are unlawful, as entailing on neutrals a degree of inconvenience unreasonable considering all the circumstances of the case. Further, it cannot be assumed, until there be a decision of the Prize Court to that effect, that any executive order is contrary to law and all such orders, if acquiesced in and not declared to be illegal, will in the course of time, be themselves evidence by which international law and usage may be established." The Zamora [1916] 2 App. Cas. 77, 85 L. J. P. 89, 2 P. Cas. 1, 114 L. T. 626, 60 Sol. J. 416, 32 T. L. R. 436, rev'g 13 Asp. M. C. 144.—Lord Parker of Waddington. (A case of neutral cargo: contraband: seizure as prize and validity of requisition before adjudication: damages, etc., considering also the American authorities as to right of requisition of vessels or goods seized). As to jurisdiction of Prize Court, see the St. Helena, 1 P. Cas. 618. See also Article by Quincy Wright on "Conflicts of International Law with National Law and Ordinances" under headings: "Sources of law:" "International Law and Constitutions:" "International Law and Statutes:" "International Law and Executive Orders:" Including also British Orders in Council, 11 Am. Jour. of Internat. Law (Jan. 1917) pp. 1–21. Same point of conflicts of such laws is also involved in discussion in Article by same author on "Destruction of Neutral Property in Enemy Vessels," 11 Id. (April, 1917) pp. 358–379.

Declaration of London providing that contraband cannot be condemned except on payment of compensation, where the vessel is encountered at sea while unaware of the declaration of contraband, etc., was not applicable in that said Article was not intended to protect contraband belonging to the enemy.[4] Under another decision where iron ore was declared as conditional contraband after a cargo thereof intended for Krupps works was shipped on board a neutral vessel for Rotterdam, and, after being so listed as such contraband, was diverted by a British warship to Portsmouth, said cargo was condemned as prize; the shipowner was, however, held entitled to freight, but no demurrage or detention was allowed.[5]

Although submarine sound-signaling apparatus is declared to be absolute contraband of war under the British and French contraband lists,[6] it is held that a submarine signalling apparatus leased by neutral American owners with a reserved right of sole and exclusive ownership, and to retake possession upon breach of certain conditions, and which apparatus is affixed to an enemy's ship, is not "neutral goods" but a part of the ship and subject to condemnation with the ship.[7]

[4] Sorfareren, 85 L. J. P. 121, 1 P. Cas. 589, 114 L. T. 46, 13 Asp. M. C. 223, 32 T. L. R. 108. See Appendix E herein.

[5] The Katwijk (1916) P. 177, 1 P. Cas. 282, 114 L. T. 1214, 31 T. L. R. 448. Compare The Stigsdad, 85 L. J. P. 196, [1916] P. 123, 2 P. Cas. 179, 114 L. T. 705, 60 Sol. J. 496, 32 T. L. R. 472 (Iron ore for Krupp's works: diverted: cargo sold: neutral ship: proceeds of sale ordered paid to representative of cargo less reasonable freight). See The Iolo, 85 L. J. P. 82 [1916] P. 206, 1 P. Cas. 291, 113 L. T. 604, 13 Asp. M. C. 141, 59 L. J. 545, 31 T. L. R. R. 474 (Russian cargo loaded before war in British vessel: vessel diverted: cargo discharged and sold by order of court: proceeds released to cargo owners, on indemnity against claims; shipowners entitled to freight or charges). Examine The St. Helena: St. Enoch Shipping Co. Ltd. v. Phosphate Mining Co. 86 L. J. K. B. 74, [1916] 2 K. B. 624, 21 Comm. Cas. 192, [1916] 2 A. C. 625, 115 L. T. 465, 61 S. J. 8, 32 T. L. R. 726 (cargo of cotton, copper and phosphates: South America to Hamburg: diverted to Manchester, where released to defendants: freight not due until contract completed); The Roumanian, 84 L. J. P. 65, P. 26, 1 P. Cas. 75, s. c. 85 L. J. P. C. 33, [1916] 1 A. C. 124, 1 P. C. 536 (question as to meaning of "port" where there was a seizure of part of a cargo of oil on land, where oil had in part been discharged into tanks; also point of jurisdiction of prize court, compare in this connection The Terek, 1 P. Cas.).

[6] See Appendix F herein.

[7] The Schlesien, 1 Treherne's British Colonial Prize Cas. (1914–1915) 13,—Sir Samuel Evans, President. In this case, decided in 1914, it appeared that a German steamship registered at the port of Bremen and belonging to the North German Lloyd Co. was fitted with a submarine signalling apparatus by means of which sounds passing through the water were received and indicated in the chart room. The vessel was captured in the Bay of Biscay and taken into Plymouth, condemned as prize and ordered sold. The apparatus was claimed as the property of an Amer-

The Kim Case. In this noteworthy and much discussed case decided in 1915, the questions of absolute and conditional contraband, continuous voyage, ultimate destination, certain of the English Orders in Council, and of the articles of the Declaration of London, were involved. The facts were as follows: four vessels, three of them Norwegian and the other Swedish, started, all within a period of three weeks, in October and November 1914, on voyages from New York to Copenhagen, with very large cargoes of lard, hog and meat products, oil stocks, wheat and other foodstuffs. Two of the vessels had cargoes of rubber and one of hides. They were captured on the high seas in November 1914, and their cargoes seized on the ground that they were conditional contraband all claimed to be confiscate under the circumstances except that the cargo of rubber was seized as absolute contraband. The court was asked to deal only with the cargoes which were the property of neutral owners but were under time charters to an American corporation, the Gans steamship line of which a German was the president. There were about six hundred and twenty-five separate bills of lading for the four cargoes. Four American firms were consignors on each of the four vessels and a fifth on two of them. Those portions of the cargoes which had been released and those which were not claimed were dealt with in separate judgments. There was some overlapping as some parts of the cargoes were claimed by the consignors and also by some alleged venders.

There were certain ports, to which, apart from mines sown by the Germans in open sea routes of maritime trade, neutral vessels could ican company (The Submarine Signal Co. incorporated in Maine, U. S. A.) but the instrument was supplied through the company's agency at Bremen. There was not enough evidence, however, to say that the apparatus belonged to the American company and not to the Bremen agency. But the terms as to the ownership of the property were comprised in a document in the form of a lease whereby the apparatus should at all times remain the sole and exclusive property of the American company, with the right on its part upon breach to terminate the same and take possession, etc. Counsel for complainants urged that by the express terms of the Declaration of Paris, 1856, Art 3, the apparatus was "neutral goods" but this claim was not sustained, it being declared by the court that: "It is true that the words 'neutral goods' and 'enemy's goods' are used in the Declaration, but until now those terms have always been read as applying to cargo carried in the ship. In the French text of the Declaration the words in each instance are 'la merchandise,' and it is quite clear that they are intended to cover merchandise, and this apparatus is not merchandise." Nor was the contention sustained that the claim was "within the spirit of the Declaration of Paris" and as the apparatus was affixed to the ship it was condemned as a part of the ship which was condemned.

As to wireless installation on hospital ship, see § 2748 herein.

have, in the exercise of their international rights, voyaged with their goods. There was no blockade involving risk of confiscation of vessels running or attempting to run it. Neutral vessels might have carried conditional and absolute contraband into those ports, acting within their rights under international law, subject only to the risk of capture by warships of the British and their allies. The neutral trade with German ports in the North sea having therefore become impossible to all intents, a great part of it was deflected to Scandinavian ports from which access to the German ports in the Baltic and to inland Germany by overland routes was available.

The neutral trade involved in the above cases was that of our country and the transactions arose from a trading, either real and bona fide, or pretended and ostensible only, with Denmark, in the course of which these vessels sea voyages were made between New York and Copenhagen. Denmark is a small country exporting rather than importing foodstuffs, but conveniently situated for the transportation of goods to German ports.

Statistics were before the court showing a great disproportion between the amount of these cargoes of lard and the amount of the same goods imported annually in previous years immediately before the war, there being about thirteen times more in said cargoes. Other statistics were offered showing similar disproportionate results as to importations from which the conclusion was deduced that an overwhelming proportion of the consignments of lard was intended for Germany although these considerations were not held to be conclusive as to continuous voyages, hostile destination and hostile quantity.

The several dates of the Orders in Council and those of the commencement of the voyages were considered as to the absolute and conditional contraband character of the cargoes of rubber and hides. although it was admitted that said goods partook of said character of contraband under the Orders or Proclamations. There was also a very extended and detailed consideration of the various claims by the court.

As to the general character of the cargoes there was evidence that all the foodstuffs were suitable for use of troops in the field and that some of them were similar in kind, packing and wrapping to that supplied to British troops and were not ordinarily supposed for civilian use, that others were of the same brand and cases offered by the consignors for use of British forces in the field and could only have been made up for such like use although there was evidence to the contrary, and although the lard might have been used for the manufacture of glycerine for high explosives there was no evidence that any of it had been so used in Germany, and it was treated as foodstuffs used largely by the German army. As to that part of the cargoes, there was evidence that it was not in a condition suitable for eating and there was no market therefor in Denmark, and it was needed in Germany for glycerine and this class was treated as materials suitable for food or the production of glycerine. Other factors in the same general line and tending to like results were considered and on the evidence when condemnation of the cargoes was asked for it was found that a major portion of the goods were not intended to be incorporated in the common stock of Denmark, but that the ultimate destination intended was Germany, and it was declared by the court that it had no hesitation in pronouncing that the doctrine of continuous voyage or transportation, both in relation to carriage of contraband, absolute and conditional, by sea and over land, had become part of the law of nations at the commencement of the present war, in accordance with the principles of recognized legal decisions, and with the great body of modern jurists, and also with the practice of nations in modern warfare, and it was accordingly so decided and the doctrine was applied in this case to all goods of said contraband character intended for the use of the German Government although nominally the port of destination was Copenhagen and therefore they must be condemned.

Another important point was that prize courts were not governed or limited by the strict rules of evidence binding upon the municipal courts as strict evidence is very difficult to obtain in prize cases and the said court must rely upon well-known facts which have come to light in other cases, or as matters of public reputation, otherwise the rights of belligerents would be defeated.[8] If goods are [8] The Kim: The Alfred Nobel: The Bjornsterjne Bjornson: The Fridland, 85 L. J. P. 38, [1915] L. R. Prob. D. 215, 1 P. Cas. 405, 113 L. T. 1064, 60 Sol. J. 9, 13 Asp. Mar. C. 178, 32 T. L. R. 10. Reference was made to articles 30, 31, 34–42 of the Declaration of London, also the Order of Council of Aug. 4th and 20th of Aug. 1914, and of Oct. 29th 1914. The court, per Sir Samuel T. Evans, president, said: "Before stating the inferences and conclusions of fact, it will be convenient to investigate and to ascertain the legal principles, which are to be applied according to international law, in view of the state of things as they were in the year 1914. While the guiding principles of the law must be followed, it is a truism to say that international law, in order to be adequate, as well as just, must have regard to the circumstances of the times, including the circumstances arising out of the particular situation of the war, or the condition of the parties engaged in it: (see The Jonge Margaretha, Roscoe's English Prize Cases vol. 1, 100; 1 Ch. Rob. 189, and Chancellor Kent's Commentaries, p. 139).

"Two important doctrines familiar to international law come prominently forward for consideration; the one is embodied in the rule as to 'continuous voyage' or 'continuous transportation;' the other relates to the ultimate hostile destination of conditional and absolute contraband respectively.

"The doctrine of 'continuous voyage' was first applied by the English Prize Courts to unlawful trading.

shipped by a neutral after the outbreak of war with the intent that they should become enemies' property ultimately, the fact of capture

There is no reported case in our courts where the doctrine is applied in terms to the carriage of contraband. But it was so applied and extended by the United States Courts against this country in the time of the American Civil War, and its application was acceded to by the British Government of the day, and was, moreover, acted upon by the International Commission which sat under the treaty between this country and made at Washington on the 8th May 1871, when the commission, composed of an Italian, an American, and a British delegate, unanimously disallowed the claims in The Peterhoff (5 Wall. [72 U. S.] 28) which was the leading case upon the subject of continuous transportation in relation to contraband goods. The Stephen Hart (Blatch. Prize Cases, 387), The Bermuda (3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 514), and The Springbok (5 Wall. [72 U. S.] 1), considered and applied the doctrine in relation to attempted breaches of blockade.

"The doctrine was asserted by Lord Salisbury at the time of the South African War with reference to German vessels carrying goods to Delagoa Bay, and, as he was dealing with Germany, he fortified himself by referring to the view of Bluntschli as the true view, as follows: 'If the ships or goods are sent to a destination of a neutral port only the better to come to the aid of the enemy, there will be contraband of war, and confiscation will be justified:' (Droit International Codifié, par. 813).

"It is essential to appreciate that the foundation of the law of contraband, and the reason for the doctrine of continuous voyage which has been grafted into it, is the right of a belligerent to prevent certain goods from reaching the country of the enemy for his military use. Neutral traders, in their own interest, set limits to the exercise of this right as far as they can. These conflicting interests of neutrals and belligerents are the causes of the contests which have taken place upon the subject of contraband and continuous voyages.

"A compromise was attempted by the London Conference in the unratified Declaration of London. The doctrine of continuous voyage or continuous transportation was conceded to the full by the conference in the case of absolute contraband, and it was expressly declared that 'it is immaterial whether the carriage of the goods is direct or entails transhipment, or a subsequent transport by land:' (art. 30). As to conditional contraband, the attempted compromise was that the doctrine was excluded in the case of conditional contraband, except where the enemy country had no seaboard: (Art. 36). As is usual in compromises, there seems to be an absence of logical reason for the exclusion. If it is right that a belligerent should be permitted to capture absolute contraband proceeding by various voyages, or transport with an ultimate destination for the enemy territory, why should he not be allowed to capture goods which, though not absolutely contraband, become contraband by reason of a further destination to the enemy government or its armed forces? And with the facilities of transportation by sea and by land which now exist, the right of a belligerent to capture conditional contraband would be of a very shadowy value if a mere consignment to a neutral port was sufficient to protect the goods. It appears also to be obvious that in these days of easy transit, if the doctrine of continuous voyage or continuous transportation is to hold at all, it must cover not only voyages from port to port at sea, but also transport by land until the real, as distinguished from the merely ostensible, destination of the goods is reached.

"In connection with this subject, note may be taken of the communication of the 20th Jan., 1915, from Mr. Bryan, as Secretary of State for the United States Government, to Mr. Stone, of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. It is, indeed, a State document. In it the Secretary of State, dealing with absolute and conditional contraband, puts on record the following as the views of the United States Government:—

" 'The rights and interests of belligerents and neutrals are opposed in respect of contraband articles and trade. . . . The record of the United States in the past is not free from criticism. When neutral, this government has stood for a restricted list of absolute and conditional contraband. As a belligerent we have contended for a liberal list, according to our conception of the necessities of the case. The United States has made earnest representations to Great Britain in regard to the seizure and detention of all American ships or cargoes bona fide destined to neutral ports. . . . It will be recalled, however, that American courts have established various rules bearing on these matters. The rule of "continuous voyage" has been not only asserted by American tribunals, but extended by them. They have exercised the right to determine from the circumstances whether the ostensible was the real destination. They have held that the shipment of articles of contraband to a neutral port "to order," from which, as a matter of fact, cargoes had been transhipped to the enemy, is corroborative evidence that the cargo is really destined to the enemy instead of to the neutral port of delivery. It is thus seen that some of the doctrines which appear to bear harshly upon neutrals at the present time are analogous to or outgrowths from policies adopted by the United States when it was a belligerent. The Government therefore cannot consistently protest against the application of rules which it has followed in the past, unless they have not been practised as heretofore. . . . The fact that the commerce of the United States is interrupted by Great Britain is consequent upon the superiority of her navy on the high seas. History shows that whenever a country has possessed the superiority our trade has been interrupted, and that few articles essential to the prosecution of war have been allowed to reach its enemy from this country.'

"It is not necessary to dilate further upon the history of the doctrine in question. I have no hesitation in pronouncing that, in my view, the doctrine of continuous voyage or transportation, both in relation to carriage of contraband, absolute and conditional, by sea and over land, had become part of the law of nations at the commencement of the present war, in accordance with the principles of recognized legal decisions, and with the view of the great body of modern jurists, and also with the practice of nations in recent maritime warfare.

"The result is that the court is not restricted in its vision to the primary consignment of the goods in these cases to the neutral port of Copenhagen, but is entitled and is bound to take a more extended outlook, in order to ascertain whether this neutral destination was merely ostensible, and, if so, what the real ultimate destination was. As to the real destination of a cargo, one of the chief tests is whether it is consigned to the neutral port to be there delivered for the purpose of being incorporated into the common stock of the country. This test was applied over a century ago by Sir William Grant in the Court of Appeal in Prize Cases, in the case of The William (Roscoe, vol. 1,505; 5 Ch. Rob. 385). It was adopted by the United States Supreme Court in their unanimous judgment in The Bermuda (ubi supra), where Chase, C. J., in delivering judgment, at p. 551, said: 'Neutrals may convey in neutral ships from one neutral port to another any goods, whether contraband of war or not, if intended for actual delivery at the port of destination, and to become part of the common stock of the country, or of the port.'

"Another circumstance which has been regarded as important in determining the question of real or ostensible destination at the neutral port is the consignment 'to order or assigns' without naming any consignee. In the celebrated case of The Springbok (ubi supra) the Supreme Court of the United States acted upon information as to destination (in the case of blockade) on this very ground. The part of the judgment dealing with the matter is as follows: 'That some other destination than Nassau was intended may be inferred from the fact that the consignment, shown by the bills of lading and the manifest, was to order or assign. Under the circumstances of this trade, such a consignment must be taken as a negation that any such sale was intended to be made there; for, had such sale been intended, it is most likely that the goods would have been consigned for that purpose to some established house named in the bills of lading.' The same circumstance was also similarly dealt with in The Bermuda (ubi supra) and in The Peterhoff (ubi supra).

"I am not unmindful of the argument that consignment 'to order' is common in these days. But a similar argument was used in the Springbok case (ubi supra), supported by the testimony of some of the principal brokers in London to the effect that a consignment 'to order or assigns' was the usual and regular form of consignment to an agent for sale at such a port as Nassau. The British Government was petitioned to intervene on behalf of the shippers; but upon this point the British Foreign Office said that 'no doubt the form was usual in time of peace, but that a practice which might be perfectly regular in time of peace under the municipal regulations of a particular state would not always satisfy the law of nations in time of war, more particularly when the voyage might expose the ship to the visit of belligerent cruisers,' and added that 'having regard to the very doubtful character of all trade ostensibly carried on at Nassau during the war in the United States, and to many other circumstances of suspicion before the court, Her Majesty's Government are not disposed to consider the argument of the court upon this point as otherwise than tenable.'

"The argument still remains good that if shippers, after the outbreak of war, consign goods of the nature of contraband to their own order, without naming a consignee, it may be a circumstance of suspicion in considering the question whether the goods were really intended for the neutral destination, and to become part of the common stock of the neutral country, or whether they had another ultimate destination. Of course, it is not conclusive. The suspicion arising from this form of consignment during war might be dispelled by evidence produced by the shippers. It may be here observed that some point was made that in many of the consignments the bills of lading were not made out 'to order' simpliciter, but to branches or agents of the shippers. That circumstance does not in my opinion, make any material difference. Other matters relating to destination will be discussed under the second branch of the case—namely, whether the goods were destined for Government or military use.

"Wherever destination comes in question, certainty as to it is seldom possible, in such cases as these; 'highly probable destination' is enough in the absence of satisfactory evidence for the shippers: (see per Lord Stowell in The Jonge Maegaretha, ubi supra). Upon this branch of the case, for reasons which have been given when dealing with the consignments generally, and when stating the circumstances with respect to each claim, I have no hesitation in stating my conclusion that the cargoes (other than the small portions acquired by persons in Scandinavia whose claims are allowed) were not destined for consumption or use in Denmark, nor intended to be incorporated into the general stock of that country by sale or otherwise; that Copenhagen was not the real bona fide destination, but that the cargoes were on their way, at the time of capture, to German territory as their actual and real ultimate destination."

The court then considers that branch of the case which relates to the goods being on their way to German territory and ultimate destination, and as preliminary thereto, the effect of the Orders in Council of Aug. 20, and Oct. 29, 1914, with the result that three of the cases must be decided in accordance with the rules of international law and as to all the cargoes on one of the ships which sailed and was captured after Oct. 29, 1914, the Order of that date applied as to the contention that said last Order was not binding, the Court adhered to its decision in The Zamora, 13 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 144, 113 L. T. R. 649. It was also declared that what the said Order in Council did was to prevent the innovation in international law incorporated in Art. 35 of the Declaration of London whereby if the Declaration had been ratified the doctrine of continuous voyage would have been excluded for conditional contraband as recognized by the United States and by Great Britain. The court further considers articles 33 of said Declaration as to presumption of destination and with regard to consignments "to order" or if the ship's papers do not show who the consignee is. The confiscability of the cargoes with relation to the state of things in Germany; also the proof of intention on the part of the shippers of the cargoes and ultimate destination and it is said:

"In the first place, it may be observed that it is not necessary that an intention at the commencement of the voyage should be established by the captors either absolutely or by inference. In The Bermuda (ubi supra) the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in referring to the decision of Sir William Grant in The William (ubi supra), said: 'If there be an intention, either formed at the time of the original shipment or afterwards, to send the goods forward to an unlawful destination, the continuity of the voyage will not be broken, as to the cargo, by any transactions at the intermediate port.' It is, no doubt, incumbent upon the captors, in the first instance, to prove facts from which a reasonable inference of hostile destination can be drawn, subject to rebuttal by the claimants. Lord Granville, as Foreign Secretary, in 1885, in a note to M. Waddington (the French Ambassador), which had reference to the question of rice being declared contraband by the French Government in relation to China, said: 'There must be circumstances relative to any particular cargo, or its destination, to displace the presumption that articles of food are intended for the ordinary use of life, and to show prima facie, at all events, that they are destined for military use, before they could be treated as contraband.' And Lord Lansdowne, as Foreign Secretary, in 1904, in a note to the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, stated the British view thus: 'The true test appears to be whether there are circumstances relating to any particular cargo to show that it is destined for military or naval use.' These statements, so qualified, it will be noted, were made when this country was making representations against the action of Foreign Governments concerning conditional contraband. So far as it is necessary to establish intention on the part of the shippers, it appears to me to be beyond question that it can be shown by inferences from surrounding circumstances relating to the shipment of and dealings with the goods. . . .

"Before I conclude I will make reference to an opinion expressed towards the end of last year by a body of men eminent as students and expositors of international law in America, in the Editorial Comment in the American Journal of International Law, to which my attention was called by the law officers. Amongst them I need only name Mr. Chandler Anderson, Mr. Robert Lansing, Mr. John Bassett Moore, Mr. Theodore Woolsey, and Mr. James Brown Scott. It is as follows: 'In a war in which the nation is in arms, where every able-bodied man is under arms and is performing military duty and where the noncombatant population is organized so as to support the soldiers in the field, it seems likely that belligerents will be inclined to consider destination to the enemy country as sufficient, even if the Government of the enemy possesses and exercises the right of confiscating or appropriating to naval or military uses the property of its citizens or subjects of service to the armies in the field.' I cite this, not, of course, as having any authority, but as showing how these eminent American jurists acknowledge that international law must have regard to the actual circumstances of the times. I have not in this judgment followed the course thus indicated by them as a likely and reasonable one in the present state of affairs. I have preferred to proceed on the lines of the old recognized authorities.

"I wish also to note the opinion recently expressed by the Hamburg Prize Court in the case of the Maria, decided in April 1915, where goods consigned from the United States to Irish ports were laden upon a neutral (Dutch) vessel. I refer to it, not because I look upon it as profitable or helpful (on the contrary, I agree with Sir Robert Finlay that it should rather be regarded as 'a shocking example'), but because it is not uninteresting as an example of the ease with which a Prize Court in Germany 'hacks its way through' bona fide commercial transactions when dealing with foodstuffs carried by neutral vessels. It is to be remembered, too, that the Hamburg Prize Court was dealing with wheat which was shipped from America before the outbreak of war, and which had also before the war been sold in the ordinary course of business to well-known British merchants, Messrs. R. and H. Hall, Limited. This is what the Hamburg court said:

"'There is no means of ascertaining with the least certainty what use the wheat would have been put to on the arrival of the vessel in Belfast, and whether the British Government would not have come upon the scene as purchaser even at a very high price, and in this connection it must be borne in mind that the bills of lading were made out "to order," which greatly facilitated the free disposal of the cargo. That at the time of the conclusion of the contract concerning the acquisition of the wheat on the part of R. and H. Hall Limited the possibility of using the same for war purposes had, perhaps, not been contemplated does not affect the question what actual use would have been made of the cargo of wheat after the outbreak of war in August 1914.'

"For the many reasons which I have given in the course of this judgment, and which do not require recapitulation, or even summary, I have come to the clear conclusion from the facts proved, and the reasonable and, indeed, irresistable inferences from them, that the cargoes claimed by the shippers as belonging to them at the time of seizure were not on their way to Denmark to be incorporated into the common stock of that country by consumption or bona fide sale, or otherwise; but, on the contrary, that they were on their way not only to German territory, but also to the German Government and their forces for naval and military use as their real ultimate destination. To hold the contrary would be before transfer from the consignor of the legal property does not make the capture unlawful as the capture will be deemed a delivery.[9]

§ 2570. Definition of license and authority conferred thereby.—(a) "License" means permission or authority, and where a license is granted by government to do any particular thing, it is a privilege or authority to do that thing, and if a license is granted by the proper authority having power to grant it, it transfers to the grantee the right to do whatever it purports to authorize, and transfers to him all the rights which the grantor can transfer to do what is within the terms of the license.[10] So that a trade which is otherwise unlawful may be so far legalized by act of government in granting a license for its conduct and prosecution that an insurance thereon is valid where the traffic is protected by the license. This last principle runs through all the cases.[11] (b) It is pertinent to refer in connection with this point of license to the consideration of the status of alien enemies, the power of the government over them and the President's Proclamation during the present Great War which has been elsewhere considered.[12] And what is stated below in an English case as to the "Aliens Restrictions Order" would apply to the President's Proclamation in that it amounts to at least a license conferred thereby upon alien enemies to remain in this country so long as they conform to the prescribed course of conduct, that is "so long as they shall conduct themselves in accordance with the law they shall be undisturbed in the peaceful pursuit of their lives and to allow one's eyes to be filled by the dust of theories and technicalities and to be blinded to the realities of the case. Even if this conclusion were only accurate as to a substantial proportion of the goods, the whole would be affected because 'contraband articles are said to be of an infectious nature, and they contaminate the whole cargo belonging to the same owners. The innocence of any particular article is not usually admitted to exempt it from the general confiscation:' (Kent's Commentaries, 12 ed. p. 142). The cases of The Springbok (ubi supra) and The Peterhoff (ubi supra) are to the same effect, as is also art. 42 of the Declaration of London, upon which M. Renault's Report is as follows: 'The owner of the contraband is punished in the first place by the condemnation of his contraband property, and in the second by that of the goods, even if innocent, which he may possess on board the same vessel.' "

See discussion, effect, and criticism of the above Kim Case in article by Chandler P. Anderson, on "British Prize Court Decision in Chicago Packing House Cases" 11 Amer. Jour. of Internat. Law (April 1917) pp. 251–269.

[9] The Louisiana, 32 T. L. R. 619, distinguishing The Miramichi, 84 L. J. P. 105, (1915) P. 71, 1 P. Cas. 137.

That burden of proof is upon claimant to show that goods are neutral when in enemy ship for enemy port: Art. 59, Declaration of London, see The Roland, 84 S. J. P. 127, 1 P. Cas. 188, 31 T. L. R. 357.

[10] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 1, 6 L. ed. 23. The text is substantially the language of Marshall, C. J.

[11] See § 293 herein.

[12] See § 299b herein.

occupations," except, etc. There are also requirements as to removal etc., and if necessary the obligation to register. These provisions go directly to the point of the civil rights and liabilities of alien enemies, as is clearly evidenced by recent English decisions wherein analogous points have been most exhaustively discussed. The question then arises: To what extent are insured or insurer aliens, who are subjects of an enemy country but located here sub protectione domini regis? Are they not here by permission of or under an implied license from our government and allowed to remain here under conditions stated, and therefore, is not their status, while under such protection, that of alien friends entitled to enforce or protect their rights in our courts? In presenting this point we are not ignoring the President's Proclamation prohibiting the transaction of business, etc., by German insurance companies, elsewhere considered.[13] A question very similar in principle to the above was answered in the affirmative in a case where an American woman had by marriage become an alien enemy and resided in the United Kingdom and had duly registered herself under the Aliens Restrictions Order of 1914, and it was held that she might sue in the English courts for the maintenance of her individual rights. Sargent, J., said: "Under that Act and Order the alien enemy suffers restrictions upon his ordinary rights of movement; the Secretary of State may order his deportation, and so on, and there can be no doubt that the effect of such registration is to amount at least to a license to the person to remain in this country; indeed I gather from the provisions of the Order the permission really amounts to a command to the alien enemy not to depart from this country without some special leave for the purpose. The law applicable to the circumstances is in my opinion correctly stated in Hall's International Law,[14] as follows: 'When persons are allowed to remain either for a specified time after the commencement of war, or during good behavior, they are exonerated from the disabilities of enemies for such time as they are placed in the same position as other foreigners, except that they cannot carry on a direct trade in their own or other enemy's vessels with the enemy country.' "[15] In another English case a policy of marine insurance was effected and the pleadings were closed before the war between Great Britain and Germany. The action was brought by British subjects against a German insurance company and defendants took out a summons asking that all proceedings be stayed during the war, but the application was dismissed. It was stated, however, by the court that there was no rule of common law which suspends an action in which an alien enemy is defendant and no rule of common law which prevents his appearing and conducting his defense; and it was suggested that it might be "that the war has so hampered the defendants in the preparation of their case, in their witnesses or in other ways, that it would be right to give them a postponement on these grounds. If any application is made to postpone the trial on grounds of that character it will be dealt with on its merits." The court also said: "To allow an action against an alien enemy to proceed and to refuse to allow him to appear and defend himself would be opposed to the fundamental principles of justice. No state of war could, in any view, demand or justify the condemnation by a Civil Court of a man unheard." [16] This decision is declared in another English case to be "clearly right" as such an alien is a resident "by tacit permission of the Crown" and has "by registration informed the Executive of his presence in this country" and is, therefore, under its protection.[17]

[13] See § 2506, subdiv. (e) herein, as to President's Proclamation of July 13, 1917, also English "Trading with the Enemy Proclamation" of Sept. 9, 1914, of like tenor.

[14] 6th ed. p. 388.

[15] Princess Thurn & Taxis v. Moffitt (1915) 1 Ch. D. 58, 61, [1914] 31 T. L. R. 24, [1914] W. N. 379, 59 Sol. J. 26.

§ 2571. By what authority license granted.—It is undoubtedly within the power of government, where it has by declaration of war or by statute impliedly or expressly prohibited traffic of a certain character, or has otherwise limited it, to qualify such prohibition and exempt persons or property from the operation thereof, by granting a license to such persons or privileges as to trade. These principles are not disputed.[18] The power to grant licenses is vested in Congress and in the President. So certain officers in command

[16] Robinson & Co. v. Continental Ins. Co. of Mannheim, [1915] 1 K. B. 155, 158, 159, 161, 31 T. L. R. 20, 84 L. J. K. B. (N. S.) 238, 20 Com. Cas. 125, 112 L. T. (N. S.) 125, [1914] W. N. 393, 59 Sol. J. 7.—Bailhache, J.

[17] Porter v. Freudenberg (Kreglinger v. S. Samuel & Rosenfeld), [1915] 1 K. B. 857, 112 L. T. (N. S.) 313, 84 L. J. K. B. (N. S.) 1001, 20 Com. Cas. 189, 32 R. P. C. 109, [1915] W. N. 43, 31 T. L. R. 162, 59 Sol. J. 216, 5 B. R. C. 548, 565.—Lord Reading, Ch. J. The opinion also discusses the questions of confiscation, etc., in connection with the question at issue, and also points evidenced by the preceding Federal statutes and Proclamation of the President. See Compagnie Universelle de Telegraphie et de Telephonie Sans Fil v. United States Service Corp. 84 N. J. Eq. 604, 95 Atl. 187; Compagnie Universelle v. United States Service Corp. 85 N. J. Eq. 601, 96 Atl. 292, 241 Fed. 606. See § 286 herein.

[18] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *731; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 706; 1 Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 750, p. 938; Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 147, sec. 243. The common law permits the sovereign to grant a license: Vandyke v. Whitmore, 1 East, 475. See § 293 herein.

As to requirement of license for shipment from United States to allies and all other countries under Proclamation by President of United for the needs of their forces may license such trading with the sanction of the government.[19] And in cases of a traffic, such as intoxicating liquors, the power of Congress to regulate commerce does not exclude the regulations by the state, except so far as they may conflict with the regulations established by Congress.[20] Sailing under an enemy's license is illegal,[1] and an agreement that such a license should be on board is unlawful and the policy void;[2] although where the vessel was bound to a neutral port the having an enemy's license was held not to avoid the insurance.[3]

States of date Aug. 27, 1917, see § 2539, and Appendix G herein.

As to necessity of pass for vessel to proceed to some neutral or allied port, see Order in Council of date March 11, 1915, par. I. given in Appendix F herein.

[19] As to power of Congress to regulate commerce, see § 2506 herein; Rev. Stats. U. S. (2d ed.) p. 1031, sec. 5306; Davis' International Law (ed. 1887) 240; Hall's International Law (ed. 1880) 478.

[20] See Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th ed.) 716 et seq. See § 2540 herein.

[1] Craig v. United States Ins. Co. Pet. (U. S. C. C.) 410, Fed. Cas. No. 3,340; The Anadone, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 143, 4 L. ed. 205; The Fanny, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 191, 3 L. ed. 701; The Julia, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 181, 3 L. ed. 528, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 605; The Hiram, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 440, 4 L. ed. 131; The Aurora, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 203, 3 L. ed. 536.

[2] Ogden v. Barker, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 87; Colquhoun v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co. 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 352.

[3] Hayward v. Blake, 12 Mass. 176; Bulkley v. Derby Fishing Co. 1 Conn. 571; Craig v. United States Ins. Co. Pet. (U. S. C. C.) 410, Fed. Cas. No. 3,340; Perkins v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 214. The rule, however, is that first stated. General rules covering construction, legality and effect of licenses in marine cases under decisions rendered under the licensing system: Trading without a license where one is required, is invalid: Potts v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 548, 2 Esp. 612, 5 R. R. 452, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 654; Vandyke v. Whitmore, 1 East, 475. See § 2531 herein. It was formerly held that licenses must be strictly construed: The Cosmopolite, 4 Rob. C. 11, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Goode Hook, 1 Edw. 428, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Juno, 2 C. Rob. 117, per Sir Wm. Scott; although subsequently they received a more liberal construction: Flindt v. Scott, 5 Taunt. 673, 693, 15 R. R. 615, reversing s. c. 15 East, 525; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 594 et seq., sec. 37. If an alien enemy has a license to trade, this legalizes the insurance: Wells v. Williams, 1 Salk. 46; Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East, 273, 9 R. R. 438; Conway v. Gray, 10 East, 536, overruled in Aubert v. Gray, 3 B. & S. 163, 169, 32 L. J. Q. B. 50, 9 Jur. (N. S.) 714, 7 L. T. 469, 11 W. R. 27; Usparicha v. Noble, 13 East, 332, 12 R. R. 360, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 563; De Tastet v. Taylor, 4 Taunt. 233, 13 R. R. 585. A license can only be used by the persons to whom it was intended to be granted: Robinson v. Morris, 5 Taunt. 700; Feize v. Thompson, 1 Taunt. 121, 122; The Jonge Johannes, 4 C. Rob. 263; Barlow v. M'Intosh, 12 East, 311; and it is not transferable unless it appears so on its face; Feize v. Thompson, 1 Taunt. 121. See cases last cited. Although it may be granted to one by name on behalf of himself and others: Rawlinson v. Janson, 12 East, 223. It may, however, be negotiable, either expressly or where the nature and objects of the grant raise impliedly such permission, as where the trade itself rather than the persons is intended to be covered: The Aceton, 2 Dod. 48; The Louisa Charlotte, 1 Dod. 308. So a license may run to "any person," then may be used by an enemy: The Louisa Charlotte, 1 Dod. 308; Mennett v. Bonham, 15 East, 477. A license to trade must be granted by competent authority: Vanharthals v. Halhed, 1 East, 487n; Shiffner v. Gordon, 12 East, 296; The Hope, 1 Dod. 226. The trade is limited by the terms of the license and must be conducted in accordance with the permission granted: Le Cheminant v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 367, 13 R. R. 636; Anthony v. Moline, 5 Taunt. 711; The Cosmopolite, 4 C. Rob. 8; The Juffrow Catherine, 5 C. Rob. 141; Gordon v. Vaughan, 12 East, 302n; The Jonge Frederick, Edw. Adm. 357; Hagedorn v. Reid. 1 Maule & S. 567, 3 Camp. 377. The grantee should be properly described, and it is held that a misdescription of the character of the person procuring the license will invalidate both it and the insurance: Klingender v. Bond, 14 East, 484, 13 R. R. 292; contra, Lemcke v. Vaughan, 7 Dowl. & R. 236, 1 Bing. 473. And generally the character of the ship should correspond with that specified in the license, although when it does not and the change is not prejudicial and it is evident that the intention of the government is not contravened or other reasonable cause exists, the change is immaterial: The Jonge Arend. 5 C. Rob. 14; The Dankbaarheib. 1 Dod. 183; The Hoffnung, 2 C. Rob. 162; The Vrow Cornelia, 1 Edw. 340. So also should the goods correspond with the license as a general rule, although the goods will be protected which are within the terms of the license: The Cosmopolite, 14 C. Rob. 11; Pieschell v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 492; Keir v. Andrade, 6 Taunt. 499; The Juffrow Catherina, 5 C. Rob. 141. A license does not operate retrospectively so as to legalize a voyage already commenced; Henry v. Staniforth, 4 Camp. 270, 17 R. R. 293; The St. Ivan, Edw. Adm. 376; nor will the insurance in such be valid, although it was not effected until after the grant; Henty v. Staniforth, 1 Stark. 254. But if an act is done which requires a license, the presumption will be that it was procured rather than the contrary: Sewell v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 4 Taunt. 856; although one who claims the protection of a license must show a compliance with its terms: Vandyke v. Whitmore, 1 East, 475; Vanhartels v. Halhed, 1 East, 487n. If the time be limited, the privilege must be exercised within the time specified: Williams v. Marshall, 6 Taunt. 390, 7 Taunt. 468; Tulloch v. Boyd, 7 Taunt. 472, 1 Moore, 174. For other authorities see numerous cases reported: 2 Taunt. 249, 416; 3 Taunt. 131, 534, 546, 554; 4 Taunt. 4, 136, 178, 367, 478, 483n, 605, 717; 5 Taunt. 726; 1 Maule & S. 39, 220, 450; 2 Maule & S. 100, 485; 3 Maule & S. 337; 5 Maule & S. 25, 122; 3 Camp. 83n, 84n, 85, 158; 4 Camp. 339; 1 Stark. 222, 254; Busk v. Bell, 16 East, 3, 14 R. R. 270; Feise v. Newham, 16 East, 197; Oswell v. Vigne, 15 East, 70, 13 R. R. 375; Inham v. Agnew, 15 East, 517, 13 R. R. 516; Defflis v. Parry, 3 Bos. & P. 3; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *719 et seq., *731 et seq.; 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 21, 22, 353; 1 Phillips on Ins. 147, secs. 243–53; 3 Phillips on Evidence, *246.

§ 2572. Misdescription of land on which building located does not avoid policy.—The fact that a policy of insurance on a dwelling-house misdescribes the land on which the dwelling is situated does not affect the risk nor render the policy void.[4]

[4] Kansas Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 356, 35 Pac. 15.

§ 2573. When failure to name destination does not avoid marine risk.—The contract is not so indefinite and uncertain as to render it void, although the point of destination is not named under a marine risk, where the contract under a "uniform canal cargo policy" is evidenced by an entry in a book accompanying the policy under the words "from" and "to," the words "from New York harbor" indicating the shipments where there is evidence that the term "harbor of New York," according to usage included certain points in the vicinity within the customhouse district of New York.[5]

§ 2574. Policy to himself by agent of insurer and receiver void.—An insurance agent cannot issue a policy to himself as receiver without the insurer's consent, such policy so issued being null and void.[6]

[5] Petrie v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 132 N. Y. 137, 30 N. E. 380, 43 N. Y. St. Rep. 478.

[6] Wildberger v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 72 Miss. 338, 48 Am. St. Rep. 558, 28 L.R.A. 220, 17 So. 282, per Whitfield, J. See §§ 660 et seq. herein.

On power of insurance agent to bind insurance company by insuring property in which he is interested personally or as agent, the company having no notice of such interest, see notes in 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1084, and 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972.

CHAPTER LXIX.

EXCEPTED RISKS AND LOSSES.

§ 2581. What constitutes invasion, insurrection, riot, civil commotion, or usurped power.
§ 2582. Excepted risks: fire caused by invasion, insurrection, riot, or mobs, civil commotion, or by military or usurped power.
§ 2582a. Same subject: waiver.
§ 2582b. "Directly or indirectly" by "riot:" dynamite explosions: unless fire ensues.
§ 2582c. Loss directly or indirectly caused by order of any civil authority.
§ 2582d. Same subject: loss of rentals: "interruption of business."
§ 2582e. When policy excepting one of a number of like accidental causes of damage covers damage from other like causes: floods.
§ 2582f. Effect of specially excepted peril: immediate cause of loss: earthquake: statute.
§ 2582g. Earthquake: fire started on other property and spread by conflagration.
§ 2583. Falling of building except as result of fire.
§ 2583a. Same subject: earthquake.
§ 2583b. Falling of building: explosion: lightning clause.
§ 2584. Explosion: no stipulation: insurers not liable.
§ 2585. Insurers not exempt where building blown up to prevent spread of conflagration.
§ 2586. Explosion occurring upon other premises: loss to insured property result of explosion only.
§ 2587. Explosion occurring upon other premises from which fire ensues communicating to insured premises.
§ 2588. "Loss by explosion of any kind:" insurer's liability under such clause where fire ensues: New York rule.
§ 2589. Same subject: rule in Ohio.
§ 2590. Same subject: rule in Illinois.
§ 2591. Same subject: rule in Pennsylvania.
§ 2592. Same subject: conclusion.
§ 2593. No liability for explosion "unless fire ensues."
§ 2594. Construction of other provisions as to explosion.
§ 2595. Conclusion as to excepted liability in case of explosion.
§ 2595a. Liability excepted where fires built within specified limits: estoppel.

§ 2596. Loss by theft excepted.
§ 2596a. Exception of liability: duty of assured to preserve or save property.
§ 2597. Exception of liability for "fire caused by hurricane."
§ 2598. Exception of liability for fire resulting from use of steam-engine.
§ 2598a. Excepted liability: fires from locomotives.
§ 2599. Credit insurance: insolvency of debtors: exception of liability: discontinuance of business: death of partner.

§ 2581. What constitutes invasion, insurrection, riot, civil commotion, or usurped power.—The term "invasion" generally has reference to the warlike or hostile entrance of an armed force into the territory of another, and the question should be, Was the invasion the proximate cause of the loss? a point not entirely free from difficulty in all cases; as where the property is destroyed to prevent its being taken by the invading force. But it may reasonably be assumed that an invading army is liable to commit acts of spoliation or burning, and, this being true, it is unimportant how the burning originated, whether by acts of carelessness or intentionally. It is sufficient that the invasion was the means or efficient cause of the loss, and the same would be true as to military or usurped power.[1]

An "insurrection" has been defined as "seditious rising against the government; a rebellion; a revolt."[2] Acts of the confederate forces occasioning the loss, done on June 28th, were declared those of a public enemy regularly organized; acts of sovereignty executed by the regularly constituted authorities, and not the acts of a mob or rioters.[3]

A "riot" is an unlawful act done or attempted to be done by three or more persons, either with or without a common cause; it may also consist of a lawful act done in a violent or tumultuous manner. It is not material whether or not there is a previous unlawful assembling, or that the rioters originally assembled for a lawful purpose. It may be a question whether an assemblage or multitude be

[1] United States.—See Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boone, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395, rev'g Boon v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. 40 Conn. 572.

Louisiana.—Poutz v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 4 Mart. (N. S.) 43, 8 Mart. *80.

Missouri.—Barton v. Home Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 156, 97 Am. Dec. 321.

Pennsylvania.—Harris v. York Mutual Ins. Co. 50 Pa. St. 341.

Virginia.—Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 613.

England.—Drinkwater v. London Assurance Co. 2 Willes, 363.

See construction of clause in note under § 2582g herein.

[2] Spruill v. North Carolina Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 Jones (46 N. C.) 126, per Nash, C. J.

[3] Harris v. York Mutual Ins. Co. 50 Pa. St. 341. But see as to acts done April 1, 1861, Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 613. See further as to who are "enemies," chapter XI. herein.

a riot. Force or violence, or some acts tending thereto calculated to cause terror to one or more, are necessary in criminal law, although there may be a riot without actual violence. In insurance cases it is not necessary to first establish the fact of a riot by judgment of a criminal court.[4] So the word "riot," when used in a fire policy, will also be given its popular and usual meaning.[5] Another definition is as follows: "'A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembled together, of their own authority, with an intent actually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people.'"[6] And an organized

[4] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Deckard, 3 Ind. App. 361, 28 N. E. 868; Dupin v. Mutual Ins. Co. 5 La. Ann. 482, per the court; Spruill v. North Carolina Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 Jones (46 N. C.) 126; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 95 Pa. St. 89, 40 Am. Rep. 629, per the court. See State v. Dean, 71 Wis. 678, 38 N. W. 341. "A riot is the doing of some unlawful act of violence, or of some lawful act in a violent and tumultuous manner, by three or more persons acting together without authority of law:" Desty's American Criminal Law (ed. 1887) pp. 247–50, secs. 98–98c. On the point of prior lawful assemblage it is held otherwise than as stated in the text (and supported by the Louisiana case cited), in North Carolina, in the case of State v. Stalcup, 1 Ired. (23 N. C.) 30, 35 Am. Dec. 732.

[5] Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277, 136 Am. St. Rep. 164, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 446.

[6] American Central Ins. Co. v. Stearns Lumber Co. 145 Ky. 255, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566, 140 S. W. 148, 41 Ins. L. J. 125, 127—Hobson, C. J., adopting this definition as one sanctioned or adopted in a prior case in the same state, in Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277, 136 Am. St. Rep. 264, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 446, where Carroll, J., said: "Curiously enough, we have no statute defining or describing a 'riot,' although it is mentioned in sec. 1268 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, as a punishable misdemeanor; and secs. 375 and 381 of the Code of Criminal Practice contain provisions for the disbursement and quelling of riotous assemblies. Nor do we find any decision of this court in which the word has received judicial construction. We must, therefore, look to the common law for a definition of its meaning and a description of the acts that will constitute a riot. In the common-law authorities there is no substantial disagreement concerning the definition of a riot. In 4 Blackstone (Chitty's ed.) p. 147, we find the following: '"riot" is where three or more actually do an unlawful act of violence, either with or without a common cause or quarrel, as, if they beat a man, or hunt and kill game in another's park, chase, warren, or liberty, or do any other unlawful act with force and violence, or even do a lawful act, as removing a nuisance, in a violent and tumultuous manner.' In 1 Russell on Crimes, p. 265, an old English work of high repute, the author states: '"riot" is described to be a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more, assembling together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterward actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. . . . It seems to be agreed that the injury or grievance complained of and intended to be revenged or remedied by a riotous assembly must relate to some private quarrel only, . . . or such like matters relating to the interests or dispute of particular persons in no way concerning the public. It seems to be clearly agreed that in every riot there must be some such circumstance, either of actual force or violence, or at least of an apparent tendency thereto, as are naturally apt to strike a terror into the people. . . . But it is not necessary, in order to constitute this crime, that personal violence should have been committed. . . . But the violence and tumult must be in some way premeditated; for if a number of persons being met together at a fair, market, or any other lawful or innocent occasion happen on a sudden quarrel to fall together by the ears, it seems to be agreed that they are not guilty of a riot, but only of a sudden affray. . . . But, if there be any predetermined purpose of acting with violence and tumult, the conduct of the parties may be deemed riotous.' This definition is also found in 1 Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, p. 513. Webster defines a riot to be 'The tumultuous disturbance of the public peace by an unlawful assembly of three or more persons in the execution of some private object.' And Bouvier in his Law Dictionary as 'a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more, assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterward actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful.' The common-law definition of a riot is generally approved by modern text-writers on the subject of criminal law. Thus Bishop in his work on Criminal Law (volume 2, secs. 1143, 1149), although he makes slight criticism of the definition laid down by Russell on Crimes, says: 'A riot is such disorderly conduct in three or more assembled persons, actually accomplishing an object, as is calculated to terrify others. . . . The act of the rioters need not be such as it would be unlawful for one to perform. Whether in this sense lawful or unlawful, if it is done by three or more in a turbulent manner, calculated to excite terror, it is a riot.' Wharton in his work on Criminal Law (volume 2, secs. 1537, 1544), defines a riot as 'a tumultuous disturbance of the public peace by an unlawful assembly of three or more persons in the execution of some private object. . . . It must be also shown in riot that the assembling was accompanied with some such circumstances, either of actual force or violence, or at least having an apparent tendency thereto, as were calculated to inspire people with terror; such as being armed, making threatening speeches, turbulent gestures, or the like. . . . To constitute a riot it is not necessary that there should be actual fright to the public generally. It is enough if the action of the parties implicated be so violent and tumultuous as to be likely to cause fright, and if individuals are frightened.' These general definitions are approved in Aron v. City of Wausaw, 98 Wis. 592, 40 L.R.A. 733, 74 N. W. 354; State v. Stalcup, 23 N. Car. 30, 35 Am. Dec. 732; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 95 Pa. 89, 40 Am.

assemblage acting together openly and audaciously and burning property are none the less rioters even though they choose the hour

of midnight for the perpetration of their riotious acts, and the assemblage is not for that reason any the less a riot although they are called "incendiaries" or "night-riders" "If there was not a riot in this instance, new definitions of old words must be formed." [7] So a riot exists where a hundred or more men armed and masked terrorize and overawe the civil authorities and inhabitants of a town and burn and otherwise destroy property of private citizens which they assume is intended for a use detrimental to their interests.[8]

Rep. 629; Dupin v. Mutual Ins. Co. 5 La. Ann. 482; Commonwealth v. Gibney, 2 Allen (Mass.) 150; State v. Snow, 18 Me. 346; State v. Hughes, 72 N. Car. 27. It will thus be seen that the modern definition of a riot is in harmony with and follows the common law definition, and that the legal meaning of the word corresponds with the meaning given to it in ordinary usage. It has no technical import as distinguished from its signification when used in the everyday affairs of life. If we look to either Blackstone or Webster, we have the same result. . . . And it may here be observed that what constitutes a riot does not depend so much on the number of persons engaged or assembled, as it does in the manner in which they act. It is the disorder, the tumult, the terrorizing, the putting in fear, the violence, the unlawful acts that are the essential things. Three armed men, banded together for the purpose of doing an unlawful act, with force and violence, acting in a tumultuous and disorderly manner, might be guilty of conduct amounting to a riot; whereas, a hundred or more, although acting in concert, in a disorderly and noisy manner, and disturbing the peace, would not constitute a riot, unless some unlawful act was committed, although such a body might be an unlawful assembly. We are not, however, called upon in this case to make any nice or refined distinctions as to what number of persons, or what character of conduct, would constitute a riot if only a few were engaged in it and their actions might leave room for doubt as to whether or not what they did amounted to a riot. We can easily understand that there might be serious doubt as to whether the acts of three or a small number of persons, or, indeed, any number, acting in concert for an unlawful purpose, would amount to a riot. Whether what they did would or would not be a riot within the meaning of the definitions given would depend upon the facts and circumstances presented in the particular case. But we can say without any feeling of hesitation or sense of uncertainty that, if the facts stated in the answers do not describe a riot, it would be impossible to frame an answer that would. If a body of one hundred or more men, armed and disguised, unlawfully confederated and banded together for the purpose and with the intention of destroying the property of an individual, and who in pursuance of such unlawful conspiracy to destroy it, and at the same time intimidate, overawe, and terrorize the inhabitants and civil authorities, is not a riot, we are at a loss to know what facts it would take to constitute a riot under any definition the word has ever received."

[7] Luckett-Ware Tobacco Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 171 Fed. 147, 38 Ins. L. J. 1067.

[8] Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 277n, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 446.

Mr. Marshall[9] reports a case[10] before Lord Mansfield where an insurance company, which had paid a loss occasioned by the riots of 1780, was permitted to sue the hundred in the name of the insured and to recover, under the riot act[11] full satisfaction. In this connection the law as stated by Judge Cooley[12] is, that a municipal corporation is not "responsible for the destruction of property by a mob unless expressly made so by statute, as in some states it has been.[13]

The words "civil commotion," says Lord Mansfield, were introduced by the Sun Fire Office in 1727, "words as general and untechnical as can possibly be used;" and he further declares that "civil commotion" cannot be applied to any of the other words then used, viz., invasion, foreign enemy, military usurped power, but that they mean something else. "I think a civil commotion is this, an insurrection of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to a rebellion, while there is a usurped power," and he applies them to a case arising under the riot acts of 1780.[14] He also says concerning the facts: "The present was an insurrection of the people, resisting all law, setting the authority of the government at naught, and depriving of its protection whoever was obnoxious to them. What was the object and end of this violent insurrection? It took place in many parts of the town at the same time and the very same night. . . . What is their object? General confusion. It certainly was meant to aim at the very vitals of the constitution. . . . Newgate is burned down. The Fleet Prison, the King's Bench Prison, the New Bridewell, are burnt down, and all the prisoners set at liberty. The bank attacked, the excise and pay offices in Broad street threatened . . . military resistance necessary. . . . Many men have been killed. What is this but a civil commotion, if any precise meaning can be affixed to these words? It is said that this is a civil commotion distinct from usurped power and rebellion. It is admitted that this kind of insurrection may amount to high treason, and to be sure it may. But the office (insurer's) do not mean to try whether these rioters are guilty of high treason or not. It is not put upon that, but upon the grounds of civil commotion. It is not an occasional riot: that would be another question. I do not give an opinion what that might be." [14a]

[9] 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 794.

[10] Mason v. Sainsbury, 3 Dougl. 61,

[11] 1 Geo. I. c. 5, sec. 6.

[12] Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) pp. 740, *621.

[13] Citing Western College of Homeopathic Medicine v. City of Cleveland, 12 Ohio St. 375, and other cases.

[14] Langdale v. Mason, reported in 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 1791, per Lord Mansfield.

[14a] See also Spruill v. North Carolina Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 Jones

The words "usurped power" may mean an invasion from abroad, or an internal rebellion conducted by authority, and not the power of a common mob.[15] The clause "notorious resistance to lawful authority" has been construed as meaning such an unusual and extraordinary state of affairs as that the usually constituted civil authorities are overpowered, and consequently unable and inadequate for the time being to successfully contend therewith.[16]

§ 2582. Excepted risks: fire caused by invasion, insurrection, riot, or mobs, civil commotion, or by military or usurped power.—If a policy contains a clause excepting loss by fire caused by invasion, insurrection, riot, or mobs, civil commotion, or by military or usurped power, there can be no recovery for damage by fire, though the superior officer of the invading army or of the rebellion has given no command that the building shall be destroyed or burned.[17] If it appears in such a case that the loss was in consequence and by reason of the military and usurped power, and that that was the proximate cause of the loss, then the insurers are not liable.[18] In a case which arose in Connecticut[19] involving the construction of such a clause the following facts appeared: The property burned was at a place occupied by military forces of the United States. Military stores had been deposited in one of the public buildings. It being found that a successful defense of the city

(46 N. Car.) 126, where it is said a civil commotion "requires the wild or irregular action of many persons assembled together."

[15] Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boone, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395, rev'g Boon v. Aetna Fire Ins. Co. 40 Conn. 575; Barton v. Home Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 156, 97 Am. Dec. 329; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258, per Bronson, J.; Drinkwater v. London Assurance Co. 2 Willes, 363, per Gould, J. See Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 613. "The words 'military' or 'usurped power' are ambiguous; . . . they must mean rebellion conducted by authority; as in the year 1745 when the rebels came to Derby; and if they had ordered any part of the town or a single house to be set on fire, that would have been by authority of rebellion. . . . It must be rebellion got to such a head as to be under some authority; . . . determined rebellion with generals who could give orders. . . . Usurped power takes in rebellion acting under usurped authority:" Langdale v. Mason, per Lord Mansfield, reported in 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 1791.

[16] Straus v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 94 Mo. 182, 4 Am. St. Rep. 368.

[17] Barton v. Home Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 156, 97 Am. Dec. 329. See construction of like clause in note under § 2582g herein.

On liability of insurer for property destroyed by mob, or during riot, see note in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277; on scope and effect of provision exempting insurer from loss caused by military or usurped power or order of civil authorities, see note in 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1155.

[18] Barton v. Home Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 156, 97 Am. Dec. 329.

[19] Boon v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. 40 Conn. 575.

could not be made, the officer in command of the forces ordered the destruction of the stores, to prevent the enemy from obtaining possession of the same, and therefore the building in which they were placed was set on fire; the fire was communicated from other buildings to that containing the insured property, and it was held that this was not within the meaning of the provision, as the setting on fire of the building containing the stores was the proximate cause of the loss, though the attack of the enemy furnished the motive for such act. It was further declared that the clause did not refer to lawful acts of military authorities of the government, but was only intended to include the unlawful acts of persons in hostility to the lawful authorities, and that the acts of the commander in ordering the firing of the buildings was a lawful act, and not within the exception in the policy.[20] In the United States supreme court, however, it is held that a loss in such a case is within the meaning of the exception or condition, and that the insurers are not liable.[1] If a house is destroyed by a riotous assemblage, and a clause in the policy excepts a loss of such a character, the insured is not liable; nor is it material that the riotous assemblage was originally for a lawful purpose.[2] Again, a person who has insured property against all direct loss or damage by fire, except as hereinafter provided, among which exceptions is loss caused directly or indirectly by riot, is not liable for property burned by an armed and masked body of one hundred or more men who overawe and terrorize the civil authorities and inhabitants of a town, and proceed to burn the property, because they think it is intended to be put to a use detrimental to their interests. In such case the riot is the direct cause of the fire and insured is not protected against loss by riot as that is excepted.[3] And a condition in a fire policy excepting "loss by fire occasioned by mobs or riots" does not extend to a loss caused by the burning of an adjoining bridge by order of the military authorities to prevent the advance of an armed force of rebels.[4] But where an insured coal-breaker was burned at night by a party of several men who fired

[20] See also Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 613.

[1] Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boone, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395, cited in The Ontario, 37 Fed. 220, 228; Conner v. Manchester Assur. Co. 130 Fed. 743, 746, 65 C. C. A. 130, 70 L.R.A. 110; Perry v. Cobb, 88 Me. 435, 447, 49 L.R.A. 397, 34 Atl. 278; Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. 613, 619.

[2] Dupin v. Mutual Ins. Co. 5 La. Ann. 482.

[3] Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277n, 136 Am. St. Rep. 264, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 125, distinguished in American Central Ins. Co. v. Stearns Lumber Co. 145 Ky. 255, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566, 140 S. W. 148, 41 Ins. L. J. 125.

[4] Harris v. York Mutual Ins. Co. 50 Pa. St. 341.

shots and drove away the watchman, it was held a riot, without proof of a previous unlawful assembling accompanied by force or violence.[5] So where five masked men broke forcibly into a dwelling-house and by threats of personal violence compelled the owner to vacate, and then burned down the building, this was held a loss by means of a riot, under a statute defining a riot as an act done by three or more persons in a tumultuous manner.[6]

But the blowing up of buildings by gunpowder for the purpose of arresting a conflagration is not a loss by usurped power.[7]

The construction of a clause in an insurance policy providing that notorious resistance to lawful authority should not render the company liable for loss or damage by fire arising therefrom is governed by preceding clauses, which relieve the company from payment of the loss when the fire should happen by any invasion, foreign enemy, insurrection, or civil commotion, lawful military power, usurped power, or by any person or persons engaged in a riot; and under a policy containing such clauses the company cannot escape liability from loss by a fire brought about by the efforts of four or five convicts who had combined to effect an escape from prison, where the prison power was adequate to overthrow such resistance, and where as soon as such convicts came in contact with an officer authorized to arrest they immediately yielded; nor is the company aided by the fact that exaggerated reports were circulated outside the prison walls where a large number of persons had lawfully assembled and armed themselves to render assistance.[8] If a policy insures against all direct loss or damage by fire "except as hereinafter provided" and it is subsequently stipulated that insurer "shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot," etc., the only loss insured against is "by fire" and the exception of loss caused directly or indirectly by "riot" includes that from fires which are the work of rioters. The excepting clause relates back to a loss "by fire." "We think the only fair and sensible construction of the contracts is that the policies insured the plaintiff against direct loss by fire except as further therein provided, to the effect that the defendant shall not be liable for any loss caused directly or indirectly by riot. If the loss was not by fire, it was not insured against at all, and the excepting clause was useless. If the loss was

[5] Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 95 Pa. St. 89, 40 Am. Rep. 629.

[6] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Deckard, 3 Ind. App. 361, 28 N. E. 868, under Rev. Stats. Ind. 1881, sec. 1981.

[7] City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258. See also Field v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa, 575, 18 Am. Rep. 46.

[8] Straus v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 94 Mo. 182, 4 Am. St. Rep. 368.

by fire it was insured against, unless the fire bringing about the loss was caused directly or indirectly by riot. If the latter, the loss comes within the excepting clause; but in the former the loss was not insured against at all, so that in either event the defense is good." [9]

Damage by fire caused by incendiary bomb from enemy air craft: exception clause as to insurrection, etc. In an English case there was an insurance against loss or damage by fire with an exception of liability from "insurrection, riots, civil commotion, or military or usurped power," by means of an incendiary bomb from an enemy air craft the insured warehouse was set on fire and serious damage was sustained. It was held that recovery was precluded as the damage was within the exception for the reason that it was both a riot clause and a war clause combined and not merely the former.[9a]

§ 2582a. Same subject: waiver.—If the policy excepts loss or damage happening during the existence of any invasion, foreign enemy, rebellion, insurrection, or riot unless satisfactory proof be made that said loss or damage was not occasioned by or connected with, but occurred from a cause or causes independent of such invasion, etc., and insurer, without demanding proof, notifies insured that it will not pay the loss, denying liability on the ground it was occasioned by the excepted cause of "riot," such notice and denial of liability constitutes a waiver which relieves assured from producing proofs before commencing suit, and in such case it is for the jury to determine how the loss was occasioned and its finding it was not occasioned by causes so independent of the existence of a riot will stand undisturbed.[10] But where a policy insures only against loss by fire and excepts loss or damage directly or indirectly caused by a riot, the fact that insured was induced by insurer's agent to take out insurance by reason of the existence of a dangerous and unusual situation in insured's locality and the surrounding parts of the state does not constitute a waiver of said excepted loss clause, even though said loss was occasioned by "night riders" or a "riot." [11]

[9] Luckett-Wake Tobacco Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 171 Fed. 147, 38 Ins. L. J. 1067,—Evans, D. J.; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 567, declared in so far as opposed to the above view, "to be wholly unsound and unmaintainable." The Illinois case is, however, considered in Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277, 136 Am. St. Rep. 164, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 446. 458, and it is also considered in Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103, 38 Ins. L. J. 56.

[9a] Rogers, Limited v. Whittaker, 86 L. J. K. B. 790, [1917] 1 K. B. 992, 116 L. T. 249, 33 T. L. R. 270.

[10] Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, 192 U. S. 149, 48 L. ed. 385, 24 Sup. Ct. 247.

[11] Luckett-Wake Tobacco Co. v.

§ 2582b. "Directly or indirectly" by "riot:" dynamite explosions: unless fire ensues.—It requires the participation of more than one person to cause a riot and this applies where it appeared from the evidence that before the fire, on several different occasions, insured's house had been considerably damaged by explosions of dynamite thrown or placed by some unknown person or persons but these acts of outrage were not shown to have been committed by more than one person. Notwithstanding these explosions, however, which considerably damaged the building the house was still worth considerably more than the amount of insurance thereon, and the evidence being conflicting and uncertain upon the point whether the building was destroyed by fire or by the explosion which occurred only a few minutes prior thereto the finding of the jury that fire was the proximate cause of the destruction of the building was not disturbed.[12]

§ 2582c. Loss directly or indirectly caused by order of any civil authority.—The word "indirectly" limits the words "order of any civil authority," as well as the other words in the clause in a policy exempting the insurer from liability for loss "caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, or military or civil war, or commotion, or military or usurped power or by order of any civil authority." [13]

In the absence of some such qualification as whether the order of the civil authority be legal or not, it would seem that the act causing or resulting in the loss ought to be one which the person or body of persons, by whom or by whose order it was done, had the power or authority to do, in order to bring it within the intent of this clause, and accordingly where the insured building is not burned by the rioters themselves, who are armed and have taken refuge therein, but is burnt by a deputy United States marshall who has no authority so to do, either by virtue of his office or otherwise, the direct cause of the fire and loss is said deputy marshall's un-

Globe & Rutgers Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 171 Fed. 147, 38 Ins. L. J. 1067.

[12] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Jones, 16 Ga. App. 261, 85 S. E. 206. The condition of the policy was: "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot, civil war or commotion, or military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority, or by theft, or by neglect of the insured, to use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property at and after a fire or when the property is endangered by fire in neighboring premises, or (unless fire ensues, and, in that event, for damage by fire only), by explosion of any kind or by lightning; but liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon."

On loss by explosion, see note in 19 L.R.A. 594, and 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474.

[13] Hocking v. British American Assur. Co. 62 Wash. 73, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1155 (annotated on scope and authorized act, even though such act was for the purpose of removing to some extent the danger involved in the performance of said officer's duty, and in such case insurer is not released from liability under a clause excepting risks of "riot" and "order of any civil authority." [14] So fire resulting from the negligence of the health officer in attempting to fumigate a house under order of the board of health, is within a clause in a policy thereon exempting the insurer from liability for fire caused directly or indirectly by order of any civil authority.[15] But under a Federal decision an order by the county supervisors to burn the grass on pasture lands to destroy grasshoppers which threaten to devastate the orchards and vineyards of the locality is an act of civil authority, whether it is strictly within their power or not, so as to relieve an insurance company from liability for loss of property to which the fire extends after it has gotten beyond control, under a provision of the policy relieving the insurer from liability for property destroyed by order of any civil authority.[16]

Again, assurer is exempt from liability for the death of a horse affected with glanders which is killed by a veterinary's advice where the civil authorities would for the same reason, have killed it on notice under the statute, and the policy insures against loss by death by disease but withholds liability for loss caused by order of any civil authority.[17]

§ 2582d. Same subject: loss of rentals: "interruption of business." —In a Maryland case certain buildings and the rentals thereon were insured and the buildings were totally destroyed in the great Baltimore conflagration of 1904 and as one of the results therefrom the authorities of that city refused permits for rebuilding for a considerable time. The policies in suit provided that the "assured agrees to rebuild in as short a time as the nature of the case will admit," and also, in addition, that the insurer should "not be effect of provision exempting insurer from loss caused by military or usurped power or order of civil authority, etc.), 113 Pac. 259.

[14] American Central Ins. Co. v. Stearns Lumber Co. 145 Ky. 255, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566, 140 S. W. 148, 41 Ins. L. J. 125, distinguishing Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277n, 136 Am. St. Rep. 264, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 125.

[15] Hocking v. British America Assur. Co. 62 Wash. 73, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1155, 113 Pac. 259.

[16] Conner v. Manchester Assur. Co. 130 Fed. 743, 65 C. C. A. 127, 70 L.R.A. 106.

[17] Joplin v. National Live Stock Ins. Assoc. 61 Oreg. 544, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 569 (annotated on cause of death of insured animals), 122 Pac. 897, 41 Ins. L. J. 1118. See Martin v. National Live Stock Ins. Assoc. 65 Oreg. 29, 131 Pac. 511 (a case of exemption of liability where animal killed by order of civil authority, and pleading: anticipating defense).

liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by order of any civil authority" nor "beyond the actual value destroyed by fire for loss occasioned by ordinance or law regulating construction or repair of buildings, or by interruption of business, manufacturing processes, or otherwise." It was held that the delay in rebuilding caused by the refusal of said permit was within the above exception and precluded recovery of rentals lost and that the fall of debris in the street occasioned the interruption of business so far as it affected building operations and this cause of delay was as clear a bar to recovery of rentals as was the ordinance delaying the granting of permits to rebuild.[18]

§ 2582e. When policy excepting one of a number of like accidental causes of damage covers damage from other like causes: floods.—The exception of one from a number of like causes of damage to or destruction of insured property is a recognition by the insurer of his liability for loss arising from other causes of like nature, and this applies to an insurance against all loss or arising from any accidental damage to the described property excepting only damage or destruction by fire, or lightning, and therefore covers, in such case, damage by reason of a flood, freshet, or sudden rise in a river. In addition it is also held that insurer is presumed to know that which is obvious in regard to the property assured, including the natural perils to which it is exposed.[19]

§ 2582f. Effect of specially excepted peril: immediate cause of loss: earthquake: statute.—A statute providing that when a peril is specially excepted in a contract of insurance, a loss which would not have occurred but for such peril is thereby excepted, although the immediate cause of the loss was a peril which was not excepted, does not operate to give the insurer an exemption wider than that which he has expressly stipulated for. Such a statute, however, has no application to a case where the "peril specially excepted" is fire directly caused by earthquake. The court, per Gilbert, C. J., said: "For a loss so caused the insurer shall not be liable. But the loss did not occur from a fire directly caused by earthquake. To hold that the insurance company, although it has specially provided for exemption of liability for loss by fire directly caused by earthquake, is entitled to an exemption wider than that which it stipulated for, is to hold that the intention of the statute is to deny to the contracting parties the power to make the contract which they made—a purpose not to be imputed to the lawmakers, and, indeed, one which is expressly disavowed" in another section of the Code which declares that the provisions thereof in respect to the rights and obligations of parties to contracts including the provision first above stated, "are subordinate to the intention of the parties when ascertained in the manner prescribed by the chapter on the Interpretation of Contracts; and the benefit thereof may be waived by any party entitled thereto, unless such waiver would be against public policy."[20]

[18] Palatine Ins. Co. Ltd. v. O'Brien, 109 Md. 100, 71 Atl. 775, 38 Ins. L. J. 482; Palatine Ins. Co. Ltd. v. O'Brien, 107 Md. 341, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1055n, 68 Atl. 484. That award in same case invalid, see 152 Fed. 922, 82 C. C. A. 70, 36 Ins. L. J. 616.

On construction of policy or contract insuring against loss of rents, see notes in 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1055; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 123; and L.R.A. 1916F, 694.

[19] Hey v. Guarantor's Liability & Indemnity Co. 181 Pa. St. 220, 59 Am. St. Rep. 644, 37 Atl. 402, 49 Wkly. N. C. 423, 28 Pitts. L. J. N. S. 21, 26 Ins. L. J. 1012. As to the last point and concealment, see § 1806 (marine risks), §§ 1850 et seq. (in other than marine risks).

§ 2582g. Earthquake: fire started on other property and spread by conflagration.—The great earthquake and conflagration in San Francisco in 1906 occasioned enormous loss of property, and a number of suits were brought against insurance companies. In a case decided in the Federal Court of Appeals in 1911, the clause relied on by the insurer was, that it should not "be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion," etc., "or for loss or damage occasioned by or through any volcano, earthquake, or hurricane, or other eruption, convulsion or disturbance." Insured's property was apparently not injured by the shock or shocks, but the earthquake by breaking electric circuit wires and in other ways immediately and directly caused a number of fires to start in other buildings and by reason of the conflagration they spread to insured's building and destroyed it and its contents. The insurer claimed that the loss was within the exceptions and therefore, it was not liable, but the judgment in the lower court in favor of assured was affirmed.[1] The court in the above case following the rule of comity says: "We are satisfied that the case at bar should be disposed of by an affirmative, since we are very far from being clear in our convictions that the Court of Appeals in the Ninth Circuit erred in its construction of the contract." In the case thus referred to, which was decided in another circuit, the fire was the same, following the same earthquake, and the language of the excepting clause was substantially identical, and it was held under that decision that as it was explicitly stated that the insurance was only against direct loss or damage by fire "except as hereinafter provided" there must be read into the excepting clause the words "by fire" so that it should read "or for loss or damage by fire occasioned by or through any volcano, earthquake, or hurricane," etc.; that in common and colloquial use the words "cause" and "occasion" are used synonymously, that such is their ordinary use, and words in a policy should be given their common ordinary meaning rather than that of the lexicographers; that the use of the words "by or through" did not enlarge the meaning of the clause as they were but the repetition of words meaning the same thing, and upon the premise that the exception in the policy was for loss or damage by fire caused by any volcano, earthquake, etc., it was held that construing the policy most strongly against the insurer, the second exception exempted only from liability for loss by fire which was caused directly by earthquake, etc., and that a loss indirectly caused by the progress of a fire from a distance, although originally started by an earthquake was not within the exemption, and the judgment of the lower court holding insurer liable was affirmed. The court also declared that it was unnecessary to enter into a discussion of the question whether the earthquake was or was not the proximate cause of the loss. "Conceding that it was the procuring, efficient, predominent cause, it was not nevertheless the direct cause. It did not produce a fire on the insured premises. . . . An earthquake, unaided by other agencies produces no fire."[2] Under a Maryland decision insurer is liable for destruction of property by fire, following an earthquake, where it is stipulated that the insurer shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, etc., "or (unless fire ensues, and, in that event for the damage by fire only) by explosion of any kind or from any cause or the bursting of a boiler, or earthquake, or hurricane, or lightning," etc. The above bracketed clause being declared to embrace both grammatically and logically each of the destructive forces of nature—not necessarily but sometimes resulting in fire—which follow, and are all alike bound up in that clause, and insurer is not bound for direct loss caused by said independent destructive forces; but it binds itself to make good the loss caused by fire ensuing from them. Another factor in this case was that by reason of the earthquake the water mains and pipes were disconnected and the water system for fire prevention was rendered useless.[3]

[20] Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103, 38 Ins. L. J. 56, Cal. Civ. Code secs. 2628. 3268. See Pacific Heating & Ventilating Co. v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Bklyn. 158 Cal. 367, 111 Pac. 4, 39 Ins. L. J. 1706.

On liability of insurer for fire caused by earthquake, see note in 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103.

[1] Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. v. Stanton, 191 Fed. 813, 112 C. C. A. 327, 41 Ins. L. J. 411.

[2] Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103, 38 Ins. L. J. 56, certiorari denied in 212 U. S. 581, 53 L. ed. 660, 29 Sup. Ct. 690. See German Savings & Loan Society v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. Ltd. 187 Fed. 758, 109 C. C. A. 506, 40 Ins. L. J. 1789; Commercial Union Assur. Co. Ltd. v. Pacific Union Club, 169 Fed. 776, 778, 95 C. C. A. 242; Richmond Coal Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 169 Fed. 746, 95 C. C. A. 178, rev'g 159 Fed. 985; Henry Hilp Tailoring Co. v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 157 Fed. 285; Baker v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 157 Fed. 280; Pacific Heating & Ventilating Co. v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Bklyn. 158 Cal. 367, 111 Pac. 4, 39 Ins. L. J. 1706; Pacific Union Club v. The Commercial Union Assur. Co. 12 Cal. App. 503, 107 Pac. 728, 39 Ins. L. J. 729.

As to proximate cause: earthquake, see § 2833a herein.

[3] McEvoy v. Security Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 110 Md. 275, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 964, 132 Am. St. Rep. 428n, 73 Atl. 157, 38 Ins. L. J. 895. The entire clause was as follows: "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot, labor strike, civil war, or commotion, or military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority, to prevent the spread of fire, whether such order be legal or not, nor in consequence of any neglect of or deviation from police or municipal laws, rules or ordinances where such exist; or by theft at or after a fire; or by neglect of the insured to use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property at and after a fire, or when the property is endangered by fire in neighboring premises, or (unless fire ensues, and, in that event, for the damage by fire only) by explosion of any kind or from any cause, or the bursting of a boiler, or earthquake, or hurricane, or lightning; but liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon." The following construction of this clause is of value: The court, per Pearce, J., said: "We will now examine the clause we have transcribed and upon the construction of which the decision must depend. An analysis of that clause will in our opinion show that the company has plainly exempted itself absolutely from loss caused by or in consequence of certain conditions or circumstances, and that it has conditionally and partially exempted itself from loss resulting from certain other causes, conditions, or circumstances: (1) It has absolutely exempted itself from 'loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot, labor strike, civil war, commotion, military or usurped power;' all these being various manifestations of vis major. (2) It has absolutely exempted itself from loss caused by the exercise of any paramount civil authority exerted to prevent the spread of fire. (3) It has absolutely exempted itself from loss in consequence of any neglect of or deviation from police or municipal regulations by the insured, or from loss by the neglect of the insured to use all reasonable means to save and preserve property at and after a fire, or when property is endangered by fire in neighboring premises. (4) It has absolutely exempted itself from loss by theft at or after a fire. (5) It has (conditionally and partially) exempted itself from loss resulting from explosion of any kind or cause, or the bursting of a boiler, or an earthquake, or hurricane, or lightning, unless in any of these cases fire ensues, and in that event it is liable for the damage by fire only. This being a fire policy, there is an adequate reason for each of these provisions, which abundantly justifies the construction we have indicated. When social disorder and violence reign, it has been found by experience to be necessary to contract against their effect upon certain classes of obligations such as those under consideration, and where the state or a municipality intervenes and destroys the property of an individual for the common good, an insurer ought in justice to be released from the obligation of indemnity against which he could never safely contract. So when the insured by his own neglect causes or directly contributes to the loss insured against, it is fit that he should bear the loss himself; and if property endangered, but not destroyed by fire, is stolen at or after the fire, it does not come within the true intent and meaning of a contract of indemnity against fire. But explosions of any kind, the bursting of a boiler, an earthquake, a hurricane, or even lightning, may destroy property without fire ensuing, and then such loss does not naturally come within the scope of a fire policy; but an explosion or the bursting of a boiler may, and often does, result in fire either instantaneous or latent. An earthquake or a hurricane may level a building and scatter fire burning within thus causing the complete destruction of the material. Lightning very generally results in instantaneous fire, and is therefore made in this, as in most fire policies, an exception to its associated risks, and direct loss therefrom may be assumed by specific agreement noted on the policy. The construction of this policy, which we have thus indicated as correct in view of the reasons above stated leading to it, is also sustained by the structure of the clause in controversy which we have pointed out, and by the grammatical rules applicable to determine its meaning.

§ 2583. Falling of building except as result of fire.—Under a provision that "if a building or any part thereof fall except as the result of fire all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease," the company exempts itself from any and all loss occurring subsequent to the falling of the building, though a fire may ensue immediately after the building has fallen. Thus, in a Massachusetts case, the policy contained such a condition. The insured building was equally and completely divided by a brick wall partition with communicating doors in each story. A girder fell in one-half, bringing down substantially the whole of that part and the goods stored therein, but leaving the other part standing uninjured. A fire afterward broke out in the fallen part destroying everything in it save the outer walls, the partition wall, and an elevator, but not communicating to the other part, and it was held that no action on the policy could be maintained.[4]

An exception of this nature in a policy is, like all other provisions, to be strictly construed. So long as the building remains standing the policy does not cease, and the insurers are not exempt, no matter how much it may be damaged by the action of the elements or any other course.[5] Where a policy provides that all insurance under it shall cease immediately in the event that the building in which the insured goods are, or any part of the build-

"The bracketed clause, '(unless fire ensues, and, in that event, for the damage by fire only),' both grammatically and logically embraces each of the destructive forces of nature (not necessarily, but sometimes resulting in fire) which follow and are all alike bound up with that bracking, falls, except as a result of fire, the test properly is not, whether the effect of extent of collapse is such as to increase the fire risk, but the event itself, provided what falls is a material, substantial or important part of the structure.[6] If the fall of the building is caused by anything except, or as the result of, fire, recovery is precluded, but if the fire preceded and caused said fall insurer would be liable.[7] And even though the building caught fire before falling still if it fell from some other cause than fire the insured owner of a stock of goods therein cannot recover where said goods were uninjured by fire before the building collapsed.[8] If a part of a building falls, but goods remain undisturbed in another part which does not fall, it is held that the insured may recover for the goods so remaining which are destroyed by a subsequent fire, and also that the insurer is liable for damage caused by water used to extinguish the fire as to such goods as are not displaced or injured by the fall.[9] If the distinctive character of the building is not destroyed, and there is a fall of only a very small part of the structure, and no fractional part falls before the fire, this is not within an exception as to liability if the building or any part thereof fall except as the eted clause. For direct loss caused by these independent destructive forces, the company refuses to be bound, but contracts to make good the loss caused by fire ensuing from them. If anything is needed to place the correctness of this interpretation of the policy beyond doubt, it will be found in the closing paragraph of the clause in question, viz., 'but liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon.' It is clear beyond question from this language that indirect loss from lightning is embraced in the risk assumed. If this were not so, then, to give any meaning to that paragraph, it would have to read 'but liability for all or any damages by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon.' We have already shown that the words, 'explosion of any kind, bursting of a boiler, earthquake, hurricane, and lightning,' are subject to the same precise qualifications and limitations, and, if the policy covers indirect loss by lightning, there is no escape from the conclusion that it also covers indirect loss from earthquake."

[4] Huck v. Globe Ins. Co. (Walker v. Queen Ins. Co.; Stowe v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co.) 127 Mass. 306, 34 Am. Rep. 373. See §§ 2773 et seq. herein.

On fall of building clause in fire insurance policies, see note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 604.

[5] Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Congregation Rodeph Sholom, 80 Ill. 558, 8 Chic. L. News, 178. See also Brenner v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 51 Cal. 101.

[6] Fountain v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 158 Cal. 760, 139 Am. St. Rep. 214, 112 Pac. 546. 40 Ins. L. J. 519, — Cal. App. —, 117 Pac. 630. See Loomis v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 16 Cal. App. 532, 117 Pac. 642.

[7] Stevenson & Foster Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. (Pa.) 33 Pittsb. L. J. 253.

[8] Ogburn-Griffin Grocery Co. v. Orient Ins. Co. 188 Ala. 218, 66 So. 434.

[9] Lewis v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 159.

result of fire, the risk shall cease immediately.[10] And where the building was insured as a two-story and basement, etc., structure and the basement was destroyed after a windstorm had blown down the building, a recovery cannot be had under a claim that neither the basement nor any part of it fell except as the result of fire.[11] Again, under a like condition as the above, it is held that the falling of the building as the result of an explosion within the walls is not within the exception, and the insurers are, in such case, liable for a loss by fire immediately ensuing.[12] In case partition walls have been weakened and neither fire nor explosion precedes their falling but fire follows immediately thereafter the policy ceases and recovery is precluded, even though there is no question as to the fall of a material and integral part of the building, and, in order to recover, insured must show that fire alone caused said fall.[13]

Where the building adjoining the insured building had caught fire and only the walls were left standing, and, in consequence of their weakened condition, they fell the day after the fire, crushing in the insured building, it was held that the fire was the proximate cause of the loss to the insured building, and that the insurers were liable.[14] And in another case, where the policy stipulated that the risk should immediately cease if the building should fall "except as a result of fire," and it appeared that the insured property was adjacent to another building used as a feedmill, the wall between them being a partition wall, and the feedmill caught fire before it fell, and the fall was caused by the partial consumption of the feedmill and the weakening of the partition wall by fire, which wall, together with a part of the elevator insured, also fell, then the falling of the insured building is a direct loss or damage by fire. The clause "falling except as the result of fire" was held in this case to have reference only to cases where the building might fall from some other cause than fire; as, for example, defective construction, the withdrawal of necessary support, storm, flood, or other like cause, and fire thereafter ensued. But that it was not intended to exclude cases where fire was the immediate or proximate cause of the fall, and the court, per Mitchell, J., further declares that "to render the fire the immedate or proximate cause of the loss or damage, it is not necessary that any part of the insured property actually ignited or was consumed by fire. . . . The question is, Was

[10] London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Crunk, 91 Tenn. 376, 23 S. W. 140.

[11] Teutonia Ins. Co. v. Beard, 74 Ill. App. 496.

[12] Dows v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384.

[13] Foster v. Home Ins. Co. 143 Fed. 307, 74 C. C. A. 445, 35 Ins. L. J. 161. See § 2775 herein.

[14] Johnston v. West of Scotland Ins. Co. 7 C. O. of Gen. Sess. Cas. (Shaw & Dunlop) 52.

fire the efficient and proximate cause of the loss or damage?"[15] But under a policy of insurance stipulating that if the insured building fall except as the result of fire the insurance shall immediately cease, the insurer is not liable for the loss of the building felled by a cyclone and destroyed by fire resulting from the fall.[16] Where the policy excepted loss by explosion of any kind, or where the building or any part thereof should fall except as the result of fire, and there was an explosion of dynamite followed in a few minutes by fire and it appeared that no substantial or material part of the building had fallen and that it had not become untenantable, and that assured had not abandoned it as a place of residence before the fire occurred, a finding of the jury that fire was the proximate cause of the loss was not disturbed where the evidence was conflicting and uncertain upon the point whether the explosion or fire caused the loss.[17]

§ 2583a. Same subject: earthquake.—Under the clause providing that if a building or any part thereof shall fall except as the result of fire, the insurance on the building and its contents shall immediately cease, insurer is liable for the entire loss, and the exemption in the clause does not apply to avoid the insurance where the walls fall from an earthquake shock and the insured goods begin to burn before said walls have fallen, but after the shock had begun, and they fell before the fire had done any material damage; nor does said clause apply to the insured building if the fire precedes its falling, or the fall of any part thereof.[18] And under such a stipulation, if the material part of the walls of a building tumble down by reason of an earthquake, and destruction is completed by a fire following thereupon, but caught from a burning structure nearby, recovery of insurance on the contents of the building cannot be had, and in such case it is unimportant whether the falling of such material part of the building before the fire, increased the risk or not.[19]

§ 2583b. Falling of building: explosion: lightning clause.[20]—In an Iowa case there was a storm of unusual violence and the evidence

[15] Ermentraut v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 63 Minn. 305, 30 L.R.A. 346, 56 Am. St. Rep. 481, 65 N. W. 635.

[16] Nichols v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 71 Miss. 326, 42 Am. St. Rep. 465, 14 So. 263.

[17] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Jones, 16 Ga. App. 261, 85 S. E. 206.

[18] Davis v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 158 Cal. 766, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 604 (annotated on fall of building clause in fire insurance policies), 112 Pac. 549, 40 Ins. L. J. 524. See Loomis v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 16 Cal. App. 532, 117 Pac. 642. See § 2792 herein.

[19] Fountain v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 158 Cal. 760, 139 Am. St. Rep. 214, 112 Pac. 546, 40 Ins. L. J. 519. — Cal. App. —, 117 Pac. 630.

[20] See § 2790 herein.

was conflicting upon the point whether the collapse of the building was caused by a stroke of lightning or by water undermining the walls. The policy to which a lightning clause was attached, although whether it had been so attached was a question in issue, also stipulated that if the building or any part thereof should fall except as a result of fire all insurance on such building or its contents should immediately cease. In answer to the contention that as the lightning clause was subject to the terms and conditions of the policy insurer was not liable in that the loss or damage occurred after the walls fell, the court declared that the evident design of that clause was to obviate liability for loss by fire consequent upon or subsequent to the falling of the insured building and that possibly all insurance under the lightning clause except as a result of the lightning would have ceased upon the falling of the building and that this would seem a fair interpretation of the two clauses read together.[1] If a policy on a house and furniture contains a lightning clause, followed by a provision distinctly excluding liability for loss by explosion, it is plain that a loss by explosion is not contemplated by the parties as being embraced within the protection of the policy. Accordingly, if lightning strikes a powder-house, in which neither the company nor the insured has any interest, on the other side of a street from the insured property, seventy-one feet distant, and which stroke is followed by an explosion that destroys the house and furniture, the company is not liable.[2]

§ 2584. Explosion: no stipulation: insurers not liable.[3]—In the absence of any provision in the policy the insurers are not liable for loss by explosion of steam or other agent acting by expansion without combustion.[4] So where sugar in a sugar-house covered by an ordinary fire policy was destroyed by an explosion of the boilers used in manufacturing, the damage being caused by the explosion and not by fire, the insurer was held not liable.[5]

§ 2585. Insurers not exempt where building blown up to prevent spread of conflagration.—The necessity not infrequently arises for blowing up a building with some explosive to prevent the spreading of a conflagration. Where such a necessity arises, and an insured

[1] Cummins v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. 153 Iowa, 579, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1169, 134 N. W. 79, 41 Ins. L. J. 490.—Ladd, J. See § 2790 herein.

[2] German Fire Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio St. 581, 36 L.R.A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, 45 N. E. 1097. See § 2589 herein.

On liability for loss by lightning, see note in 26 L.R.A. 267.

[3] See §§ 2586–2595, 2768 et seq. herein.

[4] Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Rep. 111.

[5] Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550; Marcy v. Sun Ins. Co. 14 La. Ann. 264.

building is so destroyed, the insurers are liable. If the policy stipulates that "the insurer shall not be liable for an explosion by gunpowder," it is nevertheless a loss within the policy if the building is blown up in order to prevent the spreading of a large fire.[6] In the case so deciding it appeared that the insured building had, however, caught fire, and Sherwood, J., in his opinion says: "Had this means been resorted to before the fire had actually begun its work of destruction upon the property insured, it might be a question whether the underwriters would be liable." His subsequent words, however, would be equally pertinent had the fire not reached the insured property. They are as follows: "It is certainly very much against the true interests of insurers to raise any objections founded on the honest efforts of the insured or others to prevent the spread of fires, much more to print clauses meant to make the right of recovery depend upon what is or is not done by strangers or others present at the fire. Life indeed, as well as property, is often in peril, but where it is not, men might be disposed, under such circumstances, out of regard for the insured, to stand still and let the property perish rather than imperil his rights by interfering with his claim for indemnity against the insurers. It would be a novel clause to introduce into a policy that in case of fire the insurance should be void if any water were applied to extinguish it. Quite as novel would it be were it provided that if there were no water nothing should be done. Yet the defendants in this case have told us that the clause that the insurers should not be liable for an explosion by gunpowder was meant to guard against the very thing which had been done. Had the citizens of Americus, instead of resorting to gunpowder, succeeded in any other way in separating the building in question from those contiguous to it, we would probably have been told that it was destruction by a mob, against which there is a provision in most policies, if not in this. We construe this clause differently and more for the interests of the underwriters when we say that fire originating from an explosion of gunpowder was what was meant to be guarded against, and not an honest effort, even if it was injudicious, on the part of those present to stop the flames." [7]

§ 2586. Explosion occurring upon other premises: loss to insured property result of explosion only.—Where the fire did not happen

[6] Greenwald v. Insurance Co. 3 Phila. (Pa.) 323, 7 Am. L. Reg. (O. S.) 282.

[7] This language is quoted in a later case in New York City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258, where an insured building which the flames had not reached was blown up by order of the mayor of the city, in order to prevent the fire from spreading, and it was there held that the insurers were liable for the loss to the insured property.

at the premises insured, but broke out in a building about two hundred feet distant, causing an explosion by gunpowder, which by the concussion of the air injured a building insured against fire, it was held that such a loss could not have been within the reasonable intent of the parties, and was not covered by the policy.[8] So in an English case, where it appeared that the insured premises were damaged by an explosion of a powder magazine, occurring about a mile distant, it was held not to be a loss within the policy.[9] So under a Tennessee decision, if, while a building is burning, an explosion occurs therein which injures neighboring property without igniting it a fire policy on the latter property which excludes liability for loss by explosion does not cover such injuries. In this case the explosion was in a neighboring building about forty feet away and was caused by fire on those premises igniting powder and dynamite therein stored. The fire itself did not reach the insured property, but the explosion produced thereby resulted in loss and damage to insured stock. The explosion referred to was wholly due to the preceding fire. Among the several claims made by the insurer was one of which the court, per Neil, J., says: "It is insisted by counsel for complainants that since an explosion produced in progress of a precedent fire is held to be the result of the fire and the loss by such explosion a loss by fire, damage produced thereby in neighboring buildings should be treated like damage by smoke and water, destruction by the falling of buildings or other injuries by fire agencies without actual ignition in their operation upon adjoining buildings and that the element of distance is unimportant. Abstractly speaking the deduction seems sound; but logical conclusions cannot always be safely reached by pressing processes of logical illation to their ultimate result. The weight of authority is against complainant's contention."[10] Under another decision the fall of a building because of an explosion in a burning building in the vicinity, is not within the protection of a policy insuring against direct loss or damage by fire, where the policy also provides that the insurer shall not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by explosion of any kind.[11] Again, it is declared that

[8] Caballero v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 15 La. Ann. 217. See §§ 2582g–2768 et seq. herein.

On liability for damage by explosion in neighboring building, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 476.

[9] Everett v. London Assur. Co. 19 Com. B. (N. S.) 126, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 546, 34 L. J. C. P. 299, 13 Week. Rep. 862.

[10] Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St. Rep. 870, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. 507.

See Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio St. 581, 36 L.R.A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, 45 N. E. 1097.

[11] Hustace v. Phenix Ins. Co. 175 N. Y. 292, 62 L.R.A. 651, 67 N. E.

"the manifest weight of authority clearly sustains the proposition that damage to insured property caused only by concussion consequent upon an explosion occurring at a distance from the premises upon which the insured property is situated, no fire ensuing in the insured property, is not recoverable under the fire insurance policy although the explosion was caused by and incident to a fire in progress on the distant premises." [11a]

§ 2587. Explosion occurring upon other premises from which fire ensues communicating to insured premises.—If the company excepts a loss by explosion, it is not liable for any loss or damage which the insured premises may sustain which is the mere result of concussion of an explosion upon other premises than those insured.[12] If, however, explosion occurs upon other premises than those where the insured property is located, from which fire ensues, and communicates to the insured property, is the company liable? Under a decision in the United States supreme court [13] it was held that the company was not liable in such case. The facts were these: The policy provided that "insurers shall not be liable for loss or damage that may happen by means of any invasion, insurrection, riot, or civil commotion, or any military or usurped power, explosion, earthquake, or hurricane." Cotton stored in a warehouse was insured; the street upon which the warehouse was located was about fifty feet in width, and upon the other side of the street was another warehouse wherein an explosion occurred, which threw down the walls and scattered many combustible materials in the street. Fire followed as the result of the explosion and fall of the building, and was communicated to the warehouse containing the insured cotton from another building, which had been fired as a result of the explosion. It was held that insurers were not liable if the fire took place by means of the explosion, and that it did so take place unless some new power or force had intervened between the burning of the cotton and the explosion, and also that the fact that the fire destroyed another building before it was carried to the cotton did not operate as a new cause, and was no new force or power.[14] In 592, 32 Ins. L. J. 688. See this case also under § 2593 herein.

[11a] Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Bergheim, 21 Colo. App. 527, 122 Pac. 812, 41 Ins. L. J. 1107, 1112.—Walling, J.

[12] Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St. Rep. 870, 5 Ann. Cas. 777, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. 507, considered as to this point under § 2586 herein. See also §§ 2593, 2771 herein.

[13] Louisiana Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 44, 19 L. ed. 65. See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[14] We think the words of the Illinois court are noteworthy in this connection: Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 557. This point was not, it is true, directly before the court, the question in this case being whether a fire directly after an explosion was excepted. The court, however, in its argu-

other words where an explosion produced or set in operation the fire which burned the plaintiff's cotton, and which was carried to the cotton by first burning another building, the loss is included in the exception in the policy that the insurers will not be liable for a loss which happens by means of an explosion. The accidental circumstance that the wind was blowing in a direction to favor the progress of the fire toward the warehouse cannot be considered a new cause, so as to render the explosion too remote.[15]

ment, supposes such a case, and says: "When a person takes out a policy and pays the premium, he takes it for granted without reading the policy that he cannot make the risk more hazardous by storing highly inflammable materials upon the premises. He knows that it would be acting in bad faith with the company, and that the policy has probably provided against it, but he would have no reason to suppose that among the voluminous stipulations of the policy there would be found one intended to deprive him of its benefit because a fire which has destroyed his property originated in another house a half-mile distant in the explosion of a camphene lamp. Most fires originate in acts of carelessness, and it is chiefly to guard themselves against the carelessness of others that prudent persons insure. Yet the construction of this policy contended for by the company would make the insured assume the liability for the carelessness of others. The great fire at Chicago is supposed to have originated in the overturning and explosion of a lamp, but we are not aware that any of the insurance companies that suffered by that fire have sought to interpose this defense, although this clause is a very common one in insurance policies, and was probably contained in many that had been issued on the property there destroyed. Counsel for the company, feeling the unreasonable character of their interpretation of this condition in cases where the fire comes from an explosion on other premises, speak of it as if it only referred to explosions on the premises of the insured. But the policy will have no such construction or limitation. We must either hold that the clause refers to loss by explosion simply, without reference to fire or to losses by fire occasioned by explosions anywhere, whether on or remote from its premises. There is no middle term. One is consistent with the context, reasonable in itself and just to both parties. The other requires the interpolation of two additional words in the policy, is inconsistent with the context, and in a large degree would make fire insurance a mere mockery." This decision is considered in Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277, 136 Am. St. Rep. 164, 116 S. W. 234, 36 Ins. L. J. 446, 458, also in Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103, 38 Ins. L. J. 56, but it is declared "to be wholly unsound and unmaintainable" in Luckett-Wake Tobacco Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 171 Fed. 147, 38 Ins. L. J. 1067, at least so, in so far as opposed to that decision.

[15] Louisiana Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 44, 19 L. ed. 65.

Cited in: United States.—The G. R. Booth, 171 U. S. 450, 454, 43 L. ed. 234, 238, 19 Sup. Ct. 9; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Hickey, 166 U. S. 521, 527, 41 L. ed. 1101, 1103, 17 Sup. Ct. 661; Scheffer v. Washington City V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 249, 251, 26 L. ed. 1070, 1071; Aetna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 131, 24 L. ed.

In the first edition of this treatise we said: Can such a doctrine as that stated in the United States supreme court be sound? It does 295, 399; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Leaver, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 531, 542, 22 L. ed. 155, 158; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Charleston Bridge Co. 65 Fed. 628, 632, 13 C. C. A. 58, 62, 25 U. S. App. 200; Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Robinson, 50 Fed. 810, 813, 1 C. C. A. 684, 688, 2 U. S. App. 205, 16 L.R.A. 547; Crandall v. Accident Ins. Co. 27 Fed. 40, 46, aff'd 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. 685; Washburn v. Western Ins. Co. 9 Ins. L. J. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 17,216; Boon v. Aetna Ins. Co. 12 Blatchf. 24, 29, Fed. Cas. No. 1,639.

Alabama.—Thompson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 91 Ala. 496, 499, 11 L.R.A. 147, 8 So. 406.

California.—Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 166, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291, 25 Pac. 1114.

Colorado.—Blythe v. Denver & Rio Grande Ry. Co. 15 Colo. 333, 336, 11 L.R.A. 617, 22 Am. St. Rep. 403, 25 Pac. 702; Denver, Texas & Gulf Ry. Co. v. Robbins, 2 Colo. App. 313, 318, 30 Pac. 261.

Connecticut.—Boon v. Aetna Ins. Co. 40 Conn. 575, 580.

Dakota.—Pielke v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. Co. 5 Dak. 444, 41 N. W. 669.

District of Columbia.—Dashiell v. Washington Market Co. 10 App. D. C. 94.

Illinois.—Wolff Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 152 Ill. 9, 14, 26 L.R.A. 229, 231, 38 N. E. 694; Heuer v. North Western National Ins. Co. 144 Ill. 393, 400, 19 L.R.A. 594n, 598, 33 N. E. 411; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 260, 18 L.R.A. 215, 220, 32 N. E. 285; Schmidt v. Mitchell, 84 Ill. 195, 200, 25 Am. Rep. 446; Fent v. Toledo P. & W. Ry. Co. 59 Ill. 349, 353, 14 Am. Rep. 13; Peoria v. Adams, 72 Ill. App. 673; Heuer v. West Chester Fire Ins. Co. 44 Ill. App. 429, 437; Miller v. London & Liverpool Fire Ins. Co. 41 Ill. App. 395, 397.

Indiana.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Congdon, 134 Ind. 226, 231, 39 Am. St. Rep. 251, 33 N. E. 795; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Nitsche, 126 Ind. 229, 237, 9 L.R.A. 750, 753, 22 St. Rep. 582, 26 N. E. 51.

Iowa.—Walrod v. Webster County, 110 Iowa, 349, 352, 47 L.R.A. 480, 482, 81 N. W. 598; McKenna v. Baessler, 86 Iowa, 197, 200, 17 L.R.A. 310, 311, 53 N. W. 103; Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. 55 Iowa, 593, 8 N. W. 437.

Kentucky.—Shields v. Louisville & N. R. R. Co. 97 Ky. 103, 110, 27 L.R.A. 680, 683, 29 S. W. 978.

Louisiana.—Tanneret v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 253.

Maine.—Perry v. Cobb, 88 Me. 435, 447, 49 L.R.A. 389n, 397, 34 Atl. 278.

Maryland. — Annapolis & Elk Ridge Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 143.

Massachusetts.—Stone v. Boston & Albany R. Co. 171 Mass. 536, 540, 41 L.R.A. 794, 797, 51 N. E. 1; Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 576, 20 L.R.A. 297, 304, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540, 33 N. E. 690; Freeman v. Mercantile Mutual Accident Assoc. 156 Mass. 351, 354, 17 L.R.A. 753, 755, 30 N. E. 1013; Tuttle v. Travelers Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 176, 45 Am. Rep. 316; Dows v. Merchants Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 346, 347, 34 Am. Rep. 384.

Michigan.—Selleck v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 93 Mich. 375, 379, 18 L.R.A. 154n, 157, 53 N. W. 556; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 63, 52 Am. Rep. 790, 19 N. W. 744.

Missouri. — Haley v. St. Louis Transit Co. 179 Mo. 30, 35, 64 L.R.A. 295, 297, 27 S. W. 731; State (ex rel. Kearney) v. Finn, 87 Mo. 316; Logan v. Wabash R. Co. 96 Mo. App. 466, 70 S. W. 734.

New Jersey.—Hammill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. L. 370, 378, 24 L.R.A. 531, 535, 29 Atl. 151; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R. Co.

not seem consistent with the intention of the parties. The insured is entitled to the benefit of all doubts in case of restrictions in the policy. The question seems pertinent whether such a case is not within the rule requiring a strict construction against the insurer, and whether the construction given is not opposed to the doctrine contra proferentum. To hold that the insurer is exempt from liability in cases of this character would operate in a great measure to defeat the very object of insurance. It would seem, however, from the numerous citations of that case that the rule declared therein is fully supported, even though in a later decision in the same court it is said of that case by Mr. Justice Miller, who also delivered the opinion therein, that "It went to the verge of sound doctrine in holding the explosion to be the proximate cause of the loss of the Alabama warehouse; but it rested on the ground that no other proximate cause was found."[16] Again, liability for loss resulting from destruction by fire of a building insured by a policy exempting the insurer from liability for loss caused by explosions of any kind (unless fire ensues, and in that event for the damage by fire only) and providing that if the building or any part thereof falls, except as the result of fire, the insurance shall immediately cease, will attach under the former clause, and not be defeated by the latter, where one corner of the building is knocked down by

v. Salmon, 39 N. J. L. 299, 308, 23 Am. Rep. 214.

New York.—Glazier v. Hebron, 16 N. Y. Supp. 503, 62 Hun, 141; Sauter v. New York Central & Hudson River R. Co. 6 Hun, 450; Trapp v. McClellan, 74 N. Y. Supp. 130, 68 App. Div. 366.

Oregon.—Ahern v. Oregon Telegraph & Telephone Co. 24 Oreg. 276, 292, 22 L.R.A. 635, 640, 33 Pac. 403.

Pennsylvania.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 353, 368, 1 Am. Rep. 431; Swanson v. Crandall, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 89.

Rhode Island.—Prue v. New York P. & B. R. Co. 18 R. I. 360, 368, 27 Atl. 450.

Tennessee.—Chattanooga Light & Power Co. v. Hodges, 109 Tenn. 331, 337, 60 L.R.A. 459, 460, 97 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 S. W. 616.

Texas.—Seale v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 65 Tex. 274, 278, 57 Am. Rep. 602; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Beckworth, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 153, 155, 32 S. W. 347.

Virginia.—Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. 613, 618.

West Virginia.—Snyder v. Philadelphia Co. 54 W. Va. 149, 158, 63 L.R.A. 896, 900, 102 Am. St. Rep. 941, 46 S. E. 366; Smith v. County Court, 33 W. Va. 713, 724, 8 L.R.A. 82n, 88, 11 S. E. 1; Pegram v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220, 234, 6 S. E. 485; Washington v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 17 W. Va. 197.

Wisconsin.—Atkinson v. Goodrich Transportation Co. 60 Wis. 141, 157, 50 Am. Rep. 352, 18 N. W. 764; Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 223, 284, 7 Am. Rep. 69.

Distinguished in: Northwest Transportation Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 41 Fed. 793, 804; Washburn v. Miami Valley Ins. Co. 2 Flipp. 664, 669, 2 Fed. 633, 637; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitlock, 99 Ind. 16, 27, 50 Am. Rep. 71.

[16] Scheffer v. Railroad Co. 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. ed. 1070. See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

an explosion in a neighboring building, and fire immediately appears in the exposed part, caused either by the flame of the explosion, or by fires liberated thereby in the building insured.[17]

§ 2588. "Loss by explosion of any kind:" insurer's liability under such clause where fire ensues:[17a] New York rule.—The question has not infrequently arisen as to the construction of the clause "loss by explosion of any kind" immediately following the provision exempting insurers from liability "for any loss or damage by fire caused by means of an invasion," etc. In many cases it is contended by the insurers, and the claim has been sustained by the courts, that the words "by fire" were to be understood as if used after the word "loss," so as to read "loss by fire or by explosion of any kind." We will note briefly the decisions upon this point. The case of Hayward v. Liverpool & London Fire & Life Insurance Company[18] has been often referred to as sustaining this claim, but the words of the condition in that policy expressly excluded liability for subsequent fire, and the case cannot be properly cited as sustaining such a view. The policy there provided that the insurer should not be liable for any loss or damage "by fire which shall happen or arise from any foreign invasion . . . or by any explosion." In another case, however, in New York[19] this precise question arose. The policy provided that the insurers would not be liable "for any loss or damage by fire, . . . nor for any loss occasioned by the explosion of a steam-boiler, or explosions arising from any other cause, unless specially specified in the policy." A boiler upon the premises exploded, and the explosion was the immediate cause of a fire which damaged the insured property. The insurers claimed that the latter part of the clause as to loss by explosion was intended to include therein loss by fire the result of explosion. The court in this case held, in substance, that as the policy covered loss by fire only, the exception would be meaningless unless it referred to loss by fire, since the insurer was not liable for loss which was merely the result of an explosion, even in the absence of any provision in the policy; that the provision referred "prima facie to such a loss as by the prior provisions of the contract the defendants would be bound to indemnify against," and not to one which

[17] Leonard v. Orient Ins. Co. 109 Fed. 286, 48 C. C. A. 369, 54 L.R.A. 706.

[17a] On explosion clause in fire insurance policy, see note in 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 607; on loss by explosion, generally, see notes in 19 L.R.A. 594, and 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474.

[18] 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 456, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 349, 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 142, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 385, overruling s. c. 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 116. See §§ 2593, 2768 et seq. herein.

[19] St. John v. American Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 516 (opinions were filed by six judges in this case).

would not be embraced in the general terms of the policy, and as to which there was no occasion to introduce an exception.[20]

§ 2589. Same subject: rule in Ohio.—In Ohio,[1] the same question has arisen concerning a policy containing a provision of this nature, but worded differently, although the same question arose as to the construction. The provision was as follows: "This company is not liable for loss or damage by lightning or tornado unless specially mentioned and insured against, but will be responsible for loss or damage to property consumed by fire occasioned by lightning. Nor will this company be responsible for any loss or damage to property consumed by fire happening by reason of or occasioned by any invasion, . . . nor to any loss or damage occasioned by or resulting from any explosion whatever." The ground of the decision was much the same as that in the New York case above.[2] The court said: "The foundation point, however, in construing this condition is found in the general undertaking of the policy. It will be observed that the underwriter undertakes to insure against loss and damage by fire only, but nevertheless against loss and damage by fire generally, and the maxim 'causa proxima non remota spectatur' applies. Now, we think, without doubting, that the purpose of inserting this condition was to relax the rigor of this maxim, and exempt from the general risk of the policy certain losses which would otherwise fall within its scope and meaning." The court then considers the different clauses in the exception, and says: "Unless there is something in the subject matter of this clause that indicates that the words 'by fire' were omitted for the purpose of showing a design to adhere to and continue the general risk in case an explosion should result in a fire, we think that they or their equivalent should be supplied by implication or construction. Is such purpose indicated by any fair use of the terms employed? That a loss other than by combustion resulting from explosion, when the explosion itself is caused by a destructive fire already in progress, comes within the general risk of a policy against fire only is a doctrine not only reasonable in itself, but is sustained by authority.[3] And it is quite clear that a loss by fire which is occasioned by an explosion is within the like risk.

[20] As to other New York cases, see § 2593 herein.

[1] United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio, 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735. See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[2] St. John v. American Mutual Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 516. See German Fire Ins. Co. v. Roosi, 55 Ohio St. 581, 36 L.R.A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, 45 N. E. 1097, considered under § 2583b herein.

[3] Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 225, 9 L. ed. 691; Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 357, 57 Am. Rep. 111; Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550.

These terms are certainly comprehensive enough to include both descriptions of loss, whether by explosive force or loss superinduced by combustion. . . . We can find no good reason for doubting that loss and damage by fire resulting from an explosion was intended to be exempted by this condition from the general risk of the policy, and are of opinion, therefore, that this clause, properly construed, should read, 'nor any loss or damage by fire occasioned by or resulting from any explosion whatever.' " There is a later case [4] in this state which, though the court in its decision attempts to distinguish it from the case we have just cited, does not seem entirely in harmony with that decision. The policy in this case provided that the insurers should not be liable for damage to property by lightning aside from fire, nor for damages occasioned by the explosion of a steam-boiler, nor for damages by fire resulting from such explosion nor explosions caused by gunpowder, gas, or other explosive substances. A fire was caused by an emission of gas from oil which was being distilled. The fire extended to other parts of the works and there ignited gas and oil, which exploded, and was scattered over the premises, destroying the works. It was held that the insurers were exempt from loss caused directly by the explosive force of the gas, but were not exempt from losses occurring by fire which was a consequence of the explosion. It will be seen that the courts attempt to distinguish this case [5] from that of United Life, Fire, and Marine Insurance Company v. Foote.[6] But it would seem that exactly the same reasoning by which the court reached its conclusion in the first consideration of the question would have controlled in the second, or vice versa. The cases are certainly so clearly controlled by the same principles that different conclusions should not be reached. The general undertaking is of a loss by fire only, and that the provisions are meaningless unless construed as extending to losses by fire would equally apply in the later case. The conditions are practically the same, and if this rule is applicable in the one case it is in the other. If the provision was meaningless in the former case it certainly is in the latter. The two cases cannot be reconciled, though there is an attempt made by the court to distinguish them, and the doctrines stated in the later case must, we think, be considered as being contrary to that laid down in the much-quoted case of the United Life, Fire & Marine Insurance Company v. Foote.[7]

[4] Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Parker, 23 Ohio St. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 228.

[5] Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Parker, 23 Ohio St. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 228.

[6] 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735.

[7] 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735.

§ 2590. Same subject: rule in Illinois.—A rule has been laid down in Illinois which is directly contrary to that stated in at least the earlier New York cases,[8] and which is also contrary to that stated in the supreme court of the United States.[9] The policy in this case provided that the company should not be held liable "for any loss caused by the explosion of gunpowder, camphene, or any explosive substance or explosion of any kind." It was held that the company was not exempted by such clause from liability from losses by fire caused by explosion, but simply from liability for losses occasioned by the explosion itself.[10] In this case the insurers claimed the provision as to explosions would be inoperative unless it was held as referring to loss by fire consequent upon an explosion, since the company was not in any case liable for loss the result of explosion. The company claimed that the words "by fire" used in the first part of the clause above mentioned were implied in the clause excluding loss by explosion. The court, however, held that a reasonable construction of the clause would be to include therein only loss directly due to explosion, and not loss by fire which ensues as a result of an explosion; that the former construction was consistent with the words of the clause as a reasonable construction and just to both parties, while to give the latter construction would be to insert two words which were not in the clause, which were inconsistent with the terms of the policy, and which would be unjust to the insurer.[11]

§ 2591. Same subject: rule in Pennsylvania.—In a case which arose in Pennsylvania[12] a conclusion similar to that reached in Illinois[13] was arrived at, and the Illinois case was also cited and approved.

[8] See § 2588 herein. See also §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[9] Louisiana Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 44, 19 L. ed. 65.

[10] Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 557, considered in Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 132 Ky. 7, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 277, 136 Am. St. Rep. 164, 116 S. W. 234, 38 Ins. L. J. 446, 458, also in Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103, 38 Ins. L. J. 56, but declared, however, "to be wholly unsound and unmaintainable," in Luckett-Wake Tobacco Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 171 Fed. 147, 38 Ins. L. J. 1067, at least so, in so far as opposed to that decision.

[11] The opinion in this case contains a discussion of several decisions upon this point. See Heuer v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 44 Ill. App. 429, aff'd 151 Ill. 531, 37 N. E. 873.

[12] Heffron v. Kittanning Ins. Co. 132 Pa. St. 460, 20 Atl. 698. See Stevenson & Foster Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. (Pa.) 33 Pitts. Leg. J. 253. See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[13] Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 557. (See note to this case under § 2590 herein).

§ 2592. Same subject: conclusion.—It will be seen from the cases cited in the foregoing sections that there is much conflict and uncertainty as to the construction of such a condition. New York has held in early cases [14] that it means loss or damage by fire, since the clause excepting loss by explosion is meaningless unless so construed, and in the Hustace case,[15] as we have stated, recovery was precluded because explosion in a nearby building and not fire was the cause of the fall of the insured building and consequent loss and insured did not claim to recover for the burning of the debris, and in addition the excepting clause was different.

The cases in Ohio are not in harmony, and later cases certainly favor a contrary view.[16] In Illinois [17] and Pennsylvania.[18] also, the courts have decided directly contrary to the cases in New York. There are certainly strong arguments leading to the conclusions upon each side of the case. Little can be added by us to these arguments as presented in the opinions. It seems from a careful examination of all the decisions that the rule of the Illinois court [19] is most reasonable. It certainly is more in line with ordinary rules governing the construction of contracts of insurance and exceptions therein; it is more consistent with justice, and more in accord with the apparent intention of the parties. These provisions are inserted by the assurer, and in case of doubt they should be construed strictly against him, nor should they be extended by implication so as to embrace cases which are not clearly within the exception. The insurer should not be permitted to insert clauses with equivocal meanings calculated to lead the insured to reasonably understand one thing and then rely upon the courts to give by implication an entirely different construction. The insured has a right to rely upon the contract as made, and can reasonably be justified in assuming that in omitting the words "by fire" the insurer was content to leave it to the courts to determine the proximate cause of the loss, and to grant such remedy as the contract calls for under a fair and reasonable construction, having in view the general rule which obtains in construing exceptions with reference to the words used to express the parties' intentions, for it is clearly within the power of those contracting to expressly provide in clear and unequivocal terms exactly what is intended.

[14] See § 2588 herein. See also §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[15] Hustace v. Phenix Ins. Co. 175 N. Y. 292, 62 L.R.A. 651, 67 N. E. 592, 32 Ins. L. J. 688, considered under § 2593 herein.

[16] See § 2589 herein.

[17] See § 2590 herein.

[18] See § 2591 herein.

[19] See § 2590 herein.

§ 2593. No liability for explosion "unless fire ensues." —Another provision as to explosion is that the insurer shall not be liable for any loss or damage "caused by explosion unless fire ensues," and then for loss or damage by the fire only. In an action on a policy which contained such a provision,[20] it appeared that an explosion occurred as a result of certain vapor coming in contact with a lighted lamp. The explosion shattered the walls of the building, and a fire immediately ensued. It was held that an instruction to the jury that the insured was entitled to recover the entire amount of their loss, whether the loss was due to the fire or to the violence of the explosion, was erroneous, as the defendant was not liable for the loss which arose from the force or violence of the explosion. They were liable for the loss by fire, however.[1] Where a fire insurance on sulphuric acid exempted the insurer from liability for loss by explosion unless fire ensued, and the building in question was blown down by a storm, and the chamber containing the acid was broken and the acid lost, and the plaintiff claimed that the storm blew fire in contact with escaping gases and air and created an explosion, which caused the loss, it was held that in either case there was no liability under the policy.[2] The insurers are liable upon a policy which contains a condition of this nature where fire originates in the insured premises, and the fire subsequently produces an explosion which destroys the property; the entire loss in such a case is held to be a loss by fire.[3] So an explosion which occurs in an insured building during the progress of a fire therein, is regarded as a mere incident of the preceding fire, and the whole loss is within the risk assumed, although the policy excluded liability for loss by explosion.[4] Under another decision in New York

[20] Briggs v. North British Mercantile Ins. Co. 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 325. The provision in this case was, that the insurer shall not be liable "for a loss by lightning of any kind unless fire ensues, and then for a loss by damage by fire only." See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[1] Briggs v. North British Mercantile Ins. Co. 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 325, aff'd Briggs v. North American & Mercantile Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446, 447.

[2] Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70, 40 Am. Rep. 403. The condition in this policy read that insurer should not be liable "for any loss caused by the explosion of gunpowder or any explosive substance . . . or explosion of any kind unless fire ensues, and then for the loss or damage for fire only."

[3] Washburn v. Farmer's Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 304. The condition in this case provided that the insurer should not be liable for loss "covered by the explosion of gunpowder or any explosive substance or explosion of any kind unless fire ensues, and then for the loss or damage by fire only." See also Washburn v. Miami Valley Ins. Co. 2 Flip. (U. S. C. C.) 664, 2 Fed. 633; Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St. Rep. 870, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. 507, 510.

[4] Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St.

it appeared that there was a fire in a nearby building which was immediately followed by an explosion and the effect of concussion was that the insured building fell and became a total loss. Prior to such fall there was no fire in the insured building and no damage had been caused by the fire, but after the fall the debris was consumed by the fire in the adjacent building where it had originated as above stated. The insured did not claim to recover for the burning but only for the damages consequent upon the explosion based upon the claim that the falling of the building was due to the fire. It was held that there could be no recovery because the explosion and not the fire was the cause of the fall. In other words, that the fall of a building because of an explosion in a burning building in the vicinity is not within the protection of a policy insuring against direct loss or damage by fire, where the policy also provides that the insurer shall not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by explosion of any kind. The court, per Parker, C. J., said: "There are authorities that both in reasoning and decision tend otherwise, but attention is not called to them in detail because the position of this court as to that question is settled. Our object in calling attention to a few of the authorities in other states has been to show that this court is not alone in the position taken. Counsel for plaintiffs insists that the wreck of plaintiff's building by the explosion in the Tarrant Building was direct loss or damage by fire within the meaning of the policy, and that the situation calls for precisely the same disposition as if the question was presented in an action upon a policy covering the Tarrant Building, where the fire had been raging for something like thirty minutes before the explosion. He quotes from opinion of the court in Heffron v. Kittanning Ins. Co.:[5] 'Nor are losses by explosion foreign to the risks assumed by insurance against fire. They are like damages by smoke and water, losses by theft, destruction by the fall of a building, or injury by fire agencies without actual ignition, all of which are to be found among the losses excepted against in clauses of policies of insurance.' This he follows with instances and authorities supporting them as where goods are injured by water thrown to extinguish a fire; where goods are lost or damaged in the course of an effort to remove them in order to save them from fire raging in the building adjoining; where an insured building is blown up under direction of public authorities to prevent the spread of a conflagration (supported by early authorities in this state); and where the insurers were held liable for theft of insured property during fire. While it is true that in the cases cited as holding these several propositions, cases which cover a variety of jurisdictions, the insured was held liable as for a loss by fire, the decision usually was placed on the ground that the fire was the proximate cause of the loss. In this way very substantial additions were made by the courts to the liability expressly covered by the contract of insurance and hence the exemption clauses became features in some contracts of insurance before the standard policy was adopted in this state, and when it was created such a clause was incorporated into it. The fact that the courts, prior to the insertion of the explosion exemption clause, held that under the policy the insurer was liable as for a loss by fire does not make it a loss by fire direct, if it is in reality a loss by explosion. Where a policy contains a provision that there shall be no liability for explosion of any kind as well as a provision for liability for direct loss by fire, each provision must be given full force and effect unrestrained by decisions made before the explosion exemption clause became a feature of the contract. So while it may be that but for the explosion clause we should feel constrained to follow those earlier decisions to which reference was made generally in the Briggs Case,[6] and hold defendant liable because a fire in another building was the cause of the explosion, we are not permitted to do that in view of the exemption clause relieving defendant from liability from explosions of any kind; and so we held in the Briggs Case charging the insurance company with the loss by fire which in that case followed the explosion and compelling plaintiff to bear the loss caused by the explosion." [7]

Rep. 870, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. 507.

[5] 132 Pa. 580, 586, 20 Atl. 698.

This last considered case was urged by insurer as supporting its view under a decision before the Tennessee court, but in that case the court, per Neil, J., declared that while the deductions made by counsel was a very plausible one still "the cases which we have cited go upon the theory that, in order to satisfy the terms of a policy insuring against direct loss by fire, the latter must always be regarded as the efficient cause where its effects are produced in direct sequence, though one of the incidents of that sequence may be explosion and that it could not have been intended to nullify such predominant cause. There is room for the exception in favor of losses produced by explosion notwithstanding this construction, in view of the fact that explosions are frequently produced by flame, as by a lighted match, a gas jet, a lighted lamp, fire from a furnace, and the like." And it was decided in that case that the weight of authority is to the effect that where the fire occurs in the property insured and an explosion takes place therein during the progress of the fire, the effects of which are covered by the policy, and such explosion is a mere incident of the preceding fire, the latter is treated as the efficient cause, and the whole loss is within the risk insured although the policy in terms excludes liability for loss by explosion. It was also decided that if, while a building is burning, an explosion occurs therein which injures neighboring property without igniting it, a fire policy on the latter property which excludes liability for loss by explosion does not cover such injuries.[8] Again, in a comparatively recent New York case the insurance was against all direct loss or damage by fire "except as hereinafter provided" a subsequent clause stipulated that: "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion . . . or (unless fire ensues, and in that event for the damage by fire only) by explosion of any kind" and it was held that a fire which precedes and causes the explosion is not embraced within the exception from the provision which insures against all direct loss or damage by fire and that the words "by explosion of any kind" were not intended to refer to the agency which produced the explosion but referred to the different kinds of material that explode. The court, per Haight, J., said: "Webster defines 'ensues' as meaning 'to follow or come afterwards; to follow as a consequence or in chronological succession; to result.' The provision, therefore, embraced in the exception 'unless fire ensues' should be read as meaning 'unless fire follows or comes after or as a consequence of the explosion.' This being the meaning of the provision, it is apparent that a fire, which precedes and causes the explosion, is not embraced in the exception contained in the policy from the provision which insures against all direct loss or damage by fire. Nor do we think that the words 'by explosion of any kind' were intended to refer to the agency which produced the explosion, but have reference to the different kinds of material that explode, such as powder, dynamite, gas, dust, etc. Had the Legislature, in adopting the standard form of policy, intended to have included explosions caused by fire with explosions from which fire ensues among the losses excepted from the provisions of the policy, it doubtless would have done so in express terms. That such was not its intention we think is clearly evident from the fact that they were careful to limit the exception to those explosions from which a fire ensues. This form of fire insurance policy and the construction which we have given to it is not new. It has frequently been considered by the courts and text-writers upon the subject, who have quite uniformly reached the conclusion that when a negligent or hostile fire exists within the insured premises, and an explosion results therefrom under such circumstances as to constitute the fire the proximate cause of the loss and the explosion merely incidental, the company becomes liable upon its policy for the loss resulting therefrom."[9] Under a Colorado decision where loss by explosion was excepted a distinction is made between a case where the explosion precedes and where it follows the fire the insurer being liable in the former case only for loss by fire not caused thereby, while in the latter case the entire loss is recoverable if the explosion is an incident of and caused the fire.[10] If the policy stipulates for insurance against all such immediate loss or damage as may occur by fire and also excludes liability for loss caused by explosions of any kind unless fire ensues and then for the loss or damage by fire only, and gasolene was kept on the premises and the lighting of a match caused an explosion of gasolene vapor, but no fire ensued, although the building fell, it was held that a loss occurring solely from an explosion not resulting from a preceding fire was covered by the exception; that an explosion which occurred from the contact of escaping vapor with a lighted match held by an employee of assured was likewise within said exception and also that a match, lighted and held by an employee of assured, coming in contact with the vapor and causing an explosion was not "fire" within the meaning of the policy.[11]

[6] Briggs v. The North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446, aff'g 66 Barb. 325.

[7] Hustace v. Phenix Ins. Co. 175 N. Y. 292, 62 L.R.A. 651, 67 N. E. 592, 32 Ins. L. J. 688. The clause in this case was: "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly . . . by explosion of any kind." "Unless fire ensues, and in that event for damage by fire only."

[8] Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Rep. 870, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St. 507.

[9] Wheeler v. Phenix Ins. Co. 203 N. Y. 283, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474n, (annotated on liability of insurer for loss caused by explosion), 96 N. E. 452, 41 Ins. L. J. 247, 250. The court also said: "We do not regard the case of Briggs v. North American & Mercantile Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 440, or the case of Hustace v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 175 N. Y. 292, 62 L.R.A. 651, 67 N. E. 592, as in conflict with the views hereinabove expressed." See § 2772 herein.

[10] German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 42 Colo. 156, 94 Pac. 27, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 77. See Stevenson & Foster v. American Fire Ins. Co. (Pa.) 33 Pittsb. Leg. Int. 253.

[11] Mitchell v. Potomac Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 42, 46 L. ed. 74, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 Ins. L. J. 570.

See also as to the last point in the text:

Colorado.—German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 42 Colo. 156, 94 Pac. 27, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 77, 37 Ins. L. J. 251, 260; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Bergheim, 21 Colo. App. 527, 122 Pac. 812, 41 Ins. L. J. 1107, 1109.—Walling, J.

Illinois. — Heuer v. Northwestern

§ 2594. Construction of other provisions as to explosion.—Another provision excepting the insurers from liability which has come before the courts for construction is, that in case the insured property "be damaged by the bursting of a boiler, or by explosion from any cause, this policy shall be void the instant the casualty by explosion occurs." In an action on a policy containing this provision it was held [12] that the clause was unambiguous, was binding upon the insured, and that the policy ceased to be of any force the instant the explosion occurred. Where a policy provided that the insurer would not be liable for any loss "occasioned by explosions of any kind, by means of invasion," etc., it was held that this did not mean that the policy limited the loss to explosions occasioned by invasion.[13]

§ 2595. Conclusion as to excepted liability in case of explosion.—From a consideration of the cases in the preceding sections upon the question of insurers' liability where loss by explosion is excepted, it will be seen that the decisions are not at all in harmony. There is one class of decisions to the effect that if the insurers except loss by explosion, it means loss by fire the result of explosion, as otherwise the condition is meaningless. We find another class where it is held that the exception does not include loss by fire which ensues immediately after an explosion, but only includes all cases of loss by explosion alone. We then find a case in the United States supreme court which holds that the insurers are exempt even though the explosion occurs upon other premises and communicates by other buildings to the insured property, unless some new and distinct cause intervenes. These decisions certainly cannot be reconciled. We have seen that the insurers are exempt from loss the immediate result of the concussion, though the explosion occurs upon other premises, and there does not seem to be any case which disputes this. If this point is not disputed, then are not the words of the Illinois court pertinent in this connection? They are as follows: [14] "We must either hold

National Ins. Co. 144 Ill. 393, 19 L.R.A. 954, 33 N. E. 411.

Iowa.—Vorse v. Jersey Plate Glass Ins. Co. 119 Iowa, 555, 60 L.R.A. 838, 97 Am. St. Rep. 330, 93 N. W. 569, 32 Ins. L. J. 359.

Missouri.—Stephens v. Fire Assoc. of Phila. 139 Mo. App. 369, 123 S. W. 63.

New Jersey.—Ross v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 83 N. J. L. 340, 84 Atl. 1050, 42 Ins. L. J. 99. See § 2779 herein.

[12] Waldeck v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 129, 10 N. W. 88, s. c. 56 Wis. 96, 14 N. W. 1. See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

[13] Smiley v. Citizens' Fire, Marine & Life Ins. Co. 14 W. Va. 33.

[14] Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 557. (See note to this case under § 2570 herein). See §§ 2768 et seq. herein.

that this clause refers to loss by explosions simply without reference to fire, or to losses by fire occasioned by explosions anywhere, whether on or remote from the premises; there is no middle term, and it must receive one of these constructions or the other." And is this not true? Certainly, the case of Mutual Insurance Company v. Tweed,[15] already considered, is in line with this view. If we admit this latter doctrine, can it be reasonably said to be a construction in accord with the intentions of the parties? Do not the insurers intend exactly what they say when they exclude loss by explosion? Do they intend to exclude subsequent losses by fire occurring as an immediate and direct result of such explosion? These questions and others have arisen in the discussion of the subject, and for a fuller consideration of them we can only refer to the opinions in the cases which we have cited, where will be found several learned discussions of the principles involved. The decisions certainly cannot be reconciled as they at present stand, and the question is indeed an open one presenting a wide field for argument.

§ 2595a. Liability excepted where fires built within specified limits: estoppel.—Where a policy issued by a corporation formed under an act to provide for the formation of county co-operative insurance companies[16] exempts the association from liability "for any loss resulting from any open fire, built by the insured with his knowledge or consent, within fifty feet from any insured building," and the insured buildings were destroyed by fire caused by a spark from a bonfire at a distance less than that as above stipulated, said fire being ignited by insured to burn up rubbish, the insurer is not estopped to claim a forfeiture by the acts of the association's board of directors who went to the place of fire in order to adjust the loss, in accordance with the by-laws, and upon ascertaining the facts stated that they could not adjust the loss but that they would make out proofs which could be presented to the board and they directed the preparation thereof and assured incurred expense in preparing said proofs and in traveling and attending the meeting of the board of which he was notified; said acts in advising proofs and referring assured to said board being the course prescribed by the by-laws.[17]

[15] 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 44, 19 L. ed. 65.

[16] Laws N. Y. 1880, p. 540, c. 362.

[17] Draper v. Oswego County Fire Relief Assoc. 190 N. Y. 12, 82 N. E. 755, 37 Ins. L. J. 221, citing Knights & Ladies of Columbia Ins. Order v. Shoaf, 166 Ind. 367, 77 N. E. 738; McCoy v. Northwestern Mutual Relief Assoc. 92 Wis. 577, 47 L.R.A. 68, 66 N. W. 697, although the court said: "We are not disposed to go to the length" of the Wisconsin case.

§ 2596. Loss by theft excepted.—A condition in an insurance policy that the company will not be liable "for any loss or damage to goods contained in a show-window when the loss or damage is caused by the light in the window, nor shall the company be liable for loss by theft," applies to theft from the show-windows, and not to theft committed in the necessary removal of goods to save them from impending conflagration.[18] But where a policy provided that the insurers should "not be liable to make good any loss by theft, or any loss or damage by fire" occasioned by riots, etc., it was held that the exception of liability for theft was not confined to fires so occasioned, but extended to losses by theft at any fire.[19]

§ 2596a. Exception of liability: duty of assured to preserve or save property.—If the policy requires insured to use all possible diligence to preserve property exposed to danger from fire and exempts insurer from liability for loss arising from failure or neglect to comply with such requirement the circumstances of the case, such as the imminence of the peril, etc., must determine the necessity for removal. We, have, however, fully considered this question elsewhere herein.[20]

§ 2597. Exception of liability for "fire caused by hurricane."—It is held under a policy of this character that a loss resulting from the falling of a building during a high wind and a fire subsequently occurring is not covered by the policy.[1] In this case the action was brought on two policies, each of which contained these provisions; "1. This company shall not be liable for any loss or damage by fire caused by means of a hurricane; 2. If the building shall fall except as the result of a fire, an insurance by this company on it or its contents shall at once cease and determine." The fire occurred during a severe hurricane, and evidence tended to show that its origin was by the breaking of a lamp by falling timbers, the house being partially blown down. Stayton, C. J., said: "The petition should have averred that the fire did not occur from one of the excepted causes. This was necessary to show a cause of action, for the company did not insure against loss by fire caused by a hurricane, nor were the policies binding at all for a loss by a fire occurring after the fall of the house, unless the fall was caused by fire, for the parties had contracted that in [18] Lieber v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 639, 99 Am. Dec. 695. See § 2821 herein.

[19] Webb & Co. v. Protection & Aetna Ins. Co. 14 Mo. 3.

On liability for loss by theft during fire, see note in 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 892.

[20] See §§ 2812 et seq. herein.

[1] Pelican Fire Ins. Co. v. Troy Co-operative Assoc. 77 Tex. 225, 13 S. W. 980.

that event the contract of insurance should no longer be operative." [2]

§ 2598. Exception of liability for fire resulting from use of steam-engine.—In a Maryland case the provision was, "this company will not become responsible for any loss or damage by fire . . . resulting from the use of any steam-engine temporarily employed for the purpose of threshing out crops of any kind." There was also a condition stipulating that, in case of an engine being stationed on the premises in close proximity to the buildings insured, the company should appoint a committee to examine forthwith and ascertain the amount of increased risk, and if increase of risk was found, an additional premium note should be given for the increase. Notice was given the general agent of the company of the use of an engine for grinding bark. No committee was, however, appointed, nor any note given, and it was held that if the use of the engine increased the risk, and as no additional note was given the right to recover would not be defeated unless the loss occurred from that increase.[3]

§ 2598a. Excepted liability: fires from locomotives.—Notwithstanding an exception of liability from fires occasioned by locomotives a recovery may nevertheless be had where a building is destroyed by fire communicated from a building on the railroad right of way which was ignited from sparks from the locomotive where by the rule of construction against insurer the exception of liability is intended to apply only to fires directly caused by such sparks.[4]

§ 2599. Credit insurance: insolvency of debtors: exception of liability: discontinuance of business: death of partner.[5]—If a credit indemnity policy stipulates for nonliability on the bond in the event of failure of or discontinuance of business by the indemnified, the death of a member of a creditor firm long after goods have been sold and delivered does not operate on the date of said death as such discontinuance of business is within the exclusion; nor does it release the obligor company from its liability to make

[2] See § 2825 herein.

[3] Schaeffer v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 80 Md. 563, 31 Atl. Rep. 317. See Siemers v. Meeme Mutual Protection Ins. Co. 143 Wis. 114, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1083, 126 N. W. 669; Thurston v. Burnett & Beaver Dam Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 98 Wis. 476, 41 L.R.A. 316, 74 N. W. 131, 27 Ins. L. J. 602.

[4] Montgomery v. Southern Mutual Ins. Co. 242 Pa. 86, 88 Atl. 924, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 518 (annotated on scope and effect of clause in fire insurance policy exempting insurer from liability for loss by fire from or occasioned by locomotive engines). As to rights of parties where fire is so occasioned, see Farmers Alliance Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Vallie, 35 Colo. 78, 83 Pac. 964.

[5] See §§ 2786–7 herein.

good a loss arising from the subsequent insolvency of the debtor during the continuance of the bond. The term "discontinuance by the indemnified" has relation to the act of the indemnified, either voluntary or an act consequential thereon.[6] In the case holding as above, the court, per McSherry, J., says: "The object of this peculiar kind of indemnity is to guarantee vendors against loss by reason of the insolvency of their debtors; and if the debt has been contracted during the continuance of the bond of indemnity and while the firm or the individual protected by the bond is actually engaged in business, though the loss happens after the death of one member of the creditor firm or after the death of the individual creditor when there is no firm, the contingency contracted against—the insolvency of the debtor—is precisely the same as though the death of the creditor had not occurred at all. If, in the case of an individual creditor who is indemnified by such a bond, and who, after selling his goods, dies, it be held that the bond is made void because of his death, there would be superadded, by construction, a provision of avoidance, beyond the two designated in the eighth clause. The failure of the person indemnified, and his discontinuance of business are specified. His death is not. In addition, then, to the requirements that he should not fail and should not discontinue business, the obligation of the bond would be made subject to the further condition that the creditor survive the period of time covered by the contract of indemnity. And thus, by pure implication, there would be written into the eighth condition heretofore quoted a contingency not therein expressed or even necessarily implied. And in the case of a firm precisely the same condition would exist. Undoubtedly, the death of a member of a firm does, by operation of law, dissolve the partnership, but such a dissolution of the firm can in no sense be said to be a discontinuance of business by the indemnified. The surviving partners wind up the concern. The dissolution is by operation of law and not by the act of the parties, and the discontinuance of business on the part of the firm is not a discontinuance by the firm, but by operation of the law and in consequence of an act of God. Obviously, the term 'discontinuance by the indemnified' has relation to the act of the indemnified (either his voluntary act or the consequence of his voluntary act) precisely as the other condition (the failure of the creditor) relates to a situation arising from his own acts or conduct. Had the design been to constitute the death of the creditor a ground for avoiding the bond, the addition of the words 'and the death of the indemnified' or words of like import would have placed the matter beyond dispute; and every individual purchasing such a bond would then have been advised in plain terms that the contingencies which he encountered and was obliged to avoid so as to enable him to recover on a bond were not only his own failure in or discontinuance of business but his death during the period covered by the indemnity. The construction contended for by the appellant places death (an act of God) in the same category as discontinuance of business by the indemnified (an act of the individual). It does not discriminate between what is the act of the party himself, on the one hand, and the consequence resulting from his death which, on the other hand, is not his own act, but makes the one the equivalent of the other in so far as respects the continuance of the validity of the bond. And it does this, too, by ascribing to the words of the bond a meaning which at best is both strained and unnatural. In resisting the enforcement of an obligation of this character upon the ground here relied on, the defendant must show that its refusal to fulfill its contract is justified by some term of defeasance contained in the undertaking itself, and unless this appears with reasonable clearness, the obligor cannot escape liability. If we entertain any reasonable doubt as to the correct interpretation to be placed on words we have been considering, that doubt would be sufficient to solve the question against the defendant, because its contract to indemnify must stand in full force unless more than a doubt exists as to whether the defeasible conditions embrace the particular ground of avoidance relied on."

[6] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Crassard, 83 Md. 272, 34 Atl. 703.

An exclusion of liability for losses for credit given "exceeding a credit of thirty per cent on the lowest capital rating," in a policy insuring against loss by insolvency of customers, excludes merely the excess above that amount, and not the entire loss in case credit is given above that amount.[7]

[7] Shakman v. United States Credit 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920, 66 N. W. System Co. 92 Wis. 366, 32 L.R.A. 528. See §§ 2786 et seq. herein.

CHAPTER LXX.

EXCEPTED RISKS AND LOSSES—LIFE, ACCIDENT, CASUALTY, AND TORNADO.

§ 2606. Death "in known violation of law."

§ 2607. "Death in known violation of law:" construction: refers to voluntary criminal acts.

§ 2608. Same subject: refers to both civil and criminal law.

§ 2609. Same subject: conclusion.

§ 2610. Death or injury in violation of law.

§ 2610a. Same subject: carrying concealed weapons.

§ 2610b. Conviction of felony.

§ 2611. Excepted liability where death occurs "by the hands of justice."

§ 2611a. Same subject: killing adulterer by husband: wife's paramour.

§ 2612. Death: use of intoxicants.

§ 2613. Intemperance: "If the insured becomes so far intemperate as to impair his health."

§ 2613a. If insured becomes "so far intemperate or use drugs to such an extent as to impair his health."

§ 2613b. "Under the influence" of intoxicants or narcotics: limitation of liability.

§ 2613c. Intemperance: degree of intoxication.

§ 2614. Death: intemperance: waiver of provision.

§ 2615. Death: intemperance: use of drugs: by-laws of society.

§ 2616. Death caused by submission to illegal operation.

§ 2617. Accident policy: injuries where no visible mark.

§ 2617a. Visible marks of contusions or wounds: "wounds" defined.

§ 2618. Excepted liability where death or injury "may be caused by intentional injuries inflicted by assured or any other person."

§ 2619. Dueling or fighting.

§ 2619a. Death in assault, quarrel, or fight.

§ 2619b. Assault: death or injury in self-defense: aggressor: offending party.

§ 2619c. Assault upon officer of the law: resisting arrest.

§ 2619d. Injuries while hunting.

§ 2620. Excepted liability: taking of poison: contact with poisonous substances: inhaling gas.

§ 2621. Poison or anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled.

§ 2622. Entering or leaving moving train or car: riding as passenger: standing or riding on steps or platform.
§ 2623. Rules and regulations of common carriers and employer: violation of "a rule of corporation."
§ 2624. Voluntary exposure to obvious or unnecessary danger.
§ 2624a. Same subject: negligence or contributory negligence.
§ 2624b. Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger: death in attempt to save life: negligence.
§ 2624c. Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger: waiver.
§ 2625. Walking or being on railway bridge, track, or "roadbed."
§ 2625a. Walking or being upon a railroad track or bridge: voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.
§ 2626. Instances within the exception of voluntary exposure.
§ 2627. Instances not within the exception of voluntary exposure.
§ 2628. Death by disease excepted: fits.
§ 2629. Disease caused by accident: death superinduced by other causes not death by excepted disease.
§ 2629a. Pre-existing disease: disease and accidental injury concurring.
§ 2629b. Death from disease as primary, secondary or final cause.
§ 2630. Death from disease as a "secondary cause" not death by accident.
§ 2630a. Death by drowning excepted: presumptions.
§ 2631. Death caused by "medical treatment for disease" or "surgical treatment," excepted.
§ 2631a. Unnecessary lifting and voluntary overexertion.
§ 2632. Occupation: exception of liability for "wrecking."
§ 2632a. Employers' liability policy: injuries while making extraordinary repairs.
§ 2632b. Employers' liability policy: violation of law.
§ 2632c. Same subject: waiver.
§ 2633. Accident to property: loss by fire excepted.
§ 2633a. Excepted risks: automobiles or motor vehicles: fires: violation of law: collision.
§ 2634. Plate glass: fire: explosion: tornado insurance.
§ 2634a. Automatic fire extinguishers: exception of injury from leakage: earthquakes, cyclones, etc.

§ 2606. Death "in known violation of law."—In connection with the clause exempting the insurers from liability in case of death of assured "by his own hand," there is also generally found the clause exempting them from liability in case the insured shall die in the "known violation of any law," whatever may be the nature of the violation of the law, and whether the violation refers to merely the criminal or both the criminal and civil law, the death, in order to avoid the policy, must be caused or occasioned while the act in violation of the law is being committed, and be not merely in consequence of the act and subsequent thereto. The act causing the death must be so close and immediate in its relation to all the other acts as to form a part of one continuous transaction.[8] So the policy is not avoided by the fact that the insured had had illicit intercourse with the wife of H. shortly before H. had killed him.[9] So the death of a wife's paramour, killed by a wronged husband while attempting to commit, or immediately after the commission of an act of adultery, is not caused in the violation of, or an attempt to violate, any criminal law, within the meaning of a stipulation in a life policy, exempting the insurer in that event from full liability under the policy.[10] And where the insured had entered a public building, and by a show of force and by means of threats had obtained a sum of money, and was shot and killed while escaping, it was held that he having obtained the money, and being merely in the act of escaping, he was not at the instant of death violating any law, and a recovery could be had on the policy.[11] But where A's life was insured and A and B planned an assault on C, and B seized and held C, and C drew a pistol while A was running away, and the pistol was discharged and A was killed, it was held that whether the discharge of the pistol was intentional or not the policy was rendered void.[12]

[8] Travelers Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 531, 22 L. ed. 155; Cluff v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 95 Mass. 308, s. c. 99 Mass. 317, 318; Harper v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 19 Mo. 506; Bradley v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 422, 6 Am. Rep. 115.

On provision against liability in event of death or injury in consequence of violation of law as applied to death or injury resulting from a personal encounter, see note in L.R.A.1917C, 199.

[9] Goetzmann v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 572, s. c. 3 Hun (N. Y.) 515.

[10] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Crenshaw, 129 Ga. 195, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 258, 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 58 S. E. 628.

On necessity that assured's death be reasonable and legitimate consequence of violation of law in order to relieve insurer, see note in 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 258.

[11] Griffin v. Western Mutual Benefit Assoc. 20 Neb. 620, 57 Am. Rep. 848, 31 N. W. 122.

[12] Murray v. New York Life Ins. Co. 96 N. Y. 614, 48 Am. Rep. 658, aff'g 30 Hun (N. Y.) 428. The words of the court in Cluff v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 13 Allen (95 Mass.) 308, are pertinent in connection with this question. "Assuming that Cluff did commit a criminal assault, it may not necessarily follow that he died in the known violation of the law. If he was shot while the assault continued, such would be the case. But if it had ceased, and Cluff was not threatening to renew it, and Cox had withdrawn out of his reach and then shot him, not in the course of the affray, but merely to revenge himself for what had been done or to prevent the seizure of the horses, then at the time he was killed Cluff was not engaged in a known violation of the law within the meaning of the policy. For he must have received

So the death of insured while engaged in a horse race contrary to law, was caused by a violation of the law, although his opponent disregarded the rules of the course, and intentionally sought to run him off the track.[13]

§ 2607. "Death in known violation of law:" construction: refers to voluntary criminal acts.—The cases are not in harmony as to the meaning of this provision. It is held in some courts that it refers only to voluntary criminal acts, while in others the provision is construed as referring to any act in violation of law which might naturally lead to a conflict which would endanger the life of the insured. In a Massachusetts case[14] it was held that the condition must be construed to refer to a voluntary criminal act on the part of assured, known by him at the time to be a crime against the law, and not to mere trespasses against property or other infringements of civil laws, with no criminal consequence attached. This case also held that offenses against persons and the property of another such as are recognized as crimes by the common law and the laws of civilized countries generally will be presumed to be crimes in each state of the Union, and the insured will be presumed to know the criminal laws of the state under the jurisdiction of which he was.[15] In Missouri[16] and in New York[17]

the mortal wound during and while engaged in the commission of a crime, and not merely in consequence of it afterward. . . . The question to be considered is: Were the two acts—the assault by Cluff and the firing of the pistol by Cox—a part of one conflict for the possession of the horses, or had Cox abandoned his attempt to retain the custody of the horses, and had Cluff desisted in his assault? Was the fight over, or had Cox merely retired to a more advantageous position? In short, if Cluff in the first instance did commit a criminal assault and the firing of the pistol was a part of the same continuous transaction, then the condition of the policy was violated."

[13] Travelers Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 531, 22 L. ed. 155.

Cited in: Georgia. — Gresham v. Equitable Accident Ins. Co. 87 Ga. 497, 499, 13 L.R.A. 838, 839, 27 Am. St. Rep. 263, 13 S. E. 752.

Indiana.—Bloom v. Franklin Life Ins. Co. 97 Ind. 478, 486, 49 Am. Rep. 469.

Massachusetts.—Freeman v. Mercantile Mutual Accident Assoc. 156 Mass. 351, 354, 17 L.R.A. 753, 755, 30 N. E. 1013.

Missouri. — Wolff v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 5 Mo. App. 236, 243.

Virginia.—Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. 613, 619.

[14] Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 317.

[15] In this case it appeared that the insured had started to unhitch and take a pair of horses, the property of his debtor, and that the son of the debtor had shot the insured. The point was raised that as the insured had done such act under an honest claim of right he was not guilty of the crime of larceny, and in reference to this the court at p. 329, said: "If the defendants should be able to satisfy the jury that Cluff had no color of title or right in or to the property nor of legal authority to take it; and that he made no claim of any such title or right, nor of any authority except that, having a debt against the decisions have been rendered which are substantially in accord with the Massachusetts doctrine.

§ 2608. Same subject: refers to both civil and criminal law.—In a case in Indiana[18] the court held that the clause referred to a known violation of a positive law, either criminal or civil, where the reasonable and natural consequences of such violation would be to increase the risk, but did not refer to any violation of either law which did not tend to have such a result. This is substantially the same view as that expressed by Justice Grover in the dissenting opinion in Bradley v. Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company,[19] who said: "No one would contend that had the insured died in the state of New York from heart disease while engaged in selling lottery tickets the case would have come within the proviso. It might have been within the strict letter, but not at all within the intention of the parties, for the reason that the violation of law, although criminal, had no possible connection with the death, and in no possible way increased the risk. . . . Again, suppose the death occurred from injury received while the assured was attempting to obtain by force the possession of a chattel of which another was in possession, the title to which was claimed by both, but which was really in the insured, the case would come within the proviso, for the reason that the risk was increased and the death caused by the violation of law by the assured, although such law was the civil law only, the deceased having committed no breach of the peace or any indictable offense. . . . It follows that when the death occurs during the known violation of law by the assured, when such violation eminently tends to violence dangerous to life, the case comes within the proviso."

§ 2609. Same subject: conclusion.—From an examination of the cases cited in the foregoing sections, it will be seen that the weight of authority favors the view that "death" in the known violation of the law "refers only to a voluntary criminal act, and not to owner of the horses, he claimed a right to seize his property in payment by way of self-redress without regard to law, we think the defendants would then be entitled to a verdict. Such a claim would be a claim of the privilege to commit a crime, which the law will not recognize to be honestly made as a claim of right."

[16] Harper v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 19 Mo. 506.

[17] Bradley v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 341, rev'd 45 N. Y. 422, 6 Am. Rep. 115. In the supreme court it has been held that this provision should not be limited in its application to criminal acts, but should be construed as having been intended to prohibit the insured from doing any act in violation of the law which would naturally lead to a conflict by which his life would be endangered. The court of appeals, however, reversed this decision.

[18] Bloom v. Franklin Life Ins. Co. 97 Ind. 478, 49 Am. Rep. 469.

[19] 45 N. Y. 422, 6 Am. Rep. 115.

mere acts of trespass." And such a view seems to be supported by the better reasoning. The words are inserted by the insurers for their own benefit and protection. They are used to exempt them from liability in case a certain event or events take place. It is an acknowledged rule of law that courts do not favor forfeiture, and in case of doubt a construction is to be given which is most favorable to the insured, and against the insurer who has introduced the clause. There is manifestly a doubt as to the meaning of this clause. If we, then, apply the general rule above stated as to forfeiture, the doctrine as stated originally in Missouri seems the correct one. If the insurer had intended to include such violation of both civil and criminal law as increased the risk, it would have been within his power to do so. But he has introduced a clause as to the meaning of which there is doubt, and consequently it should be strictly construed against him. If this clause stood alone, and not in connection with other clauses of exemption, it might then be construed as referring to those cases of violation of either civil or criminal law which increase the risk. In most cases, however, it is to be found in connection with other clauses excepting the insurers from liability. When so found should not the maxim "noscitura sociis" control? The other clauses are generally those excepting the insurer from liability in case the insured die by the hand of justice, or while engaged in dueling. One of these refers to crimes punishable by death, and the other to a violation of the criminal law. By applying this maxim we can reach the conclusion that those cases where death results in a violation of the criminal law only were intended. In all cases the intentions of the parties are to be ascertained, if possible. A construction is not to be given beyond the clear intent of those contracting. In none of the cases do the courts contend that a strict and literal construction should be given to this clause. If such were the case, there would be many forfeitures which neither party could reasonably have contemplated when effecting the contract. It being admitted that the words are not clear, and that there is a doubt, and it being a fact that the words are introduced by the insurer for his own benefit, it would seem in accordance with the rules as to forfeiture that the construction most favorable to the insured should be given, and, therefore, the doctrine which we have stated at the beginning of this section is more clearly in accordance with the manifest intentions of both parties to the contract.

§ 2610. Death or injury in violation of law.—Where a statute[20] forbade traveling on Sunday except from necessity or charity, and forbade hunting, it was held that where the insured went hunting in violation of the law, and while returning was injured, the insurers were not liable upon an accident policy which provided that in case of "a violation of the law wholly or partly, directly or indirectly," producing an injury, they should not be liable.[1] But one who has started to hunt prairie chickens with a loaded gun at a season when it is unlawful to kill them, and who is injured by an accidental discharge of his gun as he is climbing a bank, is not engaged in violation of law within the exception of an accident policy.[2] And it is held that although hunting on Sunday is prohibited by a statute, yet where the injury was sustained at a friend's after hunting, this is not an accident while violating the law.[3]

[20] Rev. Laws Vt. secs. 4315, 4316.

If the act causing death is in no manner connected with or part of an attempt to carry out any criminal purpose there is no violation of, or attempt to violate any criminal or penal law.[3a]

Under a life policy providing that it shall be void if insured dies in consequence of any violation of, or attempt to violate any criminal law of the United States, or of any state where insured may be, no recovery can be had if death results from the insured having voluntarily submitted to an illegal operation known to be dangerous to life, with intent to cause an abortion, without any justifiable medical reason. To permit a recovery in such case is against public policy.[4] In an action on an accident policy containing a condition that the insurers would not be liable for death by an accident caused by a violation of law, a recovery cannot be had in a state where horse racing is a misdemeanor, for death by accident while engaged in a horse race.[5] But in a suit upon a benefit certificate providing that no claim should be made for any injury which might happen "when engaged in or in consequence of any crim-

[1] Duran v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 63 Vt. 437, 25 Am. St. Rep. 773, 13 L.R.A. 637, 22 Atl. 530, 44 Alb. L. J. 317, 20 Ins. L. J. 1035. But compare Matthes v. Imperial Accident Assoc. 110 Iowa, 222, 81 N. W. 484, 29 Ins. L. J. 622.

[2] Cornwell v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. 6 N. Dak. 201, 40 L.R.A. 437, 69 N. W. 191.

[3] Prader v. National Mutual Assoc. 95 Iowa, 149, 63 N. W. 601.

[3a] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Beck (Pythias Knights Supreme Lodge v. Beck) 181 U. S. 49, 55, 21 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. ed. 741.

[4] Wells v. New England Mutual Life Ins. Co. 191 Pa. St. 207, 53 L.R.A. 327, 71 Am. St. Rep. 763, 43 Atl. 126.

As to dueling or fighting: death in assault, quarrel, or fight, see §§ 2619 et seq. herein.

[5] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 531, 22 L. ed. 155. Cited in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Vandecar, 86 Fed. 282, 289, 30 C. C. A. 48, 55, 57 U. S. App. 446; Gresham v. Equitable Accident Ins. Co. 87 Ga. 497, 499, 13 L.R.A. 838, 839, 27 Am. St. Rep. 263, 13 S. E. 752; Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 250, 269, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723.

inal act," an answer that at the time the plaintiff was injured he was in a public highway in a drunken condition, which is a criminal act, under the statutes of Indiana, and "that the injury happened to the plaintiff while he was engaged in and in consequence of a criminal act," is bad on demurrer, the conclusion being a mere conclusion of law, and no positive connection being shown between the alleged criminal act and the injury.[6] Again the laws of a state may provide that no person shall walk on or along a railroad track except where the same may be laid across or along streets or highways, yet if the public have been permitted to cross a railroad company's track for such period of time as to create a license, it is not "violating the law," within the meaning of an accident policy which excepts liability for injuries received "while violating the law," for a person to cross the company's tracks at such place.[7]

Under a provision in an accident policy that the insurance will not cover death while the insured is engaged in any unlawful act, it is held that the insurers will not be absolved from liability unless it appears that the natural and reasonable consequence from such violation of the law is to increase the risk.[8] And a provision in a life policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries to the insured while engaged in or in consequence of some unlawful act does not extend to exempt the insurer from liability because of the infraction of law by the insured, when the act has no connection with the injury, or when the act is in violation of some obligation of morality or rule of policy not recognized or adopted as law. Living in fornication is not an unlawful act, unless it is accompanied with circumstances of notoriety or publicity; and the fact that the insured was so living, at the time of his death, does not exempt the insurer from liability under this clause.[9] So in order that assured's death may be said to have been caused or superinduced by violation of a criminal law within the meaning of an insurance policy exception of liability therefor it must appear that his act bore such a relation to his death that the latter would not have occurred at the time and place, if assured had not been engaged in violating the law, and this applies where it is claimed that such death was caused or superinduced by such violation or attempted violation

[6] National Benefit Assoc. v. Bowman, 110 Ind. 355, 11 N. E. 316.

[7] Lehman v. Great Eastern Casualty & Indemnity Co. 39 N. Y. Supp. 912, 7 App. Div. 424, aff'd without opinion in 158 N. Y. 689, 53 N. E. 1127.

[8] Conboy v. Railway Officials & Employees' Accident Assoc. 17 Ind. App. 62, 60 Am. St. Rep. 154, 46 N. E. 363, s. c. 43 N. E. 1017.

[9] Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723.

because it would not have occurred except assured had carried a concealed weapon, and also because it was also claimed that it occurred in a fight which he had voluntarily begun.[10] The defense that death resulted or was in consequence of a violation of criminal law must be established by at least a preponderance of evidence.[11] But a preponderance of evidence is sufficient to show that one met death while violating the law contrary to the provisions of the policy. The fact need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt.[12]

Under an Illinois decision suicide is not a crime which constitutes the violation of any criminal law, and even though the attempt to commit suicide may be a crime, one who has accomplished the act cannot be said to be guilty of an attempt to commit the act.[12a]

Where a life policy does not contain a provision in terms against a claim under the policy, if the death was caused by intentional

[10] Baker v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 103 Miss. 374, 60 So. 333, 42 Ins. L. J. 348.

[11] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Lipscomb, 50 Fla. 406, 39 So. 637.

On duty of insured to negative death or accident from excepted cause, see notes in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, and 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1006.

[12] United States.—New York Accident Ins. Co. v. Clayton, 8 U. S. C. C. A. 213, 59 Fed. 559, 19 U. S. App. 304. The court, per Sanborn, C. J., says: "The court charged the jury that in order to avail itself of this defense the company must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt. This was clearly erroneous. Where a criminal act is alleged in a civil suit, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not required to warrant a verdict and decision in support of the allegation. A preponderance of the evidence is sufficient. This is so well settled by the authorities in this country that it does not permit discussion:" Citing

United States.—United States v. Shapleigh, 4 U. S. C. C. A. 237, 54 Fed. 126, 134.

Iowa.—Welch v. Jugenheimer, 56 Iowa, 11, 8 N. W. 673.

Kentucky.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 11 Bush (74 Ky.) 587, 21 Am. Rep. 223.

Louisiana.—Hoffman v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 La. Ann. 216.

Maine.—Ellis v. Buzzell, 60 Me. 209 (a preponderance of testimony will support a plea of justification in an action for slander charging adultery); Knowles v. Scribner, 57 Me. 495 (suit of bastardy).

Massachusetts.—Schmidt v. New York Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 1 Gray (67 Mass.) 529.

Missouri.—Rothschild v. American Central Ins. Co. 62 Mo. 356.

New Hampshire. — Matthews v. Huntley, 9 N. H. 146; Folsom v. Brawn, 5 Fost. (25 N. H.) 114.

New Jersey.—Kane v. Hibernia Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 38 N. J. L. 441, 20 Am. Rep. 409, 17 Am. L. Rep. (N. S.) 293, 297.

Pennsylvania.—Young v. Edwards, 72 Pa. St. 257, 267.

Vermont.—Bradish v. Bliss, 35 Vt. 326.

Wisconsin.—Blaeser v. Milwaukee Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 37 Wis. 31, 19 Am. Rep. 747; Washington Union Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 7 Wis. 169. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 13a.

[12a] Royal Circle v. Acherrath, 204 Ill. 549, 63 L.R.A. 452, 58 Cent. L. J. 128, 33 Ins. L. J. 20, 68 N. E. 492.

injury inflicted by insured, or any other person, but contains merely a provision that the policy only covers injuries effected through "accidental means," an injury not anticipated, and not naturally to be expected by insured, though intentionally inflicted by another, is an accidental injury within the meaning of the contract.[13]

§ 2610a. Same subject: carrying concealed weapons.—The carrying concealed weapons and being shot in a difficulty after leaving a bawdyhouse, neither fact being shown to have naturally been the cause of assured's death, do not bring the death within the exception of liability in consequence of a violation of law.[14] To relieve a life insurance company from liability for the death of an insured who came to his death while violating the statute prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons, it must be shown that the offense was being committed, and that it brought about the death of the deceased.[15] And the burden of proof is upon the party alleging such fact to show that the insured was carrying a weapon concealed unlawfully where he had a right to carry it concealed under certain circumstances, even though it be conceded that the fact that insured had it concealed had such an effect upon his or the other party's conduct as without it his death would not have occurred.[16]

§ 2610b. Conviction of felony.—In order to constitute a conviction within the meaning of a clause in a policy that it shall be void and forfeited if assured shall be convicted of a felony there must be a condemnation by the court of last resort where the law provides that such condemnation is necessary to make one a convict and this applies where assured died pending a motion for rehearing after a case had been appealed and affirmed after a second trial of assured which resulted in a conviction for manslaughter.[17]

§ 2611. Excepted liability where death occurs "by the hands of justice."—Though the policy contains a condition that there can

[13] Insurance Co. v. Bennett (Accident Ins. Co. of North America v. Bennett) 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723.

[14] Jones v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 92 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485.

[15] Interstate Life Assur. Co. v. Dalton, 165 Fed. 176, 91 C. C. A. 210, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 722. See Brown v. Mystic Workers of the World, 151 Ill. App. 517.

[16] Baker v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 103 Miss. 374, 60 So. 333, 42 Ins. L. J. 348.

[17] Woodmen of the World v. Dodd, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 254. See Baker v. Modern Woodmen of America, 140 Mo. App. 619, 121 S. W. 794.

On conflict of laws as to effect of of execution of insured for crime or conviction of felony, on right to recover life or accident insurance, see note in 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 284.

be no recovery thereon if the insured die "by the hands of justice," yet it has been held that such a provision is unnecessary.[18] Though this risk might be expressly covered, yet no recovery could be had thereon if the insured should die by such means, since it would be against public policy to permit a recovery in such cases; accordingly, since an insurance against such a risk would not be upheld, it necessarily follows that a policy would be void in those cases even where it is expressly assumed by the insurer, and therefore the stipulation avoiding it is unnecessary. "Death by the hands of justice" has been defined by Tyndall, C. J., in Borradaile v. Hunter[19] as death in "consequence of a felony previously committed;" that is, death which is the result of a trial and sentence by a judicial proceeding. In the words of the court in a North Carolina case,[20] "to die by the hands of justice is to die by some judicial sentence for the commission of some felony."[1] So it is decided that the innocence of an insured who was executed after conviction of a capital crime, does not change the rule that insurance cannot be recovered upon the life of a person who is executed for crime, even if the policy makes no provision for forfeiture on that account.[2] The question might arise whether if after the insured had been executed it could be, perhaps, shown by newly discovered evidence that the insured was innocent of the crime for which he was convicted. We do not believe that such a defense could be introduced. The insured has died by the hands of justice, having been duly convicted and sentenced. The manner of death which the policy excepted has occurred. It does not seem that the question of his innocence is in any way material. It may seem a hardship for the persons to whom the policy is made pay-

[18] Amicable Soc. v. Bolland, 4 Bligh (N. S.) 194, 2 Dow. & Cl. 1, rev'g Bolland v. Disney, 3 Russ. 351.

[19] 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443.

[20] Spruill v. North Carolina Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 Jones (46 N. C.) 126.

[1] In this case the policy provided that "in case the said slave should die by means of any invasion . . . or by the hands of justice the policy should be void." The slave escaped, and while resisting arrest, was shot by the sheriff. It was held that death did not ensue within the meaning of any of those clauses.

[2] Burt v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 419, 44 C. C. A. 548, 59 L.R.A. 393; Burt v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 362, 47 L. ed. 216, 23 Sup. Ct. 139.

Cited in: Massachusetts.—Reagan v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 189 Mass. 555, 558, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 824, 109 Am. St. Rep. 659, 76 N. E. 217.

Pennsylvania.—Collins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 345, 356.

Tennessee.—Box v. Lanier, 112 Tenn. 393, 404, 64 L.R.A. 458, 463, 79 S. W. 1042.

Virginia.—Plunkett v. Supreme Conclave Improved Order of Heptasophs, 105 Va. 643, 648, 55 S. E. 9.

able, who have been dependent on the insured for support and for whose protection the policy was procured, yet the insurer is entitled to the benefit of every provision of the policy when it is clear and definite. Certainly, this provision is clear.[3] This question is also now settled in the Federal supreme court, at least in so far as that court is concerned, and it is there held that although there is no policy provision excluding death by law a legal execution for crime is not a risk covered by a contract of insurance, and this also applies where the place of contract gives no right to recover in such case.[4]

Notwithstanding the preceding conclusion and decisions it is held that the legal execution of a person for a crime committed by him does not constitute any defense to an action by his legal representative on a policy upon the life of the deceased, in a state whose constitution declares that no conviction shall work a corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate.[5]

§ 2611a. Same subject: killing adulterer by husband: wife's paramour.—The death of an adulterer, at the hands of the husband, either while attempting intercourse with the wife or immediately after the completion of intercourse, is not within the condition of a life policy that "if death is caused or superinduced at the hands of justice, or in violation of or attempt to violate any criminal law," the insurer shall not be liable for the full amount of the policy: the killing at the hands of justice must be by some person authorized to carry out the commands of the law; or by one who is permitted by the law to do the act in the advancement of public justice.[6]

§ 2612. Death: use of intoxicants.—Life policies stipulate against liability in case death occurs while assured is intoxicated, or occurs as a result of the intemperate use of intoxicants. The most frequent forms of the condition are that the policy shall be void "if the death shall be caused by the use of intoxicating drinks,"[7] or

[3] Clift v. Schwabe, 3 C. B. (O. S.) 437, 2 Car. & K. 134, 17 L. J. C. P. 2, per Justice Wightman.

[4] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. McCue, 223 U. S. 234, 56 L. ed. 419, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 57, 32 Sup. Ct. 220, 41 Ins. L. J. 815, rev'g McCue v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 167 Fed. 435, 93 C. C. A. 71, citing Burt v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 362, 47 L. ed. 216, 23 Sup. Ct. 139.

[5] Collins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 232 Ill. 37, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 356 (annotated on effect of the execution of insured for crime, on right to recover life or accident insurance), 122 Am. St. Rep. 54, 83 S. E. 542.

[6] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Crenshaw, 129 Ga. 195, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 258 (annotated on necessity that assured's death be reasonable and legitimate consequence of violation of law in order to relieve insurer), 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 58 S. E. 628.

[7] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Stibbe, 46 Md. 302, 312.

where death shall occur "while the insured was or in consequence of his having been under the influence of intoxicating drink,"[8] or if the insured shall "die by reason of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquors."[9] Where the policy provides that the company shall not be liable for injuries which are received while the insured is intoxicated, or in consequence of his being "under the influence of intoxicating liquors," the phrase "under the influence of intoxicating liquors" is held to mean a condition amounting to intoxication. So an instruction to the jury that if the insured was under the influence of liquor, whether intoxicated or not, the company is not liable, was held to be erroneous.[10] But where a life policy was conditioned to be void in case death should occur "while the insured was or in consequence of his having been under the influence of intoxicating drink," and the insured while intoxicated was shot and killed, it was held that if the insured was under the influence of intoxicating drink when he died the policy was avoided, and that it was immaterial whether or not drunkenness was the cause proximate or remote of the death.[11] Again, where the policy provided that the insurers should not be liable where death "shall be caused by the use of intoxicating drink or opium," it was held that an instruction to the effect that death must be directly caused by such use and not remotely was correct.[12] In one of the above cases it will be observed that the policy excepted death while the insured was "under the influence of intoxicating drink," while in the case last noted it excepted death "caused by the use of intoxicating drink." In another case in Iowa the policy was to be void if the insured died "by reason of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquors." The case came before the supreme court twice.[13] The evidence showed that the insured had during one of his periodical debauches, and while in a fit of delirium tremens, escaped from those who were taking care of him, and with no clothing on wandered through the streets and contracted a cold, resulting in congestion of the lungs and brain,

As to representations and warranties: temperate habits: drunkenness: use of intoxicating liquors, see § 2096 herein.

[8] Shader v. Railway Passengers Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 441, 23 Am. Rep. 65.

[9] Ranney v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. (1873) U. S. C. C. 1st Dist. of Mass.

On scope and effect of provisions in policies of insurance forbidding use of intoxicating liquor, see notes in 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206, and 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1241.

[10] Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434, 10 So. 530.

[11] Shader v. Railway Passengers Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 441, 23 Am. Rep. 65.

[12] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Stibbe, 46 Md. 302, 312.

[13] Miller v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 235, 7 Am. Rep. 122, s. c. 34 Iowa, 222.

from which he died. In the trial of the case the jury had been instructed as follows: "If you find that Miller's death was produced by other causes, then you should find for the plaintiff on this branch of the case. The policy must be construed strictly against the defendant, and if you find that Miller's death was only contributed to by the intemperate use of liquor, then you must find for the plaintiff upon this branch of the case. In order to avoid the policy the defendant must satisfy you by a preponderance of evidence that the sole or paramount cause of Miller's death was caused by the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors." The supreme court, when the case was put before it,[14] first held the instruction to be correct, and said: "The defendant claims that 'if intemperance shortens life, it is a cause of death within the meaning of the policy,' and that the policy is thereby avoided. It rarely, if ever, happens that the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks is indulged in for a considerable period without to some extent shortening life. The consequences of the construction contended for by the defendant would, therefore, be that an insurance company which had assured the life of one known to be intemperate, and which had charged a higher rate of insurance in consequence of such fact, could exonerate itself from liability upon the policy by showing that the life of the assured had been shortened by intemperance. A sound principle does not lead to consequences so unjust and unreasonable. A proximate cause of an effect is that which immediately precedes and produces it, as distinguished from the remote, mediate, or predisposing cause. When several causes contribute to death as a result, it may be extremely difficult to determine which was the remote and which the immediate cause, yet this difficulty does not change the fact that the death is to be attributed to the proximate and not the mediate cause."[15] In a subsequent consideration of this case, however,[16] the court held that the verdict and judgment must be set aside, as the evidence showed conclusively that the death was due to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. In a case in the Federal courts[17] the policy was also conditioned to be void in case the insured died "by reason of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquors." The insurers

[14] Miller v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 7 Am. Rep. 122, 31 Iowa, 235.

[15] See also Holterhoff v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. (Cin. Sup. Ct.) 4 Big. L. & A. Cas. 395; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Holterhoff, 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. 379.

[16] Miller v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 34 Iowa, 222.

[17] Ranney v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. (1873) U. S. C. C. 1st Dist. Mass.

claimed that death occurred while the insured had the delirium tremens, and consequently the policy was avoided. It appeared from the evidence that the physician had administered large quantities of morphine as a remedy, and the plaintiff claimed that though the insured had delirium tremens, the death was directly caused by the amount of morphine administered. The court in instructing the jury said: "If the disease from which the insured was suffering was delirium tremens, a mania a potu, or other disease resulting from intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquors, and that disease, though not necessarily mortal, yet from want of helpful application or neglect of proper care or treatment produced exhaustion or fever, and consequent death, the death would probably be considered as resulting from the intemperance, even if the disease were not so mortal in itself, but that with good care and under favorable circumstances the insured might have recovered; yet if it became the cause of death by reason of the most efficacious mode of treatment not having been adopted, then the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover. If the death of the insured was caused by any drug administered to him in the course of medical practice for the purpose of cure, in sufficient quantity to produce death, and death was the result of the drug and not of the disease, then in such case the death could not properly be considered as resulting from the intemperance in the use of intoxicating liquors, and the plaintiff upon that branch of the case would be entitled to recover." It will be seen that the courts are not in harmony as to the meaning of the phrase "die by reason of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquors." On the one hand, it is contended that this phrase only includes those cases where intemperance is the proximate or direct cause of death. On the other hand, it is contended that if the intemperance is the primary or substantial cause of the death, though some other cause may intervene from which death results, yet if the intemperance is the proximate and direct cause of the subsequent causes, and immediately connected with the death in one direct series of causes, then it is within the provision. It is not contended if intemperance is the remote cause, in the sense of simply rendering the system more susceptible to disease from which death ensues, that death in such a case is within the meaning of the exception. In any case, in order to bring it within the meaning of the provision, the intemperance must at least be the substantial cause immediately connected with the other cause or causes from which death ensues, and in such close sequence that the death is directly traceable to the intemperance as the operating cause.[18] The quantity of liquor which is drank by assured is not alone the test of the fact whether he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor; as in case where the testimony of those with him at the time he met with his accident was that they considered him sober.[19] If a certificate of insurance is issued by an order whose distinguishing feature is its requirement of daily abstinence from the use of liquors as a beverage, and if the application for such insurance contains an agreement that the assured will comply with all the laws, regulations, and requirements of the order and the certificate, a statement that it is issued upon the express condition that the assured shall in every particular while a member of the order comply with all its laws, rules, and requirements, the policy becomes forfeited and void upon the assured commencing the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. His suspension or expulsion from the order is not a condition precedent to such forfeiture.[20] And where liability is excluded if death results directly or indirectly from the use of intoxicating liquors a breach of the exception precludes recovery in the absence of a waiver or estoppel.[1] But a provision in a benefit certificate "that the Travelers' Protective Association of America shall not be liable . . . in case of injury, disability or death happening to the member while intoxicated, or in consequence of his having been under the influence of any narcotic or intoxicant, or disability when caused, wholly or in part, by duelling, fighting, wrestling, war or riot," does not apply in any case of death, but of disability only.[2] So an insured person who dies from drinking wood alcohol by mistake does not die from the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors.[3] If the policy insures against injuries or death caused [18] The nonuse of alcoholic stimulants or opium does not mean that the insured has never taken liquor or opium, and that he is ignorant of the taste of either. Something more than an occasional or incidental use is implied. There must be to some extent a habit or custom in that regard, and one may occasionally indulge in liquor without having acquired a habit of so doing. Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Belcham, 48 Ill. App. 346, per Wall, J.

[19] Prader v. National Masonic Accident Assoc. 95 Iowa, 149, 63 N. W. 601. In this case the deceased was injured by stepping into a hole, it appearing that he and two others had drank from a quart bottle of whisky, some of which was left, and on their return he also drank two glasses of wine, and thereafter met with the accident.

[20] Hogins v. Supreme Council Champions of Red Cross, 76 Cal. 109, 9 Am. St. Rep. 173, 18 Pac. 125.

[1] Colver v. Modern Woodmen of America, 154 Iowa, 615, 135 N. W. 67.

[2] Roth v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America, 102 Tex. 241, 132 Am. St. Rep. 871, 115 S. W. 31.

[3] Modern Woodmen of America v. Lawson, 110 Va. 81, 135 Am. St. Rep. 927, 65 S. E. 509.

directly, independently and exclusive of all other causes, insured's degree of good health may be such as to exclude evidence of his use of intoxicants under a claim that he was by such use less able to withstand disease for in such case unless said use contributed to the loss or death evidence of such use would be immaterial.[4]

§ 2613. Intemperance: "if the insured becomes so far intemperate as to impair his health."—A policy which provides that it shall be void if the insured becomes "so far intemperate as to impair health or induce delirium tremens" is avoided where the insured's death is substantially due to the use of intoxicants in excess, where they are not taken by medical advice or for medical purposes, though it may appear that he has not become habitually intemperate or had delirium tremens.[5] It is for the jury to determine whether the death is caused by intemperance.[6] Again, if a policy of life insurance provides that it shall be void if the insured shall use alcoholic drinks so as to injure his health, and that the insurer may cancel the policy when it comes to its knowledge that the insured has made false statements in this respect, or does so use alcoholic liquor, and that the policy shall be void if he dies from the effects of intoxication or while intoxicated, and the insurer's agent makes out a policy well knowing the insured to be an habitual drunkard, and afterward receives the premium without canceling the policy, the insurer thereby waives all the conditions in the policy except that making it void if the insured dies while intoxicated or from the effects of intoxication.[7] In a case in Minnesota it is held that the word "temperate," referring to the use of liquors, means the habits of the insured, and does not extend to exceptional or occasional instances, nor mean total abstinence, but merely abstinence from excessive or injurious use.[8] And a policy providing that

[4] Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Cooper, 157 Ky. 544, 126 S. W. 111.

[5] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 739, 31 L. ed. 315, 8 Sup. Ct. 331. Cited in Hadley v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. 90 Fed. 390, 392; Renn v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 83 Mo. App. 442, 447; Janneck v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 43 N. Y. Supp. 669, 13 App. Div. 514, 517. See Mutual Protective League v. Cole, 160 Ky. 805, 170 S. W. 184. See § 2096 herein.

[6] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 739, 31 L. ed. 315, 8 Sup. Ct. 331.

[7] Newman v. Covenant Mutual Ins. Co. 76 Iowa, 56, 1 L.R.A. 659, 14 Am. St. Rep. 196, 40 N. W. 87. See § 2614 herein.

[8] Chambers v. North Western Mutual Life Ins. Co. 64 Minn. 495, 58 Am. St. Rep. 549, 67 N. W. 367. If the representation is that applicant's habits are "sober and temperate," and insured became intemperate during the year preceding his death, but there was a division of medical opinion whether or not the risk was thereby materially increased, it was held that there was sufficient evidence of change of habits and an increase of risk to avoid the policy: Boyce v. Phœnix Mutual Life Ins. Co. 14

it shall be void if the insured shall become so far intemperate as to impair his health, is not avoided by his death caused by the use of alcoholic stimulants, if they were taken in good faith under medical advice and for medical purposes.[9]

Again in Indiana, it is held that the use of intoxicating liquors to the extent of impairing the health seriously, but which does not permanently injure it, will not operate as a forfeiture of the contract, under a condition that it shall be invalidated if assured "shall become so far intemperate" as to impair his health seriously and permanently or induce delirium tremens;[9a] and that a general stipulation as to forfeiture for a certain degree of intemperance is controlled by a specific and separate stipulation that the company may cancel the policy if the assured becomes intemperate to a certain degree.[9b]

§ 2613a. If insured becomes "so far intemperate or use drugs to such an extent as to impair his health."—If it is stipulated that the policy shall be void if insured becomes "so far intemperate, or use drugs to such an extent as to impair his health" an impairment of health must result as intemperance of itself is insufficient to constitute a breach but if he does become so far intemperate as to impair his health the policy is voided notwithstanding the direct and proximate cause of his death was not such impairment of health.[10]

§ 2613b. "Under the influence" of intoxicants or narcotics: limitation of liability.—It is not an unreasonable provision to limit the amount of recovery, otherwise payable, in case the accident insured against occurs while assured is "under the influence" of any intoxicant or narcotic.[11] If it is stipulated that the amount of indemnity for disability shall be limited while insured is intoxicated it is immaterial whether or not the injury was caused by intoxication and this is so held even though the same limitation exists

Supr. Ct. Rep. (Can.) 723, per Ritchie, C. J., and Strong, J. (Fourmer and Henry, JJ., dissenting); United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Newman (84 Va.) 52, 3 S. E. 805.

[9] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Ward, 140 U. S. 76, 35 L. ed. 371, 11 Sup. Ct. 720. Cited in Knights of Pythias v. Allen, 104 Tenn. 625, 636, 58 S. W. 241.

[9a] Ætna Ins. Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N. E. 86.

[9b] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hazlett, 105 Ind. 212, 55 Am. Rep. 192, 4 N. E. 582.

[10] Robertson v. Fraternal Union of America, 85 S. Car. 221, 67 S. E. 247.

As to representations and warranties: temperate habits: drunkenness, opium habit, etc., tobacco and use of, see §§ 2076, 2096, 2097 herein.

[11] Grinnell (Furry's Admr.) v. General Accident Ins. Co. 80 Vt. 526, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206 (annotated on scope and effect of provisions in policies of insurance forbidding use of intoxicating liquor), 68 Atl. 655.

where intoxication causes the injury.[12] So where it is stipulated that if insured is killed while in any degree under the influence of intoxicating liquors and he is killed while lying on a railroad track a finding that he was intoxicated will be sustained.[13] But the fact that insured had taken drinks just before he had received an injury, will not, if he was not drunk, bring him within the clause of the policy that it shall not "cover any accidental injury which may happen to me while under the influence of intoxicating drinks." [14]

§ 2613c. Intemperance: degree of intoxication.—If insured becomes intoxicated to such an extent as to impair his ability to care for himself, and thus increases the probability of his suffering accidental injury, it constitutes intoxication within the meaning of an accident policy clause limiting insurer's liability in case insured is injured while "insane, delirious, or under the influence of any intoxicant or narcotic." [15] But habitual use is meant by a provision of forfeiture of the certificate in case a member becomes intemperate in the use of intoxicating liquors.[16] A person is under the influence of an intoxicant, within the intent of a limitation of liability clause in an accident policy in such cases where he has recovered from intoxication only so far as to be fairly able to take care of himself.[17] And it is held not essential to determine whether or not assured had acquired a fixed habit of intoxication where the exception was the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors or of death from the use thereof and a fall which resulted in assured's death was directly attributable to his intoxicated condition for in such case there was a use of intoxicating liquors within the exception.[18] The question, however, whether or not insured was intoxicated at the time of his fall from a window which resulted in death, may under the evidence be one

[12] Mossop v. Continental Casualty Co. 137 Mo. App. 399, 118 S. W. 680.

[13] Little v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 154 Iowa, 440, 134 N. W. 1087.

[14] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Chambers, 93 Va. 138, 40 L.R.A. 432, 24 S. E. 896.

[15] Bakalars v. Continental Casualty Co. 141 Wis. 43, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1241 (annotated on scope and effect of provisions in policies of insurance forbidding use of intoxicating liquor), 122 N. W. 721.

When definition of "intoxication" erroneous and prejudicial, see Gall v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World, 166 Mich. 690, 132 N. W. 468, 40 Ins. L. J. 1964.

As to representations and warranties: temperate habits: drunkenness: use of intoxicating liquors, see § 2096 herein.

[16] Ury v. Modern Woodmen of America, 149 Iowa, 706, 127 N. W. 666.

[17] Grinnell (Furry's Admr.) v. General Accident Ins. Co. 80 Vt. 526, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206n, 68 Atl. 655.

[18] Ury v. Modern Woodmen of America, 149 Iowa, 706, 127 N. W. 665.

for the jury.[19] If a policy insuring against accident limits the amount of the liability when a loss was "while under the influence of any intoxicant or narcotic," a finding that the assured was not under the influence of intoxicating liquor, "so as to prevent him from being fairly able to take care of himself," does not entitle him to recover, except to the extent to which the policy authorized recovery while under the influence of an intoxicant.[20]

§ 2614. Death: intemperance: waiver of provision.—A provision in a policy that the insurer will upon the death of the insured pay a certain amount if, in the opinion of the surgeon of the company, the insured did not die of intemperance, is a condition precedent to the right of recovery by those claiming under the policy.[1] But a mutual benefit association issuing a certificate with a provision avoiding it in case the insured injured his health by the use of stimulants, with the right to cancel it during his life for such action, to a person known to its agent to be a confirmed drunkard waives its right to defend an action on the certificate on that ground.[2] In an action on an accident policy to recover for the death of the assured, where the defense was that the deceased fell from a window while drunk, evidence that shortly before the accident deceased did not appear to be drunk; that he was seen early the next morning and there were no signs of vomit on him; that when the attending physician first saw him he thought he was drunk, but the idea was quickly dispelled; that deceased took a glass of beer just before going home, and was not drunk then, and that he only had three glasses of beer, and never drank whisky—is sufficient to sustain the finding that deceased was not drunk at the time of the accident.[3]

§ 2615. Death: intemperance: use of drugs: by-laws of society.—Where the by-laws of a society provided that no recovery could be had in case of death by intemperance, and the assured agreed in his written application to comply with the by-laws, it was held that no recovery could be had where the insured died from the excessive

[19] Fenton v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 139 Iowa, 166, 117 N. W. 251 (condition in this case was an exception of liability for any accident to a member while he was in any degree under the influence of intoxicating liquors or narcotics or which shall happen on account or by reason or in consequence of the use thereof); Hegna v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 118 Minn. 368, 136 N. W. 1035.

[20] Grinnell (Furry's Admr.) v. General Accident Ins. Co. 80 Vt. 526, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206n, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1012, 68 Atl. 655.

[1] Campbell v. American Popular Life Ins. Co. 1 MacAr. (8 Dist. Col.) 246, 29 Am. Rep. 591, s. c. 1 MacArthur (Dist. Col.) 471.

[2] Newman v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 76 Iowa, 56, 14 Am. St. Rep. 196, 1 L.R.A. 659, 40 N. W. 87.

[3] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 82 Va. 949, 5 S. E. 553.

use of liquor.[4] So a condition in a fraternal benefit certificate, that all payments made and all rights accrued thereunder shall be forfeited, and that the certificate shall be void if the member becomes so intemperate in the use of drugs or alcoholic liquors as permanently to impair his health or to produce delirium tremens, is self-executing.[5] And a by-law of a benefit society that benefits shall be withheld from widows of members who die through intemperance or debauchery is not an unreasonable regulation. It does not aim to regulate behavior of members, but to prevent acts which increase the demand for relief.[6] A by-law, however, of a fraternal insurance society, which provides that, if any member heretofore or hereafter adopted shall become intemperate in the use of drugs, the benefit certificate held by such member, shall, by such acts, become and be absolutely null and void as to benefits, and all payments made thereon shall be thereby forfeited, does not apply to the case of a member who, prior to the enactment of such by-law, had become intemperate in the use of drugs, and continued so thereafter.[7] But where the defense was that insured's certificate had lapsed because of his addiction to morphine and there is no testimony from which it can be legitimately inferred that deceased during the period in question was in such a physical condition that morphine was necessary to, or would, prolong his life, and he was not in a critical condition requiring "temporary relief" from morphine and not where its habitual and regular use was required to prolong his life it constitutes error to submit the question to the jury.[8]

§ 2616. Death caused by submission to illegal operation.—Though the policy may not expressly except liability where death is the result of an illegal operation, still no recovery can be had upon a policy of life insurance, on the ground of public policy, if death results from the insured having voluntarily submitted herself to an illegal operation, known to her to be dangerous to life, with intent to cause an abortion without any justifiable medical reason.[9]

[4] Hogins v. Supreme Council Champions of Red Cross, 76 Cal. 109, 9 Am. St. Rep. 173, 18 Pac. 125. See §§ 2076, 2096, 2097 herein.

[5] Modern Woodmen of America v. Breckenridge, 75 Kan. 373, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 136, 89 Pac. 661.

[6] St. Mary's Beneficial Soc. v. Burford, 70 Pa. St. 321.

[7] Taylor v. Modern Woodmen of America, 72 Kan. 443, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 283n, 83 Pac. 1099.

As to amendments, etc., of by-laws etc., prohibiting use of intoxicating liquors or drugs, see § 379f herein.

[8] Conley v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 158 Mich. 190, 122 N. W. 567, 38 Ins. L. J. 1112.

On morphinism of insured as affecting policy, see note in 39 L.R.A. 265.

[9] Hatch v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 550, 21 Am. Rep. 541, 542.

On liability under accident policy for death or injury resulting from

A woman who solicits and submits to a criminal abortion to get rid of an illegitimate foetus, violates the criminal laws, within the meaning of a clause in a life policy exempting the company from liability for death by violation of, or attempting to violate, the criminal law.[10]

§ 2617. Accident policy: injuries where no visible mark.—A condition in an accident policy that it does not cover injuries of which there are no "external and visible signs of injury upon the body of the insured," extends only to bodily injuries not resulting in death.[11] So where an accident policy covered a weekly indemnity for injuries not resulting in death, as well as a payment in case of death, and also provided that the insurance "shall not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no external and visible sign upon the body," and assured was found dead in his room, it being evident that his death had been caused by breathing illuminating gas, and there were no external or visible signs of injury upon his body, and the court found as a fact that the death was occasioned by accidental means, it was held that his death was one against which the decedent was insured, and that the above exception of liability in the policy, clearly had reference only to the weekly claim for indemnity, and not to an injury resulting in the death of the assured.[12]

It is pertinent in this connection to assert, and it should be an underlying principle, that in cases of this character the following rules of construction ought to apply: that the intention of the parties must govern, reference being had to the nature of the risk, the subject-matter and the object to be accomplished, and that where the terms of the policy are clear and unambiguous no room is left for construction; nor should the language employed in these contracts of exception from or limitation of liability be so extended or applied as to release insurer unless it clearly imports such intent and in cases of ambiguity the rule as to construction against surgical operation or medical treatment, see notes in 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1004, and L.R.A.1915E, 955.

[10] Wells v. New England Mutual Life Ins. Co. 191 Pa. St. 207, 53 L.R.A. 327, 71 Am. St. Rep. 763, 43 Atl. 126.

As to abortions, inquiry concerning, see § 1987a herein.

[11] Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, 3 L.R.A. 443, 20 N. E. 347; McGlinchey v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 80 Me. 25, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190, 14 Atl. Rep. 13; Eggenberger v. Guarantee Mutual Accident Assoc. 41 Fed. 172.

On what constitutes external and visible signs of injury within exemption provision of accident policy, see note in 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1022; on external, visible or violent character of means, see note in 2 B. R. C. 377.

[12] Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L.R.A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, 20 N. E. 347.

On death from asphyxiation, see notes in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, and L.R.A.1917D, 740.

insurer should also govern;[13] nor is it necessary in applying the above rule to encroach upon the province of the jury and the right of the parties to have it determine such questions of fact as should, under the law be properly submitted to it. It would, therefore, seem logically to follow that a clause in an accident policy precluding recovery where there are no "external and visible signs of injury upon the body of insured," or a provision that the insurance "does not cover injuries of which there is no visible mark upon the body," or clauses of like tenor and effect, should, within said rules of construction, be limited to their clearly expressed intent and not be so construed as to release insurer even though there are no "external and visible signs of injury upon the body," or "no visible mark upon the body," where it is reasonably clear that the injury or injuries in question resulted from or, within governing rules in such cases, were caused by an accident insured against and as a direct consequence thereof death has ensued; and even though death does not ensue, it may well be conceived that an accident may occur which results in serious injury or disablement, even though there is no visible mark upon the body, and the existence of such injury be ascertainable by observation or examination, in which case such exception or limitation of liability clauses should be enforced not only to protect insurer against fraudulent and sham claims but insured should also be given that protection for which he has in good faith contracted under his policy including protection against a strained interpretation to his detriment and not in accordance with the intent of his contract. That these propositions are supported by the authorities will appear from the above decisions as well also as from other adjudications which we have considered under this section.

So under an Indiana decision where a benefit certificate precluded recovery unless there was a visible mark upon the body caused by the accident, the body itself not being deemed such visible mark in case of death, the rule of construction against insurer governs and the term "visible" will be interpreted in its broad sense so that where assured in consequence of an accident died from a dislocated neck a recovery could be had if the results were ascertainable by examination, even though the then visible marks of the injury did not appear at the time of insured's death or thereafter.[14] And within the above principles where a theretofore healthy person dies from angina pectoris caused by an accident in falling from his bicycle, a recovery may be had under the policy, even though there are no visible marks upon the body, where insured's face was pallid immediately following the accident, and he became emaciated.[15] So where one, by lifting a heavy weight, causes a dilatation of his heart, resulting in his subsequent death, the injury is one where there is a visible external mark, if at once he becomes deathly pale and sick, his hands and feet cold, and perspiration stands out on his face and hands, and the next day his color changes from a ruddy to a bluish gray color, and so remains until his death.[16]

[13] See chapter on Construction, §§ 205 et seq. herein.

[14] Mutual Trust & Deposit Co. v. Travelers' Protection Assoc. of America, 57 Ind. App. 329, 104 N. E. 880. "Visible" is defined as: "Capable of being seen; perceptible by the sight, apparent, open, conspicuous. . . . Syn. Perceivable, perceptible, discernable, apparent, ob-

The application of the above stated underlying principles and the distinction above suggested between questions of law and fact, may also be instanced by a Minnesota case where a locomotive engineer was insured under a policy entitling him to a specified amount per week not exceeding a certain limited time "if totally disabled by accidental injury from following his vocation." Under the by-laws recovery was precluded for "an invisible injury unless certified to by a medical expert designated by the association." While insured was running his engine at a rapid rate it was derailed. Only slight external injuries were sustained by him but the evidence tended to show that, beginning a few days after the accident, and as a result thereof, he was so mentally deranged as to unfit him for duty and that this condition continued for nearly two years. It was decided that if his condition could be ascertained by observation or examination, it was a "visible injury" within the meaning of the by-law, but whether the injury was visible, and resulted from the accident was for the jury, and it was error to tell the jury in substance that if the alleged injury existed, and was "due to an outside force" insured was entitled to recover, since the question whether the injury was visible, the evidence not having been conclusive on that point, was not submitted to them to determine, and the charge practically eliminated the provision of the by-laws, above stated, from the case and submitted only the question whether plaintiff's mind had been unbalanced as claimed and if so whether that condition resulted from the accident, and a motion for a new trial having been denied the order was reversed. The court, per Taylor, C., said: "The purpose of such a provision vious, manifest, clear, distinct, evident, plain." Webster's Universal Dict. (1910–1911).

[15] Root v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. Ltd. 86 N. Y. Supp. 1055, 92 App. Div. 578.

[16] Horsfall v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 32 Wash. 132, 63 L.R.A. 425, 98 Am. St. Rep. 846, 72 Pac. 1028.

is to protect the insurer against sham claims, by barring the insured from recovering for alleged injuries of which there is no proof, except his own assertion. But it is well settled that visible injuries, within the meaning of such a provision, are not limited to external injuries, but also include any internal injuries, the existence of which may be ascertained through observation or examination." [17] And where an accident policy contained a clause that "the benefits shall not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no external and visible signs upon the body of the insured," and the evidence showed that the body of the insured when found had bloody froth at the mouth, and spots of blood upon the face and breast, and red spots on the body, and the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if there were no visible signs of an injury upon the body of the insured, except the froth and red spots, it did not constitute visible and external signs of injury, it was held that this was a question of fact properly determined by the jury, and the instruction was rightly refused.[18]

So insurance against accident, which it is stipulated shall not cover injuries of which there is no visible external mark upon the body of the assured, covers an accident of which there was no visible mark at the time of the injury, if there was such a mark afterward and as a result of the injury.[19] And any visible evidence of an internal strain which may appear within a reasonable time after the injury is received is "a visible mark upon the body." It need not be a bruise, contusion, laceration, or broken limb, and this applies where insured's shoulder was accidentally injured by a fall and the discoloration showed thereon and also upon his

[17] Peterson v. Locomotive Engineers' Mutual Life & Accident Ins. Assoc. 123 Minn. 585, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1022n, 144 N. W. 160, 43 Ins. L. J. 268, citing the following cases:

United States.—Dent v. Railway Mail Assoc. (U. S. C. C.) 183 Fed. 840, 40 Ins. L. J. 828, s. c. 213 Fed. 981; Barry v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. (U. S. C. C.) 23 Fed. 712, aff'd United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. 755.

Colorado.—Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Mondy, 18 Colo. App. 395, 71 Pac. 677.

Iowa.—Pennington v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 85 Iowa, 468, 39 Am. St. Rep. 306, 52 N. W. 482.

New Hampshire.—Thayer v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 68 N. H. 577, 41 Atl. 182, 28 Ins. L. J. 89.

New York.—Menneilly v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 148 N. Y. 596, 31 L.R.A. 686, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 43 N. E. 54; Gale v. Mutual Aid & Accident Assoc. 66 Hun, 600, 21 N. Y. Supp. 893.

Washington.—Horsfall v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 32 Wash. 132, 63 L.R.A. 425, 98 Am. St. Rep. 846, 72 Pac. 1028.

[18] United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, 3 S. E. 805.

[19] Pennington v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 85 Iowa, 468, 39 Am. St. Rep. 306, 52 N. W. 482.

arm.[20] And if the policy does not specify when the visible, external marks must be produced and does not state that the accident must at the very time of its happening have produced a visible or external sign, still if the visible marks are the result of the accident it is no defense that they did not instantly appear, but appeared subsequently, where the policy precludes recovery unless the accident alone results in producing visible, external marks of injury or violence suffered by the body or member; and the above applies where assured's hand had come into contact with poison ivy and shortly thereafter showed a discoloration which turned into an eruption and spread causing his death, such death being held accidental.[1] There is also a visible mark on the body where insured dies and an autopsy discloses redness of the tissue of the brain on one side.[2] So a provision in a policy that, to render the insurer liable, the death or disablement must not be from an accident that bears no external or visible marks, means that there must be some external and visible evidence that the death was accidental, and not that there must be external and visible marks on the person of decedent.[3]

Drowning, although not accompanied by external marks, is covered by a policy insuring against personal injury leaving upon the body external marks, where drowning appears in the list of accidents insured against, and a separate provision limits the liability to a certain percentage of the face of the policy in case of drowning in the absence of an eyewitness.[4] Under a policy insuring against death from such violent and accidental injuries as shall externally be visible on the body, and which alone caused death, evidence that the insured was found dead and mangled on [20] Thayer v. Standard Life & Accident Assoc. 68 N. H. 577, 41 Atl. 182, 28 Ins. L. J. 89.

On injury or disability from strain as within provision as to external, violent, and accidental means, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 562.

[1] Dent v. Railway Assoc. (U. S. C. C.) 183 Fed. 840, 40 Ins. L. J. 828, s. c. 213 Fed. 981.

[2] Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Mondy, 18 Colo. App. 395, 71 Pac. 677. Blood from insured's ear and nostril, issuing therefrom after death is "visible sign." Goodes v. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, 174 Mo. App. 330, 156 S. W. 995.

[3] Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 148 N. Y. 596, 31 L.R.A. 686, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 43 N. E. 54, rev'g 72 Hun, 477, 25 N. Y. Supp. 230.

[4] Lewis v. Brotherhood Accident Co. 194 Mass. 1, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 714, 79 N. E. 802.

On liability for death by drowning, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 631; on validity and construction of provision requiring the fact or circumstance of loss to be established by eye witness, note in 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 221; on whether general requirement as to external, violent, and accidental means applies to a separate provision as to liability in case of death or injury from certain specified causes, see note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 480.

a railroad track, establishes a prima facie case, and casts the burden of death upon insurer to show that death resulted from violation of some of the conditions in the policy specially pleaded in defense.[5]

§ 2617a. Visible marks of contusions or wounds: "wounds" defined.—In a Michigan case the policy provided: "That injury includes only the result of external, violent and accidental means leaving on the body marks of contusions or wounds visible to the naked eye" and it was held not error to charge that "the mark visible to the eye on the body required by the policy, need not be a bruise, contusion, laceration, or broken limb, but may be any visible indication of an internal injury, which may appear within a reasonable time after the injury is received, such for instance, as discoloration of the part of the body affected." This was immediately followed by the following sentence, which the court declared should be read in connection therewith: "In legal medicine the word 'wounds' means injuries of every description that affect either the hard or soft parts of the body and it comprehends bruises, contusions, fractures, luxations, etc. In law the word means any lesion of the body." In this case there was a red inflamed mark on the right side between the hip and the back appearing upon assured's arrival home immediately after the accident and an examination made by the physician the next day disclosed a discoloration of the skin, swelling, and redness over the right kidney and hip and in a few days thereafter insured died and the doctor testified that the injury caused the death and judgment against insurer was affirmed.[6] The Michigan case is relied on in a Vermont decision where the policy insured against accidental injuries from external causes leaving "external and visible marks of a wound" and the evidence fairly and reasonably tended to show that as a natural consequence of a bruise or abrasion of the skin upon insured's finger, a felon of the most severe kind developed without any intervening cause, within twenty-four hours, and it was decided that there was a distinction between the legal and surgical definition of "wound" and that said word should be given its legal construction of "any lesion of the body" and included the bruise if any there was, upon insured's finger of which the felon was the direct and natural consequence and that said felon con-

[5] Meadows v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 50 Am. St. Rep. 427, 31 S. W. 578.

On duty of insured to negative death or accident from excepted cause, see notes in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, and 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1006.

[6] Thompson v. Loyal Protective Assoc. 167 Mich. 31, 132 N. W. 54, 40 Ins. L. J. 2168. See also for substantially the same ruling as to the meaning of "visible injury," Royal Casualty Co. v. Nelson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 153 S. W. 674.

stituted an "external and visible marks" of the wound left upon assured's body by the accidental injury.[7]

§ 2618. Excepted liability where death or injury "may be caused by intentional injuries inflicted by assured or any other person."—An ordinary provision in accident policies is that exempting the insurer from liability in case the insured dies or suffers any disabilities which may have been caused by intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person. Where a policy contains such a provision, no recovery can be had where injuries are inflicted by the insured intentionally, or when insane, or if he is murdered;[8] for murder is an "intentional injury" within the exception from liability in an accident policy;[9] and although there

[7] Robinson v. Masonic Protection Assoc. 87 Vt. 138, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 924 (annotated on liability under accident policy for injury resulting in felon or abscess), 88 Atl. 531, 42 Ins. L. J. 1794. The court, per Watson, J., said: "The word 'wound' is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as follows: 'Any lesion of the body.' In this it differs from the meaning of the word when used in surgery. The latter only refers to a solution of continuity; while the former comprises not only these, but also every other kind of accident, such as bruises, contusions, fractures, dislocations, and the like.' The definitions given by Rapalje and Lawrence in their Law Dictionary, is exactly to the same effect, making the same distinction. And in Stewart's Legal Medicine, a book published in 1910, sec. 100, the same distinction between the surgical and the legal definitions is noticed."

[8] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McCarthy, 15 Colo. 351, 22 Am. St. Rep. 410, 11 L.R.A. 297, 25 Pac. 713; De Graw v. National Accident Soc. 4 N. Y. Supp. 912, 20 N. Y. St. Rep. 607, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 342.

On provision exempting insurer or limiting its liability in case of an injury intentionally inflicted by another, see note in 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 524; on murder of insured by beneficiary as affecting right to proceeds, see note in L.R.A.1917B, 671.

[9] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360.

Cited in: United States.—Brown v. United States Casualty Co. 88 Fed. 38, 44; Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America v. Langholz, 86 Fed. 60, 62, 29 C. C. A. 630, 52 U. S. App. 643.

Alabama.—Orr v. Travelers Ins. Co. 120 Ala. 647, 651, 24 So. 997.

Colorado.—Travelers Ins. Co. v. McCarthy, 15 Colo. 351, 353, 11 L.R.A. 297, 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 410, 25 Pac. 713.

Georgia.—Travelers Ins. Co. v. Wyness, 107 Ga. 584, 590, 34 S. E. 113.

Illinois.—Railway Officials & Employees Accident Assoc. v. McCabe, 61 Ill. App. 565; United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Millard, 43 Ill. App. 148, 149.

Maine.—Matson v. Travelers Ins. Co. 93 Maine, 469, 473, 74 Am. St. Rep. 368, 45 Atl. 518.

Missouri.—Lovelace v. Travelers Protective Assoc. 126 Mo. 104, 115, 30 L.R.A. 209, 213, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638, 28 S. W. 877; Phelan v. Travelers Ins. Co. 38 Mo. App. 640, 646.

Pennsylvania.—Miller v. Inter-State Casualty Co. 6 Lack. Legal News, 64.

Texas.—Johnson v. Travelers Ins. Co. 15 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 316, 39 S. W. 972; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Houston, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (3 Willson) 508.

may have been no provocation for the killing, yet the policy is avoided;[10] and where a policy insuring against accidents exempts the insurer from liability for injuries intentionally inflicted on himself by the assured, or inflicted upon himself or received while insane, the court cannot interpolate the word "intentionally" before the second clause, and hold the insurer liable for injuries received by the assured while insane, though not intentionally inflicted or received.[11] So a policy insuring against accident, but providing that for injuries received while the assured was insane, the measure of liability of the insurer should be a sum equal to the premium paid, does not warrant a recovery for injuries received during a period of insanity, though not self-inflicted nor due to want of sanity.[12]

Intentional injuries inflicted by insured or any other person, for which the insurer is exempted from liability by the terms of an accident policy, cannot be restricted to injuries inflicted by the insured, or through his procurement or consent; and the insurer is not liable for the death of insured resulting from intentional injury inflicted by another person.[13] Nor under such a provision can there be a recovery when injury to the insured is intentional as to the person inflicting it, though accidental as to the insured, in that he does not expect or anticipate it.[14] Nor can insured recover if the evidence of intentional injury preponderates against the presumption of accident.[15] Again, failure of police officers, having charge of the holder of an accident policy, to protect him from assaults by other persons, will not take his killing by them out of a provision in the policy that no recovery can be had upon it in case of death from intentional injuries inflicted by insured or any other person.[16] An injury intentionally inflicted on an assured by another person, is an accidental injury within the meaning of a policy against injuries from external violence and accidental

Wisconsin.—Butero v. Travelers Accident Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 536, 540, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 N. W. 811; Button v. American Mutual Accident Assoc. 92 Wis. 83, 85, 53 Am. St. Rep. 900, 65 N. W. 861. See Garrila v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. (Pa.) 63 Leg. Intell. 288, 15 Dist. Rep. 432.

[10] Fischer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 77 Cal. 246, 1 L.R.A. 572, 19 Pac. 425.

[11] Blunt v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 145 Cal. 268, 67 L.R.A. 793, 104 Am. St. Rep. 34, 78 Pac. 729, 34 Ins. L. J. 166.

[12] Blunt v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 145 Cal. 368, 67 L.R.A. 793, 104 Am. St. Rep. 34, 78 Pac. 729, 34 Ins. L. J. 166.

[13] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McCarthy, 15 Colo. 351, 11 L.R.A. 297, 25 Pac. 713.

[14] Butero v. Travelers' Accident Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 536, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 S. W. 811.

[15] Butero v. Travelers' Accident Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 536, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 S. W. 811.

[16] Jarnagin v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. 133 Fed. 892, 68 L.R.A. 499.

means, though the policy provides that the insured shall not be liable for intentional injuries. The word "intentional" so used, refers to the acts of the insured alone.[17]

A person insured under an accident policy containing a provision that the insurance shall not cover "intentional injuries inflicted by the insured, or by any other person, except burglars and robbers," cannot recover when he is violently assaulted by another person, not a burglar or robber, who intentionally strikes him, causing the injury under which he claims to recover.[18]

In Kentucky a condition in a life policy that no claim shall be made under the policy when death or injury is caused by intentional injuries inflicted by the assured or any other person bars a recovery where the assured is waylaid and assassinated for the purpose of robbery;[19] and in a later case in this same state it is held that if an officer is shot by a prisoner, whom he is attempting to arrest, the death is within an exception of liability for "intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person."[20] It was subsequently held, however, that intentional killing by a third person of insured without the latter's connivance or foreknowledge, constituted an accident within the intent of the policy and that the omission of the word, "death" from a clause providing that the policy shall not extend to, or cover intentional injuries inflicted by any other person when it is used in other excepting clauses immediately contiguous, renders insurer liable for the murder of insured.[1] And where assured is assassinated by some person unknown, the recovery can only be that limited by an exemption of liability under a clause providing that only a certain amount is recoverable in case of injury fatal or otherwise, or where injuries are intentionally inflicted upon assured by any person other than himself.[2] And the inference is held conclusive that a person shooting another intended to take his life where he approaches him from behind and deliberately aims and fires a deadly weapon at him, and the person so shot dies from the wound thus inflicted, nor is this inference rebutted by the fact that other persons were in close proximity to the one killed and might have been

[17] Button v. American Mutual Accident Assoc. 92 Wis. 83, 53 Am. St. Rep. 900, 65 N. W. 861.

[18] Matson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 93 Me. 469, 74 Am. St. Rep. 368, 45 Atl. 518.

[19] Hutcheraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 300, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484, 8 S. E. 570, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 260.

[20] American Accident Co. v. Carson, — Ky. —, 30 S. W. 879.

[1] American Accident Co. v. Carson. 99 Ky. 441, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 308, 34 L.R.A. 301, 59 Am. St. Rep. 473, 36 S. W. 169.

[2] General Accident Fire & Life Assoc. Corp. Ltd. v. Stedman, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 153 S. W. 692.

injured by the shot.[3] In a Michigan case a deserter was shot, as alleged, in self-defense by an officer, who attempted to arrest him, and it was held, under an exemption of liability clause, exonerating insurer if the death of assured was the result of design on the part of assured or of any other person, that if when the officer fired the shot he did not know the man he fired at was the assured and did not intend to kill him, it could not be said as a matter of law that assured lost his life by design of the officer, as the design contemplated by the policy must be the design that intended the actual result and not the design of the act itself which resulted in the killing of one contrary to the design.[4] Under a Georgia decision if a policy insures against bodily injuries effected through external, violent and accidental means, but exempts insurer from liability in case of injuries intentionally inflicted upon assured by any other person, sane or insane, such provision has reference to assured as the person against whom the intention to injure is formed and upon whom, in pursuance of such intent, the injury is inflicted, and the clause does not apply where a person intending to inflict an injury upon another inflicts bodily injury upon assured by mistake, instead of upon the one whom he had intended to injure, and assured has done nothing to bring about the injury and is not aware of any intent to injure him. In brief, insured is not intentionally injured where the intent is formed against another person and carried out upon assured through mistaking him for that person.[5] As opposed to the Georgia decision and distinguished from the Michigan case, it is held in Alabama that it is wholly immaterial whether or not insured was known to the slayer, or whether he mistook him for some other person whom he intended to shoot, and that if in fact, having the mental capacity, he intended to shoot the human being who accosted him and threatened to obstruct his flight from arrest, his act was an intentional act, and the killing was an intentional result irrespective of what he may have supposed was the name or personal identity of his victim, and accordingly it was held that the act was voluntary and the shooting was in no sense accidental so far as the assailant was concerned, and it therefore came within the restrictive clause of the policy. In this case there was a limitation of the amount payable where the injury, causing the loss, resulted wholly, or in part, from the intentional act of assured or any other person. Insured, a police officer, was shot and killed by a drunken person who was fleeing from arrest and was shooting at anybody and everybody who opposed him. The court, per Somerville, J., said: "What is an 'intentional act' may seem a matter of very simple solution to the intelligent layman, but to the judge who is familiar with the learning of the books, and who ventures into the metaphysical subtleties which encumber judicial definition, the question is full of difficulty.

[3] Gaynor v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 12 Ga. App. 601, 77 S. E. 1072.

[4] Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812. Examine Railway Mail Assoc. v. Moseley, 211 Fed. 1, 127 C. C. A. 427, 43 Ins. L. J. 807, fully considered elsewhere herein.

[5] Newsome v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 143 Ga. 785, 85 S. E. 1035.

"In its present application, the phrase ought to be given that simple and common sense meaning which the parties to the contract intended it should express.

"Obviously, we think, this meaning is not to be determined upon a consideration merely of the criminal responsibility of the actor, nor of his moral accountability according to the refined principles of psychology.

"(1) If the actor has intelligence enough to understand the physical nature and consequence of his act, and, without the compulsion of an irresistable physical force, or of an irresistable insane impulse, consciously directs his action so that the injury of the insured is the natural or probable consequence thereof, then that injury is the result of an intentional act.

"Of course, the injury of the person must be intended, as well as the act which causes such injury.[6] But it must always be presumed that injury which is the natural or probable result of the conscious and voluntary application of unlawful force to the person of another was the intended result of that action.

"It follows, from what we have said, that either the insanity or the drunkenness of an actor may be of such a degree as to lead to the conclusion that an act in question was not his intentional act.

(2) "Where, as here, the evidence tends to show not only the drunkenness of the actor causing the injury, but also the degree of his drunkenness, and exhibits also contemporaneous conduct of an equivocal character, his capacity to do an intentional act is very clearly a question of fact for the jury.[7]

"The trial court properly submitted this issue to the jury. But the capacity of McGuffin, the slayer of the insured, to form a specific intent to kill him, is not an accurate test of his capacity to do an intentional injurious act; nor was the entertainment of such an intent by McGuffin an essential element of an intentional injury to the assured—as seems to have been stated to the jury by

[6] Orr v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 120 Ala. 647, 652. 24 So. 997. King v. State, 90 Ala. 613, 8 So. 856. See also Snead v. Scott, 182 Ala. 97,

[7] Armour v. State, 63 Ala. 173; 62 So. 36, 39.

the trial judge." [8] Under an Indiana decision it is declared that intentional injuries inflicted upon the assured by some other person within the meaning of such a clause, refers to injuries which the other person actually directed against assured and intended to inflict upon him, and that the contract has reference to the actual intention of the person inflicting the injury, rather than such an intention as the law presumes against a wrongdoer, so that if an act is shown which would reasonably and naturally result in injury to some one of several persons, the presumption exists that the actor intended to injure someone, but no presumption exists against anyone except said actor that he intended the injury for the particular person who received it, that is, the injury actually inflicted must be the one which it was intended to inflict and that the intention of such actor controls and it is immaterial that the injury may have been wholly unforeseen and unexpected by assured. In this case, however, the facts were different in that shots were fired into a group of men by a bank robber, and insured, a bank cashier, was killed, and it was held that when one is murdered, without fault, it is an accident, and death by accidental means, covers an event which takes place without expectation or foresight.[9]

An objection that the injury inflicted upon assured was not the precise one intended by the person who made the assault, will not be considered where insured sustained an injury and the person inflicting it intended to inflict it and did so, and assured was without fault in the matter, and this applies under a clause exempting insurer from liability for intentional injuries "inflicted by the insured, or by any other person, except burglars or robbers" and assured was violently assaulted by another person not a burglar or robber, and in such case there can be no recovery.[10]

A distinction is made, in so far as the intention is concerned between the act and the result thereof, as where insured was struck by another and died from a fracture of the skull caused by a fall upon the pavement, for in such case it was the blow and not the fatal result which was intentionally inflicted. The court, per Sharp, C., said: "In the absence of any provision to the contrary, a policy insuring against death effected through 'external, violent and accidental means,' an injury inflicted intentionally by another upon the insured, but without the foreknowledge or connivance of the insured, is within the terms of the policy rendering the company liable. If the injury is not brought about by the agency of the insured, and if it is not anticipated by him, it is none-the-less accidental as far as he is concerned, although it may be inflicted with malice and premeditation by the other party: the great weight of authority being that an injury intentionally inflicted upon the insured by another is accidental, if it is unintentional on the part of the insured. As a protection against this class of liability, a clause is frequently inserted in policies of accident insurance, specifying that the policy shall not cover injuries fatal or otherwise, intentionally inflicted upon the insured by himself or some other person. Ordinarily, where a policy expressly so provides, it is not necessary that the insured should take part in the intent of such third person, in order to make the exception operative, and relieve the company from its liability. The policy, in such cases, becomes one of limited indemnity as contradistinguished from that of general indemnity. It is shown that the blow sustained by the insured was intentionally inflicted. . . . As we have seen, the insured's death was accidental. The injury which resulted fatally was not intentionally inflicted by Keys. The case differs materially from the great majority of the reported cases. Had Keys had in his hand a deadly weapon, the use of which was reasonably calculated to produce death, and in fact did so, a different question would be presented. No motive for killing the latter is shown to have existed, and the means used indicates only an intention to strike the insured. The result was unforeseen and unusual, and not such as would ordinarily follow a blow of the fist. It was not the logical result of a deliberate act, and could not reasonably have been anticipated by Keys, and he cannot be charged with a design of producing it. It was the result of fortuitous circumstances." [11]

[8] Continental Casualty Co. v. Cunningham, 188 Ala. 159, L.R.A.1915A, 538, 66 So. 41, 44 Ins. L. J. 452.

[9] Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America v. Fawcett, 56 Ind. App. 111, 104 N. E. 991.

[10] Matson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 93 Me. 469, 45 Atl. 518, 29 Ins. L. J. 354.

Whether a wound was intentionally self-inflicted or not is a question for the jury.[12] And where there was a limitation of liability to a proportionate amount of that otherwise payable in case of death

[11] Union Accident Co. v. Willis, 44 Okla. 578, L.R.A.1915D, 358, 145 Pac. 812, 45 Ins. L. J. 387, considering or citing and relying upon the following decisions:

Alabama.—Orr v. Travelers Ins. Co. 120 Ala. 647, 24 So. 997.

California.—Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455, 26 Pac. 762.

Georgia.—Gaynor v. Travelers Ins. Co. 12 Ga. App. 601, 77 S. E. 1072.

Indiana.—Travelers' Protective Assoc. v. Fawcett, 56 Ind. App. 111, 104 N. E. 991.

Michigan.—Utter v. Travelers Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812.

Nebraska.—Railway Officials & Employees Accident Assoc. v. Drummond, 56 Neb. 235, 76 N. W. 562.

Texas.—Travelers Protective Assoc. v. Weil, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 91 S. W. 886.

[12] Long v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 259, 85 N. W. 24.

due to injuries intentionally inflicted by insured, or by any other person, except assaults committed for the sole purpose of burglary or robbery, and assured was stopped in a public street in the evening and started to run and was shot, it was held, that whether he was assaulted for the sole purpose of robbery was a question for the jury.[13] But in the absence of evidence of a crime, the jury are not required to find that an insured person, found dead with a pistol wound in his head, came to his death by the intentional act of another, so as to take the case out of the provisions of a policy insuring against death by accident.[14]

§ 2619. Dueling or fighting.—If assured, being unarmed, is shot while engaged in an altercation, this is not within an exception of liability for death resulting from dueling or fighting, or happening while or in consequence of violating law, but the death is accidental.[15] So an altercation, even though it may be called a fight, brought about without premeditation on assured's part and words of another, is not a duel which as ordinarily understood implies a fighting with deadly weapons by previous concert in order to settle some prior or existing quarrel.[16]

The clause of exemption from liability from fighting, etc., contemplates some degree of blame on assured's part, some extent of voluntary participation, some improper conduct, and does not cover assured's act in resisting assault, and inflicting an injury upon the person assaulting him where the altercation is unavoidable and one over which he has no control and which is not occasioned by any improper act on his part.[17] Where the death of the insured is caused by a gunshot wound inflicted by another, and is the direct result of a mutual encounter or combat voluntarily entered into by them, no recovery can be had under a policy excepting the company from liability for death caused by fighting. In such case it is immaterial whether the slayer was sane or insane.[18] And if assured is assaulted and injured he is not aided by the claim that the person committing the assault did not intend to inflict the particular injury sustained, where the injury inflicted

[13] Kennedy v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 242 Ill. 396, 90 N. E. 292.

[14] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Milward, 26 Ky. L. R. 589, 68 L.R.A. 285, 82 S. W. 364.

[15] Robinson v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. (U. S. C. C.) 68 Fed. 825.

[16] Baker v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 103 Miss. 374, 60 So. 333, 42 Ins. L. J. 348.

[17] Coles v. New York Casualty Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 87 App. Div. 41. Clause was: "Fighting, wrestling, scuffling, altercation, feud, quarreling or assault."

[18] Gresham v. Equitable Accident Ins. Co. 87 Ga. 497, 27 Am. St. Rep. 263, 13 L.R.A. 838, 13 S. E. 752.

is within the general purpose to injure, and this is so even though the assault was made under a misapprehension of fact and an apology is thereafter made and accepted, and in such case a judgment for assured will be reversed under an exemption of liability clause where assured received injuries in fighting, etc., or for intentional injuries inflicted by assured or any other person.[19] So insured meets his death while "fighting," within a clause limiting the amount of recovery in such case, where he is killed by another whom he is pursuing and shooting at because of being called a vile name by said person.[20] And if assured while fighting receives an injury there can be no recovery under a policy exemption of liability for injuries intentionally inflicted upon assured, or received while violating law or fighting.[1]

§ 2619a. Death in assault, quarrel, or fight.—Where one brings on a personal encounter with another, but abandons it, and, while in good faith retreating to avoid further difficulty, and not for the purpose of obtaining a vantage ground to renew it, is killed by his adversary, the death is not within the meaning of a policy, exempting against liability for a death in violation or attempted violation of any criminal law.[2] And where assured was the aggressor and sought out another person with intent to provoke a controversy or assault and succeeded by words and threats in bringing about a fight which resulted in his death, it constitutes death while violating the law and precludes recovery.[3] But a clause in a life policy, providing that "if death occurs from assault provoked by quarreling, no recovery can be had," must have a reasonable construction, and the death of the insured cannot be regarded as coming within its meaning, unless it occurred as the result of a quarrel provoked by himself, and of so serious a nature that he might reasonably have expected that anger be thereby aroused, and injury inflicted. It is not every frivolous controversy that is a quarrel within the meaning of such a clause.[4] And where insured

[19] Travelers' Protective Assoc. v. Weil, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 91 S. W. 886.

[20] Continental Casualty Co. v. Fleming, — Ky. —, 124 S. W. 331.

[1] Washington v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 115 Mo. App. 627, 91 S. W. 988.

[2] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Bradley, 73 Ark. 274, 67 L.R.A. 770, 108 Am. St. Rep. 38, 83 S. W. 1055, 3 Ann. Cas. 872, cited in Railway Mail Assoc. v. Moseley, 211 Fed. 1, 127 C. C. A. 427, 43 Ins. L. J. 807, 817.—Hollister, D. J. (fully considered elsewhere herein). See Utter v. Travelers Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812 (under § 2618 herein).

[3] Payne v. Union Life Guards, 136 Mich. 416, 112 Am. St. Rep. 368, 99 N. W. 376.

[4] Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 8723. See Coles v. New York Casualty Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 87 App. Div. 41.

was unarmed and advanced upon another with offensive words in an aggressive manner, constituting in effect a challenge to fight, and he was ignorant of the fact that his adversary carried a deadly weapon, and received no warning from him that he would shoot if the advance continued, and assured had no reason to believe that his opponent was armed and intended upon assured's advance to kill him, and he is killed, his death is accidental as to him, though the act producing it was intentional on the part of the slayer, and in such case it is not error to decline to comply with a special request to charge which omits from the hypothesis presented the elements of knowledge or reasonable apprehension on the part of assured of the fact that his adversary was armed, and, on his continued approach would shoot to kill, when such requested charge if given would have told the jury, upon the case stated, that the death of assured was the result of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, although he neither knew, nor could reasonably have apprehended that his adversary was armed and would use his pistol upon him, and this applies where the policy insures against loss of life resulting from bodily injuries sustained through external, violent and accidental means, but the policy also stipulates that it does not cover voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[5] So the death of a person who is shot by one whom he is trying to eject by force from a hotel office, is a death by accident, and not a risk voluntarily assumed, where he makes the attempt without knowing that the other person is armed.[6]

The burden of proof is upon insurer to show that assured was the aggressor.[7] And whether or not assured was the aggressor may or may not be a question which should be submitted to the jury as it depends upon the sufficiency of the evidence.[8]

§ 2619b. Assault: death or injury in self-defense: aggressor: offending party.[9]—If there is created a reasonable apprehension

[5] Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Harroll, 98 Tenn. 591, 40 S. W. 1080, 27 Ins. L. J. 176. Citing Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America, 126 Mo. 104, 30 L.R.A. 209, 28 S. W. 877; Accident Ins. Co. of North America v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 16 S. W. 723. See §§ 2624–2627 herein.

[6] Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. 126 Mo. 104, 30 L.R.A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 635, 28 S. W. 877. See Coles v. New York Casualty Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 87 App. Div. 41, condition here was voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.

[7] Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Jackson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 1137.

[8] Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Jackson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 1137 (submitted to jury); Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Purdom, 147 Ky. 177, 143 S. W. 1021 (not submitted to jury).

[9] See also governing principle in connection with cases of self-defense under § 2618 herein.

of danger to assured by the words and acts of another, and assured defends himself against what appears to be an unlawful assault upon him, and such actual danger is preceded by appearances which justify such self-defense, and if assured in so defending himself is killed and upon the evidence said person is the aggressor, a judgment against assurer will be affirmed. In the case holding as above stated the assurer claimed nonliability on the ground that assured met his death in violation of law. It appeared that assured had heard that a certain person had threatened his life and upon meeting him a short time thereafter said person had picked up his gun and assured had done the same and there was a shooting affray resulting as above stated.[10] So death which is the result of a personal rencontre while the insured is acting in the lawful defense of his person at the time, when he has reasonable ground for believing that his adversary intends him a great personal injury, is not within such clause.[11] And an injury is intentionally inflicted, where an assaulted person, in protecting himself, inflicts an injury upon the aggressor which disables him for some time.[12] Under a Georgia decision it is held not error under the evidence to charge the jury that if it believed that insured did not voluntarily enter into a fight, but became involved by the fault of his adversary, and what he did was in defense of himself then such act on the part of insured would not bar the right to recover the whole amount of the policy. In this case liability was excluded where the accident or disability resulted wholly or partly, directly or indirectly, from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger; said clause was urged in defense and also that assured lost his life as the result of a felonious assault upon another in violation of law. Assured lost his life as the result of an altercation or fight brought on by words, in which assured used a pistol, but was killed by being knocked down with a piece of scantling by his adversary and beaten to death. It was also held that a verdict for recovery was authorized and that there was no error in refusing a new trial.[13]

But where assured is killed while making an assault in violation of a penal statute, even though it was claimed that assured was acting in self-defense still if the circumstances are such as not to justify the assault in self-defense, there is such a violation of law as to preclude recovery under an exception of liability if assured

[10] Woodmen of the World v. McCoslin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 894.

[11] Overton v. St. Louis Mutual Life Ins. Co. 39 Mo. 122, 90 Am. Rep. 455.

[12] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Smith, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 71 S. W. 391.

[13] Empire Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 142 Ga. 330, 82 S. E. 893, 44 Ins. L. J. 560. The Chief Justice and an associate judge dissented.

should die in violation of law.[14] And if assured brings on the difficulty and is shot by another in self-defense there is such a violation of law as to prevent recovery of the policy amount, otherwise said amount may be recovered. The jury should, however, be instructed concerning what constitutes a violation of law.[15]

The right of recovery under a provision precluding the payment of benefits for death or disability if insured shall be killed in any controversy, quarrel, or fight, in which he was the offending party, and the question whether or not insured was the offending party where he was killed in an altercation, will depend upon the fact whether or not he was the aggressor, and whether his act as such was based upon the reasonable belief on his part, acting in good faith, that he was in danger of his life, or would suffer great bodily harm, and that it was necessary to protect himself from a threatened assault by his opponent.[16]

§ 2619c. Assault upon officer of the law: resisting arrest.—A violation of law may be shown by evidence that assured was killed by a marshal upon whom he made an unlawful assault.[17] And where assured enters into an altercation with a policeman, who has stopped him while driving, and is shot and killed, the court may properly refuse to set aside a verdict that assured had not voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, where the evidence does not clearly show whether or not assured had drawn a pistol threatening to kill the policeman before he himself was shot.[18] And where a deserter was shot, as alleged, in self-defense by the sheriff, who was attempting to arrest him, it was held that it could not be held a matter of law that he was shot while engaged in an unlawful act, so as to avoid a policy providing against liability for death while engaged in or in consequence of any unlawful act.[19] If the officer is shot by a prisoner whom he is attempting to arrest the death has been held within the exception of liability for injuries inflicted by

[14] Woodmen of the World v. Hipp, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 147 S. W. 316.

[15] Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World v. Purdom, 147 Ky. 177, 143 S. W. 1021.

[16] Knights of Maccabees of the World v. Shields, 156 Ky. 270, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 853, 160 S. W. 1043.

[17] Eminent Household of Columbian Woodmen v. Howle, 109 Ark. 400, 160 S. W. 238. Compare Railway Mail Assoc. v. Moseley, 211 Fed. 1, 127 C. C. A. 427, 43 Ins. L. J. 807, fully considered elsewhere herein.

[18] De Greayer v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 126 Cal. 17, 58 Pac. 390.

[19] Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, 32 N. W. 812. Examine Railway Mail Assoc. v. Moseley, 211 Fed. 1, 127 C. C. A. 427, 43 Ins. L. J. 807 (considered elsewhere herein); Continental Casualty Co. v. Cunningham, 188 Ala. 159, L.R.A.1915A, 538, 66 So. 41, 44 Ins. L. J. 452; Newsome v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 143 Ga. 785, 85 S. E. 1035; Gaynor v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 12 Ga. App. 601, 77 S. E. 1072.

insured or any other person;[20] although under a subsequent decision of the same case it was decided that intentional killing by a third person of insured without the latter's connivance or consent constituted an accident.[1] There is, however, no breach of the exception as to death in violation of law where insured was insane and he was killed while resisting arrest.[2]

§ 2619d. Injuries while hunting.—An exception of liability if injuries are received while hunting, does not apply where assured, while on a hunting expedition, is injured in helping bring material for a fire.[3]

§ 2620. Excepted liability: taking of poison: contact with poisonous substances: inhaling gas.—A frequent provision in accident policies is that exempting the insurer from liability if death or injury be caused by "the taking of poison." Where a policy contains such a provision it has been held that if the insured takes poison by mistake the insurers are not discharged.[4] But it is also decided that if insurer is exempt, under an accident policy, from liability in case of death by poison, it is not answerable for a death caused by poison accidently administered. To defeat a claim under the policy, it is not necessary that the poison should have been taken with intent to produce death.[5] And if the policy excepts the voluntary or involuntary taking of poison, it would seem that in such a case the insurer would be discharged where poison is taken by mistake.[6] So the accidental taking by assured of an overdose of poison by mistake in place of medicine prescribed by a physician, is within the clause "voluntary or involuntary" taking of poison, as the term "involuntary" does not restrict the application of said clause to an enforced taking.[7] But in Illinois a contrary view has been taken.[8]

See as to underlying governing principle, § 2618 herein.

[20] American Accident Co. v. Carson, — Ky. —, 30 S. W. 879.

[1] American Accident Co. v. Carson, 99 Ky. 441, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 308, 34 L.R.A. 301, 59 Am. St. Rep. 473, 36 S. W. 169.

[2] Woodmen of the World v. Dodd, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 254.

[3] Wilkinson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 72 S. W. 1016.

[4] Pollock v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204. But see Hill v. Hartford Accident Ins. Co. 22 Hun (N. Y.) 187.

On death from taking poisonous substance as accident or accidental means, see note in L.R.A.1916A, 481.

[5] Early v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 113 Mich. 58, 67 Am. St. Rep. 445, 71 N. W. 500. See Travelers Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642, 52 Am. St. Rep. 355, 43 N. E. 765.

[6] Cole v. Accident Ins. Co. 61 L. T. N. S. 227.

[7] Kennedy v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 31 Tex. Civ. App. 509, 72 S. W. 602.

[8] Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Tuggle, 39 Ill. App. 509. Compare Travelers Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642, 52 Am. St. Rep. 355, 43 N. E. 765, considered under § 2621 herein.

A clause in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for death resulting from the "taking of poison or contact with poisonous substance," does not embrace a case where the insured, a physician, while preparing medicine for a syphilitic patient, accidentally cuts his finger by the breaking of a bottle, and the virus from the patient enters the wound causing fatal blood poisoning.[9] So contact with poison or poisonous or infectious substances, is held not to include death resulting from blood poisoning from a bite by a dog which insured was holding and that such bite was the proximate cause of death and could not by such clause be excluded from the accident provision of the policy and included under the health provision.[10] Again, the word "absorbed," in a provision in an accident policy that it does not cover injuries from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise absorbed or inhaled, refers only to the process of absorption by sucking up or imbibing through the pores of the body.[11] But an injury caused by carbolic acid being thrown in insured's face by a woman, is within the clause as to contact with poisonous substances as said clause is not restricted to voluntary contact or to the taking of poison internally.[12] And no recovery can be had for injury resulting from inflammation of the eyes in consequence of accidentally coming in contact with poison ivy, whereby the irritating poison was absorbed into the eye, under a policy against the effects of bodily injury caused solely by external, violent, and accidental means, wherein it is provided that the insurance does not cover injury, fatal or nonfatal, resulting from any poison or infection, or from anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled.[13] In cases of this character, however, the exact terms of the exemption clause are important and accordingly the word "taken" is to be construed in connection with the word "administered" and both should be used in connection with the expression "accidental or otherwise" and in such cases the exemption clause does not cover death resulting to assured from contact with poison ivy

[9] Central Accident Ins. Co. v. Rembe, 220 Ill. 151, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933, 110 Am. St. Rep. 235, 77 N. E. 123.

On liability on accident policy for sickness or injury caused by blood poisoning, see notes in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 926, and L.R.A. 1917A, 1056.

[10] Farner v. Massachusetts Mutual Accident Assoc. 219 Pa. 71, 123 Am. St. Rep. 621, 67 Atl. 927, aff'g 32 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 204.

[11] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Waterman, 161 Ill. 632, 32 L.R.A. 654, 44 N. E. 283. See § 2621 herein.

On liability under accident policy for condition caused by external infection without cut or abrasion, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 140.

[12] Meehan v. Traders' & Travelers' Accident Co. 68 N. Y. Supp. 821, 34 Misc. 158.

[13] Preferred Accident Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 45 Fla. 525, 61 L.R.A. 145, 33 So. 1005.

while cutting a branch or bush in the woods where he would not ordinarily or reasonably expect to be poisoned and had no knowledge of the existence there of poison ivy. In addition the fact should be considered that such exemption clause was undoubtedly inserted to exclude a death by suicide.[14] The court, per Willard, D. J., distinguishes from other cases, this case where the condition was: "Nor shall any benefit be paid when death or disability results from voluntarily inflicted injuries, by the member sane or insane; nor from poison or other injurious matter taken or administered accidentally or otherwise," and say: "An examination of the authorities cited by the defendant makes it plain that the policies differ in important particulars from the policy here.

"The first case cited is McGlother v. Provident Mutual Accident Company of Philadelphia.[15] The policy there contained the words 'or from poison, contact with poisonous substances.' If that clause had stopped with the word 'poison,' the case would have been stronger than this; but it does not stop there, but says also 'contact with poisonous substances,' which makes it much stronger than this case. If those words had been contained in this policy, it would have been very difficult, in my judgment, for the plaintiff to recover.

"It was entirely within the power of the company to have made this provision plain. If it had intended to exclude any liability on account of death caused by any poison, in any way, it could have used the language that was before the court in the McGlother Case. But it did not do that.

"The same thing may be said of the case cited by defendant from the Supreme Court of Florida, the case of Preferred Accident Insurance Company v. Robinson.[16]

"The word 'absorbed' was not in that case used in connection with the word 'poison.' That policy provided as follows:

" 'Nor injury, fatal or nonfatal, resulting from any poison or infection, nor from anything whatever, accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed or inhaled.'

"This was a positive provision that the policy did not cover a case which resulted from poison. It went further than this certificate goes in that respect, and also went further than this certificate in another respect; for it provided that it should not apply to a case of injury resulting from anything whatever, accidentally or otherwise taken, administered or absorbed. The word 'absorbed' is not found in this policy.

[14] Dent v. Railway Mail Assoc. (U. S. C. C.) 183 Fed. 840, 40 Ins. L. J. 828.

[15] 89 Fed. 685, 32 C. C. A. 318.

[16] 45 Fla. 525, reported in 33 So. 1005, 61 L.R.A. 145.

"The case of Bacon v. United States Mutual Accident Association,[17] had to do with a policy which contained the simple phrase 'from poison,' without any qualifying words. It being within the power of the company by the use of those words to exempt it from liability from this particular loss, if there is any doubt as to what the policy means, it must be construed against the company. And although Judge Sanborn says in the opinion first cited that his proposition has been very much abused, yet it must be applied, I think, to a case of this kind where there is a real doubt. In that case there was no doubt, because, the person having been killed from poison, whether he took it accidentally, or not, he must have died from poison.

"But the question here is whether the insured died from poison taken or administered, and I think the construction of these words 'Taken or administered,' excludes the manner in which Dent came to his death."

Where a policy excepted the insurers from liability "where death was caused by taking poison, or by the contact with poisonous substances," and the insured died from the effect of inhaling coal gas, concerning which the testimony was conflicting as to the point whether or not it was a poison or poisonous substance, it was held no error on the part of the trial judge to refuse to instruct that inhaling coal gas was a taking of poison if they believed coal gas to be a poisonous substance, which when inhaled destroyed life.[18] But it has been held that the "breathing of gas" by the insured involuntarily is not an "inhaling of gas." [19] And the exception of liability in case death occurs from the "inhalation of gas" refers to the voluntary inhaling of gas by the insured. A condition against "inhalation of gas" in an accident policy is used to designate the common uses of gas in dentistry and surgery, and contemplates a voluntary and intelligent act on the part of the insured, and not an involuntary and unconscious act; as the inhalation of a deadly gas that has unexpectedly accumulated in a well, and its presence is unsuspected.[20] So in New York the inhaling of gas within the exemptions of insurance policies, means a voluntary and intelligent

[17] 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L.R.A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748, 25 N. E. 399.

[18] United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, 3 S. E. 805.

On liability for death of insured from asphyxiation, see notes in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, and L.R.A.1917D, 740.

[19] Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, 3 L.R.A. 443, 20 N. E. 347.

[20] Pickett v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 144 Pa. St. 79, 27 Am. St.

act of the insured and not a voluntary and unconscious act.[1] If, however, the exemption clause precludes recovery in case of death by the "voluntary or involuntary inhalation of gas or any anesthetic" such clause will be enforced in favor of assurer where assured's death results from unconsciously inhaling illuminating gas in his room at a hotel.[2]

§ 2621. Poison or anything accidentally taken, administered or inhaled.—A provision in an accident policy that it shall not "extend to poison in any way taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled" does not relate to the motive of the insured in taking it, but rather to the mode or manner in which the poison is taken, and therefore a death by involuntary poisoning is not excluded from the risks covered by the contract of insurance.[3] An exception of liability in case of death or disablement arising from "anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled" does not cover death from accidentally inhaling illuminating gas escaping into the room in which assured is sleeping. Such a clause is clearly intended to exempt the insurer only in case the insured has voluntarily and consciously, but accidentally, taken or inhaled, or where something has been voluntarily administered which was injurious or destructive of life. The controlling idea in such a provision is the performance of a voluntary act which accidentally causes insured's death, nor does it refer to a thing involuntarily and unconsciously administered. The particular accidents intended to be excepted are the accidental taking or inhaling into the system of some injurious or destructive agency under the mistaken belief that it was beneficial or at least harmless.[4] The court also adds:

Rep. 618, 13 L.R.A. 661, 22 Atl. 871, 21 Ins. L. J. 64.

Death from inhaling gas; attempt to rescue; voluntary exposure, etc., see § 2624a herein.

[1] Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 148 N. Y. 596, 31 L.R.A. 686, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 43 N. E. 54, rev'g 72 Hun, 477, 25 N. Y. Supp. 230.

[2] Porter v. Preferred Accident Co. 109 App. Div. 103, 95 N. Y. Supp. 682.

[3] Metropolitan Accident Assoc. v. Froiland, 161 Ill. 30, 52 Am. St. Rep. 359, 43 N. E. 766, aff'g 59 Ill. App. 522. As to construction of "taken," etc., see Dent v. Railway Mail Assoc. (U. S. C. C.) 183 Fed. 840, 40 Ins. L. J. 828 considered under § 2620 herein.

On death from taking poisonous substance as accident or accidental means, see note in 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1022; on whether death or injury from substance taken internally may be deemed to have been caused by external means, see note in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1181.

[4] Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Co. 148 N. Y. 596, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 31 L.R.A. 686, 43 N. E. 54, reversing 72 Hun (N. Y.) 477, 25 N. Y. Supp. 230. So much of the above as expresses the reason for the decision are extracts taken from the opinion of the court, per Martin, J. The case of Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, 3 L.R.A. 443, 20 N. E. 347, is declared to be the same as to the facts

"The inhaling of gas having been specially provided for when taken for surgical and like purposes, it is only when it is inhaled for some other purpose or under other circumstances that the general provision applies. The special provision is applicable when gas is inhaled for surgical and like purposes; the general provision applies when it is inhaled for other purposes."[5] So death caused by unconsciously and unintentionally inhaling gas while asleep, is within an accident policy against injuries "through external, violent, and accidental means," and is not within an exception of "injuries, fatal or otherwise, resulting from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled."[6] So a provision in a policy that the insurance does not cover "injuries, fatal or otherwise, resulting from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled," does not include in its meaning an accidental asphyxiation by illuminating gas escaping into the room where insured slept, and a recovery may be had.[7] In the case so holding the court said: "It is urged that the exception in the case at bar is broader and more sweeping than the words found in the cases heretofore decided, the words here being 'poison or anything accidentally or otherwise absorbed or inhaled,' and that these words necessarily include every possible way by which irrespirable gases can be got into the human system so as to cause death. The additional word 'absorbed,' found in the language last above quoted, has no application to the case before us, for that word manifestly has reference only to the process of absorption by sucking up or imbibing through the pores of the body. The claim made is not well grounded if the correctness of the point decided in the cases we have mentioned be conceded. That point, as we understand it, is that the word 'inhaling' or 'inhalation,' or 'inhaled,' as used in exceptions contained in these policies of life or accident insurance implies a voluntary and intelligent act, as distinguished from an involuntary and unconscious act. Read in the light of the as that at bar, and the cases of Bacon v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 123 N. Y. 304, 308, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748, 9 L.R.A. 617, 25 N. E. 399, and Pickett v. Pacific Mutual Life Co. 144 Pa. St. 79, 91, 27 Am. Rep. 618, 13 L.R.A. 661, 22 Atl. 87, are cited with approval as following the Paul Case and as recognizing its doctrine as correct.

[5] Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Co. 148 N. Y. 596, 601, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 31 L.R.A. 686, 43 N. E. 54.

[6] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Loewenstein, 97 Fed. 17, 38 C. C. A. 29, 46 L.R.A. 450.

Death from inhaling gas; attempt to rescue; voluntary exposure, etc., see § 2624a herein.

[7] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Waterman, 161 Ill. 632, 32 L.R.A. 654, 44 N. E. 283, aff'g 59 Ill. App. 297.

decisions, the words now in question do not mean otherwise than if they explicitly read 'poison or anything accidentally or otherwise consciously and by act of volition drawn into the system by inspiration.' This view is fully supported by a late decision of the court of appeals of New York."[8] And death by asphyxiation from the accidental inhalation of gas while asleep is not within the provision of an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability from death resulting directly or indirectly from any gas or vapor.[9]

Death by involuntary poisoning is within an exception of liability against poison "in any way taken," these words referring not to the assured's motive in taking poison, but to the manner of taking it.[10] So blood poisoning by germs in cotton placed on a person's mouth with her consent, by a dentist to stop the flow of blood after extracting a tooth, creates no liability on an accident policy which has a condition against liability for injuries "from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled," notwithstanding the fact that the germs were not known to exist in the cotton, since they were voluntarily, though accidentally, introduced into the system.[11] And death caused by accidentally eating spoiled oysters is within a clause in an accident policy providing that the policy does not cover injuries resulting from poison, or anything accidentally or otherwise taken or absorbed.[12] But an accident policy exempting from liability and injury "resulting from any poison or infection, or from anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled" does not exempt the insurer from liability where the assured accidentally falls sustaining an abrasion of the skin, through which bacteria enters, causing blood poisoning, from which he dies. Such exemption clause contemplates only a proximate causation of the injury as specified by its terms.[13] So a clause

[8] Referring to Menneilly v. Employers' Life Assur. Corp. 148 N. Y. 596, 31 L.R.A. 686, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 43 N. E. 54. And we may add that this Menneilly Case which had then been just published was cited by this court with approval in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642, 52 Am. St. Rep. 355, 43 N. E. 765.

[9] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Ayers, 217 Ill. 390, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 75 N. E. 506.

On liability for death of insured from asphyxiation, see notes in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, and L.R.A.1917D, 740.

[10] Metropolitan Accident Assoc. v. Froiland, 161 Ill. 30, 52 Am. St. Rep. 359, 43 N. E. 766.

[11] Kasten v. Interstate Casualty Co. 99 Wis. 73, 40 L.R.A. 651, 74 N. W. 534.

[12] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Hudgins, 97 Tex. 124, 64 L.R.A. 349, 76 S. W. 745, rev'g — Tex. Civ. App. —, 72 S. W. 1047.

[13] Cary v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. 127 Wis. 67, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.)

which provides that the policy benefit does not cover injuries fatal or otherwise resulting from any poison or infection, or from anything accidentally or otherwise taken, administered, absorbed, or inhaled, does not include medicine; even though it contains poison, or anything taken or administered in good faith to alleviate physical pain even though it results in unexpected and unintentional death, and this applies where chloroform was administered by physicians preparatory to an operation on insured and which because of heart defects resulted in death.[14] An exception of liability from death from "taking poison" means the voluntary, intentional taking of poison, and does not include cases of accidental poisoning, and drinking carbolic acid by mistake for peppermint is not within the exemption.[15] The court, per Carter, J., notes the case of Pollock v. United States Mutual Accident Association,[16] which holds that taking poison includes accidental as well as intentional taking. It also considers Healey v. Mutual Accident Association,[17] and says: "While the precise point here at issue was not discussed in the opinion in the Healey Case, yet it was involved in the decision, and is within the reasoning there employed. The leading cases on this subject were reviewed in the Healey case, including Paul v. Travelers' Insurance Company,[18] and Pollock v. United States Mutual Accident Association,[19] and it was then said:[20] 'While we recognize the high ability of the court in which the case (the Pennsylvania case) was decided, we are not disposed to follow the rule there adopted. We think the rule established by the court of appeals of New York one better calculated to carry out the true intention of the parties when the contract of insurance was entered into, and one, too, more nearly in harmony with the current of authority bearing on the question.'[1] We are inclined to the opinion that the term 'taking poison' would also, in common parlance, when used without any qualifying words, be understood to mean an intelligent and 526 (annotated on liability for sickness or death caused by blood poisoning), 106 N. W. 1055, 35 Ins. L. J. 481.

[14] Beile v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America, 155 Mo. App. 629, 133 S. W. 497, 40 Ins. L. J. 1028, following Dezell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 176 Mo. 253, 75 S. W. 1102, 32 Ins. L. J. 905, a case of death caused by taking morphine for medical purposes to allay pain.

[15] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642, 52 Am. St. Rep. 355, 43 N. E. 765, aff'g 59 Ill. App. 515.

[16] 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204.

[17] 133 Ill. 556, 9 L.R.A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, 25 N. E. 52.

[18] 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L.R.A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, 20 N. E. 374.

[19] 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204.

[20] P. 564.

[1] See also Pickett v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 144 Pa. St. 79, 13 L.R.A. 661, 27 Am. St. Rep. 618, 22 Atl. 871; Menneilly v. Employers' Life Assurance Corp. 148 N. Y. 596, 31 L.R.A. 686, 51 Am. St. Rep. 716, 43 N. E. 54.

conscious act. If, in speaking of the cause of the death of another, we should say, 'he took poison,' we would most commonly be understood to mean that his act in taking poison was intentional, rather than accidental, and it would hardly be deemed necessary to say, 'he intentionally took poison,' and if it were designed to avoid any such understanding, we would naturally say, 'he accidentally took poison,' or would use some other qualifying words indicating that the act was accidental or its cause doubtful or unknown. It must, however, be conceded that the meaning of the term in the respect mentioned is not free from doubt. Able and learned arguments have been made on each side of the question by counsel, and cases are cited showing that courts of high authority do not agree on the subject. It would, therefore, seem to be eminently proper in such a case to apply the well-known rule of construction applicable to such instruments that where there is a doubt or uncertainty as to the meaning of the terms employed, the language, being that of the insurer, must be liberally construed in favor of the insured, so as not to defeat without a plain necessity his claim to indemnity, which in making the insurance it was his object to secure.[2] Counsel for appellant insist that, using their own language, 'an exception from an accident policy can only be of some accident otherwise included within it, for if the cause of injury or death be not accidental it is manifestly not within the scope of the policy at all. Hence, an exception of "taking poison" means ex vi termini the exception of an accidental taking of poison.' It is clear, however, that the so-called exception is something more than a mere exception excluding what would otherwise be included as accidents, for suicide by a sane person could not be said to be an accident, yet it with other causes of death and injury not accidental is embraced in the exception. It is also said that the term 'taking poison' cannot be limited in its meaning to the intentional taking of poison, for the reason that death so caused is covered by the clause relating to suicide, and to so construe it would give no force whatever to the words 'taking poison.' Counsel are mistaken, also, in this contention. When the entire provision in which these words occur is considered, it is too clear for argument that it is recognized that death may result wholly or partly, directly or indirectly, from voluntarily taking poison without any suicidal intent, and that death so caused, while excepted from the risks covered by the policy, would not be so excepted by the suicide clause. Besides, different kinds of accidents and injuries not resulting in death caused by the voluntary taking of poison might be excluded from such risks by this provision. It would not be difficult for the insurer to use language which, in respect to the question here under consideration, would be free from doubt. A policy of insurance should not be so framed as to be susceptible of one construction in the hands of the soliciting agent and of quite a different one in the hands of the adjuster."[3]

[2] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 100 Ill. 644; Healey v. Mutual Accident Assoc. 133 Ill. 556, 9 L.R.A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, 25 N. E. 52. May on Ins. sec. 175.

§ 2622. Entering or leaving moving train or car: riding as passenger: standing or riding on steps or platform.—No recovery can be had under an accident policy which provides that the company is not liable for accidents received while trying to enter a moving steam vehicle where the insured is killed while attempting to enter a moving train.[4] And the same general rule applies where the car suddenly started while assured was upon the steps and the excepting clause was: "entering or trying to enter a moving conveyance."[5] And where the exception of liability was for injuries sustained while entering or leaving or trying to enter or leave any moving conveyance and said clause was followed by another covering other excepted risks "fatal or otherwise" and it was claimed that by construction said last-mentioned words should attach to the preceding clause as a part thereof so that such clause should read, injuries, fatal or otherwise, it was held that the word "injuries" should be construed in accordance with its ordinary and plain meaning and covered fatal injuries received while assured was trying to enter a moving car and was therefore within the exempting clause.[6] So recovery is precluded where insurer is exempt from liability if death or injury results from a violation of law, and insured is injured in attempting to board a moving train in violation of a law which prohibits anyone other than an officer of the railroad from getting upon a train in motion, or to cling to such train, etc., and this is so even though it is necessary that the act of getting on or off a train should be consummated by a person in order to constitute the unlawful act intended by the statute.[7]

[3] But see cases under § 2620 herein.

[4] Miller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 39 Minn. 548, 40 N. W. 839. See §§ 2867, 2871 et seq. herein.

On boarding or alighting from moving train as defense under general provisions as to exposure to danger, see note in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 957.

As to voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, etc., see §§ 2624 et seq. herein.

[5] Travellers Ins. Co. v. Brookover, 71 Ark. 123, 71 S. W. 246. Examine King v. Travelers Ins. Co. 101 Ga. 64, 28 S. E. 661.

[6] Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. McNulty, 157 Fed. 224, 85 C. C. A. 22.

[7] Flower v. Continental Casualty Co. 140 Iowa, 510, 118 N. W. 761. Compare National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Lokey, 166 Ala. 174, 52 So. 45; Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 73 Atl. 642.

So a passenger on a freight train, who, having left the car at a stopping place, attempts to board it after it has started, by means of a ladder on the side of a freight car, and is thrown therefrom by the jerking of the train, and injured, contributes to his injury by his own negligence, within the meaning of an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for such injuries.[8] So an attempt to board a train of cars running at eight or ten miles an hour, by a young, strong, and active man, with experience as a "traveling man" in boarding and alighting from moving cars, is an exposure to "obvious risk and injury," within the meaning of an accident policy which excepts the insurer from liability for injuries received as a result of "voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger, or to obvious risk of injury;" and, when made merely for the purpose of avoiding the delay incident to missing the train, will prevent a recovery against the insurer for injuries received in consequence of such attempt.[9] And the fact that commercial travelers were accustomed to run hazardous risks in boarding trains at the time an accident insurance company accepted one as a member does not warrant the inference that it agreed to indemnify him for injury resulting from such conduct, contrary to the terms of the contract.[10] But the attempt of a traveling salesman to get upon a train which is already in motion is not, as matter of law, a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of an exception in a policy.[10a]

Jumping from a moving train after it has passed the station is a voluntary, unnecessary exposure to danger.[11] So jumping in the dark from a freight train in rapid motion on which one is riding without permission is an "exposure to unnecessary danger," within the meaning of an exception in an accident policy which does not contain the words "voluntarily," "wantonly," "wilfully," or any equivalent words.[12] And for a man sixty-six years old, weighing one

[8] Garcelon v. Commercial Travelers' Eastern Accident Assoc. 195 Mass. 531, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 961, 81 N. E. 201, 36 Ins. L. J. 747. Stipulation here was that insurer should not be liable for any injury "which the member, by the exercise of ordinary care, prudence and foresight, might have averted or prevented or to which the member's own negligence shall have contributed."

[9] Small v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. 118 Ga. 900, 63 L.R.A. 510, 45 S. E. 706.

[10] Garcelon v. Commercial Travelers' Eastern Accident Assoc. 195 Mass. 531, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 961, 81 N. E. 201, 36 Ins. L. J. 747.

[10a] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sittig, 181 Ill. 111, 48 L.R.A. 359, 54 N. E. 903.

[11] Smith v. Preferred Mutual Accident Assoc. 104 Mich. 634, 62 N. W. 990.

On exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger within the meaning of accident policy, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1218.

[12] Shevlin v. American Mutual Ac-hundred and eighty-four pounds and carrying an umbrella under his arm, to attempt to board a train running six or eight miles an hour, is so obviously dangerous as to come within the clause of an accident policy which states that the policy does not cover insurance from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[13] Nor does it, as a matter of law, constitute an exposure to obvious risk or unnecessary danger to step from a moving train in a city regardless of the rate of speed at which it is moving. The point is was assured bound in all reason to know and was he conscious at the time that he was exposed to danger.[14] It would seem, however, that the train's rate of speed might be such that assured in a similar case would be reasonably bound, if he were sane, to know and, therefore, necessarily be conscious of the danger and so would assume the risk at his peril. But leaving a car while in motion is not necessarily "a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" which will defeat a recovery on a policy which by its terms is avoided by such exposure.[15] So a recovery by one thrown by a sudden movement, just as he was stepping to the ground, of a train which he was attempting to cross, while it was standing on a street crossing, is not prevented by a provision in the policy that it shall not apply to accidents to persons attempting to leave moving trains, or persons in or on any place on a train not provided for the use of passengers during transit.[16] So a person making preparation to leave a train at a place elsewhere than the depot, if the train should stop, is not guilty of a violation of law and does not break the conditions of a policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries sustained in acts in violation of law, nor does he violate the condition of the policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries suffered by the insured while entering or leaving a moving conveyance.[17] And where the insured who, while standing on a platform not intended for use in getting upon trains, is either thrown or falls upon the track, it is held not within the meaning of the provision.[18] cident Assoc. 94 Wis. 180, 36 L.R.A. 52, 68 N. W. 866.

[13] Rebman v. General Accident Ins. Co. 217 Pa. 518, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 597 (annotated on boarding or alighting from moving train as defense under general provision as to exposure to danger), 66 Atl. 859.

[14] So held in National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Lokey, 166 Ala. 174, 52 So. 45.

[15] Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mutual Accident Assoc. 154 Mass. 77, 13 L.R.A. 263, 27 N. E. 769.

[16] Kirkpatrick v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 141 Iowa, 74, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1255, 117 N. W. 1111.

On applicability of provision in accident insurance policy exempting insurer in case of accident on railroad trains, see note in 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1255.

[17] Smith v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 115 Iowa, 217, 56 L.R.A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153, 88 N. W. 368.

[18] Boyden v. Massachusetts Mutual Accident Assoc. 153 Mass. 544, 20 Ins. L. J. 716, 27 N. E. 669.

Voluntary exposure to danger is not proved by evidence tending to show that the insured stood on the steps of a moving train, holding on with both hands, and fell or stepped therefrom in the belief that he was stepping on a lower step, which in fact did not exist.[19] So a temporary occupation of the platform of a car by a passenger for a necessary or proper purpose, is not a "riding" thereon, within the meaning of a clause in an accident policy which contains a condition against riding on a car platform.[20] And where the duties of a person as a cattle dealer or broker visiting yards by occupation, require him to ride on cattle cars from place to place in freight yards, recovery is not precluded by a policy clause providing that it shall not cover accidents sustained while being in any part of a car not provided for occupation for passengers.[1] So an exemption of liability clause for injuries received "in or on any such conveyance not provided for the transportation of passengers" does not include injuries sustained by a passenger while on a passenger train locomotive at a railroad official's invitation.[2] If one is riding in a caboose in charge of cattle being transported to market under a live stock shipping contract and is killed in a train collision he is not within an exception of liability for injuries received while riding in a "caboose used for passenger service," as the caboose was not used for passenger service, and it is not the fact that assured may have been a passenger, as it is not the kind of car that controls, but the fact that it was not at the time engaged in passenger service.[3]

Where an accident policy contained the following condition: "This insurance does not cover entering or trying to enter or leave a moving conveyance using steam as a motive power; . . . railroad employees excepted," and assured was baggage-checker of a transfer company, and his business required him to meet and board incoming trains, and check baggage to other railroad lines and to residences in Vicksburg, it was held that the assured was a railroad employee within the meaning of the foregoing exception.[4] Again the risk of getting on and off moving trains by a passenger conductor, is one that is incident to his business, and such as an accident policy delivered to him is intended to cover; and a condi-

[19] Smith v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 115 Iowa, 217, 56 L.R.A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153, 88 N. W. 368.

[20] Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 100 Fed. 582, 40 C. C. A. 564, 49 L.R.A. 116.

[1] Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 18 S. Dak. 287, 67 L.R.A. 175, 100 N. W. 428, 33 Ins. L. J. 880.

[2] Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 121 Cal. 458, 41 L.R.A. 467, 53 Pac. 918.

[3] Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Hite, 37 Okla. 305, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 986, 132 Pac. 333.

[4] Cotten v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 41 Fed. 506. See Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 125 S. W. 353.

tion in such a policy against accidents in attempting to enter or leave a moving conveyance cannot be insisted upon by insurer, if action is brought upon a contract of insurance under the application, and not on the contract as written in the policy.[5]

The burden of proof is on the defendant to show that an accident causing death, resulted, in whole or in part, from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[6] So the fact that insured is found dead near the platform crushed by a wheel of a train on which he was a passenger, and at a station short of his destination, throws the burden of proof upon insurer that insured was killed on the platform or in getting on a moving train, within that exception, and the question is one of fact for the jury.[7]

Where there is evidence tending to show such fact it is error to refuse to instruct the jury to the effect that if insured received his injuries while entering or trying to enter a moving conveyance using steam as a motive power he could not recover, or if he received such injuries while riding in or upon such a conveyance not provided for the transportation of passengers, he could not recover, and in such case the court might have instructed the jury that if insured received the injury while he was voluntarily exposing himself to unnecessary danger he could not recover, although it is held not prejudicially erroneous to refuse the last request to instruct, where there is an instruction that if insured had a right to attend to certain duties connected with his business as shipper, and was injured while so doing, his loss was a risk taken by the insurer, "provided he acted with the prudence of a man of ordinary intelligence and prudence placed in like circumstances."[8]

§ 2623. Rules and regulations of common carriers and employer: violation of "a rule of corporation."—If the contract exempts insurer from liability, whether death results from violation of a rule of a corporation, or provides for insurance while traveling in or by a public conveyance provided by a common carrier, and stipulates by way of exception only for liability upon compliance with all rules and regulations of such carriers, these words mean that the assured is only bound to observe such rules as a general traveler might reasonably be presumed and ought to know; he is not ob-

[5] Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mutual Accident Assoc. 102 Mich. 289, 26 L.R.A. 171, 57 N. W. 184, 60 N. W. 694. See Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 125 S. W. 353.

[6] Smith v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 115 Iowa, 217, 56 L.R.A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153, 88 N. W. 368.

[7] Anthony v. Mercantile Mutual Accident Assoc. 162 Mass. 354, 44 Am. St. Rep. 367, 26 L.R.A. 406, 38 N. E. 973.

[8] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 45 Neb. 249, 63 N. W. 392. See as to employee, Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 125 S. W. 353.

ligated to familiarize himself with and constantly bear in mind all the rules and regulations and details of management of trains or other conveyances of common carriers. Some additional obligations may, however, be imposed, perhaps, upon the traveler where the contract stipulates for the observance of due care or the like on the part of assured. The courts will also consider the circumstance whether rules of this character even if they are known or ought to be known by assured, are nevertheless constantly violated by passengers and employees; in such cases rules cannot fairly be deemed to be in force and necessary to be observed by assured, for the contract, although between assurer and assured, must necessarily have reference to those rules only which are of binding obligation.[9] If the insured be an employee, a greater obligation might reasonably be held to rest upon him to inform himself as to the rules of employment than in case of a traveler by conveyances provided by common carriers. In case, however, of an exemption from liability for violating the rules of employment, no obligation rests upon the assurer to inform assured as to such rules.[10]

§ 2624. Voluntary exposure to obvious or unnecessary danger.—Most policies of accident insurance contain either the condition that the insurers will not be liable in case of death or injury resulting from "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," or one of similar import. It may be stated at the outset that we have also considered elsewhere, under their proper headings, exemption from liability clauses of this and like character in so far as they are involved in or connected with various other propositions, such as fighting, assault, self-defense;[11] entering or leaving moving trains or cars, riding upon steps or platforms thereof;[12] walking or being upon a railroad bridge or roadbed:[13] and death in attempt to save life;[14] and the reader is referred thereto.

[9] Marx v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 39 Fed. 321, 6 R. R. & Corp. L. J. 322; Tooley v. Railway Passengers' Assur. Co. 3 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 399, Fed. Cas. No. 1409; Bon v. Railway Passengers Assurance Co. 56 Iowa, 664, 41 Am. Rep. 127, 10 N. W. 223. See Sutherland v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 87 Iowa, 505, 54 N. W. 453; Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 73 Atl. 642.

On scope and construction of provision for indemnity in case of injury while riding in or on a public conveyance, see notes in 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618, and L.R.A.1915C, 456.

[10] Follette v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 110 N. C. 377, 28 Am. St. Rep. 693, 15 L.R.A. 668, 14 S. E. 923; Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434, 10 So. 530. See Providence Life Insurance & Investment Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310. See Bon v. Railway Passengers Assurance Co. 56 Iowa, 664, 41 Am. Rep. 127, 10 N. W. 225.

As to violation of rules of carrier: what is sufficient notice: questions for jury, see Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 73 Atl. 642.

[11] See §§ 2619–2619c herein.

[12] See § 2622 herein.

[13] See § 2625a herein.

[14] See § 2624b herein.

In determining the meaning and application of these exemption clauses the express wording thereof is necessarily of primary consideration, generally they present the factors or elements of "voluntary exposure," "unnecessary danger," or "obvious risk" or "obvious danger" and in some policies other words such as "perilous adventure" are used, or there may be an exception from the exemption clause itself, as where the risk is taken to save life. These various clauses must therefore be construed accordingly.

In order to entitle an insurer to exemption from liability for the death of the insured, on the ground that he voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, it must appear that he knew of and realized the danger and with such knowledge voluntarily exposed himself to it.[15] In construing such a provision a Massachusetts court [16] has said: "If a person voluntarily places himself in a position where he is exposed to an obvious danger, and the precise injury happened to him which there is reason to fear, it cannot fairly be held that the language of the policy was not intended and understood to be applicable to such a case." In other words, if the insured voluntarily places himself in such a position where from the surrounding circumstances a person of ordinary prudence and caution would reasonably hesitate to place himself for fear of danger to life or body, then there can be no recovery for injuries or death in consequence of such act. The provision does not refer to exposure to hidden dangers where a person of ordinary prudence would see no reason for fear. So in Iowa in order to constitute voluntary or unnecessary exposure, the danger must either have been known to the insured in fact, or one which in the exercise of his faculties as an ordinarily prudent person should in reason have been known to him.[17] And upon this point the court has also said in a case in Pennsylvania that: [18] "A clear distinction exists between a voluntary act and a voluntary exposure to danger. Hidden danger may exist, yet the exposure thereto, without any knowledge of the danger, does not constitute a voluntary exposure to it. The approach to an unknown and unexpected danger does not make the act a voluntary exposure thereto. The result of the action does not

[15] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Clark, 109 Ky. 350, 95 Am. St. Rep. 374, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 902, 59 S. W. 7.

On voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, see note in 40 L.R.A. 432; on exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger within the meaning of accident policy, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1218.

[16] Tuttle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316.

[17] Correll v. National Accident Soc. 139 Iowa, 36, 130 Am. St. Rep. 294, 116 N. W. 1046.

[18] Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

necessarily determine the motive which prompted the action. The act may be voluntary, yet the exposure involuntary. The danger being unknown, the injury is accidental." And under another decision in that state, the intention of assured to voluntarily expose himself to unnecessary danger, may be inferred from his acting so recklessly and carelessly as to show an utter disregard of known danger, or from his taking a risk of a danger which is so obvious that a prudent man, exercising reasonable forethought, would not have taken it.[19] It is also declared that "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," as used in an accident policy, means an act done in obedience to and regulated by the will of the person who does it; that is, an act done designedly and not accidentally.[1] Again, in order to constitute voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger there must be an intentional doing of some act which reason or ordinary prudence would determine to be dangerous, some degree of consciousness, or apprehension or knowledge of the danger must exist together with the intention to take the risk. If the danger is unknown or concealed there can be no voluntary exposure thereto.[2] So the general trend of the decisions is in accord with a Georgia decision which holds that it is not error to charge the jury that in order for the provision which relieves insurer "in case of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" to be an excuse from liability three elements are essential: "First, a conscious knowledge of the danger; second, an intentional or wilful exposure to it; and third that the danger shall be unnecessary" and this was so held where recovery was sought by reason of the accidental death of insured in an automobile wreck.[3] And this is so

[19] De Loy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 171 Pa. St. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787, 32 Atl. 1108.

[1] Lehman v. Great Eastern Casualty & Indemnity Co. 39 N. Y. Supp. 912, 7 App. Div. 424.

[2] Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Harroll, 98 Tenn. 591, 40 S. W. 1080, 27 Ins. L. J. 176, 179, citing the following cases:

Georgia. — Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270, 7 S. E. 83.

Iowa.—Jones v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 29 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485.

Massachusetts.—Tuttle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316.

Missouri.—Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. 126 Mo. 104, 30 L.R.A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638, 28 S. W. 877.

New York. — Williams v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 133 N. Y. 366, 31 N. E. 222.

Pennsylvania.—Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

Tennessee. — Miller v. American Mutual Accident Ins. Co. 92 Tenn. 167, 20 L.R.A. 765, 21 S. W. 39.

Wisconsin.—Scheiderer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Wis. 13, 46 Am. Rep. 618, 16 N. W. 47; Pierce v. Travelers' Life Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 389.

[3] Empire Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 141 Ga. 413, 81 S. E. 120.

expressly or substantially held: in New York;[4] in Texas;[5] and in Wisconsin.[6] So in Pennsylvania involuntary exposure to unnecessary danger means intentional exposure to such danger.[7] So in Kentucky the words "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," when employed in a contract of life and accidental insurance, relate to dangers of a substantial character which the insured recognizes and to which he, nevertheless consciously and purposely exposes himself, intending at the time to assume the risk of the danger.[8] So in Ohio the words "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" do not embrace every exposure that an insured person might have avoided by the exercise of due care, but relate to dangers of a substantial character, which he knew and to which he purposely and consciously exposed himself, intending at the time to assume all risks.[9] So in Illinois a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of a policy does not mean simply a voluntary performance of the act which results in injury, but also that it is performed with a consciousness of the danger, or that the danger is so apparent that a man of ordinary intelligence would, under the circumstances, necessarily know it.[10] In Michigan an accident policy exempting from liability for injuries resulting from "voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger," means cases in which there is a realization that an accident will in all probability result, and an injury follow, from the action about to be taken, and the danger of injury must be obvious.[11]

If the exemption clause limits liability for injury resulting from "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger or obvious risk of injury," then either reckless or deliberate encountering of known danger, or danger so obvious that a reasonably prudent man would have observed and avoided it, if the circumstances were not such as necessitated the encountering thereof, is a "voluntary exposure" within the meaning of said clause.[12] In New Hampshire "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger or obvious risk," as used in

[4] Cules v. New York Casualty Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 87 App. Div. 41.

[5] Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 125 S. W. 353.

[6] Bakalare v. Continental Casualty Co. 141 Wis. 43, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1241, 122 N. W. 721.

[7] De Loy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 171 Pa. St. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787, 32 Atl. 1108.

[8] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Clark, 109 Ky. 350, 95 Am. St. Rep. 374, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 902, 59 S. W. 7.

[9] United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Hubbell, 56 Ohio St. 516, 40 L.R.A. 453, 47 N. E. 544.

[10] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sittig, 181 Ill. 111, 48 L.R.A. 359, 54 N. E. 903.

[11] Hunt v. United States Accident Assoc. 146 Mich. 521, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 938, 117 Am. St. Rep. 665, 109 N. W. 1042.

[12] Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779, 63 S. E. 962.

an accident policy, means a conscious or intentional exposure to a known risk, and not a merely inadvertent or accidental one.[13] If the danger is obvious, and there is nothing in the situation of the insured or the circumstances surrounding him that, in any way, precludes deliberation, freedom of action, or choice of conduct, such as a sudden peril, which he had no reason to expect, or the like, and he encounters it, and is injured, the exposure is "voluntary" within the meaning of a clause in an accident policy limiting the liability of the insurer in case of an injury resulting from vountary exposure to unnecessary danger or obvious risk of injury.[14]

It is decided that the fact that assured was at the moment unconscious of danger does not excuse him except in those cases where he was ignorant of the danger and under no duty from its obviousness to know its existence.[15] But it is also held that exposure to obvious risk or known danger implies an exposure of which assured has knowledge and is conscious of at the time, and that the risk or danger must be so obvious that insured, cannot reasonably be heard to deny knowledge thereof.[16]

And where the clause is "exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger" omitting the word "voluntary" and using the words "obvious danger" instead of "unnecessary danger" and the amount of recovery is limited instead of the policy being avoided, a different construction is called for and the fact that the injury resulted to insured while and because of exposing himself to a risk of danger which was obvious to him at the time is a sufficient defense to a suit on the policy.[17] Under an accident policy insuring a baggageman, who was killed coupling cars, which policy contained an exemption liability clause from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger it was held that the word "voluntary," conveys the idea of an act of volition. It means "knowingly," "wilful," not that assured is going knowingly to perform an act which for others might be dangerous, but "knowingly," "rashly," and conscious of danger to himself, recklessly, taking the risk, wanton or grossly

[13] Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 139 Am. St. Rep. 695, 73 Atl. 642.

[14] Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779n, 63 S. E. 962.

On voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger as compared with negligence, see notes in 40 L.R.A. 432; 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779; 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; and 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 135.

[15] Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779n, 63 S. E. 962; Combs v. Colonial Casualty Co. 73 W. Va. 473, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1218, 80 S. E. 779, 43 Ins. L. J. 512.

[16] National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Loker, 166 Ala. 174, 52 So. 45.

[17] Hickman v. Ohio State Life Ins. Co. 92 Ohio St. 87, 110 N. E. 542, 47 Ins. L. J. 214. See this case near end of § 2624b herein.

imprudent exposure. It is exposure that must be wilful, voluntary. A person cannot be said to have wilfully exposed himself to a danger that was for him certain and ought to have been present to his mind, if he did not know the act was dangerous for him and believed it was not.[18] The voluntary exposure must be the cause of death to bring the case within an exemption of liability for death resulting from such exposure.[19]

As to the meaning of the word "exposure," as used in policies of insurance, it may also indicate danger of destruction or injury to the property insured from external sources not inherent in the property itself.[20]

Whether assured voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger is ordinarily a question for the jury.[1] And where the exemption is "from exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious [18] Canadian Railway Accident Ins. Co. v. McNevin, 32 Can. S. C. 194, 5 B. R. C. 870 (annotated on act of coupling cars by one employed by a railroad in some capacity other than that of brakeman, as "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" within meaning of accident insurance policy)—Taschereau, J. It was also said: "I am inclined to the belief that the original design of the stipulation was to prevent an act on the part of the assured exhibiting a conscious reckless, wanton, and wicked disregard of personal safety, whether of life or limb,—the doing of a thing that would according to the view of a 'reasonable man,' be madness, except upon the hypothesis of voluntary suicide or self mutilation." Id.—Sedgwick, J.

See as to prohibition against engaging in the employment of railroad switchman or of a car coupler, etc., Batten v. Modern Woodmen of America, 131 Mo. App. 381, 111 S. W. 513. As to prohibited occupation of railroad freight brakeman, see Cook v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 114 Minn. 299, 131 N. W. 334; Snow v. Modern Woodmen of America, 24 Ohio C. Ct. R. 142.

As to prohibited occupations generally, see §§ 2236 et seq. herein.

[19] Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Anderson, 5 Kan. App. 18, 47 Pac. 331.

[20] Davis v. Western Home Ins. Co. 81 Iowa, 496, 25 Am. St. Rep. 509, 10 L.R.A. 359, 46 N. W. 1073.

[1] Georgia.—Empire Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 142 Ga. 330, 82 S. E. 893, 44 Ins. L. J. 560.

Iowa.—Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. of America, 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361.

Kentucky. — Continental Casualty Co. v. Hagarty, — Ky. —, 90 S. W. 561.

Michigan. — Walter v. Peoples' Health & Accident Ins. Co. 173 Mich. 581, 139 N. W. 865; Putnam v. Phoenix Preferred Accident Ins. Co. 155 Mich. 134, 118 N. W. 922.

Missouri.—Jamison v. Continental Casualty Co. 104 Mo. App. 306, 78 S. W. 812.

New Hampshire.—Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 73 Atl. 642.

New York.—Norwood v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. 56 Misc. 529, 107 N. Y. Supp. 104.

Texas.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Harris, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W 816, 46 Ins. L. J. 638; Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 125 S. W. 353.

danger" the question whether the injury was within the exemption is for the jury.[2]

The question may, however, be a matter of law.[3] And where a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question whether or not insured died from injuries resulting from unnecessary exposure to danger, the determination of the matter is for the jury, but where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion from them such a question is one of law for the court.[4]

§ 2624a. Same subject: negligence or contributory negligence.—It is held that voluntary exposure to danger means something more than negligence proximately contributing to the injury. The test seems to be, did the insured appreciate that, by doing the act, he was putting life and limb in hazard.[5] In considering the question, however, of voluntary exposure to obvious or unnecessary danger or exposure to obvious risk and danger, especially in cases such as boarding a moving car, entering or leaving the same, etc., should it not depend somewhat, as a test in determining such question of unnecessary danger, or obvious risk in this connection, upon whether or not and to what extent such act would constitute negligence, or contributory negligence, and ought the time and place to be considered, that is, whether it is an overcrowded city such for example as New York or a place where more time is allowed for entering or leaving cars or where there are in comparison no crowds. In making the above statement it is not intended to assert the principle that negligence or contributory negligence is controlling in cases under the clause as to voluntary exposure, etc.;[6] nor is the distinction between contract law and torts ignored,[7] but such a test

[2] Hickman v. Ohio State Life Ins. Co. 92 Ohio, 87, 110 N. E. 542, 47 Ins. L. J. 214.

[3] Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779n, 63 S. E. 962.

[4] Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 27 Okla. 496, 112 Pac. 1026, 40 Ins. L. J. 572.

[5] Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 115 Iowa, 217, 56 L.R.A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153, 88 N. W. 368.

On construction of provision as to voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger as compared with negligence, see notes in 40 L.R.A. 432; 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 779; 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; and 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 135.

[6] De Greayer v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 126 Cal. 17, 58 Pac. 390 (considered under § 2624 herein); Combs v. Colonial Casualty Co. 73 W. Va. 473, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1218, 80 S. E. 779, 43 Ins. L. J. 512; Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779n, 63 S. E. 962. See note 40 L.R.A. 432, on voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.

[7] See Banta v. Continental Casualty Co. 134 Mo. App. 222, 113 S. W. 1140, 38 Ins. L. J. 243; Osgood v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. 76 N. H. 475, 84 Atl. 50, 41 Ins. L. J. 1663; Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 779n, 63 S. E. 962. Compare Da Rin v. Casualty Co. of America, 41 Mont. 175, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164n, is suggested as a comparative test, a factor in determining whether assured ought to have been or was in duty bound, under the circumstances, even though he was not conscious of the danger at the instant, to have known of its existence, and if assured's act could not be considered one of negligence or of contributory negligence it would seem that it ought not to constitute voluntary exposure to obvious or unnecessary danger. Certainly such a comparative test would not conflict with the one above noted, which is: Did assured appreciate that by doing the act, he was putting life and limb in hazard? On the contrary it would be in aid of the proposition that voluntary exposure in such case means a conscious and intentional exposure to a known risk.[8] In the above connection it is held that the words "voluntary exposure," "unnecessary danger," and "hazardous adventure," within the meaning of a policy, do not include such exposure as is incident to the ordinary habits and customs of life, but refer to something beyond the ordinary,—such as wanton or gross carelessness.[9] So under a Michigan decision voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of an accident policy, is a conscious or intentional exposure involving gross or wanton negligence on the part of the insured.[10] So the words voluntary exposure to obvious risk or danger under a clause limiting the amount of recovery where death is so occasioned are synonymous with gross or wanton negligence.[11]

Again, an obvious danger is one that is plain and apparent to a reasonably observant person, and the fact that insured may not have observed it and been conscious of it at the time of the fatal accident to him is immaterial as he owes to insurer, as well as to himself, the duty to be reasonably careful when in the presence of an obvious danger, and his failure to use reasonable care does not excuse him. The court in a West Virginia case per Williams, J., says: "The word 'obvious' as used in the con-

108 Pac. 649, considered under § 2624b herein.

As to negligence in insurance risks, generally, see §§ 2838 et seq. herein.

As to negligence and contributory negligence in boarding or leaving trains, etc., see Joyce on Electric Law (2d ed.) secs. 530 et seq.

[8] See on this last point, Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 73 Atl. 642; Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 35, 125 S. W. 353. See §§ 2624 et seq. herein.

[9] Manufacturers' Accident Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. 945, 7 C. C. A. 581, 16 U. S. App. 290, 22 L.R.A. 620.

[10] Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 115 Mich. 86, 40 L.R.A. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 549, 72 N. W. 1115.

[11] Walter v. People's Health & Accident Ins. Co. 173 Mich. 581, 130 N. W. 865.

tract of insurance bears its common or generally accepted meaning, one of which, as defined by Webster, is 'easily discovered, seen, or understood; readily perceived by the eye or the intellect; plain; evident; apparent.' It is synonymous with the words 'plain,' 'clear,' and 'evident,' . . . If this action had been against the railroad company by deceased's representative for negligently causing his death, there can be no doubt that in view of the undisputed facts as disclosed by the record, deceased's contributory negligence would preclude recovery. No prudent man would have undertaken to cross the track so close in front of a rapidly approaching engine. It may be that at the time of the accident, deceased's mind was so occupied with thoughts of other matters that he was oblivious to the approaching train and was therefore not conscious of the immediate danger of attempting to cross the track. If that be so, it was his own misfortune, and the law does not excuse his negligence. It was his duty to exercise care in the presence of so great and imminent a danger, and his failure to do so was negligence. The danger to which deceased exposed himself was obvious, within the meaning of the condition of the policy pleaded, whether he was conscious of it at the time or not, and exonerates defendant from payment of any more than one fifth of the amount for which it would otherwise have been liable." [12] Under a clause excepting liability for injuries resulting from "unnecessary exposure to danger or perilous adventure (unless in order to save life)" the words "unnecessary exposure to danger" includes exposure attributable to negligence of assured and requires assured to exercise ordinary care, and they exempt insurer from liability in all cases of injury occurring in whole or in part through insured's failure to exercise such care. Under this clause a judgment against insurer was reversed where insured, a railroad man and car repairer, out of employment, only a few days, was riding in daylight by implied permission upon a freight train and was killed, and when last seen was walking without apparent motive on top of the cars going down grade on a sharp curve.[13] So there is a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger where the inference is unavoidable that assured's own negligence contributed to the injury for which he sues and the policy expressly provides that no indemnity shall be paid in such case. The court, per Garcelon, J., said: "We have examined all the decisions to which we have been referred by the plaintiff's counsel in their able argument. Most of them are to the point that contributory negligence will not of itself as matter of law prevent a plaintiff from recovering under a policy which stipulates against a recovery for injury caused by 'a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger,' or requires merely that the insured shall 'use all due diligence for personal safety and protection;'[14] In Keene v. New England Accident Assoc.,[14a] the court says in speaking of such a policy, that 'by taking out a policy of insurance against accidents one naturally understands that he is to be indemnified against accidents resulting in whole or in part from his own inadventence.' In some of the cases most strongly relied on by the plaintiff, the court adverted to the fact that the policy did not exempt the insurer from liability for accidents caused or contributed to by the negligence of the insured,[15] but in the case at bar the express stipulation of the policy is that the defendant shall not be liable for 'any injury which the member, by the exercise of ordinary care, prudence and foresight, might have averted or prevented, or to which the member's own negligence shall have contributed.' "[16]

[12] Combs v. Colonial Casualty Co. 73 W. Va. 473, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1218 (annotated on exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger within the meaning of accident policy), 80 S. E. 779, 43 Ins. L. J. 512.

[13] Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 27 Okla. 496, 112 Pac. 1026, 40 Ins. L. J. 572.

So the question whether one was exercising proper care while crossing a railroad track is for the jury under the voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger clause.[17] But it is also decided that

[14] United States.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph, 78 Fed. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305; Manufacturers Accident Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. 945, 7 C. C. A. 581, 16 U. S. App. 290, 22 L.R.A. 620.

Maryland.—Providence Life Insurance & Investment Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310.

Massachusetts. — Keene v. New England Accident Assoc. 161 Mass. 149, 36 N. E. 891; Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Accident Assoc. 154 Mass. 77, 13 L.R.A. 263, 27 N. E. 769; Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 572, 12 N. E. 372.

Michigan.—Hunt v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 146 Mich. 521, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 935, 169 N. W. 1042; Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 115 Mich. 86, 40 L.R.A. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 549, 72 N. W. 1115.

Nebraska. — Rustin v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 58 Neb. 792, 46 L.R.A. 253, 76 Am. St. Rep. 136, 79 N. W. 712.

New York.—Duncan v. Preferred Mutual Accident Assoc. 13 N. Y. Supp. 620, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 145.

Ohio.—United States Mutual Accident Ins. Co. v. Hubbell, 56 Ohio St. 516, 40 L.R.A. 453, 47 N. E. 544.

Pennsylvania.—Burkhardt v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 102 Pa. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

Virginia.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Chambers, 93 Va. 138, 40 L.R.A. 432, 24 S. E. 896.

[14a] 161 Mass. 149, 36 N. E. 891.

[15] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sittig, 181 Ill. 111, 48 L.R.A. 359, 54 N. E. 903; Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. 126 Mo. 104, 30 L.R.A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638, 28 S. W. 877; Schneider v. Provident Ins. Co. 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157.

[16] Garcelon v. Commercial Travelers' Eastern Accident Assoc. 195 Mass. 531, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 961, 81 N. E. 201, 36 Ins. L. J. 747.

[17] Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. of America, 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361.

a charge is not erroneous or misleading which limits the question to one whether insured voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger and expressly excludes the factors of assured's negligence and his exercise of reasonable care and caution in a case where assured was shot and killed in an altercation with a policeman.[18] And where the policy provides for payment of benefits only in case of personal bodily injury "through external, violent, and purely accidental causes," and it also provides that, "where the accidental injury results from unnecessary exposure to danger or to obvious risks of injury," the amount payable shall be but one tenth of the face of the policy, and the policy contains no provision exempting the company from liability for negligence of the insured contributing to his injuries, it will be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary that the injuries were received through accidental causes.[19]

§ 2624b. Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger: death in attempt to save life: negligence.—Even though negligence might be imputed to insured in doing a certain act, nevertheless negligence ought not to be imputed to him where such act is an attempt to save human life, and if death results therefrom it will not, as matter of law, constitute obvious exposure to unnecessary danger unless the act amounts under the circumstances to that degree of rashness to the minds of reasonably prudent persons that they would not undertake it, and the test is, would a reasonably prudent man obey his impulses in that particular case; and at least the danger is not unnecessary. This applies to a case where the policy excepted injuries resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, and insured, who was a miner, while attempting to save another miner, who had been overcome by gas in a mine, and acting under the belief that he could safely go the necessary distance and effect the rescue, was himself overcome by gas and died therefrom, and others who assisted in the rescue were so far affected by the gas that they were compelled to protect themselves by helmets before the rescues were effected.[20] So an attempt to rescue a crew of a ship which has been driven ashore is held not to be within the exception, since it is the duty of a person in such case to extend help and aid.[1] In an Ohio case it was conceded that

[18] De Greayer v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 126 Cal. 17, 58 Pac. 390.

[19] Kephart v. Continental Casualty Co. 17 N. Dak. 380, 116 N. W. 349, 37 Ins. L. J. 582.

[20] Da Rin v. Casualty Co. of America, 41 Mont. 175, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164n, 108 Pac. 649.

As to negligence or contributory negligence as test, see § 2624a herein.

As to negligence in insurance, generally, see §§ 2838 et seq. herein.

[1] Tucker v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 50 Hun (N. Y.) 50, 4 N. Y. Supp. 505.

the clause voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger does not apply where one under the impulse of the moment rushes to a place of danger in an effort to save life, unless the act is so rash that a prudent man would not take the risk; but, in said case, the clause in question was "exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger" omitting the word "voluntary" and using the words "obvious risk" and "obvious danger" instead of "unnecessary danger," accordingly where insured was killed at an automobile race where he had rushed with others to aid a driver who had fallen from his machine it was held that the question whether assured exposed himself to obvious risk or obvious danger, was a question for the jury, but the court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeals in so far as it reversed judgments below for plaintiff but in so far as it finally determined the case said Court of Appeals was reversed.[2] The policy may, however, provide an exception to exemption clauses of liability in cases of exposure to unnecessary danger, etc., where the risk is taken in order to save life.[3]

§ 2624c. Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger: waiver.—These exemptions from liability clauses may as well as other conditions in the policy be waived. So the defense that injury resulted from exposure to unnecessary danger under an accident policy is waived by an offer to confess judgment for an amount less than is claimed, and by a subsequent motion for a verdict in accordance with such offer.[4] But knowledge by the agent of the insurer that the insured occasionally rode in steeple chases, and was riding in an amateur race does not constitute a waiver of a provision in the policy that the insurer shall not be liable for injuries received through voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[5]

§ 2625. Walking or being on railway bridge, track or "roadbed."—The phrase "walking or being on a railway bridge or roadbed," under an exception in an accident policy of liability for injuries or death caused thereby, is not to be construed with absolute literalness. The condition is a warranty by assured that he will not intrude upon that part of the roadbed which is not also a part of the highway or public thoroughfare; that he will not loiter upon the track, but does not obligate him not to cross a railroad bed at the

[2] Hickman v. Ohio State Life Ins. Co. 92 Ohio St. 87, 110 N. E. 542, 47 Ins. L. J. 214.

[3] Such was the provision in a policy in Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 27 Okla. 496, 112 Pac. 1026, 40 Ins. L. J. 572, where the clause was: "Unnecessary exposure to danger or perilous adventure (unless in order to save life)" but the clause in parenthesis was not in issue nor independently discussed in that case.

[4] Holiday v. American Mutual Accident Assoc. 103 Iowa, 178, 64 Am. St. Rep. 170, 72 N. W. 448.

[5] Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 185 Mass. 74, 64 L.R.A. 117, 102 Am. St. Rep. 326, 69 N. E. 1059.

place provided for the public to cross at, and if one crosses a track at a station where the public is accustomed to cross, he is not "walking on a railway roadbed" in any such sense as will entitle the insurer to avoid the policy irrespective of proof of such person's negligence in so crossing.[6]

The term "roadbed" does not include a well beaten space or walk of ten feet between the railroad tracks,[7] for such provision or that the policy does not cover being on any railroad right of way, means on the track;[8] nor does the exemption extend to the whole right of way, but only to that space where a person might be injured by cars running along the track.[9] But the space between the tracks of a double-track railroad, which are so close together that the distance between trains passing thereon would be only four feet, constitutes a roadbed within the meaning of that term in such exemption from liability clause.[10] It is declared in a New Hampshire case that the expression "roadbed of any railway" is not used in an insurance contract by engineers or in view of scientific undertakings and that the question as to the meaning of the word is not one of technical terms; that the risk intended to be excepted from those insured against was that of being struck by moving cars or engine, and, therefore, the clause means all that part of the right of way which may be swept by the moving rolling-stock, and that the exception was intended to have force in the event of any injury connected in its origin with the matter of train operation.[11]

Death caused by being struck by an engine and killed while

[6] Traders & Travelers' Accident Co. v. Wagley, 20 U. S. C. C. A. 588, 45 U. S. App. 39, 74 Fed. 457, 458, per Lacombe, C. J., citing Duncan v. Preferred Mutual Accident Assoc. 13 N. Y. Supp. 620, 59 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 145, 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 928, aff'd 129 N. Y. 622, 29 N. E. 1029. See Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. of America, 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361.

On scope of provision exempting insurer or limiting its liability, when insured is injured on "roadbed" of railroad company, see note in 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970.

[7] Meadows v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 50 Am. St. Rep. 427, 24 Ins. L. J. 721, 31 S. W. 578.

[8] Starr v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 41 Wash. 199, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, 83 Pac. 113.

[9] De Loy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 171 Pa. St. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787, 32 Atl. 1108.

[10] McClure v. Great Western Accident Assoc. 133 Iowa, 224, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 970n, 119 Am. St. Rep. 598, 110 N. W. 466.

[11] Osgood v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. 76 N. H. 475, 84 Atl. 50, 41 Ins. L. J. 1663, citing Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Langston, 60 Ark. 381, 30 S. W. 427; Metropolitan Accident Assoc. v. Taylor, 71 Ill. App. 132; McClure v. Great Western Accident Assoc. 133 Iowa, 224, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970, 119 Am. St. Rep. 598, 12 Ann. Cas. 41, 110 N. W. 466; De Loy v. Travelers Ins. Co. 171 Pa. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787, 32 Atl. 1108.

walking between the tracks of a railway, there being a sidewalk parallel thereto, is within the exception against walking or being on the roadbed of any steam railway, and it is immaterial that other people used the roadbed in the same manner.[12] And it is also held that the fact that other people used the roadbed is immaterial as the question is one of contract and not of tort liability between the injured party and those operating the moving trains.[13] And a provision of an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability when the injury is received while the assured is on the roadbed of a railroad company, applies where he is injured while walking between the double tracks of a railroad used for running trains in opposite directions, the rails being ten feet apart on the inside of the tracks and the distance between passing engines being four feet.[14] So where one is killed while attempting to cross a railroad track at the station which the public commonly crossed only with the company's permission, such death is within the provision "walking or being on the roadbed," and under the stipulation of the policy the beneficiary is entitled only to the death loss provided in the classification of railroad employees.[15] But an exemption from liability for injuries suffered by assured while walking or being on a railroad bridge or roadbed, does not extend to injuries sustained by insured when his business calls him to a track or crossing for a lawful purpose, unless it was in a time of danger, and he wilfully exposes himself to such danger.[16] If an action is brought to recover for death resulting from being upon a railway roadbed under a policy exempting insurer from liability in such case, and insurer proves that insured met his death while on the track of a railroad by being struck by a moving train, the presumption attaches that he went there voluntarily and knowingly and must be met by proof to the contrary.[17] But a person whose death is caused by injury is presumed to have been in the exercise of ordinary care at the time of his death. This presumption is not

[12] Piper v. Mercantile Mutual Accident Assoc. 161 Mass. 589, 37 N. E. 759. Compare Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. of America, 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361.

[13] Osgood v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. 76 N. H. 475, 84 Atl. 50, 41 Ins. L. J. 1663. Compare Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. of America, 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361.

[14] McClure v. Great Western Accident Assoc. 133 Iowa, 224, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 970n, 119 Am. St. Rep. 598, 110 N. W. 466.

[15] Keene v. New England Mutual Accident Assoc. 164 Mass. 170, 24 Ins. L. J. 796, 41 N. E. 203.

[16] De Loy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 171 Pa. St. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787, 32 Atl. 1108.

[17] Correll v. National Accident Soc. 139 Iowa, 36, 130 Am. St. Rep. 294, 116 N. W. 1046.

rebutted by the unexplained fact that his body was found mangled upon a railroad track.[18]

§ 2625a. Walking or being upon a railroad track or bridge: voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.—Provisions in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for an accident resulting from voluntary and unnecessary exposure, or while the insured is on a railway roadbed, present separate exemptions; an instruction which recognizes them as constituting only one and and as therefore presenting but a single defense, and which applies rules of proof thereto which are not applicable to both, is erroneous.[19] But it is also decided that a clause exempting insurer from liability for injury to insured from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger "or while being upon a railway bridge or roadbed," reasonably construed means that to come within the intent of the parties it must appear that assured unnecessarily, carelessly and voluntarily placed himself in a position to be injured by some one or more of the perils peculiar to the risk of being upon a roadbed.[20]

In an action upon an accident policy which excepted injuries caused by "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," it appeared that the insured sat on a bag on the railroad track with his back to the curve, and that a train suddenly came around the curve, and on warning the insured started off, but reached to get his bag, and as he did so the engine struck him. There was no evidence showing that insured knew or had good reason for knowing that any train would be along at that time. It was held that the act of the insured was not within the exception.[1] So where an accident policy excepted death or injury "by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," and "while walking on the roadbed or bridge of any railroad," and the insured stepped off a railway train which had stopped at a drawbridge at night, fell through a concealed hole in the bridge, and was killed, it was held not within the exceptions.[2]

[18] Meadows v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 50 Am. St. Rep. 427, 31 S. W. 578.

[19] Correll v. National Accident Soc. 139 Iowa, 36, 130 Am. St. Rep. 294, 116 N. W. 1046.

[20] Travelers Ins. Co. v. Harris, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 816, 46 Ins. L. J. 638, 643,—Hodges, J., citing Equitable Accident Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201, 13 L.R.A. 267, 9 So. 869; McClure v. Great Western Accident Assoc. 141 Iowa, 350, 118 N. W. 269; Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assur. Co. 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361; Meadows v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 50 Am. St. Rep. 427, 31 S. W. 578; De Loy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 171 Pa. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787, 32 Atl. 1108. See Beard v. Indemnity Ins. Co. 65 W. Va. 283, 64 S. E. 119.

[1] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Chambers, 93 Va. 138, 40 L.R.A. 432, 24 S. E. 896.

[2] Burkhardt v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

And where there is a limitation of liability to a certain amount in case death results from unnecessary exposure to obvious risk or danger, the death of insured, is not as a matter of law, within the clause where he is killed while walking upon part of a railroad track which has been continuously used as a traveled way for years by persons walking over that part.[3] Where a person stood at a railroad crossing and waited for a train to pass, and then, without taking the precaution to notice the train which was coming toward him from another direction, started to cross the tracks and was killed, it was held not a "voluntary exposure" to danger.[4] Although where the insured attempted in broad daylight to cross a railroad track in front of an approaching train, there being no obstruction to his view, recovery was denied.[5] But a person who crosses railroad tracks by a path generally used, and looks and listens, but sees or hears nothing, before crossing, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to voluntarily expose himself to unnecessary danger.[6] If, however, a person attempts to cross a railroad track immediately in front of a rapidly approaching train, and is run over and killed, exposes himself to an "obvious risk of injury or danger" within the meaning of such a limitation of liability clause.[7] And recovery on a policy containing such a provision has been held to be defeated where the insured on a dark night attempted to cross a trestle which he knew to be dangerous, though this was his customary route to his home.[8] So one who, seeing a track actually occupied by a train in readiness to be moved, undertakes to cross between the cars, because he thinks he has time to do so, but without any inquiry, is guilty of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, and if injured cannot recover, though insured against accident, if the policy declares that the insurance does not cover accidents resulting wholly or partly from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[9] Whether crossing a railroad track in front

[3] Walter v. People's Health & Accident Ins. Co. 173 Mich. 581, 139 N. W. 865.

[4] Lehman v. Great Eastern Casualty & Indemnity Co. 39 N. Y. Supp. 912, 7 App. Div. 424.

[5] Cornish v. Accident Ins. Co. 23 Q. B. Div. 453, 58 L. J. Q. B. 591, 38 W. R. 139, 54 J. P. 262, 41 Alb. L. J. 26.

[6] Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co. 75 N. H. 297, 139 Am. St. Rep. 695, 73 Atl. 642. See Payne v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. of America, 119 Iowa, 342, 93 N. W. 361.

[7] Combs v. Colonial Casualty Co. 73 W. Va. 473, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1218 (annotated on exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger within the meaning of accident policy), 80 S. E. 779, 43 Ins. L. J. 512.

[8] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270, 7 S. E. 83.

[9] Willard v. Masonic Equitable Accident Assoc. 169 Mass. 288, 61 Am. St. Rep. 285, 47 N. E. 1006.

of an advancing train is or is not "negligence" or "voluntary exposure to unnecessary risk" is a question materially dependent upon the distance to be covered by the individual, the distance to be covered by the train, and the speed at which the latter is approaching, and where the evidence is conflicting upon these points there is no error in leaving the jury to pass upon the conflicting proof.[10] Again, voluntary exposure to obvious risk within the meaning of a policy, is made, as a matter of law, by climbing on the side of an engine which is approaching a standpipe erected in close proximity to the track at a speed of eight or ten miles an hour, where the insured had passed the standpipe frequently, and had done so just before the accident.[11] In another case the insured was killed by a railway train while he was running on the track in front of it in the night to get on a train approaching in the other direction on a parallel track, and it was held that there could be no recovery.[12] But a clause of exemption where death results from unnecessary exposure, has no application to one who meets his death in the perilous occupation of "bridgeman" or one who is sent out to flag trains in order that their speed may be reduced before crossing a railway bridge, for, notwithstanding such clause, insurer under an accident policy assumes the risk of casualties necessarily attendant upon the duties required in such an occupation.[13] If, however, there is an exception of liability for injuries "while walking or being on any railway bridge or roadbed (railway employees excepted)," a traveling salesman, whose duties require him to visit coal dealers and to be in and about railroad yards in connection with his business, cannot be held to be a railroad employee so as not to defeat a recovery for injury sustained by him while walking in a railroad yard on a railroad roadbed, there being no ambiguity in the term "railway employees" nor in the clause in which it is used; nor is recovery for an injury in such case aided by the fact that railway employees are insured at a higher rate of premium by the insurer than that charged persons in insured's class.[14] Walking on a dark night over a railroad trestle where there is no railing is voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[15]

[10] Traders' & Travelers' Accident Co. v. Wagley, 20 C. C. A. 588, 45 U. S. App. 39, 74 Fed. 457, 459, per Lacombe, C. J.

[11] Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co. 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779, 63 S. E. 962.

[12] Tuttle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316.

[13] Jamison v. Continental Casualty Co. 104 Mo. App. 306, 78 S. W. 812.

[14] Yancey v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 108 Ga. 349, 33 S. E. 979, 28 Ins. L. J. 920.

[15] Follis v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 94 Iowa, 435, 58 Am. St. Rep. 408, 28 L.R.A. 78, 62 N. W. 807.

§ 2626. Instances within the exception of "voluntary exposure."—Where the insured died from the result of injuries received in jumping through a window to escape arrest the policy was held to be avoided.[16] So, in the absence of circumstances of peril, a person who places his person in front of the muzzle of his gun, loaded and cocked, as he reaches for it to draw it toward him through a fence, "unnecessarily exposes himself to danger," within the meaning of an accident policy excluding from the risk disability arising from such exposure.[17] And it is a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger to engage in riding a steeplechase.[18] So where death ensued in consequence of the insured having fallen from the platform of a railway car late at night, while the train was in full motion, the policy was held avoided.[19] In another case where the insured, who was walking along a street through which a railroad ran, in company with two others whom he met, failed to look out for the engine, there being an approaching train, and then turned, went back a short distance, and "squatted down" upon the track, the engine being twenty-five feet distant at the time, and was struck and killed, it was held to be clearly a case of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, there being no evidence whatever showing it to be an accident.[20] So an attempt to board a train moving at eight or ten miles an hour may constitute an exposure to obvious risk and injury or a voluntary and unnecessary exposure to danger.[1]

§ 2627. Instances not within the exception of "voluntary exposure."—It is not a case of "voluntary exposure" where the insured while asleep involuntarily does some act resulting in injury; as where the insured while traveling by railway, being asleep and unconscious, voluntarily arose and walked to the car platform, from which he fell and received injuries.[2] So one who lies down to sleep on the top of the boilers of a steamboat, and is there injured by steam escaping from a safety valve, is not guilty of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, though warned not to sleep there, unless he was conscious of the danger from the escaping steam

[16] Shaffer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 31 Ill. App. 112, aff'd 22 N. E. 589.

[17] Sargent v. Central Accident Ins. Co. 112 Wis. 29, 88 Am. St. Rep. 946, 87 N. W. 796.

[18] Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 185 Mass. 74, 64 L.R.A. 117, 102 Am. St. Rep. 326, 69 N. E. 1059.

[19] Sawtelle v. Railway Passengers Assurance Co. 15 Blatch. (U. S. C. C.) 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12,392.

[20] Williams v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 133 N. Y. 367, 45 N. Y. St. Rep. 233, 31 N. E. 222, 46 Alb. L. J. 73, 21 Ins. L. J. 609.

[1] Small v. Travelers Protective Assoc. 118 Ga. 900, 63 L.R.A. 510, 45 S. E. 706. See § 2622 herein.

[2] Scheiderer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Wis. 13, 46 Am. Rep. 618, 16 N. W. 47.

On injury to insured by act of his own while asleep as an accident, see note in 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 422.

from the safety valve.[3] It is also held not to be "voluntary exposure" where the insured, who is running toward an approaching train in order to get the mailbags, stumbles and falls against the engine.[4] So standing on the steps of a moving train is not, as a matter of law, "voluntary exposure" to unnecessary danger within the meaning of those words as used in an accident policy, if assured did not appreciate that by so doing he was putting life or limb at hazard.[5] Where the train on which deceased was a passenger stopped short of his destination, and after it started he was found crushed by the car-wheels between the station platform and the nearest rail, it was held that this did not show as a matter of law that death resulted from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.[6] So an insured, under such an exemption from liability clause is entitled to recover for a broken ankle caused by putting out his foot to prevent his running against a wall while playing indoor baseball.[7] Nor is it within such an exception from liability for a traveling salesman to attempt to cross a slough in a public road, where he has regularly crossed it twice a year for years, and who, acting on his own judgment based on his previous knowledge and the appearance of the place, together with the opinions of others, concludes that there is no danger to his life in making the attempt,[8] nor does the owner of a farm voluntarily expose himself to unnecessary danger by attempting to drive a bull from a calf pasture into which it has broken if he does not believe, and has no reason to believe, that there is any danger to himself in so doing.[9] Nor does it constitute voluntary exposure, so as to prevent recovery, to go out in a boat to fish on a dark night in water that is dangerous because of sunken trees or snags unknown to the fisherman,[10] nor does hunting for game in the ordinary manner with a loaded gun, nor attempting to scale a bank with a loaded gun in hand, constitute a voluntary exposure to unnecessary dan-

[3] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Clark, 109 Ky. 350, 95 Am. St. Rep. 374, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 902, 59 S. W. 7.

[4] Equitable Accident Ins. Co. v. Osborn. 90 Ala. 201, 13 L.R.A. 267, 9 So. 869, 44 Alb. L. J. 304.

[5] Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 115 Iowa, 217, 56 L.R.A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153, 88 N. W. 368.

[6] Anthony v. Mercantile Mutual Accident Assoc. 162 Mass. 354, 44 Am. St. Rep. 367, 26 L.R.A. 406, 38 N. E. 226.

[7] Hunt v. United States Accident Assoc. 146 Mich. 521, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 938, 117 Am. St. Rep. 665, 109 N. W. 1042.

[8] United States Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Hubbell, 56 Ohio St. 516, 40 L.R.A. 453, 47 N. E. 544.

[9] Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 115 Mich. 86, 40 L.R.A. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 549, 72 N. W. 1115.

[10] Collins v. Bankers' Accident Ins. Co. 96 Iowa, 216, 59 Am. St. Rep. 367, 64 N. W. 778.

On death by drowning as voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 634.

ger.[11] Nor is the mere act of cleaning a gun, not known to be loaded, a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, where an accident results from an unknown defect in the gun.[12] Nor does assured expose himself to obvious and unnecessary danger even though he is killed while advancing upon another in an aggressive manner where he was ignorant of the fact that his adversary was armed and received no warning from him that he would shoot if assured continued his advance and in such case his death is accidental to him.[13] And being shot after leaving a bawdyhouse does not release the insurer as being "unnecessary exposure to danger." [14]

§ 2628. Death by disease excepted: fits.—An ordinary provision of accident policies is that excepting the insurer from liability in case injury or death arises from injury or disease. In an action upon a policy containing such a provision it was held that death resulting from malignant pustule, caused by contact with putrid animal matter containing bacteria of the kind known as "bacilli anthrax," is death from disease, and not from accidental means.[15] And likewise, if any impure or poisonous substance or matter enters the body which produces some disease from which death results, it will be within the excepted liability of death by disease.[16] If it is stipulated that insurer shall not be liable in case of death or disability caused "Wholly or in part by any bodily or mental infirmity or disease" and assured dies from chloroform being administered preparatory to a surgical operation, a prima facie case is established for recovery for death by accident where it appears that insured was in apparent good health at the time of administering the chloroform and the attending physician testifies that the direct and immediate cause of death was acute dilatation of the heart caused by administering the chloroform and that in-

[11] Cornwell v. Fraternal Accident Assoc. 6 N. Dak. 201, 40 L.R.A. 437, 69 N. W. 191.

[12] Miller v. American Mutual Accident Ins. Co. 92 Tenn. 167, 20 L.R.A. 765, 21 S. W. 39.

[13] Union Casualty Co. v. Harroll, 98 Tenn. 591, 40 S. W. 1080, 27 Ins. L. J. 176, considered also under § 2619a herein.

[14] Jones v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 92 Iowa, 652, 61 N. W. 485.

[15] Bacon (Stedman) v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 123 N. Y. 304, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748, 9 L.R.A. 617, 25 N. E. 399, rehearing denied 26 N. E. 751. But see § 2878 herein.

As to special risks and loss: accident or disease, etc., cause of death, see §§ 2878 et seq. herein.

[16] Bacon (Stedman) v. United States Mutual Accident Assoc. 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 523, rev'd 123 N. Y. 304, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748, 9 L.R.A. 617, 25 N. E. 399, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 599.

On liability under accident policy for condition caused by external infection without cut or abrasion, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 140.

sured's diseased condition did not contribute to his death.[17] The words "disease" and "bodily infirmity," as used in an accident policy excepting liability for injury caused thereby, mean, practically, the same thing; and refer to some ailment or disorder of a somewhat established and settled character, some physical disturbance to which the insured is subject, and of which an attack causing him an injury is, in some measure, a recurrence; and they have no reference to some temporary disorder which is new and unusual and arises from some sudden and unexpected derangement of the system, though it produces or causes unconsciousness.[18] So disease, mental or bodily infirmity within the exception of liability clause must be construed as meaning something more than the disease or infirmity itself and so be held to include such diseases or mental infirmities only which directly or indirectly contribute to the injury or death.[19]

The insurer is liable under an accident policy for death the result of peritonitis, caused by a fall, though the policy excepts death in consequence of disease, and though it may appear that the insured previously had peritonitis and was peculiarly liable to a recurrence of the disease.[20] And an exception from liability for death from pulmonary disease does not include pneumonia as the latter is not an inherent or organic defect.[1] If liability is limited by reason of chronic disease, the question whether insured's illness arises therefrom is for the jury.[2]

Where an accident policy excepted death arising from "fits . . . or any disease whatsoever," and the insured, while at a railway station, was seized with a fit, and, falling across the tracks of the railway, was run over by a passing train and killed, it was held to be death by accident, and not a death within the exception.[3] So also where the policy provided that it should not extend "to any injury caused by or arising from natural disease, or weakness or exhaustion consequent upon disease," and the insured while

[17] Beile v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America, 155 Mo. App. 629, 135 S. W. 497, 40 Ins. L. J. 1028.

[18] Meyer v. Fidelity & Casualty Ins. Co. 96 Iowa, 378, 59 Am. St. Rep. 374, 65 N. W. 328.

[19] Vernon v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 158 Iowa, 597, 138 N. W. 696.

[20] Freeman v. Mercantile Accident Assoc. 156 Mass. 351, 17 L.R.A. 753, 30 N. E. 1013.

[1] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Bergen, 64 Ill. App. 685.

[2] Strickland v. Peerless Casualty Co. 112 Me. 100, 90 Atl. 974. See Kingkade v. Continental Casualty Co. 35 Okla. 99, 128 Pac. 683.

[3] Lawrence v. Accidental Ins. Co. Lim. 50 L. J. Q. B. 522, L. R. 7 Q. B. D. 216, 45 L. T. 29, 29 W. R. 802, 45 J. P. 781.

On previous diseased condition as affecting liability for death or injury from accident, see notes in 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 445; and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1203.

crossing a stream was seized with an epileptic fit, and falling into the water was drowned, it was held not to be within the exception.[4] But evidence that the insured staggered before he received a fall resulting in an injury, is not conclusive that he had "fits or vertigo," excepted by the policy, if he had been in good health previous to the fall, and expert evidence shows that the staggering might have been produced by other causes.[5]

§ 2629. Disease caused by accident: death superinduced by other causes not death by excepted disease.—If a disease is primarily, solely, and directly caused by external violence, and death ensues by reason of a surgical operation for the purpose of relieving the patient, it is a death "accidentally occurring from material and external cause, where such accidental injury is the direct and sole cause of death," and it is not within an exception of liability for death or disability arising from specified diseases "within the system of the insured before or at the time or following such accidental injury, whether causing such death or disability directly or jointly with such accidental injury." Here the policy insures against cuts, stabs, concussions, etc., "accidentally occurring from material and external cause, where such accidental injury is the direct and sole cause of death to the insured or disability to follow his avocation," and then follows this exception: "But it does not insure against death or disability arising from . . . hernia . . . or any other disease arising within the system of the insured before or at the time or following such accidental injury, whether causing such death of disability directly or jointly with such accidental injury." And it was decided that death from hernia, caused solely and directly by external violence, followed by a surgical operation performed for the purpose of relieving the patient, was not within the above exception.[6] If bodily infirmity or disease is caused by or directly results from an injury, and such disease

[4] Winspear v. Accidental Ins. Co. Lim. 6 Q. B. D. 42, 43 L. T. 459, 29 W. R. 116. See also Reynolds v. Accident Ins. Co. 22 L. T. (N. S.) 820, 18 W. R. 1141, where the insured was seized with a fit while bathing and was drowned.

[5] Meyer v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 96 Iowa, 378, 59 Am. St. Rep. 374, 65 N. W. 328.

[6] Fitton v. Accidental Death Ins. Co. 17 Com. B. (N. S.) 122, 2 Big. L. & A. Ins. Rep. 649, 34 L. J. C. P. 28, approved in Smith v. Accident Ins. Co. noted in § 2630.

On applicability of provisions in accident policies exempting insurer or limiting its liability for disability arising from a specified condition when such condition is itself the result of an accident occurring after the issuance of the policy, see notes in 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1014; and L.R.A. 1916B, 621.

As to proximate and remote cause, see §§ 2862 et seq. herein.

As to special risks and losses, accident or disease, see §§ 2878 et seq. herein.

contributed wholly or in part to insured's death, it does not preclude recovery, even though liability is excepted where death results wholly or in part from disease.[7] And bodily infirmity or disease resulting from accidental injury is not within a clause of exemption from liability if death results directly or indirectly from bodily infirmity or disease of any kind.[8] And where assured had a heavy fall while hunting, and was wet through and the effect thereof was to lower his vitality so that pneumonia germs multiplied rapidly resulting in his death, such death is directly caused by accident and is not within an exception of liability "where the direct or proximate cause" of death "is disease or other intervening cause, even although the disease or other intervening cause may itself have been aggravated by such accident, or have been due to weakness or exhaustion consequent thereon, or the death accelerated thereby."[9] But disease consequent upon lowered vitality, and which, except for an accidental injury would not have been fatal, is held the cause of death. The question as to the cause of death, whether accident or disease, is for the jury, unless the evidence is so clear as that all reasonable men would reach the same conclusion as to said cause.[10]

§ 2629a. Pre-existing disease: disease and accidental injury concurring.—If disease develops subsequent to an accident and is the result thereof, a judgment for insured will be affirmed, even though he had had the same disease prior to his application for insurance, but had at that time recovered therefrom.[11] If death is caused by the concurring action of the injury and a pre-existing disease, or in other words, if a disease pre-existing at the time of the accidental injury is aggravated thereby, or the disease aggravates the effects from the accident and actively contributes to the disability or consequent death, recovery is precluded under a clause limiting insurer's liability to disability or death resulting independently of all other causes, from accidental injuries and stipulating that there shall be no recovery if death results wholly or in part, directly or indirectly from disease or bodily infirmity.[12]

[7] Coulter v. Travelers Protective Assoc. of America, 144 Ill. App. 255.

[8] Cary v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of N. Y. 127 Wis. 67, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 526n, 106 N. W. 1055, 35 Ins. L. J. 481.

[9] Etherington, In re, v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Accident Ins. Co. (1909) 1 K. B. L. R. 591, 126 L. T. 328, 64 L. J. 266.

[10] Ward v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 82 Neb. 499, 118 N. W. 70.

[11] Jiroch v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 145 Mich. 375, 108 N. W. 728.

[12] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Morrow, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1213, 213 Fed. 599, 130 C. C. A. 179, 44 Ins. L. J. 301, distinguishing Preferred Accident Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 213 Fed. 595, 130 C. C. A. 175, 44 Ins. L. J. 297. See notes in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 445, and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1203, on previous diseased condition as affecting liability for death or injury from

§ 2629b. Death from disease as primary, secondary or final cause.—If liability is excluded for accident or death or disability resulting wholly or partly, directly or indirectly from bodily or mental infirmity or disease in any form, proximate or contributory, as a primary, secondary or final cause of accident, injury or death, death is not within such exception so as to preclude recovery where insured dies from blood poisoning resulting at once from an unintentional, accidental cut on the finger, where insured was not at that time then afflicted with any known physical or mental infirmity.[13]

§ 2630. Death from disease as a "secondary cause" not death by accident.—If an injury or disease is primarily caused by accidental means, yet if death is superinduced by a disease enumerated among those excepted as not insured against, it is within an exception of liability for death or disability arising from specified diseases, "or secondary cause or causes arising within the system of the insured before or at the time and following such accidental injury, whether causing such death or disability directly or jointly with such accident or injury."[14] accident. See §§ 2879, 2880 herein.

§ 2630a. Death by drowning excepted: presumptions.—If death resulting wholly or in part directly or indirectly from drowning is an excepted risk, no presumption exists that insured died as a result of bodily injuries instead of from drowning when she was aboard a steamer at the time the vessel sank and others aboard the same vessel sustained bodily injuries.[15]

[13] Rheinheimer v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 77 Ohio St. 360, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 245, 83 N. E. 491.

On liability on accident policy for sickness or death caused by blood poisoning, see notes in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 926, and L.R.A.1917A, 1056.

[14] In Smith v. Accident Ins. Co. L. R. 5 Ex. 302, 39 L. J. Ex. 211, 22 L. T. 861, 18 W. R. 1107, although approving the Fitton case (under § 2629 above) it was distinguished by some of the members of the court. In this case the insurance was against accidents from cuts, etc. The insured died from erysipelas caused by an accidental cut, but the condition differs from the Fitton case in that it reads, "When accidentally occurring from material and external cause operating upon the person of the insured, where such accidental injury is the direct and sole cause of death to the insured, . . . but it does not insure against death or disability arising from . . . erysipelas or any other disease or secondary cause or causes arising within the system of the insured before or at the time or following such accidental injury, whether causing such death or disability directly or jointly with such accidental injury," etc.

As to proximate or remote cause, see §§ 2862 et seq. herein.

As to accident or disease: special risks and losses, see §§ 2878 et seq. herein.

[15] Lewis v. Continental Casualty Co. 61 Wash. 154, 112 Pac. 91.

On liability for death by drowning, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 631.

Evidence of death, see § 3772 herein.

Special risks and losses: asphyxia-

§ 2631. Death caused by "medical treatment for disease," or "surgical treatment," excepted.—If the policy provides that the company will not be liable for death "caused wholly or in part by . . . medical treatment for disease," it will not be liable where the insured, by accident or inadvertence, takes a larger quantity of the medicine prescribed for him than is specified, and death results therefrom. Thus, where a specified quantity of opium had been prescribed for a person insured under a policy containing such a condition, and he by mistake took such a quantity as produced death, it was held to be death wholly or in part by medical treatment for disease, and the insurers were held to be released from liability.[16] If death or disability resulting from "surgical treatment" is an excepted risk and assured dies from chloroform being administered preparatory to a surgical operation, the administering chloroform in such case does not, it is decided, constitute "surgical treatment" as these words mean treating a disease or a patient by means of surgery, the meaning of which latter word is the applying manual operations or instrumental appliances to the affected parts for the purpose of curing or relieving the bodily disease or ailment, and where the jury finds that "surgical treatment," does not include the administering of chloroform under the circumstances such finding will stand, where it appears that insured was in apparent good health up to the time of administering the chloroform and the attending physician testifies that the direct and immediate cause of death was acute dilatation of the heart caused by administering the chloroform and that insured's diseased condition did not contribute to his death.[17] An exception of liation caused by the action of water, see § 2881 herein.

[16] Bayliss v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 14 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 143, Fed. Cas. No. 1,138.

On liability under accident policy for death or injury resulting from surgical operation or medical treatment, see notes in 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1004, and L.R.A.1915E, 955.

[17] Beile v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. of America, 155 Mo. App. 629, 135 S. W. 497, 40 Ins. L. J. 1028. The court per Caulfield, J., said: "Respondent next contends that the verdict was rightfully set aside because the death was one 'resulting from surgical treatment,' and is therefore one of the exceptions of the certificate. We are unable to agree that the death did result from 'surgical treatment.' As already said, these associations do business mostly with the common people, and the expressions contained in their certificates should be defined according to the ordinary and usual understanding of their signification, and be construed strictly against the insurer, where they narrow the range and force of the obligation. The Standard Dictionary defines 'surgery' as 'the branch of the healing art that relates to external injuries, deformities and other morbid conditions to be remedied directly by manual operations or instrumental appliances.' 'Surgical' is defined as being 'of, or pertaining to, surgery.' 'Treatment' means the act or manner of treating. To 'treat' means to 'apply remedies bility if disability or death results from medical or surgical treatment relates rather to the results or consequences of such treatment than to medical or surgical treatment or aid or to give relief in cases of accidental injury.[18]

§ 2631a. Unnecessary lifting and voluntary overexertion.—Although a policy contains a stipulation exempting insurers from liability for injuries occasioned by unnecessary lifting and voluntary overexertion still insured's contract right to indemnity is not lost where the injury results from overexertion unless such overexertion is intentional and conscious. And where insured fails to accurately gauge his strength or to correctly estimate the weight of the object, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that he is aware of the probable result of his act, or that he acted with a reckless disregard of the consequences likely to ensue, and mere contributory negligence in such case constitutes no defense. This applies where a man, accustomed to lifting and being in good physical condition at the time and who suspects that heavy dumb-bells to be used by an athlete are under weight, with a view to protect his company and the public from imposture, but failing to accurately gauge his strength or to correctly estimate their weight and believing that he can lift a greater weight, attempts to lift a three hundred pound dumbbell and is injured thereby, and in such case recovery is not precluded and the question should be submitted to the jury.[19] If

to;' as to treat a disease or a patient. A 'remedy' is something used 'for the cure or relief of bodily disease or ailment.' We gather from reading these definitions that 'surgical treatment' means treating a disease or patient by means of surgery, which in turn means applying manual operations or instrumental appliances to the affected part for the purpose of curing or relieving the bodily disease or ailment. Administering chloroform as was done in this case does not come within any of these definitions or meanings. It was not a manual operation or application of an instrumental appliance, and was not resorted to as a remedy or for the purpose of curing or relieving Beile's ailment. It was administered as preparatory to the surgical operation; but so might have been his bath, and if he had died in his bath it would not be seriously contended that he died as the result of surgical treatment. And the meaning of 'surgical treatment,' as the dictionary indicates it, is in accordance with the usual and ordinary understanding."

[18] Vernon v. Iowa State Travelingmen's Assoc. 158 Iowa, 597, 138 N. W. 696. Examine Westmoreland v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 75 Fed. 244.

[19] Rustin v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 58 Neb. 792, 46 L.R.A. 253, 76 Am. St. Rep. 136, 79 N. W. 712, 28 Ins. L. J. 997, citing Manufacturers' Accident Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. 945, 7 C. C. A. 581, 16 U. S. App. 290, 22 L.R.A. 620; Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 115 Mich. 86, 40 L.R.A. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 549, 72 N. W. 1115.

On right to compensation on accident policy for injury resulting from exertion or strain, see note in 2 B. R. C. 367.

As to special risks and losses: ina person insured under an accident policy, providing that it shall not cover injuries from "lifting" ruptures a blood vessel of the stomach, causing death, by lifting a heavy cylinder head in the course of his employment, a recovery may be had under the policy, if the application for insurance notified the insurer of the nature of the occupation of the insured.[20]

§ 2632. Occupation: exception of liability for "wrecking."—One who is insured as engaged in a particular occupation is nevertheless within the protection of the policy, although he engages in a work of humanity, such as assisting in saving a shipwrecked crew, whereby he comes to an accidental death by drowning, and his humane act does not make his occupation that of "wrecking" or a "wrecker" within an exception of liability while engaged in "wrecking." [1]

§ 2632a. Employers' liability policy: injuries while making extraordinary repairs.—If an employers' liability policy stipulates against loss from liability to any person employed in making extraordinary repairs in connection with the construction or demolition of any structure, building, or plant, but permits ordinary repairs by certain employees, recovery from insurer is precluded where the repairs are of such a character as to constitute "extraordinary repairs" within the stipulation, as where after partial destruction of assured's factory by fire, it was found necessary to line an acid chamber with lead and an employee was injured while engaged in that work, and obtained damages therefor from the employer, and it will not be held that the parties have construed the policy so as to cover such accident, where a rider is subsequently attached thereto, which stipulates that operations in connection with the rebuilding, repairing, etc., of said acid tanks or vaults are not covered except on notice, etc.[2] juries: voluntary act for convenience, pleasure, or in daily routine duties unaccompanied by extraneous accidental causes: rupture strains, etc. see § 2883 herein.

[20] Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Schmaltz, 66 Ark. 588, 47 Am. St. Rep. 112, 53 S. W. 49.

On rupture of blood vessel as an accident within accident insurance policy, see note in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1206.

[1] Tucker v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Hartford, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 50, 4 N. Y. Supp. 505, 23 N. Y. St. Rep. 957, aff'd 121 N. Y. 718, 24 N. E. 1102.

As to conditions voiding policy: prohibited occupations, see §§ 2236 et seq. herein.

As to special risks and losses; change of occupation, etc., see § 2870 herein.

As to death in attempt to save life, see § 2624b herein.

[2] Home Mixture Guano Co. v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. Ltd. of L. E. (U. S. C. C.) 176 Fed. 600. The policy stipulated that it did not cover loss from liability for injuries to any person connected with the making of additions to or alterations in any structure or plant, or in connection with the construction, demolition or extraordinary repairs thereof, or for loss or injury caused wholly or in part thereby, but that ordinary repairs were permitted when made on the premises mentioned in the schedule by employees whose compensation was regularly included in the estimated payroll.

§ 2632b. Employers' liability policy: violation of law.—The parties to an employers liability policy or contract of indemnity or insurance may validly limit the insurers liability by exempting him from any claim for indemnity to insured against damages, loss or expense resulting from injuries or death to or caused by any person employed in violation of law and this applies to a violation of the labor law as to employment of minors, so that the insurer is entitled to claim the benefit of such exemption in the absence of waiver or estoppel.[3] Such a statute enters into and becomes a part of the contract of insurance and includes as a child one who is between the ages specified in the statute making it unlawful to employ such child without an age certificate and is also within the policy exemption of liability for injuries sustained by the one so unlawfully employed.[4] And there can be no recovery from insurer where the child employee is under the age of twelve contrary to the statutory prohibition.[5] So a child under sixteen is employed in violation of law as to age under an exemption of liability stipulation in such case where his employment places him, in violation of the statute, in a position where his life or limb is endangered and where he sustains injury thereby, even though it is no part of his duty to do what he is doing when injured and other employees who are adults warn him of the danger, and recovery over against insurer is precluded in such case by said exemption from liability clause.[6] If, however, the insured employer has no knowledge that the child was within the prohibitive age recovery is not precluded.[7] We would suggest, however, that in case of such a claim it ought very clearly to appear that there was actually no knowledge of such child's age to sustain it.

[3] Mason-Henry Press v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 211 N. Y. 489, 105 N. E. 826, 44 Ins. L. J. 316, aff'g 139 N. Y. Supp. 1133, 155 App. Div. 876; employers' liability act, Consol. Laws, N. Y. c. 31, secs. 200–204.

On injuries covered by employers indemnity policy, see notes in 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1192, and L.R.A.1915C, 155. See §§ 2800–2803 herein.

[4] Louis F. Kleeman Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 177 Mo. App. 397, 164 S. W. 167; Rev. Stat. 1909, sec. 1719. See London Guarantee & Accident Co. Ltd. v. Morris, 156 Ill. App. 533, 40 Nat. Corp. Rep. 889 ("child" means under age of puberty). Common and statutory law as part of contract, see §§ 194 et seq. herein.

[5] Mt. Vernon Woodberry Cotton Duck Co v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 111 Md. 561, 75 Atl. 105.

[6] Frank Unnewehr Co. v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 176 Fed. 16, 99 C. C. A. 490, Rev. Stat. Ohio secs. 6986–1.

[7] Morton v. Ontario, 30 Canadian L. T. 192, 14 O. W. R. 1010

Where an employer's liability policy or indemnity insurance contract provides, as it validly may, that it does not cover loss or expense arising on account of or resulting from injuries or death to, or if caused by any person employed in violation of law, and the employee makes his claim for damages against insured basing such claim on various grounds covered by the policy, and also on the alleged violation of law not covered thereby, as above stated, insurer has his choice between two courses of action which would preserve said limitation of liability, that is, it may regard simply the charge of insured's violation of the law and refuse to defend the action, taking its chances that the sole ground of liability, if any, will be established, and for which it would not be liable, or, on the other hand it may proceed with the defense of the action under an agreement with or notice to insured, express or implied, that it will defend against all allegations of fault, and that if in the end it should come out that the only allegation sustained was the one of violation of law, its rights should be preserved, and it should not be liable.[8] If assured under an employer's liability policy neglects to comply with the law as to safeguarding machinery and works, providing efficient safety appliances, etc., but no employee is injured in consequence of such violation of law, insurer is not exempt from liability under an exception of liability for accidents in case of such neglect or violation of the law; and the burden is upon insurer to allege and prove that the loss was one within the policy exceptions.[9]

§ 2632c. Same subject: waiver.—In a New York case an employer's liability policy or indemnity insurance contract excepted liability for loss or expense arising on account of or resulting from injuries or death to, or if caused by any person employed in violation of law. Insured's employee, a boy, was injured, by operating a printing press, and insured was served with notice of claim under the Employers' Liability Act,[10] and an action for damages was sub-

[8] Mason-Henry Press v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 211 N. Y. 489, 105 N. E. 826, 44 Ins. L. J. 316,—Hiscock, J., aff'g 139 N. Y. Supp. 1133, 155 App. Div. 876; employers' liability act, Consol. Laws, N. Y. c. 31, secs. 200–204. See United Waste Manufacturing Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 85 Misc. 539, 148 N. Y. Supp. 852, 44 Ins. L. J. 497; Buffalo Steel Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 156 App. Div. 453; Gutfreund v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 98 N. Y. Supp. 699.

[9] Bridal Veil Lumbering Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 75 Oreg. 57, 145 Pac. 671; employer's liability act, Laws 1911, p. 61. See Chicago-Coulterville Coal Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. (U. S. C. C.) 130 Fed. 957 (exception of liability for failure to "observe any statute affecting the safety of persons:" statute required that safe passage for men, etc. be maintained by mining companies: employee injured: recovery precluded: question also of waiver).

[10] Consol. Laws, c. 31, secs. 200–204.

sequently brought and both notice and complaint alleged amongst other acts of negligence that at the time of the accident said employee was fifteen years of age and that no certificate, as required by law, had been issued permitting him to work, and that he was employed in violation of law, which violation caused the accident. Assurer at once called insured's attention to the allegation of the employee that he was employed in violation of law, and stated that if such proved to be the fact "this case would not fall to us for attention." There was a subsequent conversation with insurer's officer resulting in insurer's going on under its objection with the conduct of the defense and assured co-operated in the trial, and upon the fact being ascertained that the allegation as to the boy being under age was corroborated, a settlement was advised by insurer but insured refused to consider it. It was decided that insured had done all that was necessary and all that it could do to assert and preserve its rights under the exemption or condition while thus proceeding with the defense of the case, and that it had also fairly and reasonably done all that it could to assert its rights under the policy and in doing so in such a manner as would be notice to assured that it did not intend to waive its rights by proceeding with such defense and therefore it had not waived its rights nor so misled assured as to constitute an estoppel.[11]

§ 2633. Accident to property: loss by fire excepted.—If a policy is issued upon property insuring it against accident, but excepting loss or damage by fire, any loss to the property of which fire is the proximate cause will be within the exception. Thus, where a policy upon glass insured "against loss by breakage by accident or causes entirely uncontrolled by the insured, but excepted" loss or damage which may happen by or in consequence of any fire, it was held that the breakage of glass caused by the falling wall of another building, which fell in consequence of a fire, was within the exception, as the fire was the proximate and immediate cause of the loss.[12] In another case a policy which was issued upon a sugar refinery covered loss by "explosion or accidents," and on the back of the policy limited the term "explosion" to "rupture of the skull of the shell or flues of the boiler or boilers, caused by the action of steam." The policy also provided that the insurer should not be liable for any "explosion or loss caused by the burning of the building, . . . or for any loss or damage by fire resulting from any cause whatever." A fire occurred, and while endeavoring to put it out certain inflammable materials which were stored, upon coming in contact with the flames, exploded. In an action to recover it was held that the loss was not by "accident" within the meaning of the policy, and within the exception, and that the insurer was not liable for the loss caused directly by the explosion and from the fire which ensued.[13]

[11] Mason-Henry Press v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 211 N. Y. 489, 105 N. E. 826, 44 Ins. L. J. 316, aff'g 139 N. Y. Supp. 1133, 155 App. Div. 876, distinguishing Brassie v. Maryland Casualty Co. 210 N. Y. 235, 104 N. E. 622. See Fairbanks Canning Co. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 154 Mo. App. 327, 133 S. W. 664; United Waste Manufacturing Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 85 Misc. 539, 148 N. Y. Supp. 852, 44 Ins. L. J. 497; Buffalo Steel Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 156 App. Div. 453.

[12] Runkel v. Lloyd's Plate Glass Ins. Co. (Parish of Orleans Ct. App. 1892) 21 Ins. L. J. 472.

Proximate cause, see §§ 2862 et seq. herein.

§ 2633a. Excepted risks: automobiles or motor vehicles: fires: violation of law: collision.—A fire burning an automobile originates within the vehicle, within the meaning of an exception of fires so originating in a policy on it, where, in consequence of the machine's running into a ditch, gasolene leaks from the tank, and the vapor penetrates the lamp forming the headlight and explodes, causing the fire.[14] Under a Texas decision an exception of liability where an automobile is being operated in violation of law, precludes recovery over against insurer where insured's minor son, while driving his machine within the city limits contrary to the provision of an ordinance, runs over and kills a child; provided, however, such ordinance is valid.[15]

In a Connecticut case, however, the policy agreed to indemnify assured against loss or damage suffered by him on account of bodily injuries accidentally sustained by others by reason of his ownership and maintenance of an automobile. It was also stipulated that the agreement should not apply while any such automobile was driven or manipulated by any person "under the age fixed by law or under the age of sixteen in any event." While insured's machine was being driven in his business by his son, who was at the time between sixteen and seventeen years of age, an accident occurred which resulted in injury to another boy causing his death and insured was compelled to pay damages. Said son was unlicensed and was unaccompanied by a licensed operator. The statute expressly permitted a person sixteen years old or more

[13] Chicago Sugar Refinery Co. v. American Steam Boiler Co. 57 Fed. 294, 6 C. C. A. 336, 21 L.R.A. 572, rev'g 48 Fed. 198, 21 Ins. L. J. 59.

[14] Preston v. Aetna Ins. Co. 193 N. Y. 142, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 133, 85 N. E. 1006, 103 N. Y. Supp. 638, 640, 118 App. Div. 784, 788.

On insurance covering automobiles or indemnifying against injury or liability for injury caused thereby, see notes in 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70; 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 583; and L.R.A.1915E, 575.

[15] Royal Indemnity Co. v. Schwartz, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 581.

even though unlicensed to drive a motor-vehicle if accompanied by a licensed operator. The first part of the statute taken by itself, in effect fixed the age at which a person could operate a motor-vehicle at eighteen years. It was held that the policy exception had reference solely and exclusively to the minimum age, not less than sixteen, at which one might lawfully drive a motor-vehicle, and not at all to the question whether the operator had complied with the other requirements of the law, and also that sixteen was what must be regarded, under the statute, as the minimum age fixed by law; and, therefore, recovery was not precluded, under said proviso, for a loss sustained by insured while his car was driven by an unlicensed person over sixteen, merely because of the non-observance, upon that particular occasion, of the statutory requirement that a licensed operator should accompany the unlicensed driver, as said requirement had no relevancy whatever to the age of the driver. It was also decided that no one under the age of sixteen could operate a motor-vehicle upon the state highways.[16] In this connection and as bearing somewhat upon this point, it is held that to entitle an unlicensed person, driving an automobile to the protection of a statute permitting an unlicensed person, if riding with or accompanied by a licensed chauffeur or operator, there must be a knowledge on the part of both parties of the existence of a relation like that of operator without a license, and licensed chauffeur or operator accompanying him, but if such knowledge exists the operator will be protected, although it was not expected that one would exercise any supervision over the other if the operator was in fact competent.[17]

If damages to an automobile resulting from collision due wholly or in part by upsets are excluded under the policy, a recovery is not precluded where an automobile ran off a highway bridge, was precipitated in the water below, and landed upside down in the bottom of a stream, the collision in such case not being due to the upset, but the latter being the result of the collision. But there is a collision with the water and bed of the stream in such [16] Brock v. Travelers Ins. Co. 88 Conn. 308, 91 Atl. 279, Pub. acts 1911, c. 85, sec. 5. ("The manifest purpose was to excuse from liability only in case the operator was too young, either in the opinion of the defendant or under the terms of the statute, to operate a motor vehicle upon the public highway."—Thayer, J.).

[17] Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404.

On operating automobile without a license, see notes in 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 734; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 699; 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308; 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 801; L.R.A.1915D, 628; and L.R.A.1916E, 1225.

case where the policy insures against accidents to the automobile resulting from collision.[18]

§ 2634. Plate-glass: fire: explosion: tornado insurance.—Injury to plate-glass as such is declared in Massachusetts to be more particularly within that class of insurance known as "casualty insurance," rather than to belong to what is known in the statutes of that state as "accident insurance."[19] A policy upon plate glass which excludes liability for loss or damage resulting directly or indirectly from fire, whether upon the insured premises or not, does not preclude recovery for breakage occasioned by fire upon other premises which caused an explosion of dynamite by reason of the intense heat consequent upon said fire, which also broke plate glass in various other parts of the city. Such provision has application to a fire policy loss and not to plate glass and was not intended to avoid liability for damage by explosives.[20] But in Wisconsin under a like provision an explosion of dynamite upon other premises caused by fire, precluded recovery under a policy insuring against loss by breakage of glass.[1] Where a policy insured against breakage through accident of plate glass in a certain building and excludes liability for loss or damage which may happen by or in consequence of any fire or by the blowing up of any building and the glass is broken and the loss is caused by an explosion of gasolene used for cleaning clothes and ignited by a match or light in the room, it is held that the breakage of the glass was not occasioned by or in consequence of any fire nor by a blowing up of the building and therefore insurer was liable.[2] The destruction of a plate-glass front which is immovable is a peril within a tornado insurance policy, although the policy exempts the insurers from liability for injury to plate-glass in doors and windows of nine square feet or more unless the same is separately and specifically insured, and this is so even though the plate-glass front in question exceeds the size specified.[3]

[18] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70n, 85 Atl. 194.

[19] Employers' Liability Ins. Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404, 29 N. E. 529, per the court, under acts Mass. 1887, c. 214, sec. 29, cl. 5.

[20] Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Bergheim, 21 Colo. App. 527, 122 Pac. 812, 41 Ins. L. J. 1107. See § 2586 herein.

[1] Jones v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 144 Wis. 66, 128 N. W. 280, 40 Ins. L. J. 53. See Frisbie v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 133 Mo. App. 30, 112 S. W. 1024.

[2] Vorse v. Jersey Plate Glass Ins. Co. 119 Iowa, 555, 60 L.R.A. 838, 97 Am. St. Rep. 330, 93 N. W. 569, 32 Ins. L. J. 359.

[3] Hale v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 46 Mo. App. 508.

As to risks and losses: wind, tornado, hurricane, see § 2825 herein.

On causes of loss covered by cyclone, hurricane, tornado, or wind-

§ 2634a. Automatic fire extinguishers: exception of injury from leakage: earthquakes, cyclones, etc.—An exception in a policy insuring against loss caused by the accidental discharge of an automatic fire extinguisher, of injury from leakage resulting from earthquakes or cyclones, or from blasting or explosions, will include loss from leakage caused by a wind storm resembling more technically a tornado than a cyclone, and causing the injury by its high velocity rather than its circular motion.[4] storm insurance, see note in L.R.A. 1915B, 1094.

[4] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Finch, 147 Fed. 388, 77 C. C. A. 566, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308 (annotated on meaning of "cyclone," "tornado," or other kind of windstorm in an insurance policy).

CHAPTER LXXI.

EXCEPTED RISKS AND LOSSES, CONTINUED—SUICIDE.

§ 2635. Effect of words "sane or insane" in suicide clause.
§ 2635a. Same subject: validity and nature of stipulation.
§ 2635b. Same subject: effect of voluntary starvation.
§ 2636. "Sane or insane:" that suicide committed deliberately or hastily immaterial.
§ 2637. Suicide "felonious or otherwise, sane or insane."
§ 2638. Suicide while intoxicated.
§ 2639. Suicide: accidental or unintentional self-killing.
§ 2640. Doubt as to "suicide" or accidental or unintentional self-killing.
§ 2641. Suicide under clause benefiting third parties acquiring interests prior thereto.
§ 2642. Suicide as defense in connection with statute.
§ 2642a. Same subject: validity of statute: stipulation contrary thereto: statute part of contract.
§ 2643. Suicide: option reserved to pay amount of insurance or refund premiums: recovery limited to amount of premiums.
§ 2644. Stipulation as to part payment or incontestability after specified time.
§ 2644a. Validity of stipulations limiting amount of recovery or time within which policy void for suicide: incontestability.
§ 2644b. Suicide: incontestability after specified time: substituted policy or new policy.
§ 2644c. Stipulation that liability suspended while insured insane: distinction.
§ 2645. Suicide: by-law as part of contract.
§ 2646. Taking his own life by unlawful act: dies by his own hand, etc.: by-laws.
§ 2647. Amendments or changes in by-laws, etc.: adoption of by-law against suicide after contract made.
§ 2648. Suicide: policy to be void in case of death by violation of law.
§ 2648a. Suicide: external, violent and accidental means.
§ 2649. Suicide: intentional injuries by assured or another.
§ 2650. Suicide in absence of stipulation: contra.
§ 2651. Suicide by insane person in absence of stipulation against suicide.
§ 2652. Suicide where policy obtained with that intent: fraud: creditor.

§ 2653. Suicide for benefit of assured's estate or third person.
§ 2554. Suicide: temporary insanity.
§ 2655. Suicide: temporary insanity: "sane or insane, voluntary or involuntary."
§ 2656. Suicide: temporary insanity, "felonious or otherwise, sane or insane."
§ 2657. Suicide: "self-destruction," "in any form:" "disease:" "voluntary act of insured."
§ 2658. Stipulation as to "suicide:" "death by his own hand," and the like.
§ 2659. "Suicide" and like clauses: rule in United States Supreme Court.
§ 2660. Same subject: English rule.
§ 2661. Same subject: rule in this country.
(a) Same subject: rule and cases in United States courts.
(b) Same subject: English rule and cases.
(c) Same subject: rule in Alabama.
(d) Same subject: rule in Georgia.
(e) Same subject: rule in Illinois.
(f) Same subject: rule in Indiana.
(g) Same subject: rule in Iowa.
(h) Same subject: rule in Kentucky.
(i) Same subject: rule in Louisiana.
(j) Same subject: rule in Maine.
(k) Same subject: rule in Maryland.
(l) Same subject: rule in Massachusetts.
(m) Same subject: rule in Michigan.
(n) Same subject: rule in Minnesota.
(o) Same subject: rule in Missouri.
(p) Same subject: rule in New York.
(q) Same subject: rule in Ohio.
(r) Same subject: rule in Pennsylvania.
(s) Same subject: rule in Tennessee.
(t) Same subject: rule in Texas.
(u) Same subject: rule in Vermont.
§ 2661a. Whether suicide question for court or jury.
§ 2661b. Waiver of defense of suicide.

§ 2635. Effect of words "sane or insane" in suicide clause.—In order to avoid any question concerning what is meant by the words "suicide" or "death by his own hand," or by words of like effect, the insurers have generally added the words "sane or insane" to the proviso. Under these words it is held that if the insured kills himself the policy is avoided, though he may have been of unsound mind and wholly unconscious of the moral nature of the act done;[5] and the degree of insanity is immaterial where one intentionally takes his own life.[6]

Where a policy of life insurance provided that in case of the death of the insured by his own act or intention, whether "sane or insane," the company should be liable only for the net value of the policy at that time, it was held that this provision embraced an intentional self-destruction by a man so far insane that he was conscious at the time of the physical nature and consequences of his act, and intended to destroy his life, even though he was not conscious of the moral quality or consequences of the act.[7] In a Michigan case[8] the proviso was "died by his own hand, sane or insane," and the court, per Champlin, J., approved the opinion of Davis, J., in Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Insurance Company,[9]

[5] United States.—Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 93 U. S. (3 Otto) 284, 23 L. ed. 918, 19 Am. Rep. n. 628; Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees of the World, 142 Fed. 678, 73 C. C. A. 668, 35 Ins. L. J. 377; Hopkins v. Northwestern Life Assur. Co. 99 Fed. 190, 40 C. C. A. 1, 29 Ins. L. J. 794; Chapman v. Republic Life Ins. Co. 6 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 238; Fed. Cas. No. 2,606; Salentine v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co 24 Fed. 159, rev'd 136 U. S. 644, 34 L. ed. 550, 10 Sup. Ct. 1071.

Georgia.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Durden, 9 Ga. App. 797, 72 S. E. 295 (see Code Ga. 1910, sec. 2500).

Illinois. — Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 204 Ill. 58, 68 N. E. 478; Dickerson v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 200 Ill. 270, 65 N. E. 694.

Iowa.—Tuttle v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, 104 N W. 1131; Searth v. Security Mutual L. Ins. Soc. 75 Iowa, 346, 39 N. W. 658. Examine Van Norman v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 143 Iowa, 536, 121 N. W. 1080.

Kentucky.—Interstate Business Men's Assoc. v. Atkinson, 165 Ky. 532, L.R.A.1915E. 656, 177 S. W. 254.

New York. — De Gorgorza v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 232.

North Carolina.—Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 141, 27 S. E. 39, 26 Ins. L. J. 881.

Wisconsin.—Pierce v. Travelers' Life Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 389.

See notes 35 L.R.A. 258, on insanity as affecting condition as to suicide, and 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 260, on effect of words "sane or insane," or other words relating to mental condition in suicide clause in policy.

On construction and effect of provision against liability for injury to or death of insured while or when insane, see note in L.R.A.1915E, 657.

[6] Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 204 Ill. 58, 68 N. E. 478; Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 141, 27 S. E. 39, 26 Ins. L. J. 881; Billings v. Accident Ins. Co. 64 Vt. 78, 17 L.R.A. 89, 33 Am. St. Rep. 913, 24 Atl. 656; Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins Co. 74 Mich. 592, 611, 3 L.R.A. 486, 42 N. W. 156, per Long, J., quoted from under this section.

[7] Adkins v. Columbian Life Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410; Interstate Business Men's Accident Assoc. v. Atkinson, 165 Ky. 532, L.R.A. 1915E. 656, 177 S. W. 254.

[8] Streeter v. Western Union Mutual Accident Ins. Soc. 65 Mich. 199, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882, 31 N. W. 779.

[9] 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918, 19 Am. Rep. note 628.

and declared that "the policy covers all conscious acts of the insured by which death by his own hand is compassed, whether he was at the time sane or insane. If the act was done for the purpose of self-destruction; it matters not that the insured had no conception of the wrong involved in its commission." So also in a subsequent case in this state,[10] under a condition against "suicide . . . whether the member at the time of committing suicide be sane or insane," it was held that if the insured was aware of the physical consequences of his act, the policy was avoided, though he might be insane, and the court declared that if insured had sufficient intelligence to adjust a rope and hang himself, he had enough "'capacity' to understand the physical nature and consequences of his act." Under the added provision "sane or insane," "no kind or degree of insanity will prevent an avoidance, and the courts, not only in England but in this country, have almost universally held that with such provision in policies of life insurance the policies are void if insured comes to his death by his own hand." [11] But if, owing to uncontrollable physical and mental weakness, the assured takes an overdose of whisky, which kills him, this is not dying by his own hand, sane or insane.[12] In a case in Vermont,[13] where an accident policy excepted death from suicide, "sane or insane," it was held that the court would not attempt to measure the degrees of insanity, as the provision referred to suicide without regard to the insured's mental condition when he committed the act, and that a recovery was precluded even though assured acted under an insane impulse overcoming his will: In a New York case [14] the condition "die by his own hand, sane or insane," is held to cover suicide by one utterly bereft of reason.[15] In an Illinois case the condition was, "that death by [10] Sabin v. Senate of the National Union, 90 Mich. 177, 51 N. W. 202, per Morse, J.

[11] Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 611, 3 L.R.A. 486, 42 N. W. 156, per Long, J., in opinion.

[12] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hazlett, 105 Ind. 212, 55 Am. Rep. 192, 4 N. E. 582.

[13] Billings v. Accident Ins. Co. of North America, 64 Vt. 78, 33 Am. St. Rep. 913, 17 L.R.A. 89, 24 Atl. 656, 21 Ins. L. J. 605, 46 Alb. L. J. 217 (two judges dissenting).

[14] De Gorgorza v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 232. See note 18 below.

[15] In the case of Bigelow v. Berkshire Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918, decided in 1876, and the condition was, "shall die by suicide (sane or insane)," and the court, per Davis, J., said: "For the purposes of this suit, it is enough to say that the policy was rendered void if the insured was conscious of the physical nature of his act and intended by it to cause his death, although at the time he was incapable of judging between right and wrong and of understanding the moral consequences of what he was doing."

self-destruction, whether sane or insane, or death caused or superinduced by drunkenness or by the use of narcotics or opiates within three years from the date of the policy herein applied for, are risks not assumed by the society." The defense that insured intentionally destroyed his own life by poison administered by his own hand was relied on, but the verdict for plaintiff was set aside as against the evidence. The question concerning what constitutes suicide was not discussed; the court, per Boggs, P. J., said: "We content ourselves therefore with the declaration that the evidence established the fact to be that the deceased voluntarily and intentionally ended his own life. Instructions as to the liability of the society under such stipulations in a policy when death is caused by an insane impulse were not asked. There was no evidence on which to base them." [15a] In Massachusetts the words "sane or insane" covers every case of suicide regardless of insured's state of mind.[16] But sanity is presumed and insanity is not established by the fact alone that one takes his own life.[17] Under a New York decision in order to constitute suicide, the person must be of years of discretion and of sound mind.[18]

§ 2635a. Same subject: validity and nature of stipulation.—Stipulation voiding the policy where insured commits suicide "sane or insane" and the like, are reasonable, not against public policy, valid and enforceable.[19] So it was early declared in the United States Supreme Court that insurer may limit its liability, if assured is in proper language told of the extent of the limitation, and it is not against public policy; [20] that insurer may stipulate against intentional self-destruction; and also that a stipulation in a life policy that it shall be void if the insured shall die by

[15a] See § 2637 herein.

[16] Moore v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 192 Mass. 468, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 656, 78 N. E. 488, 35 Ins. L. J. 769.

[17] Ledy v. National Council of Knights & Ladies of Security, 129 Minn. 137, 151 N. W. 905, L.R.A. 1915D, 1095n. See also Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Durden, 9 Ga. App. 797, 72 S. E. 295 (code Ga. 1910, sec. 2500).

As to presumption against insanity, see § 3775 herein.

[18] Weber v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees of the World, 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258. See note 14 above.

[19] Somerville v. Knights Templars & Masons Life Indemnity Co. 11 App. D. C. 417, 25 Wash. L. Rep. 734; De Voney v. Modern Woodmen of America, — Ill. App. —, 38 Nat. Corp. Rep. 408; Northwestern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Churchill, 105 Ill. App. 159, 164; Tuttle v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, 104 N. W. 1131; Robinson v. United Order of Foresters, 93 Minn. 24, 100 N. W. 381, 33 Ins. L. J. 945.

[20] Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918. Cited in Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Vandecar, 86 Fed. 282, 289, 30 C. C. A. 48, 55, 57 U. S. App. 446.

suicide, sane or insane, is valid; and even though this was not the exact point decided still it was logically an essential of that point and it has been sanctioned and given force by subsequent citations.[1]

Such stipulations are a condition subsequent,[2] although in Eng-

[1] Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918. Cited in:

United States.—McDowell v. Fraternal Union, 117 Fed. 1006, 53 C. C. A. 674; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 114 Fed. 268, 280, 52 C. C. A. 156; Tickin v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 87 Fed. 543, 545; Kelley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 75 Fed. 642; Wolf v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 17,935a.

Alabama.—Supreme Commandery Knights of Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 439, 46 Am. Rep. 332.

District of Columbia.—Somerville v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Assoc. 11 App. D. C. 417, 422.

Illinois.—Dickerson v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 200 Ill. 270, 274, 65 N. E. 694; Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Gelbke, 198 Ill. 365, 369, 64 N. E. 1058.

Indiana. — Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hazlett, 105 Ind. 212, 218, 55 Am. Rep. 192, 4 N. E. 582.

Kansas.—Hart v. Modern Woodman, 60 Kan. 678, 683, 72 Am. St. Rep. 380, 57 Pac. 936.

Kentucky.—Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 112 Ky. 455, 461, 66 S. W. 35; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541, 553, 9 S. W. 812.

Michigan.—Sabin v. Senate National Union, 90 Mich. 177, 180, 51 N. W. 102; Streeter v. Western Union Mutual Life & Accident Society, 65 Mich. 199, 301, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882, 31 N. W. 779.

Minnesota.—Robeson v. United Order of Foresters, 93 Minn. 26, 100 N. W. 381.

Missouri.—Adkins v. Columbia Life Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 31, 35 Am. Rep. 410; Brower v. Supreme Lodge National Reserve Assoc. 74 Mo. App. 490, 495; Sparks v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 61 Mo. App. 109, 114.

Nebraska.—Scherar v. Prudential Ins. Co. 63 Neb. 530, 535, 56 L.R.A. 611, 614, 88 N. W. 687.

New York.—Mauch v. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur, 91 N. Y. Supp. 367, 11 App. Div. 49, 51.

North Carolina.—Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. C. 121, 146, 27 S. E. 39.

Pennsylvania.—Hall v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 31, 34.

Ohio.—Schultz v. Insurance Company, 40 Ohio St. 217, 221, 48 Am. Rep. 676.

Pennsylvania.—Chambers v. Supreme Tent Knights Maccabees of the World, 200 Pa. 244, 245, 86 Am. St. Rep. 716, 49 Atl. 784; Tritschler v. Keystone Benefit Mutual Assoc. 180 Pa. 205, 207, 36 Atl. 734.

South Carolina.—Latimer v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 62 S. C. 145, 147, 40 S. E. 155.

Texas.—Parish v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 19 Tex. Civ. App. 457, 461, 49 S. W. 153.

Vermont.—Billings v. Accident Ins. Co. 64 Vt. 78, 82, 17 L.R.A. 92, 33 Am. St. Rep. 913, 24 Atl. 656.

Wisconsin.—Johns v. Northwestern Mutual Relief Assoc. 90 Wis. 332, 336, 41 L.R.A. 539, 63 N. W. 276.

Distinguished in Kelley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 109 Fed. 56, 61.

Held obiter, Latimer v. Sovereign Woodmen Camp of the World, 62 S. C. 145, 161, 40 S. E. 155.

See also §§ 2644, 2644a herein.

[2] Ferris v. Court of Honor, 152 Mich. 322, 116 N. W. 448.

land, in a case of a warranty against suicide there has been some discussion upon the point whether such warranty was a condition, and if so whether it was a condition precedent or subsequent, and it was held to be a condition of liability.[2a]

§ 2635b. Same subject: effect of voluntary starvation.—If a life policy provides that it shall be void "if the insured should die by self-destruction, whether sane or insane," his beneficiary cannot recover if it is shown that voluntary starvation caused or hastened the insured's death, although he was at the time fatally ill with scurvy, which would have ultimately caused his death.[3]

§ 2636. "Sane or insane:" that suicide committed deliberately or hastily immaterial.—If a policy stipulates for exemption from liability on the part of the insurer in case of suicide or self-destruction, sane or insane, it is immaterial whether the act was committed deliberately or hastily.[4] In the case so deciding the policy provided against "self-destruction by the insured whether sane or insane." The court below instructed the jury that if assured died from arsenic poison, such fact would not be sufficient to defeat the policy, "unless you also find from all the evidence in this case by a fair preponderance that said poison was deliberately and wilfully taken by said Koehler with the intent to commit suicide," and the court, per Davis, J., on appeal says: "It was not incumbent on the appellant to prove that the act of self-destruction was with careful consideration. If the poison was hastily taken by him with the intent to commit suicide, the condition of the policy was broken. The provision in the policy is that self-destruction, whether sane or insane, will avoid the policy. All that appellant was required to prove on this question was that said poison was taken by said Koehler with intent to commit suicide. If it was taken hastily or deliberately with such intent, whether sane or insane, there would be no recovery on the policy. The conscious and voluntary act on the part of the assured in taking poison with intent to take his own life, which resulted in death, was sufficient to defeat the claim of insurance, whether such act was committed deliberately or not."

§ 2637. Suicide "felonious or otherwise, sane or insane."—Under a provision in a policy that the insurers are "not liable in case the insured shall die by suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane," the insurers will be discharged if the death is caused by the voluntary or willful act of the insured, when he is able to understand the physical nature of the act and the consequences thereof. The fact that he does not understand the moral character of the act is not relevant, except in so far as may help to ascertain the extent of his capacity to understand the physical nature of the act. Such clause also includes every case of intentional self-destruction, and every case of suicide which is a voluntary act, and the natural, ordinary, and direct tendency of which is to produce death.[5] So under a federal case if a policy provides that it shall be void in case the assured dies by "self-destruction, felonious or otherwise," the proviso is held to include self-destruction, sane or insane, as equivalent thereto.[6]

[2a] Ellinger & Co. v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. [1905] 1 K. B. 31, 74 L. J. K. B. 39, 53 W. R. 134, 21 T. L. 20, aff'g [1904] 1 K. B. 832, 73 L. J. K. B. 546, 90 L. T. 484, 52 W. R. 366, 9 Comm. Cas. 217, 20 T. L. R. 368. See § 1951a herein.

[3] Insurance Co. v. Fox, 106 Tenn. 347, 82 Am. St. Rep. 885, 61 S. W. 62.

[4] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Hollowell, 14 Ind. App. 611, 43 N. E. 277.

§ 2638. Suicide while intoxicated.—If the insured, while in an intoxicated condition, takes poison with the intent of destroying his life, the insurers will be discharged, though the intent is only the intent of a drunken person. It is nevertheless suicide or a dying by his own hand.[7]

§ 2639. Suicide: accidental or unintentional self-killing.—Accidental or unintentional self-killing is not suicide within the meaning of a clause excepting the insurer from liability in such cases. This has been universally so held and admitted. This rule may be illustrated by those cases where assured has accidentally been killed by his fowling-piece, or by drinking poison by mistake. So assured, while dazed or delirious from pain, or one diseased in mind, might meet with accidental death, he himself by his own act contributing thereto, as where one in the frenzy of delirium tears off a bandage from a wound or artery, causing death; but such acts would not be suicide within a provision against suicide. And even though the policy stipulates against liability of the insurer in case "the assured shall die by suicide, whether the act be voluntary or involuntary," such exception does not extend to death caused by an accident, nor does the fact that assured died under peculiar and suspicious circumstances aid the assurer where the jury finds that he did not commit suicide, even though the precise cause of death is left to conjecture, and there is no evidence concerning whether it

[5] Pierce v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 389; Suppiger v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 20 Ill. App. 595. The condition here was "die by reason of any act of self-destruction whatever, whether at the time of committing the same he be sane or insane, whether felonious or otherwise." The court holds that if at the time of the commission of the act insured was insane to a degree that he was unconscious of the act or was driven thereto by an insane irresistible impulse the condition did not attach.

[6] Riley v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 25 Fed. 315.

[7] Equitable Life Assurance Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535.

arose from poisoning or not.[8] Again, "where the parties insert in the contract 'that if the death is caused by the insured, sane or insane,' then there can be no recovery if he committed the fatal act otherwise than accidentally. Of course if it was accidental it was not his act."[9]

Intentional homicide, however, is an accident within the meaning of an accident policy, if the insured was in no wise responsible for his death;[10] so where one in a fit of delirium or other condition of irresponsibility, without intention to take his own life, does some act from which his death ensues, such death is by accident, not by suicide.[11]

The term "taking poison" is an exception of an accident policy, and is limited to the intentional taking of poison, although death so caused is covered by the clause relating to suicide, where the entire exceptions of the policy recognize that death may result wholly or partly, directly or indirectly, from voluntarily taking poison without suicidal intent.[12] So a policy conditioned to be void if the insured "dies by his own hand or act, voluntary or otherwise," is not avoided by his innocently taking a fatal overdose of medicine while sane.[13] And the death of a person resulting from morphine administered by himself, is in one sense death from his own hand, but it is not necessarily suicide.[14] So a stipulation against liability for death from suicide sane or insane does not defeat recovery on a policy, although the insured died from an overdose of morphine, taken by himself, where the company fails to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the self-destruction was intention-

[8] Edwards v. Travelers' Life Ins. Co. 20 Fed. 661, aff'd 122 U. S. 457, 30 L. ed. 1137, 7 Sup. Ct. 1249, 22 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 225; Pierce v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 389. The condition here was "die by suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane."

On intentional injuries as constituting an accident within policy, see notes in 30 L.R.A. 207, and 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 524.

[9] Riley v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 25 Fed. 315, 316, per Treat, J.

[10] Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. 131 Mich. 234, 100 Am. St. Rep. 605, 91 N. W. 435.

[11] Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Ins. Co. 134 Wis. 322, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 260, 113 N. W. 967.

On when death or injury may be deemed to have been caused by accidental means, though the voluntary act of the insured was the primary cause thereof, see notes in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 657; L.R.A.1915E, 127, and L.R.A.1916B, 1021.

[12] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642, 52 Am. St. Rep. 355, 43 N. E. 765.

On death from taking poisonous substance as accident or accidental means, see note in L.R.A.1916A, 481.

[13] Penfold v. Universal Life Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 317, 29 Am. Rep. 660.

[14] Brignac v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 112 La. 574, 66 L.R.A. 322, 36 So. 595.

al.[15] And taking an overdose of laudanum, by accident or mistake, while intoxicated is not dying by one's own hand.[16]

Although accident rather than suicide will be presumed—still, where the wound was in the right temple of assured who was found dead with a pistol in his right hand and close by the bed on which the body of his cousin lay, who had also committed suicide, and to whom he was greatly attached if not affianced a verdict that his death was accidental was held not sustained.[17] But accident, and not suicide, may be found to be the cause of death where an insured person, who was sane and right handed, is found dead with a pistol wound behind his left ear, which resulted in instant termination of volition, and the only weapon with which he could have inflicted the injury was on his right side, while there is an absence of such scorching of hair and powder burn as must have resulted had he inflicted the injury.[18] In Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Association [19] the condition was "death of a member by his own hand, sane or insane, voluntary or involuntary." The assured was found dead with a bullet-hole in his brain and a pistol in his open hand. He had been suffering from softening of the brain, and showed great and increasing mental aberration. He was found lying inside his pasture fence, the rails of which were ten feet high, and apparently he had climbed over it, and the exception was held not to include death from accident or unintentional self-killing. And a policy providing against the insurer's liability in the case of the death of insured "by his own hand or act, whether voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, at the time," is deemed to cover death resulting from accidental injury inflicted upon himself by insured.[20] In an Illinois case,[1] the condition was, "shall die in con-

[15] Brown v. Sun Life Ins. Co. — Tenn. —, 51 L.R.A. 252, 57 S. W. 415.

[16] Equitable Life Assurance Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535, per McCay, J.

[17] Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of World v. Hruby, 70 Neb. 5, 96 N. W. 998.

As to presumption against suicide, see §§ 2865, 3773–4 herein.

[18] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Milward, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 589, 68 L.R.A. 285, 68 S. W. 364.

[19] 29 Fed. 198.

[20] Home Benefit Assoc. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160, 12 Sup. Ct. 332. Cited in Dickerson v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 200 Ill. 270, 274, 65 N. E. 694; Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Gelbke, 198 Ill. 365, 370, 64 N. E. 1058; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Nitterhouse, 11 Ind. App. 155, 160, 38 N. E. 1110.

In Sargent v. Home Benefit Assoc. 35 Fed. 711, aff'd 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160, 12 Sup. Ct. 332, the condition was: "Death of the member by his own hand or act, whether voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, at the time is a risk not assumed by the association." There was a question as to estoppel and evidence, and the evidence was not inconsistent with death by accident. The words of the court, however, bear upon the point in the text. They sequence of a duel or of the violation of law . . . self-destruction of the person, whether voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, at the time." Assured died from taking by mistake an overdose of laudanum. The court, per Bailey, P. J., said: "It is only where death results from an express design on the part of the deceased, or from some act which, though performed with no intention of producing death, is of itself culpably negligent, that the deceased can be charged with the responsibility of self-destruction. . . . Voluntary self-destruction obviously can mean nothing more than the taking of one's life purposely and intentionally. Involuntary self-destruction would then include all those cases where a person, without intending to accomplish his own death, carelessly and negligently does acts which may naturally and probably result, and do in fact result, in death. To go beyond this and relieve the insurers from liability in all cases where the acts of the insured, without design or negligence on his part, do in fact contribute to shorten or terminate his life would, in most cases, render life policies of very little value to the insured." In Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Lawrence,[2] it was held that instructions in this case limiting the effect of the condition to cases of gross negligence, and attempting to apply to this case the rules ordinarily applicable to that degree of negligence, were erroneous. Involuntary self-destruction is not "self-destruction."[3] In Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Smith[4] the condition was self-destruction of the insured, whether voluntary or involuntary, and whether he be sane or insane at the time." In this case it was alleged that the insured died by an act of self-destruction by poisoning himself. The replication was that assured did not at the time "purposely or intentionally poison himself and therefrom die by an act of self-destruction in manner and form as in said third plea alleged," etc. A demurrer to this replication was overruled, and was held by the appellate court properly so. The court, per Conger, P. J., said: "It is perversion of language and an absurdity to say that one can are: "A man while dazed or delirious from pain might meet a self-inflicted but wholly accidental death. He might walk through a window, supposing it to be a door, or drink a poisonous draught, mistaking it for water, or discharge a pistol inadvertently, believing it to be some harmless instrument, or while holding it in hands rendered nerveless by the presence of disease, and yet a death so occasioned would not be within the clause in question:" Id. 714, per Coxe, J., citing Penfold v. Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 317, 39 Am. Rep. 660.

[1] Lawrence v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 5 Ill. App. 280.

[2] 8 Ill. App. 488.

[3] New Home Life Assoc. v. Hagler, 29 Ill. App. 437, citing and quoting Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 878, 3 Sup. Ct. 99.

[4] 39 Ill. App. 569.

destroy himself by accident and with no intention so to do, unless it should be the direct result of negligence on his part. If a person accidentally fall into the water and is drowned, or take poison supposing it to be a harmless and proper drink and thereby dies, no one would think of saying that such person had died by an act of self-destruction." So an instruction making an accidental act of deceased which resulted in his death a defense is erroneous.[5] So "accident, mistake, or disease" are not included under the proviso "die by his own hand," etc.[6] Again, "all the authorities concur in the view that an unintentional and accidental taking of life is not within the meaning and intention of the clause," "shall die by his own hand or act."[7] So "dying by his own hand" does not cover self-killing through accident or mistake.[8] In Stormont v. Waterloo Life & Casualty Assurance Company,[9] Channell, B., charged the jury: "The question is now for you on the whole evidence whether he (assured) threw himself out of the window voluntarily or fell out of it involuntarily through confusion of the sense or giddiness." Upon the question of accident in such cases the court in Penfold v. Universal Life Insurance Company[10] says: "A purely accidental act committed by a sane person without any idea of injuring himself cannot be regarded as an act of self-destruction within the meaning of such contract." In Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company v. Daviess,[11] it is declared by the court, per Pryor, J., that the shooting of himself by the insured while insane "must be regarded as the result of an accident, as much so as if the pistol had gone off unexpectedly to the insured and killed him."[12]

Negligence of an assured, resulting in his death, is not, within [5] Gooding v. United States Life Ins. Co. 46 Ill. App. 307.

[6] Estabrook v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 54 Me. 224–28, per Appleton, C. J.

[7] Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Peters, 42 Md. 414, per Miller, J.; Blackstone v. Standard Life Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 3 L.R.A. 486.

[8] Scheffer v. National Life Ins. Co. 25 Minn. 534, 537, per Gilfillan, C. J. See further Phillips v. Louisiana Equitable Life Ins. Co. 26 La. Ann. 404, 21 Am. Rep. 549; Scarth v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. 75 Iowa, 346, 349, 39 N. W. 658, per Rothrock, C. J.; Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hazlett, 105 Ind. 212; Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Nangle, 130 Ind. 79, 22 Ins. L. J. 434, 29 N. E. 393. See also Dean v. American Mutual Life Ins. Co. 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 102, 1 Big. L. & Acc. Ins. Cas. 195; Cooper v. Massachusetts Mutual Life Ins. Co. 102 Mass. 227, 3 Am. Rep. 451; Pollock v. United States Accident Assoc. 12 Week. Not. Cas. 251, 26 Alb. L. J. 464n, 59 Am. Dec. 489.

[9] 1 Fost. & F. 22.

[10] 85 N. Y. 317, 39 Am. Rep. 660.

[11] 87 Ky. 541, 553, 9 S. W. 812, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 577.

[12] See also Streeter v. Western Union Mutual Life & Accident Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 199, 202, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882, 31 N. W. 779, per Champlin, J.

the provision of a life policy that it does not include assurance against self-destruction or suicide.[13]

§ 2640. Doubt as to "suicide" or accidental or unintentional self-killing.—If there be a doubt, the evidence being conflicting and nearly evenly balanced, whether the death was caused by suicide or accident, the presumption is in favor of the accident.[14] So where the evidence points equally or indifferently to accident or suicide, the theory of accident is adopted.[15] As we have stated elsewhere the presumption is against suicide.[16] And when death may have resulted from accident, mistake, or suicide, it should not be presumed to be on account of suicide, but rather from accident or mistake.[17] So the force of the presumption based upon the love of life must, it is decided, be given effect against the defense of suicide unless the evidence discloses no other reasonable hypothesis.[18] And the claim of suicidal intent in stepping in front of a train may be excluded by the evidence.[19] It is also declared that: "The burden was on plaintiff of showing that the injury was accidental, and we think her proof, aided by the presumption of law against suicide, was sufficient to sustain her burden. The instinct of life is the strongest of animate nature, and the presumption against its willful violation is just as strong as the instinct itself, though the presumption is allowed to be overthrown by a mere preponderance of evidence against it." In this case insured was an unmarried man of twenty-two years of age, had spent the evening about town and had gone with one of his companions to the latter's room and while there found a loaded revolver and had it in his hand. An instant later

[13] Courtemanche v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 136 Mich. 30, 64 L.R.A. 668, 112 Am. St. Rep. 345, 98 N. W. 749, 33 Ins. L. J. 481.

[14] Ingersoll v. Knights of Golden Rule, 47 Fed. 272. The condition in this case was "suicide whether sane or insane." The court cites the rule laid down by Harlow, J., in Travelers Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 667, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360, as to presumption against suicide. See also Macdonald v. Refuge Assur. Co. Lim. 17 Sess. Cas. Scot. 4th series (1890) 955; Winspear v. Accident Ins. Co. Lim. 6 Q. B. D. 42, 43 L. T. 459, 29 W. R. 116; Reynolds v. Accidental Ins. Co. 22 L. T. (N. S.) 820, 18 W. W. R. 1141.

On burden of proof as to suicide in action on life insurance policy, see notes in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, and 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1008; on conclusiveness of proof of death as to suicide, see note in 44 L.R.A. 853.

[15] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 802, per Bleekley, C. J. See Richardson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 46 Fed. 843.

[16] See §§ 2865, 3773 herein.

[17] Hale v. Life Indemnity & Investment Co. 61 Minn. 516, 52 Am. St. Rep. 616, 63 N. W. 1108.

[18] Wood v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 166 Iowa, 391, 147 N. W. 888; Life Ins. Co. of Virginia v. Hairston, 108 Va. 832, 128 Am. St. Rep. 989, 62 S. E. 1057. But compare §§ 3773, 3774 herein.

[19] Knights of Maccabees of the World v. Johnson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 143 S. W. 718.

the revolver was fired and he was shot in a vital spot in his head. His companion did not see him at the time of the shot, but there were no powder burns and unless insured was then intoxicated nothing appeared to show a motive for suicide, and as above stated it was held that the jury were entitled to infer that the injury was accidental. The certificate provided that it should not cover or extend to any death, disability, or loss resulting from or in consequence of intentional self-inflicted injuries, fatal or otherwise, while sane or insane or while insured was under the influence of any intoxicating liquor or narcotic, whether such injury, loss, disability or death resulted in consequence of such influence or not. A judgment for recovery was affirmed conditionally on remittance of an excessive amount.[20]

§ 2641. Suicide under clause benefiting third parties acquiring interests prior thereto.—Insurance companies in England have in many cases qualified the condition in their policies that the policy shall be void if the insured dies by his own hand, by inserting a clause that in case a beneficial interest has become vested in a third party for valuable and pecuniary consideration then the policy shall be valid to the extent of such person's interest, subject to notice having been given to the company of the transaction as specified.[1] If a policy stipulates that the insurer shall not be liable, should assured "die by his or her own hands, . . . except to the extent of any bona fide interest therein which at the time of such death shall be vested in any other person or persons for his, her, or their own benefit, for a sufficient pecuniary or other consideration," such provision applies as well to the insurer as to a third person, and where the insured commits suicide in a temporary fit of insanity while the policy is in the insurer's hands as collateral security for money advanced by said insurer on a mortgage on real security, the policy is valid to the extent of the amount of indebtedness due to it on the mortgage at the time of such death of the insured.[2]

[20] Norman v. Order of Commercial Travelers of America, 163 Mo. App. 175, 145 S. W. 853, 41 Ins. L. J. 1090. See Knights Templars & Masons Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066.

[1] White v. British Empire Mutual Life Assur. Co. L. R. 7 Eq. Cas. 394, 38 L. J. Ch. 53, 19 L. T. 306, 17 W. R. 26. See §§ 2643, 2644 herein.

[2] White v. British Empire Mutual Life Assur. Co. L. R. 7 Eq. Cas. 394, 17 Week. Rep. 26, 38 L. J. Ch. 53, 19 L. T. 306, quoting from Solicitors & General Life Ins. Soc. v. Lamb, 2 De G. J. & T. 251, 33 L. J. Ch. 426, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 739, 10 L. T. 792, 12 W. R. 941. See Wigan v. English & Scottish Law Life Assur. Assoc. 78 L. J. Ch. 120, [1909] 1 Ch. 291, 100 L. T. 34, 25 T. L. R. 81. Compare Ellinger & Co. v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. [1905] 1 K. B. 31, 74 L. J. K. B. 39, 53 W. R. 134, 21 T. L. R. 20, aff'g [1904] 1 K. B. 832, 90 L. T. 484, 53 W. R. 366, 9 Comm. Cas. 217, 20 T. L. R. 368.

So where a policy similarly conditioned as in the last case was deposited by assured with the plaintiffs as collateral for a loan to secure a debt owing by his firm, and also for other advances, and the notice required under the policy stipulation was given assurer, it was held, the assured having committed suicide, that plaintiffs might recover out of the policy the amount of their debt due at assured's death, and even though asssured's estate might be benefited to that extent, assurers were not entitled to payment, either ratably or primarily, out of other securities held by plaintiffs.[3] In the case so holding the condition was: "A policy effected either separately or jointly or with other lives upon the life of any person who shall die by his own hands or act, whether such act be felonious or otherwise, or shall die by duelling, or by the hands of justice, shall become void, and all moneys paid in respect thereof shall be forfeited by the company. But in case the beneficial interest in the policy has been vested in any other person, either originally or by such person having taken a legal or equitable assignment thereof or charge or lien thereon for a valuable and pecuniary consideration, the policy shall remain valid to the extent of the interest of such other party, provided that notice in writing of such assignment, charge, or lien shall have been delivered at the office of the company thirty days before the death of the party on whose life the insurance was effected." And where the condition is "If the lives assured, died by their own hands" the policy should be void "but without prejudice to the bona fide interests of third parties based upon a valuable consideration" a deed of assignment for an existing antecedent debt is not based upon a valuable consideration within the intent of such provision.[4] It has been contended that conditions of this kind are an encouragement to suicide, and were therefore void as against public policy; but this objection was not sustained in the cases where the point was raised, and such conditions were held to be valid.[5] The assignment in such cases is held to refer to an assignment by contract. Therefore, an assignee in bankruptcy, he being an assignee by operation of the law, is held not to be an assignee for a valuable consideration within the meaning of the provision.[6]

[3] City Bank v. Sovereign Life Assur. Co. (L. T. N. S. 1884) 50 L. J. R. 565.

[4] Wigan v. English & Scottish Life Assur. Assoc. (1909) 1 Chan. L. R. 291.

[5] See Moore v. Woolsey, 4 El. & B. 243, s. c. 24 L. J. Q. B. 40, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 468, 3 C. L. R. 207, 3 W. R. 66, 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 248.

That condition upholding suicide void, see § 2532 herein.

[6] Jackson v. Forster, 1 El. & E. 463, 29 L. J. Q. B. 8, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1247, 7 W. R. 578.

§ 2642. Suicide as defense in connection with statute.—In a case in the Federal courts[7] the policy was executed and delivered in a state under a statute providing against suicide, except upon proof that assured contemplated suicide,[8] and it was held that the claim that the legislature used the word "contemplated" to signify a state of mind in which the assured had considered or thought about the subject of suicide, without any well-defined purpose or intent, was not tenable, but that the statute should be construed to mean that thereafter it should be no defense that the insured committed suicide unless it should be proven to the satisfaction of the court or jury that the insured intended or had resolved to commit suicide when he made his application for the policy.[9] Under a decision in the Federal Supreme Court self-destruction while insane is as much within the province of a statute that it shall be no defense to a suit on a life policy that the insured "committed suicide," unless the same was contemplated at the time application was made for the policy, as is the taking of one's own life voluntarily while sane and in the full possession of one's mental faculties,—especially so where another statute declares that words and pharses shall be taken in their plain, ordinary and usual sense.[10]

Notwithstanding a statutory provision estopping the insurer, except on the ground of fraud, from contesting, after the receipt of three annual premiums, any claim arising by reason of errors, omissions, or misstatements in the application other than those as

[7] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Florida, 30 L.R.A. 87, 16 U. S. C. C. A. 618, and note 623, 69 Fed. 932, s. c. 163 U. S. 675, 41 L. ed. 311, 16 Sup. Ct. 1198.

[8] "In all suits upon policies of insurance on life hereafter issued by any company doing business in this state it shall be no defense that the insured committed suicide, unless it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the court or jury trying the cause that the insured contemplated suicide at the time he made his application for the policy, and any stipulation in the policy to the contrary shall be void:" Rev. Stats. Mo. 1889, sec. 5855; Rev. Stats. Mo. 1879, sec. 5982.

[9] Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Florida, 30 L.R.A. 87, 69 Fed. 932, 16 U. S. C. C. A. 622, 623, s. c. 163 U. S. 675, 41 L. ed. 311, 16 Sup. Ct. 1198, per Thayer, C. J. See Theobald v. Lodge, 59 Mo. App. 87; Keller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Mo. App. 557. This statute of Missouri applies to all life insurances except where otherwise provided by statute: Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Berry. 1 U. S. C. C. A. 561, 50 Fed. 511, aff'g 46 Fed. 439, 4 U. S. App. 353. "Death by suicide or by the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive, releases the insurer from the obligation of his contract:" Lester, Rowell & Hill's Ga. Code, 1882, sec. 2822.

[10] Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 47 L. ed. 139, 23 Sup. Ct. 108; Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, sec. 5982; Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 6570. Cited in Whitfield v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 498, 51 L. ed. 895, 899, 27 Sup. Ct. 578, rev'g Whitfield v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 144 Fed. 356, 360, 75 C. C. A. 362.

to age,[11] the insurer may nevertheless avail itself, by way of defense, of the suicide of insured under a proviso that the policy shall be void if insured dies by his own hand, whether sane or insane. The condition first noted, even though the policy is conditioned to be subject thereto, does not affect the latter one, but relates solely to defenses based on errors, omissions, or misstatements in the application.[12]

The insured can be held to have "contemplated suicide" so as to defeat a life policy, under such a statute, only when he intended or had resolved to commit suicide at the time he made his application for the policy.[13]

A mutual benefit certificate is a life insurance policy within the meaning of a statute withdrawing from life insurance companies the defense of suicide of policy holders in suits upon such policies.[14] A statute precluding suicide as a defense unless it be shown that assured contemplated suicide when he made the application also applies to a foreign company doing business in the state of the enactment although it has not complied with its laws.[15]

§ 2642a. Same subject: validity of statute: stipulation contrary thereto: statute part of contract.—A state statute excluding suicide as a defense to a policy is valid.[16] It is a legitimate exercise of the power of a state to enact a statute providing that it shall be no [11] Rev. Stats. Ohio, sec. 3626. See § 2644 herein.

As to incontestability clauses, fraud etc., see §§ 3733a et seq. herein.

[12] Starck v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 134 Pa. St. 45, 19 Am. St. Rep. 674, 7 L.R.A. 576, 19 Atl. 703.

[13] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Florida, 69 Fed. 932, 16 C. C. A. 618, 32 U. S. App. 753, 30 L.R.A. 87, Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 5855.

[14] Head Camp Pacific Jurisdiction v. Sloss, 49 Colo. 177, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 831n, 112 Pac. 49. See Modern Brotherhood of America v. Block, 22 Colo. App. 409, 125 Pac. 556, 41 Ins. L. J. 1533 (considered under § 2642a herein); Armstrong v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 132 Mo. App. 171, 112 S. W. 24 (what associations exempt under statute); Baltzell v. Modern Woodmen of America, 98 Mo. App. 153, 71 S. W. 1071 (when association not a fraternal benefit society within such suicide nondefense statute).

[15] Brassfield v. Knights of Maccabees, 92 Mo. App. 102. See Kroge v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 126 Mo. App. 693, 105 S. W. 685 (residence of assured as affecting application of statute); Tuttle v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A. 223, 104 N. W. 1131 (when statute an Iowa and not Missouri contract).

[16] Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 47 L. ed. 130, 23 Sup. Ct. 108 (cited in Supreme Court of Honor v. Updegraff, 68 Kan. 474, 476, 75 Pac. 477); Modern Brotherhood of America v. Locke, 22 Colo. App. 409, 125 Pac. 556, 41 Ins. L. J. 1533, Acts 1903, p. 257.

On power of legislature to forbid defense of suicide in life insurance, see note in 31 L.R.A. 831; on statute prohibiting defense of suicide, see note in 42 L.R.A. 260.

defense that the insured committed suicide unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the court or jury trying the case, that insured contemplated suicide at the time he made the application for the policy, and that any stipulation in the policy to the contrary shall be void, and, therefore, such a statute is valid, but it cannot lawfully be stipulated that in the event of suicide not contemplated by assured when applying for the policy insurer shall not be bound to pay the principal sum insured, but only a proportionate part thereof; that is, assurer cannot by stipulation make a defense that it is exempt merely because of suicide, from liability for the principal sum, for whatever tends to diminish a plaintiff's cause of action or to defeat recovery in whole or in part, amounts in law to a defense. Accordingly it follows in such case that notwithstanding any such stipulation contrary to the expressed intent of the statute and the defense of suicide, the beneficiary is entitled to recover the whole principal sum in the absence of a showing that insured at the time of his application for the policy contemplated suicide.[17]

[17] Whitfield v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. 578, 36 Ins. L. J. 554, rev'g 144 Fed. 356, 75 C. C. A. 358, 35 Ins. L. J. 321, which aff'd 125 Fed. 269, 33 Ins. L. J. 78; Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, sec. 5982; Id. 1889, sec. 5855; Id. 1899, sec. 7896. The court, per Mr. Justice Harlan, said: "I. That the statute is a legitimate exertion of power by the State cannot be successfully disputed. Indeed, the contrary is not asserted in this case, although it is suggested that the statute 'seemingly encourages suicide and offers a bounty therefor, payable, not out of the public funds of the state, but out of the funds of insurance companies.' There is some foundation for this suggestion in a former decision of this court, in which it was held that public policy, even in the absence of a prohibitory statute, forbade a recovery upon a life policy, silent as to suicide, where the insured, when in sound mind, willfully and deliberately took his own life. Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 154, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300. But the determination of the present case depends upon other considerations than those involved in the Ritter case. An insurance company is not bound to make a contract which is attended by the results indicated by the statute in question. If it does business at all in the State, it must do so subject to such valid regulations as the state may choose to adopt. Even if the statute in question could be fairly regarded by the court as inconsistent with public policy or sound morality, it cannot, for that reason alone be disregarded; for, it is the province of the state, by its legislature, to adopt such a policy as it deems best, provided it does not, in so doing, come into conflict with the constitution of the state or the Constitution of the United States. There is no such conflict here. The legislative will, within the limits stated, must be respected, if all that can be said is that, in the opinion of the court, the statute expressing that will is unwise from the standpoint of the public interests. See Northwestern National Life Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243, 51 L. ed. 168, 27 Sup. Ct. 126.

"2. Did the courts below err in adjudging that the policy in suit was not forbidden by the statute? Can an insurance company and the insured lawfully stipulate that in the event of suicide, not contemplated by the insured when applying for a policy, the company shall not be bound to pay the principal sum insured but only a given part thereof? Will a statute in a case of suicide allow the company, when sued on its policy, to make a defense that will exempt it, simply because of such suicide, from liability for the principal sum?

The last above mentioned Federal Supreme Court decision is relied on in a Colorado decision which holds that a statute is valid which

"We cannot agree with the learned courts below in their interpretation of the statute. The contract between the parties, evidenced by the policy, is, we think, an evasion of the statute and tends to defeat the objects for which it was enacted. In clear, emphatic words the statute declares that in all suits on policies of insurance on life it shall be no defense that the insured committed suicide, unless it be shown that he contemplated suicide when applying for the policy. Whatever tends to diminish the plaintiff's cause of action or to defeat recovery in whole or in part amounts in law to a defense. When the company denied its liability for the whole of the principal sum, it certainly made a defense as to all of that sum except one-tenth. If, notwithstanding, the statute, an insurance company, may by contract, bind itself, in case of the suicide of the insured, to pay only one-tenth of the principal sum, may it not lawfully contract for exemption as to the whole sum or only a nominal part thereof, and if sued, defeat any action in which a recovery is sought for the entire amount insured? In this way the statute could be annulled or made useless for any practical purpose. Looking at the object of the statute, and giving effect to its words, according to their ordinary, natural meaning, the legislative intent was to cut up by the roots any defense, as to the whole and every part of the sum insured, which was grounded upon the fact of suicide. The manifest purpose of the statute was to make all inquiry as to suicide wholly immaterial, except where the insured contemplated suicide at the time he applied for his policy. Any contract inconsistent with the statute must be held void.

"In Berry v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 46 Fed. 439, 441, which was an action upon a policy of life insurance, it appears that the policy, among other things, provided that in the case of the self-destruction of the insured, whether voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, the policy should be void, judgment was given for the plaintiff. The circuit court said: 'It is contended that the provision in the policy, declaring that it shall be void if the assured commits suicide, is a waiver or nullification of the statute which declares such a stipulation in a policy "shall be void." The statute is mandatory and obligatory alike on the insurance company and the assured. Its very object was to prohibit and annul such stipulations in policies, and it cannot be waived or abrogated by any form of contract or by any device whatever. The legislative will, when expressed in the peremptory terms of this statute, is paramount and absolute, and cannot be varied or waived by the private conventions of the parties.' Upon writ of error to the Circuit Court of Appeals the judgment was affirmed, that court saying: 'The company refused to pay the full amount named in the policy, claiming that by the express provisions of the policy self-destruction by the insured, whether sane or insane, rendered the contract for the payment of $5,000 void, and the company was only bound to pay the amount which had been paid in assessments by the insured. This action was brought in the circuit court for the Western District of Missouri, to recover the full sum of $5,000.

provides that suicide shall not be a defense against the payment of a life policy whether said suicide was voluntary or involuntary

The case was tried to the court, a jury being waived. The parties stipulated that the company was liable for the full amount claimed by the plaintiffs, unless excused by the clause in the policy providing that the same should be void in case of suicide; . . . Judgment in favor of the plaintiffs having been entered for the full amount of the policy, the case was brought to this court upon writ of error. . . . In our judgment, the court below ruled correctly in holding that the policy sued on was a contract made in Missouri, and, as such that the provisions of sec. 5982 (the same as the statute now in question) are applicable thereto; and therefore the judgment is affirmed, at costs of plaintiff in error.' Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Berry, 50 Fed. 511, 512, 515, 1 C. C. A. 561.

"In Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 47 L. ed. 139, 23 Sup. Ct. 108, this court had occasion to consider the scope and effect of the statute here in question. That was an action upon a policy of life insurance for $5,000. A recovery for the whole sum was sought, but the company defended the action upon the ground that the provision in the statute that it should be no defense that the insured committed suicide, related only to cases where he took his own life voluntarily, while sane, and in full possession of his mental faculties; that the provision in the policy that '"in case of the self-destruction of the holder of this policy, whether voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, . . . this policy shall become null and void," applied and exonerated the company from all liability beyond that provided in the policy, "that in case of the suicide of the holder of this policy, then this company will pay to his widow and heirs or devisees such an amount of his policy as the member shall have paid to this company on the policy in assessments on the same without interest."' This view of the statute was not accepted in the Circuit Court, and there was judgment against the company for the whole sum insured. That judgment was affirmed here upon certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

"A leading case on the general subject is Logan v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 146 Mo. 114, 119, 122, 123, 47 S. W. 948, which was a suit upon a policy which, according to the answer in the case, contained stipulations and covenants to the effect that in the event of fatal injuries to the assured wantonly inflicted upon himself, or inflicted upon himself while insane, the company's liability under its policy should be a sum equal to the premiums paid, and that sum the policy provided should be in full liquidation of all claims under it. The question before the court was whether or not the statute here in question applied to such a policy as the one there in suit. The trial court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the full amount of the policy with interest. The court said: 'The error into which respondent has fallen is in assuming that sec. 5855 (the statute now in question) was intended to affect a particular line, class or department of insurance, as the same has been classified for legislation. The real object of the section, as the clear terms of its language express, is to affect all policies of insurance on life from whatever class, department or line of insurance the policy may be issued or by whatever name of designation the company may be known. It is policies of a given kind, and not companies of a class, that are to be affected by the provisions of sec. 5855. The section was enacted clearly to protect all policy holders of insurance on life against and whether said policy holder was sane or insane. It is also decided that said statute applies to a fraternal beneficiary association cer-

the defense that the insured committed suicide, all provisions in the policies to the contrary notwithstanding, unless as provided in the section, it can be shown that the insured contemplated suicide at the time he made application for the policy. . . . When a policy covers loss of life from external, violent and accidental means alone, why is it not insurance on life? Such a provision incorporated in a general life insurance policy admittedly would be insurance on life, then why less insurance on life because not coupled with provisions covering loss of life from usual or natural causes as well? If one holds a general life policy and an accident policy, and is killed by lightning or commits suicide, so that he may be said to have died by accidental means, both the companies should pay, and the stipulation against liability in the event of suicide in the policies should be no more a defense against the suit upon the accident policy, providing against death from accidental cause, than against the policy which goes further and covers death from other causes as well. No such exception or exemption is found in the plain and comprehensive language of sec. 5855. . . . No rule of construction, short of one applied for distortion and destruction, can relieve accident insurance companies, issuing policies of insurance on life in this state, from the operation and influences of sec. 5855, which in plain and unambiguous terms declares that in all suits upon policies of insurance on life thereafter issued, it shall be no defense that the assured committed suicide, unless it shall have been shown to the satisfaction of the court or judge trying the cause that the insured contemplated suicide at the time of making his application for the policies, all stipulations in the policy to the contrary being void.'

"In Keller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. decided by the St. Louis court of appeals, 58 Mo. App. 557, 560, 561, we have a decision very much in point. That was an action on an insurance policy for $2,500. The company defended upon the ground that by the terms of the policy if the insured died of suicide, whether the act be voluntary or involuntary, it should be liable for the then full net value of said policy per the American Experience Table of Mortality and four and one-half per cent interest and no more, and the same should be paid in manner and form as provided in the policy for the payment thereof in the event of death. The defense was that the insured committed suicide and the full net value of the policy, according to the contract, was only $814.50, and no more. The defense was overruled and judgment given for the principal sum. That judgment was affirmed in the court of appeals, the court saying: 'The plain purpose of the statute supra was to prevent the insertion in policies of life insurance of exceptions to liability on the ground of the suicide of the insured, unless it could be proven "that the insured contemplated suicide at the time he made the application for the policy." This was in effect a legislative declaration of the public policy of this state. That it was intended to limit the power to contract for a lesser liability in cases of death by suicide, not within the limitation expressed in the statute, is also apparent from its terms, to wit: "and any stipulation to the contrary shall be void." . . . The fact that the premium warranted and the policy guaranteed full insurance in case of the death of the insured for any cause not specified in the clause set up in the defendant's answer demonstrates that said clause was designed to modify the liability of the insurance company if the insured comtificate and that it not only made void and of no effect such part of a policy stipulation or agreement as was contrary thereto, but that the inhibition of the statute was substituted for such void clause and became an affirmative covenant obligating the parties and excluding under that policy the defense of suicide, and, therefore, said policy with the statute so made a part thereof, was not against sound morals, public policy, justice, or right. It was further decided that the subsequent repeal of said statute did not make the repealing statute retrospective in its operation in the absence of an expressed legislative intent that it should have that effect, and even if it attempted to destroy the obligation of contract under the policy it would be unconstitutional.[18]

§ 2643. Suicide: option reserved to pay amount of insurance or refund premiums: recovery limited to amount of premiums.—A stipulation in a life policy is valid which provides that it shall be void if assured shall "die by his own hand," but that if at the time of taking his life he is insane, the company will pay the amount insured or refund the premiums actually received with interest, and which reserves to the insurer the option to pursue either course.[19]

mitted suicide. It necessarily follows, if this stipulation as to a decreased liability in the event of death by suicide is enforced, that it is some defense to the otherwise full liability agreed upon in the policy. As the statute in question declares that suicide, not committed as therein set forth, is "no defense," we cannot hold that the present stipulation can be enforced without violating the plain terms of a mandatory statute which the parties have no power to alter or abrogate.'

"Without further discussion, we adjudge that, under the statute in question—anything to the contrary in the policy notwithstanding—where liability upon a life policy is denied simply because of the suicide of the insured, the beneficiary of the policy can recover the whole of the principal sum, unless it be shown that the insured, at the time of his application for the policy, contemplated suicide. The judgment must, therefore, be reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion and consistent with law."

See also Harms v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 172 Mo. App. 241, 157 S. W. 1046, 42 Ins. L. J. 1357; Dennis v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 231 Mo. 211, 132 S. W. 698 (who may not question constitutionality of statute); Applegate v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 153 Mo. App. 63, 132 S. W. 2, 40 Ins. L. J. 232; Tuttle v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, 104 N. W. 1131 (Mo. stat. part of contract).

As to stipulation contrary to statute, see §§ 176, 194(g), 194(h) herein.

[18] Modern Brotherhood of America v. Block, 22 Colo. App. 409, 125 Pac. 556, 41 Ins. L. J. 1533. Acts 1903, p. 257: acts 1907, p. 431. Benefit certificate included under statute, see § 2642 herein.

Subsequently enacted by-laws: effect of, see §§ 379 et seq., 2647 herein.

[19] Salentine v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 159, rev'd 136 U. S. 644, 34 L. ed. 550, 10 Sup. Ct. 107. See §§ 2532, 2641 herein.

On construction and effect of provision against liability for injury to

In Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company v. Daviess[20] the condition was, "shall die by his own hands, or in consequence of a duel or by reason of intemperance," the policy should be void, "except that in case he shall die by his own hand while insane," the insurer should repay the premiums with interest. The defense was that insured took his own life with his own hand, by shooting himself, and that he was insane at the time. The court, per Pryor, J., said that "the question of criminal self-destruction is not involved in the controversy, as the contract by its very terms is made to apply to the insanity of the insured. The object in view in inserting such a clause in the policy may have been, and doubtless was, to avoid the effect of the decisions, confining the meaning of the language 'die by his own hand' to criminal self-destruction, or the word 'suicide' to the deliberate purpose of a sane man to take his own life." The conclusion of the court was, "that if the insured fired the fatal shot, and had sufficient mental power at the time to know that it would take his life, and fired the pistol with that intention, the recovery in this case is limited to the premiums paid with the interest; while on the other hand, if the firing of the pistol was not intentional, because of the unconsciousness on the part of the insured that such an act would take his life, the recovery must be had of the principal sum." If the policy stipulates that if insured takes his own life, sane or insane, recovery shall be limited to the amount of the premiums, insurer will be liable where the evidence shows that insured was so insane he did not know that he was taking his own life, or that the act would result in his death.[21] Such a limitation to the amount of premiums paid in case of suicide, sane or insane within a specified time is reasonable and enforceable.[22] So a condition in a life policy, that if the insured should die by suicide, sane or insane, within three years from the date of the policy, the liability of the company should be limited to the amount of the premiums paid, is valid; and it is no answer to such stipulation that the insured was insane, or unconscious of the moral and physical consequences of the act which caused death.[1] And recovery of the amount of the premiums may be had in case of as-or death of insured while or when insane, see note in L.R.A.1915E, 657.

[20] 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 577.

[21] Inter-Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Boyd, — Ky. —, 124 S. W. 333.

[22] Silliman v. International Life Ins. Co. 131 Tenn. 303, L.R.A.1915F, 707, 174 S. W. 1131, 45 Ins. L. J. 673.

On date from which the period to which defense of suicide is limited is to be computed, see note in L.R.A. 1915F, 703.

[1] Scherar v. Prudential Ins. Co. 63 Neb. 530, 56 L.R.A. 611, 88 N. W. 687.

sured's suicide within the time limited where the jury finds for said amount.[2]

§ 2644. Stipulation as to part payment or incontestability after specified time.—Where the law does not prohibit such a provision, it is held that the insurer may limit the payment on the policy in case of suicide to the legal reserve.[3]

It is decided that if assured had not sufficient mind to know he was committing suicide there might be a recovery under a stipulation voiding the policy for death by assured's own hand within a specified time.[4] But it is also held that death by suicide within the time limited avoids the policy irrespective of whether or not the act be deliberate.[5]

If the suicide occurs after the period limited recovery may be had even though the act was premeditated within said limited time.[6] If a by-law of a benefit society makes a certificate of membership incontestable, after two years, if the member continues "in good standing," obeys the rules and by-laws, and pays his dues and assessments, his death by suicide is not a loss of good standing, especially when action by the society is necessary to deprive him thereof.[7] But a limitation stipulation as to time does not necessarily preclude non-liability after the expiration of said period in case of suicide by insured, sane or insane.[8] And a clause in an insurance policy making it incontestible except for fraud in procuring it, after two years from its date, will control an agreement in the application that death by suicide is not covered by the policy, so that such death after the expiration of that period will not defeat liability on the policy.[9] If the application contains a stipulation excepting the insurer from liability in case of the insured's death by his own hand, and this clause is not carried into the policy, but the latter does provide that claims under it "by death occurring two or more years after its date will be incontestable, except for fraud in obtaining the

[2] Miles v. Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. 23 S. Dak. 400, 122 N. W. 249.

[3] Frey v. Germania Life Ins. Co. 56 Mich. 29, 22 N. W. 100. See § 2641 herein.

[4] Modern Woodmen of America v. Neeley, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 758, 111 S. W. 282.

As to incontestability, fraud, etc., see §§ 3733a et seq. herein.

[5] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Hallowell, 14 Ind. App. 611, 43 N. E. 277. Examine Grand Lodge v. I. O. of M. A. v. Wieting, 68 Ill. App. 125, aff'd 168 Ill. 408, 48 N. E. 59.

[6] Harrington v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 21 N. Dak. 447, 131 N. W. 246, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 373, 40 Ins. L. J. 1349, Code sec. 6064.

[7] Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549, 63 L.R.A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224, 68 N. E. 492, 33 Ins. L. J. 20.

[8] Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Wishart, 192 Fed. 453, 112 C. C. A. 591.

[9] Goodwin v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L.R.A. 473, 59 Am. St. Rep. 411, 66 N. W. 157.

policy," the proper construction of the policy in connection with the application is that the policy does not cover death by suicide within two years from the date of its delivery, but that after two years it is incontestable for suicide.[10] If the certificate is stipulated to be incontestable for any cause after two years, suicide is also thereby excluded.[11] So in case a life policy or benefit certificate provides that it shall be incontestable after a certain period, except for certain causes, death by suicide not being one of them, the incontestible clause applies in case of the death of the insured by suicide, although the policy contains another clause, providing that death by suicide is not a risk assumed by the insurer.[12] And where, by reason of the fact that a provision against suicide is found in the constitution of a mutual benefit association, and a separate agreement with regard to it is inserted in the application, which contains a general agreement as to keeping the rules and regulations of the association, it is doubtful whether a clause making the certificate incontestable after a certain time, except for breach of the rules and regulations was intended to cover suicide,—the doubt will be resolved in favor of the beneficiary, and after the lapse of the stipulated period the association will be required to pay the amount of the certificate, notwithstanding the holder came to his death by [10] Goodwin v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Co. 97 Iowa, 226, 59 Am. St. Rep. 411, 32 L.R.A. 473, 66 N. W. 156. An express contract for an increased premium to pay insurance money in case of suicide of the insured is declared in argument per Brickell, C. J., in Supreme Commandery Knights of the Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 447, 46 Am. Rep. 332, to be void as offensive to law and good morals. But in Life Assn. of America v. Waller, 57 Ga. 533, the stipulation was: "If the insured shall die by suicide during the continuance of this policy, said Life Association will pay to the legal holder of this policy its net present value at the date of such death." There was no question raised, however, as to the validity of such a clause. So policies nevertheless frequently stipulate against suicide only within a limited time, as is apparent from the following cases; no question as to the validity thereof was raised, however: Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Walden, — Ct. Civ. App. Tex. —, 26 S. W. 1012 (the condition in this case was a warranty not to "die by my own act within two years," etc.); Streeter v. Western Union Mutual Life & Accident Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 199, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882, 31 N. W. 779 (the condition in this case provided against suicide, sane or insane, within three years). In Adkins v. Columbia Life Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410, the policy stipulated that in case of assured's death "by his own act or intention, whether sane or insane," etc., the company would pay the net value of the policy at the time of death. In Sabin v. National Union, 90 Mich. 177, the condition was against suicide within two years. See § 2532 herein.

[11] Semour v. Mutual Protective League, 155 Ill. App. 21. Examine North American Union v. Trenner, 138 Ill. App. 186.

[12] Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549, 63 L.R.A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224, 68 N. E. 492.

suicide.[13] And if a policy is incontestable after two years except for fraud suicide thereafter is covered even though the application excludes the risk of suicide.[14] But it is decided that insurer is not prevented from setting up the suicide of an insured person as a defense to its liability on the policy insuring his life, by a statute providing that "all companies, after having received three annual premiums on any policy . . . are estopped from defending on any other ground than fraud, against any claim arising on such policy by reason of any errors, omissions, or misstatements of the assured in any application made by such assured on which the policy was issued, except as to age." [15] Again, a life association issuing a policy providing that it does not assume the risk of the death of insured if caused by his own hand, but that such conditions may be waived in writing and then providing that after five years from the date of the policy it shall be "incontestable from any cause" except nonpayment of dues or mortuary assessments if the age of the applicant is correctly stated, is liable for the full amount of the policy, if the insured commits suicide or dies by his own hand more than five years after the policy is issued, provided the insured has stated his age correctly, and all dues and mortuary assessments have been paid up to the time of his death.[16]

§ 2644a. Stipulations limiting amount of recovery or time within which policy void for suicide: incontestability.—Where there is no law prohibiting the insertion of such a clause,[17] insurer may by stipulation limit the amount of recovery if suicide be committed within a specified time and such a provision is reasonable and should be enforced;[18] nor is it against public policy to stipulate that if insured shall die by his own hand, "sane or insane" within a certain time the policy shall be void, nor is such a stipulation invalid or unreasonable.[19] So by-laws limiting recovery to a proportionate part of the policy amount in case of suicide, are valid and reason-

[13] Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549, 68 L.R.A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224, 68 N. E. 492.

[14] Goodwin v. Providence Savings Life Assur. Soc. 97 Iowa, 226, 82 L.R.A. 473, 66 N. W. 157.

[15] Starck v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 134 Pa. 45, 7 L.R.A. 576, 19 Am. St. Rep. 674, 19 Atl. 703.

[16] Mareck v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 62 Minn. 39, 54 Am. St. Rep. 613, 64 N. W. 68.

[17] Kunse v. Knights of the Modern Maccabees, 45 Ind. App. 30, 90 N. E. 89.

[18] Silliman v. International Life Ins. Co. 131 Tenn. 303, 174 S. W. 1131. See § 2644 herein.

As to incontestability, fraud, etc., see §§ 3733a et seq. herein.

On incontestability of policy where defense is suicide, see note in 42 L.R.A. 253, 260.

[19] National Union v. Thomas, 10 App. D. C. 277, 25 Wash. L. Rep. 277; Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 141, 27 S. E. 39, 26 Ins. L. J. 881.

able, as where the recovery is limited to a sum only in proportion to the whole amount as the matured life expectancy is to the entire life expectancy at the date of admission.[20] Under a Georgia decision a stipulation for nonliability in case of insured's death by his own act, sane or insane, within one year, waives the statute of that state which provides that the insurer is released in case of suicide by insured when sane, and that there is no public policy which precludes such waiver.[1]

§ 2644b. Suicide: incontestability after specified time: substituted policy or new policy.—A resolution of a mutual insurance society lessening the time after inception in which the policy can be contested for suicide, and increasing the premium rates, does not apply to a policy previously issued, unless the insured complies with the new rates.[2] If a term policy stipulates for renewal upon its expiration, and also that it may be exchanged for a new policy without a medical examination and assured makes an application for a "new contract or policy" which is issued and is not a restatement of the contents of the term policy but its terms are essentially different therefrom and it expresses no dependence on or connection therewith, said new policy is an independent contract, and where it provides that it shall be null and void if insured shall commit suicide within one year from the date thereof, sane or insane, and also that the policy and application constitute the entire contract said suicide clause does not relate back to the date of the original contract under which it became inoperative at the time of insured's death by suicide.[3] Under a Tennessee decision, however, the contrary is held, although in that case a rider was attached stating that the new policy was issued in exchange for and in lieu of the original policy.[4]

§ 2644c. Stipulation that liability suspended while insured insane: distinction.—It may reasonably and validly be stipulated that the policy shall be suspended during such time as insured may be insane, as a distinction exists between the "suicide clause"

[20] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Clement, 113 Tenn. 40, 81 S. W. 1249.

[1] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Durden, 9 Ga. App. 797, 72 S. E. 295, Civ. Code, sec. 2500.

[2] Sexton v. National Life Ins. Co. 40 Colo. 60, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 504 (annotated on retroactive effect of resolution of mutual insurance company changing period during which policy may be contested for suicide), 90 Pac. 58, 36 Ins. L. J. 861.

[3] Gans v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 214 N. Y. 326, L.R.A.1915F, 703 (annotated on date from which the period to which defense of suicide is limited is to be computed), 108 N. E. 443, 45 Ins. L. J. 664, s. c. 146 N. Y. Supp. 453, 161 App. Div. 250.

[4] Silliman v. International Life Ins. Co. 131 Tenn. 303, L.R.A.1915F, 707, 174 S. W. 1131, 45 Ins. L. J. 673. See also Semour v. Mutual Protective League, 155 Ill. App. 21.

covering death by assured's own hand, or death by his own hand sane or insane, and a clause which makes no reference to the act of insured but only provides for exemption from liability for injury sustained while insured is insane and not in the present full possession and normal exercise of his faculties; and such a provision differs substantially from one excepting liability where insured commits suicide when insane.[5]

§ 2645. Suicide: by-law as part of contract.—It would be a general rule that a by-law excepting liability in case of suicide of the insured would be of binding force upon him where under the terms of the certificate it is included as a part of the contract between the parties, and said certificate is issued upon the condition that insured shall comply with all the by-laws of the society, and especially would this be true where the member has in any manner had his attention particularly called to such excepting by-law.[6] And assured is bound to know the constitution and laws providing such limitation period within which the policy should be avoided by suicide.[7] An anti-suicide clause contained in an application by a Knight of Pythias for insurance in the endowment rank to which he is entitled, is not binding upon him when such provision has not been adopted by the supreme lodge, but only by the board of control.[8]

§ 2646. Taking his own life by unlawful act: dies by his own hand, etc.: by-laws.—If a by-law of a society provides that the policy shall be forfeited in case the insured member shall by any unlawful act, take his own life, no forfeiture of the policy can be based upon such exception from the fact that insured while trespassing on a train of cars was thrown under the wheels and killed.[9] And if loss of good standing on the part of a member of a benefit society must be established by action on the part of the society, such loss of good standing does not include the act of the member in committing suicide.[10] Again, a certificate of a benevolent order providing that it shall be void if the member die by his own hand, unless he is insane, though made on an application stating that it is subject to all the provisions of the constitution, is not controlled by a consti-

[5] Interstate Business Men's Assoc. v. Atkinson, 165 Ky. 532, L.R.A. 1915E, 656, 177 S. W. 254.

On construction and effect of provision against liability for injury to or death of insured while or when insane, see note in L.R.A.1915E, 657.

[6] Sabin v. Senate of National Union, 90 Mich. 177, 51 N. W. 202.

[7] Benes v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 231 Ill. 134, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540, 83 N. E. 127.

[8] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Stein, 75 Miss. 107, 37 L.R.A. 775, 21 So. 559.

[9] So held in Evans v. Phœnix Mutual Relief Assoc. (Chester Co. Pa. C. P. C. 1892) 9 Lanc. L. Rev. 59, 49 Leg. Int. 15.

[10] Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549, 63 L.R.A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224, 68 N. E. 492.

tutional provision that there shall be a condition in every certificate making it void if the member die by his own hand "whether sane or insane," since this is not a general provision of the constitution or by-laws making all certificates void if the insured shall commit suicide, but specifically relates to those certificates of which that condition shall be made a part, or, if it is a general provision, it will not apply as against one who was misled by the failure of the officers to insert the condition in his contract.[11] A stipulation by an insured that his interest shall revert to the insurer in case his death shall be caused by an illegal act of his own applies to suicide, which is a crime at common law.[12]

§ 2647. Amendments or changes in by-laws, etc.: adoption of by-law against suicide after contract made.—In cases of amendments, changes in, or repeal of articles of association, by-laws, rules and regulations whereby the amount payable under the policy or certificate is reduced or the policy is declared forfeited in case of suicide of assured or the member, the question of the effect of such changes, even in case of a reserved power or agreement that changes, etc., in the constitution, etc., may be made, is one in which there is a want of harmony in the decisions. We have, however, considered elsewhere herein the principles governing in cases other than suicide and refer the reader to the conclusions therein reached, briefly considering here only those authorities which particularly relate to suicide.[13] Upon the assumption that suicide, self-destruction, or taking one's own life operates as a forfeiture of the right to recover under a life policy, even in the absence in the contract of an express exception that it shall so operate, an insurance association may, by a by-law enacted after the issuance of a certificate without an exception of suicide, stipulate for forfeiture in case insured should while sane take his own life. Such subsequently enacted by-law, if the premise be true, does not it is held in an Alabama case impair or vary existing contracts, nor does it add any new term or condition to the contract. It relieves the association from no responsibilty, nor does it impose any new or. additional duty upon the member, and works no change in his relations. It is the mere declaration or expression of the implication of the law.[14] If the above premise be not true, then the

[11] Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Fraley, 94 Tex. 200, 51 L.R.A. 898, 59 S. W. 879.

[12] Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83.

[13] See §§ 377 et seq. herein.

On subsequent by-law excluding or reducing liability in case of suicide, see notes in 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, and L.R.A.1915D, 1096.

[14] So held in Supreme Commandery Knights of Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 447, 46 Am. Rep. 332.

rule expressed in a case in the appellate court in Illinois ought to govern, which is, that such subsequently enacted by-law excepting suicide from the risks assumed would not be binding upon the assured unless the power to pass such subsequent by-law is expressly reserved in the contract.[15] And, even in case of such a reserved power in the contract the question of vested rights and the impairment of obligation of contracts cannot be ignored.[16] It will be observed from an examination of the condition given in the rule below to the last case that the words "sane or insane, voluntary or involuntary," are included in the exception, and there is nothing in the opinion to show that the clause was not construed in its entirety, and the decision may, therefore, perhaps be distinguished from the Alabama case above noted under this section, where it is held that the addition, however, of the words "sane or insane" in such subsequent by-law as the one considered adds a new term to such a contract, but that under a power reserved in the contract to alter by-laws or add new ones the words "sane or insane" may be added.[17] Under a United States Supreme Court decision if the agreement to abide by subsequently enacted by-laws or changes therein or in the constitution clearly refers to policies thereafter to be issued the consent is limited thereto in its application and this applies to the amount of benefits.[18] In another Federal decision neither the amendment nor the original provision was held applicable as to suicide under the facts.[19] And a provision in assured's certificate, which, contrary to the statute, limits the amount fixed therein and reduces the same so that only a small proportionate sum can be recovered in case of suicide is void.[20] Under an Alabama decision an amendment reducing benefits in [15] Northwestern Benevolent & Mutual Aid Assoc. v. Warner, 24 Ill. App. 357. The by-law in this case was: "Death executed by the hand, act, or procurement of the member, whether voluntary or involuntary, sane or insane, at the time, is a risk not assumed by the association."

[16] See §§ 379a et seq. herein.

[17] Supreme Commandery Knights of Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 435, 449, 46 Am. Rep. 332. In this case the contract under the certificate when issued recited that any violation of the "requirements of the law now in force or hereafter enacted governing the order or this class shall render this certificate null and void." It also stipulated for a "full compliance with all the laws of the order now in force or that may hereafter be enacted," and was also "subject to the laws of the order now in force or which may hereafter be enacted by the supreme commandery."

[18] Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 47 L. ed. 139, 23 Sup. Ct. 108, 32 Ins. L. J. 57.

[19] Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Wishart, 192 Fed. 453, 112 C. C. A. 591.

[20] Whitfield v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. 578.

case of suicide does not impair the obligation of contracts where compliance with enacted by-laws, etc., is embraced in terms of certificate.[1] Under a California decision contract obligations cannot be impaired by subsequently enacted by-laws or by changes therein.[2] Under a Colorado decision vested contract rights, under a policy of which the statute as to suicide not being a defense is a part cannot be impaired by a subsequent repealing statute.[3] In Georgia, by-laws even under a reserved right to amend are not retrospective in operation unless the intent to do so is clearly expressed.[4] In Illinois a limitation of the society's liability in case of suicide is provided by a subsequently enacted by-law does not impair vested rights of an assured who also had agreed to be bound by such subsequent laws.[5] And if a by-law reduces the amount recoverable in case of suicide sane or insane it binds as to a contract of a member who becomes such after its enactment and who also agrees to comply with and be subject to existing and thereafter adopted laws, rules and usages.[6] So a board of control of a benevolent society is not empowered to enact a by-law or regulation precluding payment where a member commits suicide notwithstanding a certificate provision for full compliance by a member with by-laws which might thereafter be enacted by said board.[7] In an Indiana case involving suicide and the incontestable clause the court, per Watson, J., said: "No question as to the authority of the society to make or change its by-laws, generally speaking, is involved in this case, but by the terms of the contract the appellant had become absolutely liable for the payment of $2,000, and could not thereafter discharge such liability to the extent of $1,500 by the enactment of a by-law, any more than it could discharge its entire liability by such an act (it admitting liability to the amount of $500). The authorities are to the effect that such a by-law thus amended and applied to the facts before stated is invalid on the ground that it is unreasonable, and impairs the obligation of

[1] Fraternal Union of America v. Zeigler, 145 Ala. 287, 39 So. 751.

[2] Schack v. Supreme Lodge of the Fraternal Brotherhood, 9 Cal. App. 584, 99 Pac. 989.

[3] Modern Brotherhood of America v. Lock, 22 Co. App. 409, 125 Pac. 556, 41 Ins. L. J. 1833.

[4] Fraternal Relief Assoc. v. Edwards, 9 Ga. App. 43, 70 S. E. 265.

[5] Scow v. Supreme Council of Royal League, 223 Ill. 32, 70 N. E. 42. See Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Trebbe, 74 Ill. App. 545.

[6] Scow v. Supreme Council of the Royal League, 223 Ill. 32, 79 N. E. 42, cited in Fort v. Iowa Legion of Honor, 146 Iowa, 183, 123 N. W. 224, 39 Ins. L. J. 3.

[7] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Kutscher, 72 Ill. App. 462. See Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Lennan, 171 Ill. 417, 49 N. E. 530. See §§ 379 et seq. herein.

a contract or a vested right.[8] It is also held in the same state that an incontestable clause as to suicide cannot be modified by an amendment or repealed so as to take away vested rights.[9] In Kentucky it is held that a subsequently enacted by-law limiting the amount of recovery in case of suicide does not apply to a member without notice thereof.[10] Under a Louisiana decision a member agreeing to be bound by subsequently enacted amendments is subject to the provisions of a by-law thereafter enacted which provides that policies are avoided if the member dies by his own hand.[11] In Minnesota a by-law limiting the amount of recovery in case of death by suicide within a specified time, may be changed so as to extend said period where the member agrees to be bound by subsequently enacted by-laws.[12] Under a Mississippi case if a member of a beneficial association is entitled to a certificate insuring his life, and a committee of the association, without authority, enacts a by-law imposing a condition against suicide, and he, in his application, assents to this condition, and the certificate purports to be subject thereto, he is not bound by the condition, because it was imposed without authority.[13] Under a Missouri decision if the member agrees to be bound by subsequently enacted by-laws or changes, the association may thereafter limit or reduce the amount payable in case of suicide.[14] But it is also held in that state that a limitation of the amount of recovery in case of suicide cannot be imposed by provisions of a subsequent by-law, where

[8] Court of Honor v. Hutchins, 43 Ind. App. 321, 82 N. E. 89, citing Supreme Council Legion of Honor v. Getz, 112 Fed. 119, 50 C. C. A. 153; Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549, 63 L.R.A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224, 68 N. E. 492; Russ v. Legion of Honor, 110 La. 588, 98 Am. St. Rep. 469, 34 So. 697; Newhall v. American Legion of Honor, 181 Mass. 111, 63 N. E. 1; Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, 110 N. W. 374; Mareck v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 62 Minn. 39, 54 Am. St. Rep. 613, 64 N. W. 68; Langan v. Supreme Council American Legion of Honor, 174 N. Y. 266, 66 N. E. 932; Hale v. Equitable Union, 168 Pa. 377, 31 Atl. 1066.

[9] Court of Honor v. Rausch, 50 Ind. App. 161, 95 N. E. 1018.

[10] Hunziker v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 117 Ky. 418, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1510, 78 S. W. 201.

[11] Dougherty v. Knights of Pythias, 48 La. Ann. 1203, 20 So. 712. See §§ 379 et seq. herein.

[12] Ledy v. National Council of Knights & Ladies of Security, 129 Minn. 137, L.R.A.1915D, 1095, 151 S. W. 905. See Olson v. Court of Honor, 100 Minn. 117, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, 117 Am. St. Rep. 676, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 622, 110 N. W. 374. See § 379n herein.

[13] Supreme K. of P. v. Stein, 75 Miss. 107, 65 Am. St. Rep. 589, 37 L.R.A. 775, 21 So. 559.

[14] Claudy v. Royal League, 250 Mo. 92, 168 S. W. 593. See Dessauer v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World, 191 Mo. App. 76, 176 S. W. 461. Compare Wilcox v. Court of Honor, 134 Mo. App. 547, 114 S. W. 1155.

neither the constitution nor by-laws imposed such a condition when membership attached and the member did not consent to abide and be bound by subsequent laws.[15] In Nebraska a by-law legally enacted, subsequent to the issuance of a fraternal benefit certificate, and providing for its forfeiture if the death of the member is occasioned by suicide, whether he is sane or insane at the time, is reasonable and will be upheld.[16] And in an action upon a mutual benefit certificate, where the defense interposed is that the deceased committed suicide, whereby the certificate was forfeited under the provisions of a by-law enacted subsequent to the issuance of the certificate, an attack on the by-law on the ground that the governing body was without power to adopt it is not a collateral attack on the right of the society to transact business.[16a] In New Jersey a subsequently enacted by-law precluding payment of benefits if the member committed suicide was held not binding even though the member had agreed to be bound by by-laws subsequently enacted.[17] Under a New York decision an amended by-law which is retrospective in its operation, as to suicide of the insured cannot divest vested rights by adding conditions not in the original contract, even though the member has agreed to comply with by-laws thereafter enacted.[18] This decision was modified and it was subsequently held that the adoption of a by-law by a mutual benefit society relieving itself from liability for death benefits applies to existing members who have agreed to be bound by all rules which may be adopted, since, as it is there held, there is no vested right to insurance covering such a risk and the agreement that insured shall not intentionally cause his own death is a fundamental though unexpressed part of the original contract.[19] This last de-

[15] Lewine v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias of the World, 122 Mo. App. 547, 99 S. W. 821, the court, per Nortoni, J., said: "It is well settled and it is the doctrine of this court that such contracts, in so far as the insurance feature is concerned, cannot be altered or modified without the express assent of the member. This has repeatedly been held in express terms and other cases have proceeded in affirmance of the proposition."

[16] Lange v. Royal Highlanders, 75 Neb. 188, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 121 Am. St. Rep. 786, 106 N. W. 224. Compare Sebesta v. Supreme Court of Honor, 80 Neb. 760, 115 N. W. 300.

[16a] Lange v. Royal Highlanders, 75 Neb. 188, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 121 Am. St. Rep. 786, 106 N. W. 224.

[17] Sautter v. Supreme Conclave Improved Order of Heptasophs, 72 N. J. L. 325, 62 Atl. 529. See §§ 379 et seq. herein.

[18] Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 73 N. Y. Supp. 594, 66 App. Div. 448. Judgment modified in Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 83, 67 N. E. 83.

[19] Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83. See §§ 379a, 380c herein.

cision is considered in another New York case,[20] where the court, per Vann, J., said: "There was no provision in the certificate or by-laws against death by suicide, but acting under a power reserved by express consent an amendment was adopted making the certificate void in case the insured 'died by suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane.' The court speaking through Judge Werner, said: 'As the contract was silent upon the subject of self-destruction by the insured while insane, death from that cause was clearly within its terms. Upon the execution of the contract the insured, therefore, acquired a fixed and vested right to insurance covering that risk. No subsequent amendment of the by-laws could affect that right without the express assent of the insured.'" Under another New York decision vested rights are not impaired by a subsequently enacted by-law reducing death benefits in case of suicide.[1] It is also decided in the same state that if a benefit society has insured a member against unintentional self-destruction after one year, it cannot, by a subsequent amendment of its by-laws, provide that self-destruction, while insane, within five years of the date of the policy shall render the policy void.[2] Under a Pennsylvania decision the period of limitation within which suicide shall be committed to avoid the policy may be extended under an agreement by assured to abide by thereafter enacted by-laws.[3] Under a Tennessee decision the holder of a benefit certificate who agrees to be bound by all laws of the order "now in force or that may hereafter be enacted" will be subject to a subsequent rule regularly passed, destroying liability on certificates in case of the suicide of their holders.[4] In a Texas case it is held that an agreement to be bound by subsequent changes in the by-laws binds the member.[5] In a Virginia case a by-law adopted after issuance of a certificate may preclude recovery thereon in case of suicide where the member has consented to the adoption of subsequent by-laws, and this is so held even though the certificate contains no condition as to suicide.[6] In Washington where a reservation or agree-

[20] Wright v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 196 N. Y. 391, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423 (annotated on right of mutual benefit society to decrease benefits), 89 N. E. 1078, 39 Ins. L. J. 95.

[1] Bottier v. Supreme Council American Legion of Honor, 37 Misc. 406, 75 N. Y. Supp. 805.

[2] Weber v. Supreme Tent K. of M. 172 N. Y. 490, 92 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258.

[3] Chambers v. Supreme Tent Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 200 Pa. 244, 86 Am. St. Rep. 716, 49 Atl. 784.

[4] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. La Malta, 95 Tenn. 157, 30 L.R.A. 838, 31 S. W. 493.

[5] Eversberg v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 549, 77 S. W. 246. Examine Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Fraley, 94 Tex. 200, 51 L.R.A. 898, 59 S. W. 879.

[6] Plunkett v. Supreme Conclave

ment that by-laws might be thereafter enacted is contained in the application, certificate and by-laws an amendment extending the time limitation clause as to suicide does not violate any vested right under a pre-existing policy as the law recognizes no vested right to commit suicide.[7] It is held in a Wisconsin decision that a certificate of membership, and the application therefor, which provides against liability in case of death by suicide, constitute a contract between the parties prevailing over by-laws of the association which do not authorize such limitation upon liability.[8] And where directors are so empowered by the association's charter, they may, where the member agrees to conform to by-laws thereafter adopted by said directors, amend the by-laws and provide for forfeiture in case of a member's suicide and such change is binding.[9]

§ 2648. Suicide: policy to be void in case of death by violation of law.—Death by suicide will not avoid a policy which provides that if the insured "die in violation of an attempt to violate any law," the policy shall be void.[10] And where a policy provided that "if the assured shall die in consequence of a violation of any criminal law of any country, state, or territory in which the assured may be this certificate shall be null and void," it was held that suicide committed by an alleged fugitive from justice to avoid and arrest and trial for a crime committed by him is not to be considered as the proximate result of the alleged crime, and that his death by suicide is not, within the proper meaning of the policy, to be considered as the violation of law therein referred to.[11] Unless made so by statute, suicide is not a crime, within the meaning of a mutual benefit certificate, exempting the association from liability in case the holder dies on account of violation of the criminal laws;[12] and although suicide is technically a crime it is not within Improved Order of Heptasophs, 105 Va. 643, 55 S. E. 9. See §§ 379 et seq. herein.

[7] Klein v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 79 Wash. 173, 140 Pac. 72.

[8] McCoy v. Northwestern Mutual Relief Assoc. 92 Wis. 577, 47 L.R.A. 681, 66 N. W. 697. Compare Stirn v. Supreme Lodge of Bohemian Slavonian Benevolent Soc. 150 Wis. 13, 136 N. W. 164, 41 Ins. L. J. 1130.

[9] Hughes v. Wisconsin Odd Fellows Mutual Life Ins. Co. 98 Wis. 292, 73 N. W. 1015.

[10] Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 15 Am. St. Rep. 430, 22 N. E. 1095, 6 L.R.A. 495, 27 N. Y. St. Rep. 474 (one judge dissenting); Patterson v. National Premium Mutual Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 42 L.R.A. 253, 75 N. W. 980. See Patrick v. Excelsior Life Ins. Co. 4 Hun (N. Y.) 263; Freeman v. National Benefit Soc. 42 Hun (N. Y.) 252.

On necessity that suicide be reasonable and legitimate consequence of violation of law in order to relieve insurer, see note in 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 261.

[11] Kerr v. Minnesota Mutual Benefit Assoc. 39 Minn. 174, 12 Am. St. Rep. 631, 39 N. W. 312.

[12] Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549, 63 L.R.A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224, 68 N. E. 492.

the clause of a policy providing that death in consequence of or in violation of law is not covered by the policy, where the usual suicide clause is omitted and an "absolutely incontestable" clause included.[13] If the attempt to commit suicide is made a criminal offense, such an attempt will, of course, avoid a policy containing such a condition, though if the attempt were successful, it would not avoid the policy.[14] Suicide of an assured does not, however, release from liability the company which has insured his life, and has issued a policy which provided that it was "to be void if the member herein shall die in consequence of a duel or by the hands of justice, or of any violation of, or attempt to violate any criminal law of the United States, or of any state or country in which the member herein named may be," when by the law of the state wherein the assured dies an attempt to commit suicide is not a crime if successful.[15] In the absence of evidence of a crime, the jury are not required to find that an insured person, found dead with a pistol wound in his head, came to his death by the intentional act of another, so as to take the case out of the provisions of a policy against death by accident.[16]

§ 2648a. Suicide: external, violent, and accidental means.—Death from suicide which springs from an insane impulse of a disordered or insane mind is, through external, violent, and accidental means, within the meaning of an accident insurance policy.[17] So death caused by the cutting of his own throat by an assured person while insane, without knowing the result of his act and without intending thereby to kill himself, will constitute "death by external, violent, and accidental means," within the terms of a policy providing that death must be occasioned by such means to justify a recovery under the policy.[18] So a death caused by a person hanging himself while temporarily insane is covered by a policy against "bodily injuries effected through external, accidental, and violent means,"

[13] Patterson v. Natural Premium Mutual Life Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 42 L.R.A. 253, 69 Am. St. Rep. 899, 75 N. W. 980.

[14] Meacham v. New York State Mutual Benefit Assoc. 120 N. Y. 237, 30 N. Y. St. Rep. 874, 24 N. E. 283, citing Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 15 Am. St. Rep. 430, 22 N. E. 1095, 6 L.R.A. 495, 27 N. Y. St. Rep. 474 and note.

[15] Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 6 L.R.A. 495, 15 Am. St. Rep. 430, 22 N. E. 1093.

[16] Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Milward, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 589, 68 L.R.A. 285, 82 S. W. 364.

[17] Tuttle v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 223 (annotated on death from suicide as one caused through external, violent and accidental means), 104 N. W. 1131.

[18] Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 3 L.R.A. 486, 42 N. W. 156.

and is not within an exception of death caused by "bodily infirmities or disease, or by suicide or self-inflicted injuries." [19]

§ 2649. Suicide: intentional injuries by assured or another.—In Travelers' Insurance Company v. McConkey,[20] decided in 1888, the policy insured against bodily injuries "effected through external, violent, and accidental means; . . . provided, always, that this insurance shall not extend . . . to any death or disability . . . caused wholly or in part, or jointly, by bodily infirmities or disease existing prior or subsequent to the date of this contract, . . . and no claims shall be made under this policy when the death or injury may have been caused by . . . suicide (felonious or otherwise, sane or insane) . . . or intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person." The complaint alledged an accidental shooting through the heart by another and consequent death; the defense was suicide, and intentional injuries inflicted by assured or some other person, and it was held that no claim could be sustained if the injuries which caused insured's death were inflicted intentionally upon himself or when insane, or if inflicted upon him by another person.[21]

[19] Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. 685. Cited in:

United States. — Riter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 149, 42 L. ed. 696, 18 Sup. Ct. 300; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 473, 37 L. ed. 1148, 1149, 14 Sup. Ct. 155; Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 118 Fed. 374, 377, 55 C. C. A. 200, 203; Berger v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 88 Fed. 241, 242; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Leubrie, 71 Fed. 843, 844, 18 C. C. A. 332, 333, 38 U. S. App. 37; Manufacturers' Accident Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. 945, 955, 7 C. C. A. 581, 591, 16 U. S. App. 290, 22 L.R.A. 626.

California.—Berliner v. Travelers Ins. Co. 121 Cal. 451, 561, 41 L.R.A. 467, 468, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49, 53 Pac. 918.

Colorado. — Travelers Insurance Co. v. Murray, 16 Colo. 296, 304, 25 Am. St. Rep. 267, 26 Pac. 774.

Illinois.—Healey v. Mutual Accident Assoc. 133 Ill. 556, 562, 9 L.R.A. 371, 372, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, 25 N. E. 52.

Kansas.—Hart v. Modern Workman Knights of Maccabees, 60 Kan. 678, 682, 72 Am. St. Rep. 380, 57 Pac. 936.

Maine.—McGlinchey v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 80 Me. 251, 256, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190, 14 Atl. 13.

Michigan.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 614, 3 L.R.A. 486, 494, 42 N. W. 156.

Pennsylvania.—Pickett v. Pac. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 93, 13 L.R.A. 661, 663, 27 Am. St. Rep. 618, 22 Atl. 871.

West Virginia.—Gerling v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 39 W. Va. 689, 699, 20 S. E. 691.

[20] 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360.

[21] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360. Cited in:

United States.—Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 475, 37 L. ed. 1148, 1150, 14 Sup. Ct. 155.

Illinois. — Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 106 Ill. App. 449, 455.

§ 2650. Suicide in absence of stipulation: contra.—There seems to be some conflict of opinion as to the effect of suicide where there is no stipulation against it in the policy. In New York the suicide of one whose life is insured constitutes no defense to an action on the policy unless it comes within some condition of the contract of insurance relieving the insurer from liability in such a case.[1] But the rule is subject, as will be noted hereafter, to such exception as arises in cases where at the time of making the application the assured intended to commit suicide, and the intent evidences a legal fraud. As opposed to the New York decision, the court, per Brickell, J., in an Alabama case[2] decided in 1882, declares that voluntary self-destruction or suicide by a sane insured should be implied as an exception of liability, or rather as not within the risks contemplated, even though not expressly excepted in the policy. There is certainly much force in the argument of the court in this last case, but inasmuch as the insurers frame their policies, and may include such valid exceptions as may be agreed upon, it would seem that the courts should be loath to import an exception against liability into the policy which the insurers have neglected to express, but if the failure to expressly except suicide in the policy amounts to an implied agreement to pay the amount of the policy in case the insured while sane commits suicide, then such implied agreement can stand on no better footing than an express agreement to the same effect, and it ought to be held void upon principle and as against public policy. And if the act of suicide were voluntarily committed by a sane person under such

Kansas.—Hart v. Modern Woodmen of America, 60 Kan. 678, 683, 72 Am. St. Rep. 380, 57 Pac. 936.

North Carolina.—Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 141, 146, 27 S. E. 39.

Pennsylvania. — Chambers v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees, 200 Pa. 244, 245, 86 Am. St. Rep. 716, 49 Atl. 784; Tritschler v. Keystone Mutual Benefit Assoc. 180 Pa. 205, 207, 36 Atl. 734; Hall v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 31, 34.

South Carolina.—Latimer v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of World, 62 S. Car. 145, 160, 40 S. E. 155.

Distinguished in Stephens v. Railway Officials & Employees Accident Assoc. 75 Miss. 84, 89, 21 So. 710.

On conflict of laws as to suicide, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 867; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 981; and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 284.

[1] Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y. 537, 6 L.R.A. 495, 15 Am. St. Rep. 430, 22 N. E. 1095. See Borradaile v. Hunter, 5 Man. & G. 639, 658, 5 Scot. (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443, per Lord Erskine, citing Amicable Life Assur. Co. v. Bolland, Selw. N. P. (10th ed.) 1033, 4 Bligh. N. S. 194, 2 Dow. & C. 1.

On suicide while sane as a defense to an action on a policy or certificate containing no provision as to effect of suicide, see note in 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1124.

[2] Supreme Commandery Knights of Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 445–47, 46 Am. Rep. 332, 335, 337.

circumstances as clearly evidence a fraud, the fraud itself ought to be a defense.[3] It is held, however, in other jurisdictions that suicide will not defeat a recovery upon a mutual benefit certificate not procured by the insured with the intention of committing suicide, unless the contract so provides in express terms.[4] In Maryland if a life policy does not provide that it shall become void in the event of the suicide of the insured, his suicide while sane is not a defense to an action on the policy by the beneficiary, unless the policy was obtained by the deceased with intent to commit suicide and thus defraud the insurer.[5] So in Illinois if a life policy contains no provision on the subject, the death of the insured by his own act resulting from insanity, is as much insured against as death resulting from any other physical affliction.[6] In Wisconsin intentional suicide while sane does not avoid a life policy, in the absence of any provision therein to that effect, if third persons are beneficiaries.[7] So in Iowa a policy containing no stipulation as to suicide, taken out in good faith by the assured, will not be avoided as against the beneficiary named therein, by the fact that the assured thereafter, while sane, deliberately and purposely took his own life.[8] In Minnesota in the law of insurance, suicide is not, as a rule, recognized as a ground for exemption from liability, or for the forfeiture of a policy issued for the benefit of a third person unless it is expressly so provided in the policy.[9] Under a Federal Supreme Court decision intentional self-destruc-

[3] "If the policy contains no condition against self-destruction, it 'is clear upon principle that a voluntary suicide, the assured being sane at the time, is a fraud upon the insurer and vitiates the insurance:" Note 59 Am. Dec. 487. A charge to the jury is right which instructs that if no condition against suicide exists in the policy, the act of suicide by the assured is a fraud upon the assurer preventing recovery: Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co. 21 Pa. St. 466. A covenant "to do and perform all such acts, matters, and things as should be requisite for continuing and keeping on foot a policy" cannot be read negatively, and is not broken by the suicide of the covenantor whereby the policy is forfeited: Dormay v. Borrodaile, 10 Beav. 335, s. c. 5 C. B. 380, 11 Jur. 231.

That condition upholding suicide void, see § 2532 herein.

[4] Lange v. Royal Highlanders, 75 Neb. 188, 10. L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 121 Am. St. Rep. 786, 106 N. W. 224; Campbell v. Supreme Conclave Improved Order Heptasophs, 46 N. J. L. 274, 54 L.R.A. 576, 49 Atl. 550.

[5] Supreme Conclave Improved Order of Heptasophs of Baltimore City v. Miles, 92 Md. 613, 84 Am. St. Rep. 528, 48 Atl. 845.

[6] Grand Lodge Independent Order of Mutual Aid v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 61 Am. St. Rep. 123, 48 N. E. 59.

[7] Patterson v. Natural Premium Mutual Life Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 42 L.R.A. 253, 69 Am. St. Rep. 899, 75 N. W. 980.

[8] Seiler v. Economic Life Assoc. 105 Iowa, 87, 43 L.R.A. 537, 74 N. W. 941.

[9] Kerr v. Minnesota Mutual Benefit Assoc. 39 Minn. 174, 12 Am. St. Rep. 631, 39 N. W. 312.

tion by the assured when of sound mind is itself a defense to an action on a life policy, even if the policy does not expressly declare that it shall be void in such a case.[10] Under a Massachusetts decision a beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate, who, under the terms of the contract, can be changed at any time by the insured, cannot recover on the certificate in case the insured takes his own life while sane, although there is no provision in the certificate against suicide.[11]

§ 2651. Suicide by insane person in absence of stipulation against suicide.—Going beyond the point of voluntary suicide by a sane person it would be clear that, in the absence of an exception of suicide from the risks, the self-destruction of assured while insane could not avoid the policy,[12] and it is declared that an act in a state of unconsciousness, whether assured be sane or insane, would be merely accidental, and not avoid the policy.[13]

[10] Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300. Cited in:

United States.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 114 Fed. 268, 274, 52 C. C. A. 154, 160; Burt v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 419, 421, 44 C. C. A. 548, 550, 59 L.R.A. 395; Hopkins v. Northwestern Life Assur. Co. 94 Fed. 729, 730.

Illinois. — Grand Legion, Select Knights of America v. Beatty, 117 Ill. App. 659.

Iowa.—Schmidt v. Northern Life Assoc. 112 Iowa, 41, 44, 51 L.R.A. 141, 144, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Seiler v. Economic Life Assoc. 105 Iowa, 87, 92, 43 L.R.A. 537, 539, 74 N. W. 941.

Kansas.—Supreme Court of Honor v. Updegraff, 68 Kan. 474, 476, 75 Pac. 477.

Kentucky. — Mooney v. Ancient Order of United States Grand Lodge, 114 Ky. 950, 960, 72 S. W. 288; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 112 Ky. 455, 461, 66 S. W. 35.

Maryland. — Supreme Conclave Improved Order Heptasophs v. Miles, 92 Md. 613, 626, 84 Am. St. Rep. 528, 48 Atl. 845.

Missouri. — Morton v. Supreme Council Royal League, 100 Mo. App. 76, 86, 73 S. W. 259.

New York.—Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 408, 63 L.R.A. 347, 351, 67 N. E. 83; Weber v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees, 172 N. Y. 490, 493, 95 Am. St. Rep. 753, 65 N. E. 258.

Pennsylvania. — Hall v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 31, 33.

Wisconsin.—Patterson v. Natural Premium Mutual Life Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 121, 42 L.R.A. 253, 258, 69 Am. St. Rep. 899, 75 S. W. 980.

Distinguished in Kelley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 109 Fed. 56, 61; Parker v. Des Moines Life Assoc. 108 Iowa, 117, 123, 78 N. W. 826; Murray v. State Mutual Life Ins. Co. 22 R. I. 524, 527, 53 L.R.A. 742, 744, 48 Atl. 800.

[11] Davis v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 195 Mass. 402, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 722, 81 N. E. 294.

On suicide when sane as a defense to an action on a policy or certificate containing no provision as to effect of suicide, see note in 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1124.

[12] Horn v. Anglo-Australian & Universal Family Life Ins. Co. 30 L. J. Ch. 511, 7 Jur. (N. S.) 673, 4 L. T. 142, 9 W. R. 359, 2 Big. L. & Acc. Ins. Cas. 602.

[13] Streeter v. Western Union Mutual Life & Accident Ins. Co. 65

§ 2652. Suicide where policy obtained with that intent: fraud: creditor.—If the policy is obtained by assured with the intent to take his own life so that the money might be appropriated to the payment of creditors and the support of his family and relations, it is void, even though it contains no condition as to the manner of death, and a creditor who is substituted as a beneficiary stands in no better position than the assured himself, so far as the binding force of the policy is concerned. The ground of defense in such a case is not the suicide, but the legal fraud, suicide being the ultimate agency by which the fraud is accomplished.[14]

§ 2653. Suicide for benefit of assured's estate or third person.—Even though there is no condition against suicide, the deliberate killing of himself by insured while sane, and with intent to secure the amount of the insurance to his estate, avoids the policy.[15] And suicide of a sane man for the purpose of giving his estate the benefit of the insurance on his life, will deprive his personal representatives of all right to enforce the policies, although they contain no provision against suicide.[16] So the suicide of the assured will terminate the rights of the beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate, the same as it would the rights of his legal representative.[17] But if a life policy is taken out by insured not for his own benefit, Mich. 199, 202, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882, 31 N. W. 779, per Champlin, J.

[14] Smith v. National Benefit Soc. 123 N. Y. 85, 9 L.R.A. 616, 25 N. E. 197, 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 67, aff'g 51 Hun (N. Y.) 575. See also Swift v. Massachusetts Mutual Life Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 186, 20 Am. Rep. 522.

On evidence of declarations of intent to commit suicide, see note in L.R.A.1916B, 822.

[15] Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 17 U. S. C. C. A. 537, 70 Fed. 954, 42 L.R.A. 583, s. c. 69 Fed. 505. In this case insured left a letter to his executor describing his liabilities and his insurance, and directed the application of the proceeds of his policy to his debts. Other letters were also written by assured evidencing a deliberate suicide, although it was not shown by the declarations of assured or by other like positive evidence that he intended to take his own life. He was heavily in debt and insolvent, had unlawfully appropriated trust funds, had engaged in hazardous stock speculations, and was carrying an unusually large amount of insurance grossly disproportionate to that which his income justified. He took out additional insurance and again increased the same by about ninety thousand dollars, and shortly thereafter committed suicide. The court cites Moore v. Woolsey, 4 El. & B. 243, 254, s. c. 24 L. J. Q. B. 40, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 468, 3 C. L. R. 207, 3 W. R. 66, per Lord Campbell; Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co. 21 Pa. St. 466, 479; Supreme Commandery v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 447, 46 Am. Rep. 332; New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 600, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, per Field, J.; Supreme Conclave Independent Order Heptasophs, 92 Md. 613, 628, 84 Am. St. Rep. 528, 48 Atl. 845.

[16] Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 70 Fed. 954, 17 C. C. A. 537, 28 U. S. App. 612, 42 L.R.A. 583.

[17] Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83.

but for the benefit of a third person, as in case where it is payable to the heirs or widow, and there is no stipulation that it shall be void in case of suicide or self-destruction of assured, then, as a general rule, suicide is no defense, for ordinarily the beneficiary is not bound by acts or declarations of the assured done or made by him after the issue of the policy, unless the same are in violation of some condition in the policy.[18] Nor will suicide of a member of a mutual benefit society defeat a recovery on his benefit certificate, issued in favor of his wife, in the absence of express provision in the contract to that effect, although the beneficiary had not a vested interest which could not be defeated by the member.[19]

§ 2654. Suicide: temporary insanity.—In the absence of the clause "sane or insane," if the insured commits suicide in a temporary fit of insanity the policy is not invalidated.[20]

§ 2655. Suicide: temporary insanity: "sane or insane, voluntary or involuntary."—If one commits suicide while temporarily insane, and the policy stipulates against self-destruction, sane or insane, voluntary or involuntary, there can be no recovery.[1]

[18] Fitch v. American Popular Life Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 557, 17 Am. Rep. 372, 11 Alb. L. J. 91, rev'g 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 247, followed in Patrick v. Excelsior Life Ins. Co. 4 Hun (N. Y.) 263, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 202; Mills v. Rebstock, 29 Minn. 380, 13 N. W. 162. In this case the constitution and by-laws of a mutual benefit association were held to stand in place of a policy, no policy being issued. The society was organized to secure to the heirs of deceased members the benefits of life insurance on the assessment plan. There was no provision qualifying the right of recovery in case of suicide. It was required, however, that the member be in "good standing" at the time of his death. "Good standing" was evidently dependent on the payment of dues as required under the contract: Kerr v. Minnesota Mutual Benefit Assoc. 39 Minn. 174, 12 Am. St. Rep. 631, 39 N. W. 312, where it is said, per Vandeburgh, J.: "In the law of insurance suicide is not as a rule recognized as a ground of exemption from liability or for forfeiture of a policy issued for the benefit of a third person, unless it is expressly so in the policy." See Patterson v. Natural Premium Mutual Life Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 42 L.R.A. 253, 69 Am. St. Rep. 899, 75 N. W. 980, 27 Ins. L. J. 820.

[19] Grand Legion of Illinois Select Knights of America v. Beaty, 224 Ill. 346, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1124 (annotated on suicide while sane as a defense to an action on a policy or certificate containing no provision as to effect of suicide), 79 N. E. 565.

[20] Horn v. Anglo-Australian & Universal Family Life Ins. Co. (1861) 7 Jur. (N. S.) 673, 30 L. J. Ch. 511, 4 L. T. 142, 9 W. R. 359.

On insanity as affecting condition as to suicide, see note in 35 L.R.A. 258.

On liability under accident policy for death during delirium, see note in 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 543.

[1] Dennis v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 84 Cal. 570, 571, 24 Pac. 120 (points involved were those of pleading and proof merely).

On effect of words "sane or insane," or other words relating to § 2656. Suicide: temporary insanity, "felonious or otherwise, sane or insane."—In Iowa it is held that a condition that "suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane," prevents a recovery where the act of suicide was committed by insured while temporarily insane from illness, and when he was neither conscious nor responsible. The court, per Rothrock, J., said: "We think, however, that the better rule and the logical conclusion is that the condition in the policy was intended to include self-destruction, no matter what the mental condition of the insured was at the time of the act. . . . It means all suicidal acts, whether such as are denominated as criminal or such as are the offspring of insanity."[2] mental condition in suicide clause in policy, see note in 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 260; on construction and effect of provision against liability for injury to or death of insured while or when insane, see note in L.R.A.1915E, 657.

§ 2657. Suicide: "self-destruction," "in any form:" "disease:" "voluntary act of assured."—The word "self-destruction" is synonymous with the word "suicide" where the insurer is exempted from liability in case of "suicide—the self-destruction of the insured in any form except upon proof that the same is the direct result of disease or accident, occurring without the voluntary act of the insured;" and the words "in any form" in the same clause relate only to the manner of killing; the word "disease" used in the same clause, unrestricted by anything in the context, includes disease of the mind as well as disease of the body, and the concluding words, "voluntary act of the assured," point to the act of a person

[2] Searth v. Security Mutual Life Soc. 75 Iowa, 346, 39 N. W. 658, cited in Moore v. Northwestern Mutual Life Inf. Co. 192 Mass. 468, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 656, 78 N. E. 488, 35 Ins. L. J. 769, 774 (to general point that words "sane or insane" cover every case of suicide); Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Kelley, 114 Fed. 268, 52 C. C. A. 154, 31 Ins. L. J. 497, 514, rev'g 109 Fed. 56, 30 Ins. L. J. 904 (warranty was not to "die by my own act, whether sane or insane, during said period of two years"); Ticktin v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. (U. S. D. C.) 87 Fed. 543, 27 Ins. L. J. 925 (to point that defense of death resulting from "Act of suicide being good at common law. . . . And this rule not having been changed by statute, the demurrer to the petition on this ground is well taken." The statute referred to being Rev. Stat. Mo. 1889, sec. 5855, providing that it shall be no defense that insured committed suicide unless it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the court or jury that insured contemplated suicide at the time he made his application for the policy and that any stipulation in the policy to the contrary is void. See on this point §§ 2642, 2642a herein, quoted from in Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 141, 27 So. 39, 26 Ins. L. J. 881, 884 (a case excepting liability if insured "sane or insane," died by his own hand within two years, and it was held that assured's mental condition at time of killing was entirely immaterial).

On liability under accident policy for death during delirium, see note in 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 543.

mentally capable of controlling his will.[3] If, however, the condition is "self-destruction, sane or insane," assured's mental condition is immaterial upon the question of what constitutes suicide, "there can be no looking into the condition of the mind of the deceased when he committed the fatal act. The case might be different if . . . his death was due to an accidental cause . . . then it would fall within the rule established by a number of cases which hold that accidental or unintentional self-destruction is not within a condition forfeiting the policy for suicide."[4]

§ 2658. Stipulation as to "suicide:" death "by his own hand," and the like.—Provisions that "the policy shall be void in case the insured shall "commit suicide," or "die by his own hand," or "by his own act," or "by his own act or intention," or "take his own life," are by settled authority agreed to have the same meaning, there being no substantial difference between the terms.[5] So under a Kansas decision a condition avoiding a policy of life insurance if the insured shall die "by his own hand" or "by his own act" is equivalent to a proviso against suicide or intentional self-destruction.[6]

The effect of such conditions as these above noted has been much discussed by the courts, and while it is generally agreed that suicide by a sane person avoids the policy, yet beyond that point there has been some difference of opinion, a few courts not adopting the rule declared by the supreme court of the United States, but holding to the English rule. The decisions in and opinions of the several courts are, however, fully considered under the sections next following and while the words "sane or insane" as a part of the proviso, have necessarily avoided successfully raising the question involved in their absence, yet the probability of the point again occurring under policies without these or other like exclusive words justifies the consideration exhaustively of the question and so settling it, at least so far as the weight of authority is concerned.

It may also be stated here that in order to meet the conditions consequent upon the use of clauses of a nature such as we are now

[3] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 474, 475, 37 L. ed. 1148, 14 Sup. Ct. 155, per Gray, J. See § 2659 herein.

[4] Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. 118 Fed. 374, 55 C. C. A. 200, 32 Ins. L. J. 385.

[5] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wiswell, 56 Kan. 765, 35 L.R.A. 258, 44 Pac. 996; Cooper v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 102 Mass. 227, 3 Am. Rep. 451; Adkins v. Columbia Life Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410; Breasted v. Farmers' Life & Trust Co. 4 Hill (N. Y.) 73, s. c. 8 N. Y. (4 Seld.) 299, 59 Am. Dec. 482; Clift v. Schwabe, 3 Man. G. & S. (3 C. B.) 437, 2 Car. & K. 134, 17 L. J. C. P. 2. See "English Rule" hereinafter stated.

[6] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wiswell, 56 Kan. 765, 35 L.R.A. 258, 44 Pac. 996.

considering the words "sane or insane" were inserted with the evident intent to exclude the risk of suicide with the effect noted under preceding sections herein. Other clauses making the policy incontestable after a specified time but voiding the policy if suicide is committed by assured, sane or insane, within that period have also been substituted in some of the policies, and statutes have also been enacted which preclude the defense of suicide unless it be shown that assured contemplated suicide at the time of taking out the policy. These policy and statutory provisions have also been considered under preceding sections herein. In addition, attention is called to a clause hereinafter considered in this connection which relates to the matter of proof being somewhat dependent upon an adjudication of insanity, etc.[7]

§ 2659. "Suicide" and like clauses: rule in United States Supreme Court.[8]—The established rule in the supreme court of the United States is, that if one whose life is insured intentionally kills himself when his reasoning faculties are so far impaired by insanity that he is unable to understand the moral character of his act, even if he understands its physical nature, consequences, and effect, it is not "suicide," or "self-destruction," or "dying by his own hand," within the meaning of those words or words of like character and construction excepting such risks out of the policy, there being no other words expressly extending the exemption to such a case.[9] The condition in this case was: "Suicide.—The self-destruction of the insured in any form, except upon proof that the same is the direct result of disease or of accident occurring without the voluntary act of the insured." The assured died by taking poison. The court, per Gray, also said: "The clause contains no such significant and decisive words as 'die by suicide, sane or insane,' as in Bigelow v. Berkshire Insurance Company,[10] or 'by [7] See Illinois and Kentucky cases under subdivs. (e) and (h) herein.

[8] See § 2658 herein.

On conflict of laws as to suicide, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 867; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 981; and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 284.

[9] Connecticut Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 473, 37 L. ed. 1148, 14 Sup. Ct. 155, per Gray, J., cited in Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 118 Fed. 374, 377, 55 C. C. A. 200, 203 (clause here was: "self destruction sane or insane"); McGlother v. Provident Mutual Accident Co. 89 Fed. 685, 691, 32 C. C. A. 318, 324, 60 U. S. App. 705; Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 42 L.R.A. 583, 70 Fed. 954, 959, 17 C. C. A. 537, 542, 28 U. S. App. 612, case aff'd 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300; Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 204 Ill. 58, 63, 68 N. E. 478; Grand Lodge Independent Order Mutual Aid v. Wieting, 68 Ill. App. 125, 127; Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 140, 146, 27 S. E. 39, 26 Ins. L. J. 881.

[10] 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918.

suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane,' as in" Travelers' Insurance Company v. McConkey.[11]

§ 2660. Same subject: English rule.[12]—Under the English rule the responsibility of assured as a moral agent, and his inability to judge between the right and wrong of moral character and consequences of his act, is an immaterial factor, and if the insured knew at the time of committing the act of self-destruction or suicide that his life would be destroyed, and so intended, the policy is avoided thereby.[13]

§ 2661. Same subject: rule in this country.[14]—It is conclusively evident from the decisions and opinions considered under the following sections that the rule declared in the United States supreme court is that sustained by the almost overwhelming weight of authority in this country, and is the true rule. It further accords with the rules of construction in insurance law, and with that reason and justice which should ever prevail.[15]

(a) Same subject: rule and cases in United States courts.[16]—The case of Connecticut Life Insurance Company v. Akens,[17] establishing the rule above given as that of the United States courts, was decided in 1893, but the court cites and follows several other decisions. Thus in one case decided in 1887,[18] the policy was against "bodily injuries effected through external accidental means," with an exception of liability in case of death or disability "caused wholly or in part by bodily infirmities or disease . . . or by suicide . . . or self-inflicted injuries." The insured died by hanging himself while insane, and this was held not within the exception, but that the death was covered by the policy, Gray, J., saying: "The decisions upon the effect of a policy of life insurance which provides that it shall be void if the assured "shall die by suicide" or "shall die by his own hand" go far toward determining this question. This court, on full consideration of the conflicting authorities upon that subject, has repeatedly and uniformly held that such a provision, not containing the words "sane or insane," does not include a self-killing by an insane person, whether his unsoundness of mind is such as to prevent him from understanding the physical nature and consequences of his act or only such as to prevent him, while foreseeing and premeditating its [11] 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360.

[12] See § 2658 herein.

[13] See subd. (b) below.

[14] See § 2658 herein.

[15] As to presumptions and burden of proof, see §§ 2865, 3773–3775 herein.

[16] See § 2658 herein.

[17] 150 U. S. 468, 37 L. ed. 1148, 14 Sup. Ct. 155.

[18] Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandall, 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. 685, aff'd 27 Fed. 40.

physical consequences, from understanding its moral nature and aspect:"[19] In another case cited in the decision first noted in this section, decided in 1884,[20] the condition was, "die by his own hand." It was claimed that assured died by his own hand because, with premeditation and deliberation, he shot himself through the head and died in consequence. The points in this case were as to the right of the court to withdraw the case from the jury and the admissibility of certain evidence as to insanity or the admissibility of the opinion of a nonprofessional witness as to sanity or insanity. The opinion is by Harlan, J. The court in the 1893 decision also cites the noted case of Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Terry,[1] decided in 1872. The contract here was between Mrs. Terry and the insurer, the insured, Mr. Terry, not being a party to the contract, but the court said this "made no difference." The condition was: "If the said person whose life is hereby insured . . . shall die by his own hand . . . this policy shall be null and void." The court, Hunt, J., also declares that "the question of sanity has usually been presented upon the validity of an agreement, the capacity to make a will, or upon responsibility for crime. If Terry had made an agreement under the circumstances stated in the charge, a jury or a court would have been justified in pronouncing it invalid. A will, then, made by him would have been rejected by the surrogate if offered for probate. If upon trial for a criminal offense, upon all the authorities he would have been entitled to a charge that upon proof of the facts assumed the jury must acquit him. We think a similar principle must control the present case, although the standard may be different:"[2] Continuing the court also says: "We hold the rule on the question before us to be this: If the assured, being in possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties, from anger, pride, jealousy, or a desire to escape the ills of life, intentionally takes his own life, the proviso attaches and there can be no recovery. If the death is caused by the voluntary act of the assured, he knowing and intending that his death shall be the result of his act, but when his reasoning faculties are so far impaired that he is not able to understand the moral character, the general nature, consequence, and [19] Id. 531. Both of these cases are discussed in Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. 118 Fed. 374, 55 C. C. A. 200, 32 Ins. L. J. 385, 390 (but the condition here was: "self destruction, sane or insane").

[20] Connecticut Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 28 L. ed. 536, 4 Sup. Ct. 533.

[1] 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580.

[2] Id. 590, citing upon this point Freeman v. People, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 9; Willis v. People, 32 N. Y. 715, 719; Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 619; The Marquis of Winchester's Case, 6 Reports, 23; Combe's Case, Moore, 759.

effect of the act he is about to commit, or when he is impelled thereto by an insane impulse which he has not the power to resist, such death is not within the contemplation of the parties to the contract and the insurer is liable." [3] In Charter Oak Life Insurance Company v. Rodel,[4] decided in 1877 and cited in the case first above noted under this section, the condition was "die by his own hand" the charge of the court was in the very words sanctioned and approved in the Terry case,[5] and the instruction was held not erroneous, the court, per Bradley, J., saying: "We see no reason to modify the views expressed by us on that occasion."[6] Another case

[3] Id. 590, 591.

[4] 95 U. S. 232, 24 L. ed. 433.

[5] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236.

[6] Cited in Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 200, 47 L. ed. 139, 143, 23 Sup. Ct. 108; Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 149, 42 L. ed. 696, 18 Sup. Ct. 300; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 473, 37 L. ed. 1148, 1149; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 531, 30 L. ed. 740, 742, 7 Sup. Ct. 685; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 127, 27 L. ed. 878, 880, 3 Sup. Ct. 99; Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 232, 241, 24 L. ed. 433, 435; Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 286, 23 L. ed. 918, 919; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 114 Fed. 268, 280, 52 C. C. A. 154, 166; Kelley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 109 Fed. 61; Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Jorman, 104 Fed. 638, 646, 44 C. C. A. 93, 101; McGlother v. Provident Mutual Accident Co. 89 Fed. 685, 691, 32 C. C. A. 318, 324, 60 U. S. App. 705; Berger v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 88 Fed. 241, 242; Kelley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 75 Fed. 637, 642; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Lubrie, 71 Fed. 843, 844, 18 C. C. A. 332, 333, 38 U. S. App. 37; Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 70 Fed. 954, 959, 17 C. C. A. 537, 542, 28 U. S. App. 612, 42 L.R.A. 587; Riley v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 25 Fed. 316; Water v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 892, 894; Wolf v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 17,925a; More v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 Flipp. 363, 364, Fed. Cas. No. 9,755; Chapman v. Republic Life Ins. Co. 6 Biss. 238, 240, Fed. Cas. No. 2,606.

Alabama.—Supreme Commandery Knights of Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 446, 46 Am. Rep. 332.

Georgia. — Life Association of America v. Waller, 57 Ga. 535, 537.

Illinois. — Seitzenger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 204 Ill. 58, 61, 68 N. E. 478; Dickerson v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 200 Ill. 270, 274, 65 N. E. 694; Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Gelvke, 198 Ill. 365, 368, 64 N. E. 1058; Grand Lodge Independent Order of Mutual Aid v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 419, 61 Am. St. Rep. 123, 48 N. E. 59; Seitzenger v. Modern Woodmen of America, 106 Ill. App. 449, 453; Northwestern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Churchill, 105 Ill. App. 159, 162; Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Clarke, 88 Ill. App. 605; Nelson v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 73 Ill. 133, 144; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 39 Ill. App. 569, 573; Suppiger v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 20 Ill. App. 595, 601; Lawrence v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 5 Ill. App. 280, 287.

Indiana. — Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Naugle, 130 Ind. 79, 85, 29 Me. 393.

Iowa.—Searth v. Security Mutual cited and relied on as establishing the rule was decided in 1883.[7] The stipulation therein was in case assured "shall die by suicide, or by the hands of justice or in consequence of a duel or of a violation of a law of these states or of the United States" or of any other country which he might under the policy be permitted to visit or reside in, then the policy should be void. The experts for plaintiff testified that assured was suffering from that kind of unsoundness of mind called melancholia, and there was clearly some evidence of insanity for the jury. The instructions were in exact accordance with the rule in the Terry case, and the court, per Gray, J., said: "Upon consideration, we are unanimously of opinion that the rule so established is sounder in principle, as well as simpler in application, than that which makes the effect of the act of self-destruction upon the interest of those for whose benefit the policy was made to depend upon the very subtle and difficult question how far any exercise of will can be attributed to a man

Life Society, 75 Iowa, 346, 347, 39 N. W. 658.

Kansas.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wiswell, 56 Kan. 765, 768, 35 L.R.A. 258, 266, 44 Pac. 996.

Kentucky. — Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 112 Ky. 455, 460, 66 S. W. 35; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541, 550, 9 S. W. 812.

Massachusetts. — Daniels v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Co. 183 Mass. 393, 398, 62 L.R.A. 753, 67 N. E. 424.

Michigan. — Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 609, 3 L.R.A. 486, 493, 42 N. W. 156.

Minnesota. — Scheffer v. National Life Ins. Co. 25 Minn. 534, 537.

Missouri. — Brower v. Supreme Lodge National Reserve Assoc. 74 Mo. App. 490, 495; Adkins v. Columbia Life Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 29, 35 Am. Rep. 410; Sparks v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 61 Mo. App. 109, 113.

Nebraska. — Scherar v. Credential Ins. Co. 63 Neb. 530, 534, 56 L.R.A. 611, 613, 88 N. W. 687.

New York.—Gogorza v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co.. 65 N. Y. 232, 235.

North Carolina.—Spruill v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 141, 143, 27 S. E. 39.

Ohio.—Schultz v. Insurance Co. 40 Ohio St. 217, 233, 48 Am. Rep. 276.

Pennsylvania.—Tritschler v. Keystone Mutual Benefit Assoc. 180 Pa. 205, 207, 36 Atl. 734; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Groon, 86 Pa. 92, 96, 27 Am. Rep. 689; Hall v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 33; Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 5 Pa. Dist. R. 29.

South Carolina.—Latimer v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 62 So. Car. 145, 160, 40 S. E. 155.

Texas.—Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 309, 58 Am. Rep. 638, 3 S. W. 539.

Vermont. — Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 335, 354.

Wisconsin. — Patterson v. Natural Premium Mutual Life Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 123, 42 L.R.A. 253, 258, 69 Am. St. Rep. 899, 75 N. W. 980; Pierce v. Travelers' Life Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 389, 395, distinguished in Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 118 Fed. 374, 55 C. C. A. 200, 32 Ins. L. J. 385, 388, 389; Van Zandt v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 169, 178, 14 Am. Rep. 215.

[7] Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 878, 3 Sup. Ct. 99.

who is so unsound of mind, that while he foresees the physical consequences which will directly result from his act, he cannot understand its moral nature and character, or in any just sense be said to know what he is doing." And it was held accordingly that where the reasoning faculties of the assured are so far impaired that he cannot fairly estimate the moral consequences "the moral complexion" of his act, even though he can reason sufficiently well to prepare with great deliberation and execute his design with success, he is, nevertheless, so far insane that his death thus caused is not "suicide," such as will avoid his policy of life insurance under a condition exempting from liability for death from suicide.[8]

The rule declared by the supreme court differs, however, from that stated in certain decisions in the circuit courts. In Gay v. Union Mutual Life Insurance Company,[9] decided in 1871, the provision was "die by suicide." The insured killed himself by firing a pistol at his head, and the point whether he was capable of understanding the moral aspects of the act or of distinguishing between right and wrong was held immaterial if insured was conscious of the act he was committing and intended to take his own life, but that if he was not thus conscious, but was impelled by insane delusion overpowering his understanding and will, or was

[8] Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 878, 3 Sup. Ct. 99. Cited in:

United States.—Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 149, 42 L. ed. 693, 696, 18 Sup. Ct. 300; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 473, 37 L. ed. 1148, 1149, 14 Sup. Ct. 155; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandall, 120 U. S. 527, 531, 30 L. ed. 740, 742, 7 Sup. Ct. 685; Berger v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 88 Fed. 241, 242; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Lebrie, 71 Fed. 843, 844, 18 C. C. A. 333, 38 U. S. App. 37; Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 42 L.R.A. 583, 70 Fed. 954, 959, 17 C. C. A. 537, 542, 28 U. S. App. 612; Riley v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 25 Fed. 316.

Illinois. — Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen, 204 Ill. 58, 61, 68 N. E. 478; Grand Lodge Independent Order Mutual Order v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 420, 61 Am. St. Rep. 123, 48 N. E. 59; Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen of the World, 106 Ill. App. 449, 453; Nelson v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 73 Ill. App. 133, 144; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 30 Ill. App. 569, 573; New Home Life Assoc. v. Hagler, 29 Ill. App. 437, 440; Suppiger v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 20 Ill. App. 595, 601.

Indiana. — Michigan Mutual Life Ins Co. v. Naugle, 130 Ind. 79, 85, 29 N. E. 393.

Kentucky. — Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 112 Ky. 455, 461, 66 S. W. 35; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541, 551, 9 S. W. 812.

Massachusetts. — Daniels v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Ry. Co. 183 Mass. 393, 398, 62 L.R.A. 753, 67 N. E. 424.

Michigan.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Co. 74 Mich. 592, 609, 3 L.R.A. 486, 493, 42 N. W. 156.

Pennsylvania. — Tritchler v. Keystone Mutual Benefit Assoc. 180 Pa. 205, 207, 36 Atl. 734.

[9] 9 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 142, Fed. Cas. No. 5,282.

impelled by an uncontrollable impulse, which neither his understanding or will could resist, the insurers were liable. In Nimick v. Mutual Life Insurance Company,[10] decided 1871, the condition was "die by his own hand." It was held that the moral responsibility does not affect the nature of the hazard, and that the causa causans affecting assured's will in committing suicide was immaterial. The court adopts the language of Erskine, J., in Borradaile v. Hunter,[11] to the effect that the moral nature and quality of the act is not relevant, and also the words of Bigelow, C. J., in Dean v. American Mutual Life Insurance Company.[12] And necessarily these circuit court decisions must be deemed overruled. Again upon this point of what constitutes that degree of mental unsoundness which will relieve against what otherwise would be the consequence of self-destruction, the court in a case in the United States circuit court of appeals approved the following charge to the jury: "If one whose life is insured, intentionally kills himself when his reasoning faculties are so far impaired by insanity that he is unable to understand the moral character of his act, even if he does understand its physical nature, consequence, and effect, such self-destruction will not of itself prevent recovery upon the policies. This is affirmed. I will say, however, that we must understand what is meant and intended by the term 'moral character of his act.' It is a term which has been used by the courts, and is correctly inserted in the point; but it is a term which might be misunderstood We are not to enter into the domain of metaphysics in determining what constitutes insanity. . . . If Mr. Runk understood what he was doing and the consequences of his act or acts to himself as well as to others—in other words, if he understood as a man of sound mind would the consequences to follow from his contemplated suicide to himself, his character, his family, and others, and was able to comprehend the wrongfulness of what he was about to do as a sane man would—then he is to be regarded by you as sane; otherwise he is not." And Acheson, circuit judge, says: "Upon the question of insanity, the jury was plainly informed that to prevent a recovery it was not enough that Mr. Runk understood the physical nature, consequence, and effect of his act of self-destruction, but that he must also have understood the moral character and consequence of the act, and that if he did not comprehend its wrongfulness he was to be regarded by the jury as insane. . . . We do not perceive that in the instructions com-

[10] 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 502, 10 Am. L. 418, 12 L. J. C. App. 225, 7 Jur. Reg. (N. S.) 101, 18 Fed. Cas. 247, 443.
Fed. Cas. No. 10,266.

[11] 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N. R.)

[12] 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 98.

plained of there was any departure from the principles approved by the supreme court:"[13]

(b) Same subject: English rule and cases.[14]—In Clift v. Schwabe,[15] it was stipulated that "every policy effected by a person on his or her own life should be void if such person should commit suicide or die by duelling or the hands of justice." The insured, who had effected a policy on his own life, died from voluntarily taking poison, for the purpose of killing himself, but the circumstances showed that at the time he was of unsound mind. The defense of suicide was relied on, and the trial judge directed the jury, "that in order to find the issue for the defendants, it was necessary that they, the jury, should be satisfied that A died by his own voluntary act, being then able to distinguish between right and wrong and to appreciate the nature and quality of the act that he was doing so as to be a responsible moral agent; that the burden of proof as to his dying by his own voluntary act was on the defendants; but that being established, the jury must assume that he was of sane mind and a responsible moral agent, unless the contrary should appear in evidence." And it was held, two judges dissenting, that the instruction was erroneous, since all acts of voluntary self-destruction were included under the stipulation, and that the insured having voluntarily committed suicide, the fact whether he was or not at the time a responsible moral agent was immaterial. In Borradaile v. Hunter[16] the stipulation was, that if "the assured should die by his own hands or by the hands of justice or in consequence of a duel" the policy should be void. The assured threw himself into the Thames from Vauxhall bridge and was drowned. The issue was raised whether the assured died by his own hands, and the jury found that he "voluntarily threw himself into the water, knowing at the time that he should thereby destroy his own life and intending thereby so to do; but that at the time of committing the act he was not capable of judging be-

[13] Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 42 L.R.A. 583, 70 Fed. 954, 17 C. C. A. 537, aff'g 69 Fed. 505, aff'd 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300, citing Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 37 L. ed. 1148, 14 Sup. Ct. 155; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 878, 3 Sup. Ct. 99; Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 232, 24 L. ed. 433; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236. For other Federal cases see Waters v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 892, 9 Ins. L. J. 837; Moore v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 3 Fed. 144, 4 Big. L. & Acc. Ins. Co. 138; Hiatt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 2 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 572, Fed. Cas. No. 6,449a.

[14] See § 2658 herein.

[15] (1846) 3 Com. B. 436–8, 2 Car. & K. 134, 17 L. J. C. P. 2.

[16] (Decided 1843) 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443.

tween right and wrong." It was decided that the stipulation or proviso was not limited by the accompanying provisos to acts of felonious suicide, but included all acts of voluntary self-destruction, and the policy was avoided. Tindal, C. J., dissented, however.[17] In Stormont v. Waterloo Life & Casualty Assurance Company,[18] Channell, B., concluded a charge to the jury as follows: "The defendants plead that it was a voluntary act" (the assured having been found falling out of a window). "Did he know that he was throwing himself out?"

(c) Same subject: rule in Alabama.[19]—"There is a contrariety of decision as to the effect of the exception, 'against suicide or self-destruction,' whether it embraces any and every act of intentional self-destruction or only suicide, criminal self-destruction. The preponderance of authority points to the conclusion that it refers solely to suicide."[20] The condition in the principal case was for forfeiture if the member should take his own life, whether sane or insane.

(d) Same subject: rule in Georgia.[1]—In this state the policy is void if insured dies by his own hand, except where it is clearly shown that at the time the act was done the mental condition of assured was such as to render him incapable of distinguishing right from wrong to such an extent as to render him legally and morally responsible for his acts and conduct, but the fact that [17] See also Dufaur v. Professional Life Ins. Co. (1858) 25 Beav. 559, 27 L. J. Ch. 817, cited in Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300, 27 Ins. L. J. 804, 816, 817 (warranty was that assured would not die by his own act whether sane or insane for the period of two years. See on this point, §§ 2644–2644b herein), cited and quoted from with approval in Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 134 Wis. 322, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 260, 113 N. W. 967, 37 Ins. L. J. 162, 169 (but clause was: "suicide sane or insane not included"), cited in Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. 118 Fed. 374, 55 C. C. A. 200, 32 Ins. L. J. 385, 388 (but condition here was "Self-destruction, sane or insane"), distinguished in Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83, case modifies 73 N. Y. Supp. 594, 66 App. Div. 448, 32 Ins. L. J. 705, 711 (there was no exception of liability in case of suicide in original certificate, but subsequent amendment to by-laws excepted suicide, sane or insane, and policy was held void as distinguished from like circumstances in case of straight life policy. See on point of right to amend, §§ 377 et seq., 2647 herein).

[18] 1 Fost. & F. 22, 23.

[19] See § 2658 herein.

[20] Supreme Commandery Knights of Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 435, 449, 46 Am. Rep. 332, per Brickell, C. J., citing Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236; De Gogorza v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 232; Phadenhauer v. Germania Life Ins. Co. 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 567, 19 Am. Rep. 623; Bliss on Life Ins. secs. 225–38.

[1] See § 2658 herein.

insured committed suicide is not of itself evidence of insanity.[2] The condition was, "die by his own hand." The above rule is that stated by Warner, C. J. In a case decided in 1876, in the state of Georgia,[3] the condition was, "shall die by suicide" the court, per Bleekley, J., defines suicide as "something more than self-sought and self-inflicted death. It is a species of crime or wickedness—something wrong; a kind of self-murder. . . . In suicide there must be a moral element, and the presence of that depends upon whether the man is so far rational as to be able to discern the difference between right and wrong. If, from disease or misfortune, he is so utterly irrational as to be equally innocent with or without attempting the forbidden violence, he is not a moral agent, and his act is that of a mere animal which has lost the instinct of self-preservation. . . . We are aware that there is a strong current of modern decision, both English and American, against applying any moral test whatever to cases of alleged suicide in the law of life insurance, but we believe that the true doctrine was announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Terry." [4] It is also held, in that state, under the code provision that death by suicide releases insurer from the obligation of his contract, that suicide is intentional self-destruction by one who is sane, and also that if insane or accidental it is not legally suicide.[5]

(e) Same subject: rule in Illinois.[6]—In a case in the Illinois appellate court decided in 1888,[7] the condition was, "shall die by reason of any act of self-destruction whatever"—the court adopted the ruling in Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Terry,[8] in the United States Supreme Court, and held that an intent to commit suicide and knowledge that the act would so result is not sufficient, where the insured is impelled by an irresistable impulse or is unable to understand the moral nature of the act.[9] In Suppinger v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Association,[10] the condition was, "die by reason of any act of self-destruction, whether at the

[2] Merritt v. Cotton States Life Ins. Co. 55 Ga. 103.

[3] Life Assoc. of America v. Waller, 57 Ga. 533.

[4] 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236.

[5] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Durden, 9 Ga. App. 797, 72 S. E. 295, Civ. Code, 1910, sec. 2500.

[6] See § 2658 herein.

[7] New Home Life Ins. Co. v. Hagler, 29 Ill. App. 437.

[8] 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236.

[9] Approved in Grand Lodge Independent Order of Mutual Aid, 68 Ill. App. 125, cited in Travelers Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 59 Ill. App. 517. See also Hammers v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees of the World, 78 Ill. App. 162, 164, s. c. 81 Ill. App. 560, 565.

[10] 20 Bradw. (Ill.) 595.

time of committing the same he be sane or insane, whether felonious or otherwise," and the court, per Wilkin, P. J., says: "The irreconcilable conflict of authorities is on the question as to whether the unconsciousness must extend to the moral right or wrong of the act, thus bringing the subject within the legal definition of suicide or whether any voluntary self-killing is sufficient to discharge the insurer. The Supreme Court of the United States is committed to the former doctrine and holds that there must be an act of criminal self-destruction.[11] The courts of last resort in many of the states adopt the same rule, while in others and in England it is held that a voluntary self-destruction is within the terms of the condition, although at the time of the act there was not sufficient mental understanding to appreciate its moral turpitude.[12] The decision, however, turned upon the degree of insanity and insane irresistable impulse. In Northwestern Benefit Mutual Aid Association v. Bloom,[13] the condition was, "If death shall result from suicide . . . this agreement shall be null and void." The decision was, that the allegations, "did then and there immorally, wrongfully, and wickedly," and did "wrongfully, wickedly, and fraudulently, and of his own volition commit suicide," amounted substantially to an allegation that insured committed suicide when sane and in his right mind, and was such a violation of the contract as to avoid it. In still another case in that state decided in 1897, the application for the certificate stipulated that: "Should I commit suicide, then and in that case only the amount paid by me into the mutual aid fund on my certificate shall be paid to the beneficiaries" and it was held that the words "commit suicide" were synonymous with other phrases such as "die by his own hand," "take his own life," "die by his own act," etc., and were employed to convey the idea of voluntary, intentional self-destruction, and the rule was adopted that in order to relieve insurer from liability under the above provisions there must have been sufficient mental understanding to realize the moral turpitude of the act of self-destruction, and, therefore, as the evidence in said case tended to show that the moral perceptions of assured were overpowered by his insanity, the court had no further jurisdiction over the matter, and the court said: "It is believed there is a substantial concurrence of judicial decision in America on the proposition that if, at the time of the suicidal act, the assured was so affected with insanity as to be unconscious of the act or of the physical effect thereof, or was driven to its commission by an insane impulse which he had not the power to resist, the act of self-destruction is regarded as though it were the result of accident or some irresistible, external force, and the proviso of a policy framed as the one at bar, or where other phrases denoting self-destruction are used will not attach, but the insurer will be held liable."[14] This 1897 decision is approved in a case decided in that state in 1904, where the stipulation was: "no benefit shall be paid upon the death of a member who shall commit suicide within five years from and including the date of his initiation . . . unless the person or persons claiming under such certificate or membership shall establish and prove affirmatively that prior to suicide the member shall have been judicially declared insane, or was under treatment for insanity at the time the act was committed, or was then in the delirium of some other illness." It was also determined that the construction by the trial court of the word "suicide" as meaning "voluntary, intentional self-destruction" was not error and therefore said by-law did not exonerate insurer from liability if the assured member's death was occasioned by his own act at a time when such assured was incapable by reason of unsoundness of mind, to resist an insane impulse to take his own life, and to understand the moral character, general nature, consequences and effect of the fatal act. But, owing to the wording of this condition in this case proof that assured had been judicially declared insane, or was under treatment for insanity, or was in a delirium resulting from some other illness at the time he took his life would effectually determine and fix assurer's liability and, therefore, under the qualifying provision the beneficiaries were relieved from the duty of establishing the degree of insanity with which assured was affected in all cases where assured had been judicially declared to be insane, etc., as provided in said stipulation, but said beneficiaries were not by said by-law precluded from availing themselves of the privilege of assuming the greater burden of showing the degree of insanity of assured.[15]

[11] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 878, 3 Sup. Ct. 99; Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918.

[12] Borradaile v. Hunter, 5 Man. & G. 693, 5 Scott (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443; Clift v. Schwabe, 3 Com. B. 3 Man. G. & S. 437, 2 Car. & K. 134, 17 L. J. C. P. 2.

[13] 21 Ill. App. 159.

(f) Same subject: rule in Indiana.[16]—In Indiana a condition avoiding the policy if assured shall die by his own hand does not

[14] Grand Lodge Independent Order of Mutual Aid v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 48 N. E. 59, aff'g 68 Ill. App. 125. As to like condition in Kentucky case, see subdiv. (h) post, herein.

[15] Supreme Council Royal Arcanum v. Pels, 209 Ill. 33, 70 N. E. 697.

[16] See § 2658 herein.

apply where assured kills himself while of unsound mind, where disease has so impaired his mind, that although he may have sufficient mental capacity to know the physical consequences of his act, yet he is unable to comprehend its moral character.[17]

(g) Same subject: rule in Iowa.[18]—In Iowa, in a case decided in 1888, the court, per Rothrock, J., declares that: "It has been held quite generally by the courts of this country that this general condition (suicide or die by his own hand without more) referred to an act of criminal self-destruction, and did not apply to an insane person who took his own life."[19] The condition in this case, however, was "suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane."

(h) Same subject: rule in Kentucky.[20]—A case arose in this state in 1869,[1] wherein the condition was, if assured "shall die by his own hands, by delirium tremens, or the use of opium, or in consequence of a duel or the laws of any nation, state, or province," the policy shall be void. The assured shot himself, causing his death. The court, per Robinson, J., said: "All these terms alike, being ejusdem generis, imply a death as a natural consequence of some voluntary act of the assured which he had the moral power to avoid;" that is, that death by any of the enumerated means had reference alone to a voluntary act of assured which he had the moral power to avoid. That the inevitable act of an insane man who is in that respect morally dead is not within the proviso his voluntary act. Mental insanity is a disease, and the policy insures death by disease of any sort which ordinary prudence could not avoid. Death by insanity is death by disease and is so considered in medical jurisprudence. . . . Death 'by his own hand' means suicide, not accidental or coerced, but premeditated by a sound mind and perpetrated by a free will, and a voluntary act of the will necessarily implies liberty and self-control, and consequently the act of an insane mind or subjugated will is not voluntary. . . . The conditions as to death 'by his own hand' reasonably imports, therefore, that if the insured should commit suicide voluntarily, when he had the moral power to forbear, just as he might commit it by the habitual use of opium or intoxicating liquor, should be thereby avoided. The death in each case alike must be the voluntary act of a sane mind and a responsible will. . . . There is some apparent conflict . . . on the construction of [17] Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Nangle, 130 Ind. 79, 29 N. E. 393, 45 Alb. L. J. 175, per McBride, J.

[18] See § 2658 herein.

[19] Searth v. Security Mutual Life Soc. 75 Iowa, 346, 347, 39 N. W. 658.

[20] See § 2658 herein.

[1] St. Louis Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Graves, 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 268.

just such a condition of avoidance in a life policy as that which we are considering; but there is no very essential diversity in principle; all that is judicial, with perhaps one exception, concurring in the principle that to avoid the policy the death must be 'voluntary' and no mind itself rational can contemplate any act as voluntary unless it be the offspring of a free volition unconstrained by inevitable duress, physical or moral." The opinion in Dean v. American Insurance Company,[2] is criticised as "elaborate, self-contradictory, and inconclusive." The above Kentucky case is followed in a decision rendered in that state in 1904, where it is declared that: "However the courts may differ as to the correct construction of such clauses" as "suicide" or "self-destruction," "in this state we are committed to what appears to be the most universal rule, and the one applied by the United States Supreme Court, which is that self-destruction in such provisions means such destruction by a sane person." The condition here was, however, that if insured "die by his own act, sane or insane" within two years the policy should be void.[3] This last decision was cited in 1905 in a case which held that if an insured person intentionally takes his own life at a time when his mind is so far gone that he is unconscious that he is taking his life, the act is not deemed his but in law is regarded as an accidental killing; conversely, although his mind may be deranged, still if he has mind enough to know the act will probably result in death, and if he inflicts it with that intention, it is his act and absolves the insurance company from liability. The condition in this case, however, was: "The order will not pay the benefits of those members who commit suicide, whether sane or insane, except it be committed in a delirium resulting from illness, or while the member is under treatment for insanity, or after the member has been judicially declared to be insane." [4] Both of the above cases of 1869 and 1904 are approved in another case decided in 1904 upon the point that there can be no recovery in case of suicide, unless the mind of assured was sufficiently gone when he took his life as to render him unconscious that he was taking his life at the time he committed the act.[5]

[2] 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 96.

[3] Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 112 Ky. 455, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1747, 66 S. W. 35.

[4] Masonic Life Assoc. of Western N. Y. v. Pollard, 121 Ky. 349, 123 Am. St. Rep. 198, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 301, 303, 89 S. W. 219. See like conditions under Illinois decision, noted under subdiv. (e) ante herein.

[5] Supreme Council Knights of Equity of the World v. Heineman, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1604, 78 S. W. 406 (condition here was "die by his own act, sane or insane").

(i) Same subject: rule in Louisiana.[6]—In Louisiana[7] it is held that the words "die by his own hands" should not be literally interpreted, but that the intention of the contracting parties should be looked to to explain the latent ambiguity, and the common intent would apply only to the voluntary self-destruction, by whatever means accomplished; that self-destruction when insane is not within the exception, and the test of responsibility in civil, as well as in criminal cases is in the state of the actor's reason or mental faculties.

(j) Same subject: rule in Maine.[8]—The rule established in Maine in 1866, as declared by Appleton, C. J., is that the condition, "die by his own hand or in consequence of a duel or the violation of any state, national, or provincial law or by the hands of justice," does not cover the act of suicide while insane, but the clauses should all be construed together, and referred to a "felonious death, to the case of felo de se, not to the case of death without legal or moral blame—the result of accidental mistake or disease."[9]

(k) Same subject: rule in Maryland.[10]—In Maryland,[11] the proviso "die by his own hand or act," does not include within its meaning a self-killing in a fit of insanity which overpowered assured's consciousness, reason, and will, so that he is impelled by an insane impulse which he cannot resist. The court in this case, however, refused to express an opinion upon the points of the moral character of the act or the inability to distinguish between right and wrong as a point not involved in the case before it.[12]

(l) Same subject: rule in Massachusetts.[13]—In a case decided in this state in 1862, under the proviso "die by his own hand," it is held that suicide, even though committed while insane, avoids the policy where the act is understood and assured intended to take his own life.[14] In a case decided in 1869,[15] under the proviso, "die by suicide," it is held that there could be no recovery, although the act of self-destruction was committed under the influence of insanity, in the absence of evidence proving delirium or madness, or that the act was involuntary. Both the above cases are cited and the distinction noticed between them and those where the con-

[6] See § 2658 herein.

[7] Phillips v. Louisiana Equitable Life Ins. Co. 26 La. Ann. 401, 21 Am. Rep. 549.

[8] See § 2658 herein.

[9] Eastabrook v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 54 Me. 224.

[10] See § 2658 herein.

[11] Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Peters, 42 Md. 414.

[12] See Supreme Conclave Improved Order Heptasophs of Balt. v. Miles, 92 Md. 613, 84 Am. St. Rep. 528, 48 Atl. 845.

[13] See § 2658 herein.

[14] Dean v. American Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 96.

[15] Cooper v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 102 Mass. 227, 3 Am. Rep. 451n, 454.

dition includes the additional words "sane or insane" and they are considered in a case decided in said state in 1906, and it is there declared that: "On reason and on the authorities we can have no doubt that the old rule is done away with, and that the words 'sane or insane,' cover every case of suicide. . . . The evidence clearly shows a case of suicide, and it makes no difference what the state of mind of the person committing suicide was."[16] Both the first above mentioned decisions are followed upon this point on a case decided in 1903, where the question of suicide is fully discussed and the court per Knowleton, J., said: "We are of opinion that the liability of a defendant for a death by suicide exists only when the death is the result of an uncontrollable impulse or is accomplished in delirium or frenzy . . . and without conscious volition to produce death, having knowledge of the physical nature and consequence of the act. An act of suicide resulting from a moderately intelligent power of choice, even though the choice is determined by a disordered mind, should be deemed a new and independent efficient cause of the death that immediately ensues." In this 1903 case, however, the facts differed in that the action was brought against a railroad company to recover for injuries and also for death consequent thereon, it appearing that deceased sustained an accident from collision at a railroad crossing which resulted in insanity, and about two months thereafter he died by his own hand.[17] This last case is important in that it appears therefrom that the meaning of suicide as determined in 1862, and 1869 cases, is still adhered to except in so far as the words "sane" or "insane" are used in the contract of excepted liability.

(m) Same subject: rule in Michigan.[18]—In a Michigan case decided in 1889,[19] the condition was "suicide . . . or intentional injuries inflicted by or through the connivance of insured" the court per Long, J., approves as reasonable the rule declared by Hunt, J., in Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Terry,[20] and says:

[16] Moore v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 192 Mass. 468, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 656, 78 N. E. 488, 35 Ins. L. J. 769.

[17] Daniels v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Rd. Co. 183 Mass. 393, 67 N. E. 424, followed in Sponatski's Case, 220 Mass. 526, L.R.A. 1916A, 333, where an employee was injured and said injury caused insanity and consequent death by suicide, and it was held that the rule in the Daniels case, ante, was to be followed under the workmen's compensation act, not so much, however, upon the question of degree in cases of suicide, as upon the point of claim of causation between the injury and death.

[18] See § 2658 herein.

[19] Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 605, 3 L.R.A. 486, 42 N. W. 156 et seq.

[20] 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236.

"The effect of this doctrine is, that in order to work a forfeiture under such a policy on the ground of self-destruction the insured must have had sufficient mental capacity, not only to understand that the act will destroy his life, but also to distinguish its moral quality and consequences—the right and wrong of it—and must perform the act, not under any uncontrolled impulse resulting from insanity, but voluntarily with the intent to end his life; in other words, that it must be an act done with an evil motive. We think that this doctrine is supported by the great preponderance of authority in this country, and must be conceded to be the prevailing American doctrine, and it seems to us to be the safer and more reasonable and consistent doctrine. It agrees with the general rule as to the excusatory feature of insanity in civil as well as in criminal cases. It also operates to prevent forfeiture which is a favorite principle of an enlightened jurisprudence." In another case in this state, decided in 1887,[1] it is declared by Champlin, J., that "if a person does an act in a state of unconsciousness, whether he be sane or insane, such act is nothing more or less than accidental, and would not operate to forfeit the policy." Again, under another decision, given in 1876,[2] the condition was, "shall die by his own hand," and it was declared by the court, per Campbell, J., that the term "suicide" has no such restricted meaning as a wrongful act of self-murder. "It means self-killing just as 'homicide' means killing anyone else. . . . Suicide was only cognizable at law when the person was felo de se or guilty of a felonious act. If non compos mentis, the actor in homicide or suicide commits no crime. In one sense, a man dies by his own hands who kills himself, whether sound or frenzied. But the condition in this policy cannot be construed to cause a forfeiture for acts involving no evil will." The court also held that the clause, being with others which involved voluntary wrongdoing, such as death by dueling, or by the hands of justice, etc., it was "fairly to be inferred that it is regarded as ejusdem generis and depending on the same reasons;" that "death by his own hands in the case of one non compos mentis is as much the result of disease as death by fever or consumption. The act of an insane man is morally no more his act than if it were mechanical."

(n) Same subject: rule in Minnesota.[3]—In Minnesota[4] the proviso was, "dying by his own hand," and a charge was upheld that

[1] Streeter v. Western Union Mutual Life & Accident Soc. 65 Mich. 199, 202, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882, 31 N. W. 779.

[2] John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 912.

[3] See § 2658 herein.

[4] Scheffer v. National Life Ins. Co. 25 Minn. 534.

"if his (Scheffer's) reason was so far overthrown that he had not the power or capacity to exercise it upon the act he was about to commit; if he did not understand and appreciate the effect of the act, but was driven to it by an uncontrollable impulse caused by insanity, then it is not to be considered as the act of his own hand within the meaning of the policy."

(o) Same subject: rule in Missouri.[5]—A case in Missouri [6] has been cited as establishing a rule on the point under consideration. But the condition here was against death of insured "by his own act or intention, whether sane or insane," and necessarily the words, "sane or insane," controlled the decision, but the opinion of the court, per Hough, J., notes the conflict of opinion in cases of suicide or under provisos, "die by his own hand," etc., speaks of such conflict as irreconcilable, and adopts the words of Rapallo, J., in the Van Zandt case [7] criticizing the language of Hunt, J., in the Terry case [8] for "a want of perspicuity" and inconsistent with itself. Upon the whole, however, the opinion in this Missouri case can hardly be said to indicate in any way what the rule is in that state under the words "die by his own hand," or some like expression used alone.

(p) Same subject: rule in New York.[9]—In 1881, in a case where the condition was, "die by his own hand or act voluntary or otherwise" [10] a charge was upheld that the jury must find that the overdose of medicine taken by assured was taken for the purpose of destroying his life voluntarily, knowingly, and intentionally. In 1879, under the proviso, "die by his own hand" [11] the court, per Rapallo, J., said: "Our conclusion is, that although it (the evidence) might have required the jury to find that Ross was aware when he took laudanum that it would terminate his life, yet it would also have justified a finding that he acted under the control of an insane impulse caused by disease and derangement of his intellect which deprived him of the capacity of governing his own conduct in accordance with reason. An act committed under such circumstances cannot be regarded as voluntary or within the proviso of the policy." [12] Again, in 1877, under the same proviso [13] the court, per Allen, J., said: "That the insured died 'by his own

[5] See § 2658 herein.

[6] Adkins v. Columbia Life Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410.

[7] Van Zandt v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 169, 14 Am. Rep. 215.

[8] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236.

[9] See § 2658 herein.

[10] Penfold v. Universal Life Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 317, 39 Am. Rep. 660.

[11] Newton v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 426, 32 Am. Rep. 335.

[12] Id. 429.

[13] Weed v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. 561.

hand' is not disputed, and by this act the policy is avoided, unless his mind was so impaired that he did not understand the consequences of his action and that death would ensue. If he exercised volition, was capable of forming an intention, and that with full knowledge that death would follow his action, his mind concurring in the act, he voluntarily destroyed his own life, the policy by its terms became 'null and void and of no effect.'" In 1843 the oft-cited case of Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company,[14] was decided. It appeared from the evidence that the insured drowned himself. The plaintiffs claimed that he was insane at the time of committing the act, and that therefore the policy was not avoided. The proviso was against death of the insured "by his own hand, or in consequence of a duel or by the hands of justice." In giving the opinion of the supreme court[15] Nelson, J., said: "The question arising upon demurrer is whether self-destruction in a fit of insanity can be deemed a death by his own hand within the meaning of the policy. I am of opinion that it cannot. . . . The drowning of Comfort was no more his own act in the sense of the law than if he had been impelled by irresistable physical power, nor is there any reason for exempting the company from the risk assumed in the policy than if his death had been occasioned by such means." Millard, J., also distinguishes this case from that of Borradaile v. Hunter.[16] Speaking of that case the learned judge says: "Upon an issue whether the assured died by his own hands, the jury found that he voluntarily threw himself into the water, knowing at the time that he should thereby destroy his life and intending thereby to do so, but at the time of committing the act he was not capable of judging between right and wrong. It was held by the majority of the court, Tindall, C. J., dissenting, that the policy was avoided, as the proviso included all acts of voluntary self-destruction, and was not limited by the accompanying proviso to acts of felonious suicide. The three judges who formed the majority laid the main stress upon the fact that the jury found the acts of self-destruction to be voluntary, that he knew when he threw himself into the river he should thereby destroy his life, and that he intended thereby to do so. The referees in the present case have not found that the intestate acted voluntarily, or that he knew the consequences of his act. They merely find that while insane, for the purpose of drowning himself, he threw himself into the river, not being mentally capable of distinguishing between right and wrong. If Borradaile v. Hunter,[17] be an authority which we ought [14] 4 Seld. (8 N. Y.) 299, 59 Am. Dec. 482, s. c. 4 Hill (N. Y.) 73.

[15] 4 Hill (N. Y.) 73.

[16] 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443.

[17] 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N.

to follow, it differs so much from the case before us that we are at liberty to decide it upon principle." In both the opinion of the supreme court and that of the court of appeals, which contains a full discussion of the principles quoted [18] the court seemed to consider that the connection in which the words were used was an indication of an intent to refer to an act of self-destruction felo de se. Upon this point Nelson, C. J., said: "In popular language, the term 'death by his own hand' means the same as suicide or felo de se. . . . The connection in which they are used in this policy indicates that the phrase 'death by his own hand' meant an act of criminal self-destruction." This case substantially held that the phrase "die by his own hand" referred to a voluntary act of self-destruction, and not to the taking of one's own life while insane and incapable of discerning between right and wrong. This question arose subsequently in connection with instructions to the jury by the judge, and in these cases [19] the doctrine stated in Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company [19a] does not seem to be strictly adhered to, and in a case which arose in 1873,[19b] it was held that an insured person who takes his own life must be insane to such an extent as to render him unconscious that the act he does will cause his death, or he must commit it under the influence of some insane impulse which he cannot resist, in order to take the case out of the proviso. It was held not sufficient that the insured did not understand the moral nature and quality of the act which he was doing. This case cites and approves the case of Borradaile v. Hunter,[19c] and adopts the doctrine laid down in that and kindred cases. The case of Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company,[20] has many times been cited as being contrary to the English and Massachusetts cases, and in fact the courts in many states have laid down a doctrine contrary to such decisions and have cited the decision of Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company as supporting the rule above discussed. Though this last decision does not expressly oppose the doctrine of Borradaile v. Hunter, and attempts to distinguish that case, yet it does in fact lay down a rule in conflict with such decision. But whatever doubt there may have been as to the rule in New York as laid down in the earlier decision, the court has in the Van Zandt case above noted expressly adopted the rule in Borradaile v. Hunter. In Meacham v. New York State Mutual Benefit

R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443.

[18] 4 Seld. (8 N. Y.) 299.

[19] Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Fowler v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 4 Lans. 202.

[19a] Cited in note 14 above.

[19b] Van Zandt v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 169, 14 Am. Rep. 215.

[19c] Cited in note 16 above.

[20] 8 N. Y. 209, 59 Am. Dec. 482.

Association [1] the by-laws provided against liability in case assured died "from suicide," and the court, per Parker, J., said: "Hay died by his own hand within eleven days after the issuance of the certificate. Unless, therefore, such self-destruction was the result of accident, mistake, or insanity, or was involuntary because driven to it by an insane impulse which disabled him from controlling his own action, Hay committed suicide within the meaning of the policy and it became void." [2] In 1903 a case was decided in this state which bears somewhat, although not directly, upon this point in that the original contract, including the certificate and by-laws, contained no exception of suicide, subsequently, however, suicide, sane or insane, was made an excepted risk under the by-laws, and it was held that the amended by-law was valid to the extent that it provided for a forfeiture of contract rights in case of suicide while insured was sane, and it was a fundamental principle that even though unexpressed in the original contract that assured should not intentionally cause his own death and in addition the amended by-law was valid because there could be no such thing as a vested right to commit suicide when sane, and also that it was nothing more than the written expression of a provision which the law read into the contract. But beyond this question of intentional taking of one's own life while sane the decision does not go except to cite with other cases the English decision hereinbefore considered [3] as supporting the point that the beneficiary stood in place of assured and as the latter could not benefit by his own wrong those who represented him could not be permitted to benefit by it, distinguishing, however, the case of a beneficiary under a benefit certificate and one under a straight life policy.[4]

(q) Same subject: rule in Ohio.[5]—In a case decided in Ohio in 1883,[6] the proviso was, "shall under any circumstances die by his own hand," and it was held that as to the words "die by his own hand," the preceding words being disregarded as too general and uncertain, "the decided preponderance however favors the general rule and rejects the English doctrine," and the court adopted the

[1] 120 N. Y. 237, 242, 24 N. E. 283.

[2] Citing Van Zandt v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 169, 14 Am. Rep. 216; Newton v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 426, 32 Am. Rep. 335.

[3] Borradaile v. Hunter, 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443, above considered under subd. (b).

[4] Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83, 32 Ins. L. J. 705. As to abandonment of by-laws, see §§ 379 et seq. herein; same as to suicide, see § 2647 herein. As to vested rights, see §§ 730 et seq., 741 et seq. herein. As to suicide in absence of stipulation contra, see §§ 2650, 2651 herein.

[5] See § 2658 herein.

[6] Schultz v. Life Ins. Co. 40 Ohio St. 217, 48 Am. Rep. 676.

rule laid down in Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Terry,[7] in the United States supreme court. Two judges dissented.

(r) Same subject: rule in Pennsylvania.[8]—In a case in this state, decided in 1878,[9] the condition was "die by suicide," and it was held that if insured intended to take his own life and knew at the time that death would result from his act, and he was insane at the time, the policy was not forfeited, and the charge that insanity, in the sense in which the jury were to "consider it, must not be a mere disturbance of the intellect, but such a complete change in the moral and mental condition of the patient as would put an end to his responsibility as a free and intelligent being; unless the deceased was insane in this sense his death by his own act was suicide. . . . If they found that he was not a responsible moral agent when he did the act which occasioned his death, they might find that it was not suicidal. . . . If . . . he was still able to discern that self-destruction was criminal and might have resisted the impulse to which he succumbed," the verdict must be for defendant. The point of inability to distinguish between right and wrong was also noted, and this was held no error. Woodward, J., also said: "When the disease attains a stage at which the mental power to judge of the moral nature of the act is entirely gone, self-destruction does not become suicide in the sense of self-murder." Again, in 1873,[10] where the stipulation was, "die by his own hand," it was held no error to charge that "if the assured was not conscious of the act he was committing, but acted under an insane impulse or delusion sufficient to impair his understanding or will, or if his reasoning powers were so far overthrown by his mental condition that he was incapable of exercising his reasoning faculties with regard to the act of self-destruction, then the defendants are liable." And in 1853,[11] it was declared that the proviso "die by his own hands" must be disconnected from the following words, "in or in consequence of duel," etc., but that the clause covered suicide by swallowing arsenic.

(s) Same subject: rule in Tennessee.[12]—In Tennessee,[13] where the condition was, "shall die by suicide or by his own hands," it was held to import a criminal act of self-destruction; that the act of suicide, to be within the proviso, must be committed with mind

[7] 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 584.

[8] See § 2658 herein.

[9] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Groom, 86 Pa. St. 92, 27 Am. Rep. 689, aff'g 1 W. N. C. 145.

[10] American Life Ins. Co. v. Isetts, 74 Pa. St. 176.

[11] Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co. 21 Pa. St. 466.

[12] See § 2658 herein.

[13] Phadenhauer v. Germania Life Ins. Co. 7 Heisk. (54 Tenn.) 567, 19 Am. Rep. 623.

enough for criminal intent; that it was not suicide if committed by one incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, although capable of comprehending; that the means selected would cause the death, and that the act must also be voluntary.

(t) Same subject: rule in Texas.[14]—In Texas, in the court of civil appeals [15] the policy contained a warranty not "to die by my own act," and the assured designedly killed himself by a pistol shot. The following charge was approved: "But if you should find that at the time the said Walden took his life his reasoning faculties were so far impaired that he was not able to understand the moral character or the general nature, consequences, and effect of the said act, or if he was impelled thereto by an insane impulse, then you will find for the plaintiff." The court, per Stephens, J., said: "The principal objection to the change is that it made the inability to understand the moral character of the act the test, though its physical nature, consequence, and effect may have been understood," and that the above rule is supported by the weight of authority. It was also declared by the court that the appellant, being a party to the leading case announcing the prevailing rule [16] had full notice that the proviso would receive the same construction in a state where the English rule had not been adopted.

(u) Same subject: rule in Vermont.[17]—In a case decided in this state in 1875,[18] the proviso was "die by suicide," and a charge was

[14] See § 2658 herein.

[15] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Walden — Tex. Civ. App. —, 26 S. W. 1012.

[16] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236; Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 232, 24 L. ed. 433.

[17] See § 2658 herein.

[18] Hathaway v. National Life Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 335.

Opinions of Text-writers. — Mr. Bacon considers the rule laid down in the United States Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 580, 21 L. ed. 236, 7 Alb. L. J. 310, and substantially followed in Michigan (John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41) as the most approved rule, one sustained by a preponderance of authority, and the "settled rule in most of the states in the Union:" 2 Bacon on Benefit Societies and Life Ins. (2d ed.) pp. 673, 675, sec. 334. Mr. Biddle says: "By the employment of the words 'intentional self-destruction' and 'suicide' the idea of a self-destruction consciously and intentionally brought about is intended," and upon the point whether the exception of liability in case of suicide and "whether the exception is intended only to apply to suicide in its technical sense—that is, a felo de se or self-murder by the insured who is conscious at the time of the moral nature of the act—or whether the exception is intended also to include intentional self-destruction by the insured when not at the time conscious of the moral nature of the act." This author reviews certain English cases (namely, Bayley v. Alexander, East. Not. Cas. 79; 2 Morley's India Dig. 140; Borradaile v. Hunter, 5 Man. & G. 639, 5 Scott (N. R.) 418, 12 L. J. C. P. 225, 7 Jur. 443; Clift v. Schwabe, 3 Com. B. 436, 2 Car. & K. 134, 17 L. J. C. P. 2, and says: "It must be admitted that the reasoning in the above English cases is ex-held not erroneous which was in substance that if assured had sufficient mind, reason, and judgment to rationally consider and contremely difficult to answer, and that the result arrived at in the opinion of the author of this treatise is logically irresistable:" 2 Biddle on Ins. (ed. 1893) 830 et seq. Mr. Bliss says: "It seems to us that the views taken by the courts of Massachusetts are most in accordance with the intentions of the parties to the contract. . . . Indeed, between judges and juries, the reasoning revolves in a circle and utterly deprives the clause of any practical application. The juries say because a man killed himself otherwise than accidentally, therefore he must have been insane, and the judges say if a man was insane when he killed himself the policy is not forfeited. Under such a condition of things, there is practically no case left to which the clause can apply:" Bliss on Life Ins. (ed. 1872) p. 392, sec. 238. Chitty says: "In criminal cases also, and as regards the protection from punishment for committed acts whilst in a state of mental derangement, the question is simple and adapted to the comprehension of every jury-man, viz.: 'Whether at the time the act was committed, the prisoner was incapable of judging between right and wrong and that the particular act was an offense against the law of God and nature:'" Chitty's Medical Jurisprudence (ed. 1834) 344. Mr. Cooke, referring to the clause "die by suicide" and like clauses, says: "It seems universally agreed that its meaning is limited to intentional self-destruction, thus excluding cases of accident and uncontrollable impulse. For clearly it is an act on the part of the insured that is contemplated, and such act implies a will behind the act; in other words, a voluntary act is contemplated. Perhaps it scarcely needs adding that this implies a will to do the act that actually was done and not some other essentially distinct act; in other words, that the actor realized that the result was what in the natural course of things it would be. . . . As it is the weight of authority is decidedly to the effect that the expression 'die by his own hand' involves, not only the idea that the act of self-destruction was voluntary, but that it was accompanied with a disability to distinguish right from wrong, or, as it has been expressed, to understand its moral aspect and character:" Cooke on Life Ins. (ed. 1891) p. 69, sec. 42. A recent medical authority uses the following language: "But it is said that an insane delusion or an irresistible impulse may be so marked as to preponderate over the rest of the intellect, so that the subject is no longer responsible for his acts. That is true, but if it leave him with sufficient intelligence to adapt means to ends and to know the result of a complicated act, such a grade of irresponsibility certainly should not abrogate this contract, made in good faith while he was perfectly sane, and set up in its stead another contract of very different import. If the delusion or impulse is so marked that he no longer understands the physical nature of the act, then it might be called an accident and as such would not be included within the proviso:" 1 Hamilton's System of Legal Medicine (ed. 1895) 582, article, "The Medical Jurisprudence of Life Insurance," by Brandreth Symonds, A. M., M. D. Mr. Elliott says: "Where the policy simply provides that suicide by the insured shall render it invalid, the weight of authority supports the rule established by the Supreme Court of the United States in the well-known Terry case" (see subd. (a) ante herein) Elliott on Ins. (ed. 1907) sec. 370, p. 414. See also 4 Cooley's Briefs on The Law of Ins. p. 3214. Mr. Richards says: "The English, New York, and Massachusetts courts and others have template what he was doing and so took his own life, there could be no recovery; that it was not enough to warrant a recovery that as-adopted the view that, to take the case out of the proviso of the policy on the ground of insanity, the assured must have been so mentally disordered as not to understand that the act he committed would cause his death, or he must have committed it under the influence of some uncontrollable insane impulse. These courts hold that it is not sufficient to show that his mind was so impaired that he was not conscious of the moral obliquity of the act." He then states the rule given in Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandall, 120 U. S. 531, 30 L. ed. 740, 7 Sup. Ct. 685 (Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918; note 19 Am. Rep. 628; Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139, 42 L. ed. 693, 18 Sup. Ct. 300), and adds: "The distinction between these two rules of law is probably too metaphysical to make it of any practical consequence whether the jury is charged in terms of the one or in terms of the other:" Richards on Ins. (2d ed.) 208, sec. 184. In his last edition (3d ed. 1909, p. 514, sec. 368) he says the distinction "is perhaps so metaphysical as to make it of somewhat questionable moment in many instances whether the jury is charged in terms of the one or in terms of the other; but the Federal Supreme Court considers its rule as sounder in principle as well as simpler in application." Mr. Niblack says: "There is, however, an irreconcilable difference in the opinion of the courts as to their [clauses as to suicide] proper meaning, but also a noticeable want of harmony in the opinions of judges of different courts which have passed upon the subject:" Niblack's Benefit Societies and Accident Ins. (2d ed.) p. 303. sec. 156. Mr. Phillips says: "I take our law to be that any mental derangement which would be sufficient to exonerate a party from a contract would render a person incapable of occasioning the forfeiture of a policy under this condition:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) p. 486, sec. 895. See criticism in 4 Allen (Mass.) 96. "There are many circumstances going to show that it, 'self-destruction,' frequently originates from a deranged mind. One is, that although considerable forethought and ingenuity may have been evinced in preparing the means, yet when the attempt fails, in many cases, the individual after his recovery has either no recollection or a very faint one of the fact itself, receiving it upon the testimony of others:" Dean's Medical Jurisprudence (ed. 1866) 509. "As a non compos cannot commit murder, so neither can he be felo de se:" 1 Collinson on Lunacy (ed. 1812) 494, sec. 24. "A man insures his life. The circumstances connected with his chances of insanity are fully disclosed. His family antecedents are carefully scanned for hereditary taint. A medical opinion and the testimony of his referees are taken upon the nature of his mental, as well as bodily, habits and constitution. The contract is made, and at the close of a long series of premiums paid his reason becomes undermined, melancholia fastens upon him, and he destroys himself; he meets death by his own hand, but it is not the less on that account the result of disease than is collapse and rigor the result of cholera:" Article, "The Suicide Clause in Life Policies," 12 Sol. J. & R. (1868) 498. See article, "Life Insurance—Suicide," 1 Va. L. (1877) 197–203. "It is quite evident that the preponderance of the authorities is in favor of the proposition that voluntary suicide avoids a policy containing the usual provisos. Precisely what is meant by 'voluntary suicide' is not very apparent, but we infer from the language of the opinions that the sured's mind was unsound to some extent or so unsound that he was unable to distinguish right from wrong; that if an insane idea to take his own life possessed his mind, it being impaired, and that idea grew stronger and his mind, reason, and judgment weaker, and the idea became irresistable to take his own life, even though his mind contrived the means, then "in reality this insane idea or impulse, and not his mind or will, took his life," and it was held that insanity short of delirium or frenzy, whereby all power or self-will and control was lost, would excuse the suicide, and the court, per Pierpont, C. J., said: "It is not enough for the jury to find that the mind of the deceased is so impaired that he is incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, but they must be satisfied that his mind was so overthrown that he had no power to resist the insane impulse to take his life, so that the act was the direct and immediate consequence and result of his insanity."

§ 2661a. Whether suicide question for court or jury.—The ordinary rule is that if the evidence is so clear and convincing that all reasonable men would draw the same conclusion therefrom, then the question is one for the court. If, however, the evidence is conflicting and such that reasonable men could fairly differ in their conclusions or inferences therefrom, the question is one for the term is intended to include all suicides not perpetrated in the 'madness of delirium.' This is a construction severely strict in favor of the companies. The proviso avoiding the policy in cases of suicide, etc., is the language of the company and is also in the nature of a forfeiture, and should for both reasons be construed, if its meaning is doubtful, in favor of assured:" Article, "Suicide and Life Insurance," 4 Alb. L. J. (1871) 53; article, "Suicide in Life Insurance, Sane or Insane," 4 Cent. L. J. (1877) 51, and article 4 Cent. L. J. 75; article, "Suicide—Effect upon a Life Insurance Policy" (1885), 21 Cent. L. J. 378, 382 (Charles B. Elliott); annotated case, 25 Cent. L. J. 82 (William M. Rockel); n. 59 Am. Dec. 487 et seq.; Ray's Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, 439 et seq.; Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence (ed. 1865) 1038 et seq.; 2 Paris and Fonblanque's Medical Jurisprudence (ed. 1823) 104 et seq. As to suicidal mania, see Maudsley's Responsibility for Mental Disease (ed. 1878) 133 et seq.; Mann's Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity (ed. 1893) 34–44, for judicial opinions in the different states where insanity was set as a defense to crime. Difficult to define insanity (Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, (ed. 1865) 1019), and the position of the courts thereon greatly varied: Elwell's Medical Jurisprudence (ed. 1871) 371–400, medical authorities, and 27 Howell's State Trials, 1290; Mosler v. Common, 4 Barr (Pa.) 266, per Gibson, C. J., and quoting Dr. D. Meredith Reese, to the effect that the latter is unprepared to lay down any better rule than that of "'Knowledge of right and wrong,' or the knowledge that the act was 'contrary to the laws of God and nature' at the time of its commission," notwithstanding the objection by the medical profession that "such 'knowledge' is often possessed by the insane who are unquestionably such." See notes 59 Am. Dec. 487; 3 Am. Rep. 454; 21 Am. Rep. 543; 19 Am. Rep. 628; 8 Am. St. Rep. 885, 886.

jury.[19] And even though the facts are not disputed, the question whether insured committed suicide may be one for the jury, as where differing conclusions might be drawn therefrom by reasonable men.[20] And if the evidence is not necessarily inconsistent with [19] United States. — Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Williamson, 174 Fed. 116, 98 C. C. A. 90 (whether morphine taken with suicidal intent); Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees of the World v. King, 142 Fed. 678, 73 C. C. A. 668, 35 Ins. L. J. 577 (evidence held to justify withdrawing case from jury).

Arkansas.—Industrial Mutual Indemnity Co. v. Watt, 95 Ark. 456, 130 S. W. 532 (evidence showed that insured shot himself).

Colorado.—Preferred Accident Ins. Co. v. Fielding, 35 Colo. 19, 83 Pac. 1013, 35 Ins. L. J. 260 (question of accidental death or suicide).

Illinois.—Knights Templars & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066 (insured died from gunshot).

Indiana.—Hodson v. Great Camp, Knights of the Modern Maccabees, 47 Ind. App. 113, 93 N. E. 861 (conflicting evidence however slight makes question one for jury); Equitable Life Ins. Co. v. Hebert, 37 Ind. App. 373, 117 Am. St. Rep. 324, 76 N. E. 1023.

Iowa.—Wood v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 166 Iowa, 391, 147 N. W. 888; Scott v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 149 Iowa, 562, 129 N. W. 302 (insured died from pistol shot and it was claimed that he had been murdered); Van Norman v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 143 Iowa, 536, 121 N. W. 1080 (insured found with rifle bullet wound in temple); Tackman v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 132 Iowa, 64, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 974n, 106 N. W. 350, 35 Ins. L. J. 368 (insured found dead in barn with strap around his neck).

Kentucky.—Hunziker v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 117 Ky. 418, 78 S. W. 201, 25 Ky. L. R. 532; Paulsen v. Modern Woodmen 1510; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 112 Ky. 455, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1747, 66 S. W. 35.

Michigan.—Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. 133 Mich. 479, 95 N. W. 551, 10 Det. L. N. 245 (insured found on roadside with gunshot wound in head).

Maine.—Arnold v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 95 Me. 331, 49 Atl. 1103 (clause was: "Self-destruction of insured in any form").

Minnesota.—Bunker v. United Order of Foresters, 97 Minn. 361, 107 N. W. 392 (injuries were such that if insured had been sane it would have been death by suicide).

Missouri. — Normand v. Order United Commercial Travelers of America, 163 Mo. App. 175, 145 S. W. 853, 41 Ins. L. J. 1090 (death from bullet wound in head; question whether self-inflicted or accidental).

North Dakota.—Paulsen v. Modern Woodmen of America, 21 N. Dak. 235, 130 N. W. 231 (insured died by strychnine poisoning).

South Dakota.—Bircher v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 25 S. Dak. 325, 126 N. W. 583 (insured drowned).

Utah.—Moran v. Knights of Columbus, 46 Utah, 397, 151 Pac. 353.

Washington.—Klein v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 87 Wash. 179, L.R.A.1916B, 816n, 151 Pac. 241.

Wisconsin.—Agen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 105 Wis. 217, 80 N. W. 1020, 29 In. L. J. 37 (insured died from pistol shot; question of law).

On burden of proof as to suicide in action on life insurance policy, see notes in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, and 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1008.

[20] Industrial Mutual Indemnity Co. v. Watt, 95 Ark. 456, 130 S. W.

the theory that a person insured against accident came to his death through homicide rather than suicide, the cause of his death must be determined by the jury.[1] And upon the question of accident or suicide, whether death was caused solely and proximately by the injuries may be one for the jury.[2] Under a Maine decision it was stipulated that insurer should not be liable in the event of the self-destruction of insured in any form except upon proof that the same should be the result of disease or of accident occurring without the voluntary act of insured, and it was held that whether his self-destruction was the result of insanity was for the jury.[3]

Again, in an action upon a life policy, where the defense is that the deceased committed suicide by taking cyanide of potassium, it is reversible error for the court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff when there is some evidence, though circumstantial, in support of the issue tendered by the insurance company.[4] So in an action upon a life policy, it is reversible error for the court to take from the jury the question of death by suicide, upon the ground that there is not sufficient evidence to go to the jury upon that issue, where it was shown that, up to the time of taking morphine, the deceased was in perfect health, that he was in the prime of life, that he died suddenly, and that his life was insured for a large amount, and in which his creditor claimed an insurable interest. The jury should also consider, as bearing upon this question, the financial condition of the deceased, the business in which he was engaged, and whether there was any reason for his taking his own life, if he did so.[5]

So the question of insanity in connection with that of suicide may properly be one for the jury,[6] as may also the question of delirium at the time of death.[7]

A finding of suicide implies the intentional act of a sane person.[8]

§ 2661b. Waiver of defense of suicide.—Under a Georgia deci-of America, 21 N. Dak. 235, 130 N. W. 231.

[1] Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co. 131 Mich. 234, 100 Am. St. Rep. 605, 91 N. W. 435.

[2] Preferred Accident Ins. Co. v. Fielding, 35 Colo. 19, 83 Pac. 1013, 35 Ins. L. J. 260.

[3] Arnold v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 95 Me. 331, 49 Atl. 1103.

[4] Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Ross-Lewin, 24 Colo. 43, 65 Am. St. Rep. 215, 51 Pac. 488.

[5] Hale v. Life Indemnity & Investment Co. 61 Minn. 516, 52 Am. St. Rep. 616, 63 N. W. 1108.

[6] Van Norman v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 143 Iowa, 536, 121 N. W. 1080; Banker's Fraternal Union v. Donahue, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 196, 109 S. W. 878; Switchmen's Union of North America v. Johnson, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 583, 105 S. W. 1193; Mooney v. Ancient Order of United Workmen, Grand Lodge of Kentucky, 114 Ky. 950, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1787, 72 S. W. 288.

[7] Wilcox v. Court of Honor, 134 Mo. App. 537, 114 S. W. 1155.

[8] Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 63 L.R.A. 347, 67 N. E. 83.

sion a policy clause, excepting assurer from liability in case of assured's death by his own act whether sane or insane during the period of one year after the policy was issued, was held, unless such waiver was against public policy, to waive the code provision of that state providing that death by suicide releases insurer from the obligations of its contract, and it was also decided that there was in that state no clearly defined public policy opposed to the waiver of such statute, but that there was a clear and vitally important public policy requiring that contracts be enforced according to the terms and intention of the parties thereto.[9] So the fact that a mutual benefit society distributes among its subordinate lodges what purports to be a copy of its constitution and by-laws, which contains no exemption from liability in case of suicide, and in reliance upon which, a member who subsequently committed suicide, acted in joining the order, does not estop it from taking advantage of a provision in its laws containing such exemption in avoidance of liability on his certificate; since the members are conclusively presumed to know what the provisions of the laws are, they being a part of the contract of insurance.[10]

So accepting and retaining an assessment does not waive the right to avoid a policy for suicide where it is stipulated that such act of assured precludes recovery, and the assessment is absolutely payable.[11] So acceptance of overdue assessments and dues by a local officer of a lodge is held not to constitute a waiver of the exception of liability in case assured dies by his own hand.[12] Nor is there any waiver of a provision in a life policy against liability for death from suicide, where the company, being requested after the death of insured to accept payment of a past-due premium, stated that the policy had been canceled for nonpayment of premium, and referred the beneficiary to the local agent as to its revival, there being no demand for payment and no question raised as to the liability of the company.[13]

And it is decided that sending blanks for proofs of death with an express non-waiver statement does not constitute a waiver of

[9] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Durden, 9 Ga. App. 797, 72 S. E. 295, Civ. Code 1910, sec. 2500.

[10] Benes v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 231 Ill. 134, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 540 (annotated on estoppel of mutual benefit society by misrepresentations as to laws of order), 121 Am. St. Rep. 304, 83 N. E. 127.

[11] Bennett v. Beavers' Reserve Fund Fraternity, 159 Wis. 145, 150 N. W. 181.

[12] De Voney v. Modern Woodmen of America, 148 Ill. App. 68, 38 Nat. Corp. Rep. 408.

[13] Scherar v. Prudential Ins. Co. 63 Neb. 530, 56 L.R.A. 611, 88 N. W. 687.

the defense of suicide, although there is some proof that assurer had knowledge of the cause of death.[14]

Again, inasmuch as the defense of suicide when sane rests upon considerations of public policy, there can be no more a waiver thereof either intentionally or unintentionally, by stipulations or defects in the pleadings than by provisions or omissions in the contract itself.[15]

[14] Tuttle v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assoc. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 223, 104 N. W. 1131, one judge dissenting. Statements in proofs of loss, how far conclusive, see § 3319 herein.

On furnishing blanks for proofs of loss or claim as a waiver of breaches of condition or forfeiture, see note in L.R.A.1917A, 1065.

[15] Security Life Ins. Co. of America v. Dillard, 117 Va. 401, 84 S. E. 656, 45 Ins. L. J. 679. The court per Kelly, J., said: "As was said by Mr. Justice Field in Oscanyan v. W. R. Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539, referring to a case in which a recovery was forbidden by morality and public policy: 'The objection to a recovery could not be obviated or waived by any system of pleading, or even by the express stipulation of the parties. It was one which the court itself was bound to raise in the interest of the due administration of justice.'"

CHAPTER LXXII.

EXCEPTED RISKS AND LOSSES—MARINE.

§ 2670. Excepted risks and losses: marine risks generally.
§ 2671. Excepted risks and losses: repugnant stipulations.
§ 2672. Excepted liability for loss caused by negligence, want of ordinary care, etc.: gross negligence.
§ 2673. Excepted liability for damage unless caused by negligence of ship.
§ 2674. Warranted free from mortality.
§ 2675. Exception of loss from specified cause followed by qualifying clause.
§ 2676. Exception of loss or damage from ice.
§ 2677. Exception of loss by barratry.
§ 2678. Excepted liability in bill of lading from damages arising from sweating, heat, steam, etc.
§ 2678a. Warranted "free from any claim consequent upon loss of time:" freight.
§ 2679. Explosion: loss from bursting of boilers or breaking or derangement of machinery: steamboat clause.
§ 2679a. Perils of the harbor: exclusion of loss from bursting or explosion of boilers, unless, etc.
§ 2680. Warranted free from insurrection.
§ 2681. Limited or prohibited trade: prohibited waters.
§ 2681a. Risk suspended while loading at specified island.
§ 2682. Warranty against illicit, prohibited, or contraband trade: against seizure therefor.
§ 2683. Exception of perils of the sea.
§ 2684. Warranted free from capture, etc.: capture by authority of de facto government.
§ 2685. A technical or actual capture or seizure not necessarily within the exception of these risks.
§ 2686. Capture and seizure may be synonymous.
§ 2687. Exception of loss by detention.
§ 2688. Other cases as to exception of capture, seizure, and detention.
§ 2689. Exception none the less binding because written on margin of policy.
§ 2690. Illegal seizure or attempt to seize within exception.

§ 2691. Warranted free from loss or damage arising out of collision of foreign powers or of our government with others.
§ 2692. Exception of loss from existing regulations does not include subsequently enacted decrees.
§ 2693. Warranted free from confiscation in ship's ports of discharge.
§ 2694. Exception of risk of blockaded port: turned away, etc.: free of loss if not permitted entry, etc.
§ 2695. Exception of loss or damage to goods or property on deck unless, etc.
§ 2696. The memorandum clause: generally.
§ 2697. What articles are within the clause.
§ 2697a. "Free from particular average:" "average unless general:" when the ship has stranded: statutes.
§ 2697b. Loss from defective condition of frozen meat cargo: "free from particular average and loss," etc.
§ 2697c. Effect of rider: "free of particular average:" "absolute total loss of part" amounting to —— per cent.
§ 2698. Warranted free from average unless general.
§ 2699. Or the ship be stranded or burns: "unless the vessel be sunk, burned, or stranded."
§ 2699a. Where the words "on fire" instead of "burned," or "burnt" are used.
§ 2700. Warranted "free from average under —— per cent unless general" and like clauses.
§ 2701. Unless it amounts to —— per cent and happens by stranding.
§ 2702. Exception of "loss or average" under specified per cent: expense of repairs.
§ 2703. Percentage: aggregate of losses in case of collision.
§ 2704. Value only of cargo at risk and not of whole cargo forms basis of percentage.
§ 2705. "Each package subject to its own average" and similar clauses: separately valued.
§ 2705a. Same subject: effect of rider.
§ 2706. "Average recoverable on each package separately or on the whole."
§ 2707. Effect of separate valuation of each package, etc.: when there is and when not an insurance on each separate package, etc.
§ 2708. Where articles of different kinds are each separately valued.
§ 2709. Where percentage is fixed for each particular class or impliedly fixed upon each enumerated article.
§ 2710. Where insurance is upon cargo in bulk: general designation of "all other goods:" goods of distinct kinds under one general designation.
§ 2711. The question of addition of successive losses to reach the limitation: cases.
§ 2712. Same subject: conclusion.

§ 2713. Where liability is limited to invoice value.
§ 2714. Particular and general average losses cannot be aggregated, nor are general average charges included in partial loss.
§ 2715. Addition of loss by jettison and salvage expenses.
§ 2716. Percentage clause qualified by agreement as to salvage and expenses.
§ 2717. Whether certain other charges and expenses may be added.
§ 2718. Exception of loss under specified percentage: other insurers.
§ 2719. Exception as to leakage, breakage, dampness, etc.
§ 2720. Whether under exception of loss under specified percentage the premium should be deducted.
§ 2721. Exception of liability under specified percentage: deviation.
§ 2722. Exception of claim arising from canceling of charter.

§ 2670. Excepted risks and losses: marine risks generally.—The clauses in marine policies excepting losses differ largely, although there are certain clauses common as to most of their provisions to all policies. The most general division is into those exceptions which come under special warranties, and those covered by the "memorandum" clause. The decisions under the latter clause are numerous, and cover a great variety of points as to its construction. Those under the former class rest largely upon the particular language in which it is expressed, and its construction with reference to such rules of law as are applicable in the given case.

§ 2671. Excepted risks and losses: repugnant stipulations.—A printed stipulation limiting the liability of the insurer, whether it be a clause "free from average," or a limitation of liability from losses under a specified percentage, or an exemption of losses arising from or occasioned by designated or other limitations of liability, may be qualified, enlarged, or limited by a valid written clause, specific and certain in its provisions; for the rule that written clauses prevail over printed ones to which they are repugnant obtains as well in cases of this character as in others, but the clauses should be reconciled as far as possible, and the whole contract should be construed together in order to give effect to the intentions of the parties.[16] Thus, where the printed clause stipulated to be "free from average under ten per cent," and other printed clauses warranted to be "free from average unless general, and all other goods free from average under five per cent unless general," it was decided that the written clause controlled, and operated as a limitation of all averages to the ten per cent specified therein.[17]

[16] Bargett v. Orient Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Bosw. (16 N. Y.) 385; Hernandez v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 317; Fed. Cas. No. 6,415; Coster v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 51; Fed. Cas. No. 3,264; Neilson v. Commercial Ins. Co. 3 Duer. (N. Y.) 455, cited in 46 N. Y. 614.

As to construction, written and printed clauses. See §§ 223, 224 herein.

§ 2672. Excepted liability for loss caused by negligence, want of ordinary care, etc.: gross negligence.—If it is stipulated that the insurer shall not be liable for perils, loss, misfortunes, or expenses consequent upon or arising from or caused by "the want or ordinary care and skill in navigating" the vessel, there can be no recovery for general average expenses incurred in rescuing the vessel from a peril consequent upon negligence in navigating her.[18] So under a clause exempting from liability for "any loss occasioned by the negligence or misconduct of those in charge of the steamboat," there can be no recovery where the boat sinks at her mooring in consequence of overloading, the danger arising therefrom being so great that it was apparent long before the accident to many passengers inexperienced in navigation.[19] And under an exception for loss for want of ordinary care and skill "necessary and proper on such voyage and in said navigation," a want of ordinary care, skill, knowledge, attention, and seamanship, and ignorance of the channel and navigation on the part of the master and others constitutes a good plea in defense, and the same rule applies to an insurance on the cargo under a similar clause.[20] If the policy warrants that the boat shall be navigated free from any loss or damage by the negligence of those in charge of her at or before the time of any accident or disaster, this excludes a loss occasioned by the negligence of the pilot.[1] But if the exception be against want of ordinary care, and a vessel is run ashore and a storm arises after the stranding, and she is scuttled to save her and the cargo from total loss, the proximate cause of the loss is the storm and not the stranding, and the loss is not within the exception.[2] Although under a like exception where a steamer, stranded in a fog on an island, rode out of her course and was abandoned, and it appeared that she had a defective compass and was without a lookout, and was violating a statute regulating the speed to be maintained in a fog, it was held that it was incumbent, in order to recover, to show that these facts neither caused nor contributed to the loss, but that it arose from a

[17] Coster v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 51, Fed. Cas. No. 3,264.

[18] The Ontario (U. S. D. C.) 37 Fed. 220.

As to negligence generally; marine risks, see §§ 2849–2850a herein.

[19] Empire Parish Packet Co. v. Union Ins. Co. 32 La. Ann. 1081.

[20] Gillespie v. British America Fire & Life Assurance Co. 7 U. C. Q. B. 108.

[1] Levy v. New Orleans Mutual Ins. Assoc. 2 Woods (U. S. C. C.) 63, Fed. Cas. No. 8,290.

[2] Northwest Transportation Ins. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 41 Fed. 793. But see The Ontario (U. S. D. C.) 37 Fed. 220.

peril insured against.[3] The term "gross negligence," as used in a policy exempting from loss on that account, is the want of that diligence which even careless men are accustomed to exercise. If one omits slight diligence, he is grossly negligent, for he fails in the lowest degree of prudence.[4] The fact of want of ordinary skill and care must be clearly found to bring the loss within the exception, for if there are inconsistent findings upon the point whether the acts of a master are those of a careful, skilful, and prudent seaman, and whether his acts were justified, a new trial may properly be granted.[5] Again, where a policy covered such loss or damage as a steam tug might become "legally liable for, from accident caused by collision" and if a warranty against loss from "want of ordinary care or skill" is used in connection with and immediately following a warranty that a steam tug with her tow shall not go out of the usual and regular channels or to any port or place where the master or pilot through ignorance or inexperience ought not to undertake her navigation, it will be construed as if the clause read "warranted free from loss arising from ignorance or want of ordinary skill or care on the part of the master or pilot as to any port or place the steam tug may use" for in such case the rule of construction most favorable to assured will apply and the said clause "want of ordinary care or skill" will not be extended so as to defeat the entire purpose of the contract even though a collision occurred through want of ordinary care or skill.[6] But where a policy expressly excepts losses caused by the gross negligence, recklessness or wilful misconduct of the owner, master, officers or crew of the vessel, and it is claimed that the loss of the boat was due to the gross negligence of the owners in not providing a proper and safe tiller rope, and also that the pilot was guilty of gross negligence in trying to change rudders while the boat was backing, and

[3] Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. v. Boston Mutual Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. 934, cited in The Martello (The Martello v. Willey, 153 U. S. 64, 74, 38 L. ed. 637, 641, 14 Sup. Ct. 723; Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 699, 37 L. ed. 1218, 1227, 14 Sup. Ct. 264; St. Louis & M. Valley Transportation Co. v. United States, 33 Ct. Cl. 269; The Lansdowne, 105 Fed. 436, 443; Donnell v. Boston Towboat Co. 89 Fed. 757, 762, 32 C. C. A. 331, 336, 50 U. S. App. 435; Thames Towboat Co. v. Central Ry. Co. 61 Fed. 117, 118; Greenwood v. Westport, 60 Fed. 560, 567; The New York, 53 Fed. 553, 559; The City of Para, 44 Fed. 689, 690; Earnmore Steamship Co. v. Union Ins. Co. 44 Fed. 374, 376; McCarthy v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 43 N. Y. Supp. 343, 19 Misc. 274, 276.

[4] Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Barringer, 73 Ill. 230; Campbell v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 59 Me. 430.

[5] Lawton v. Royal Canadian Ins. Co. 50 Wis. 163, 6 N. W. 505.

[6] Rogers v. Ætna Ins. Co. 95 Fed. 103, 35 C. C. A. 396, 28 Ins. L. J. 808.

in directing the engineer to shove it off the pier, whereby a collision occurred, and the question for gross negligence is left to the jury, which returns a verdict for assured, it will be sustained.[7]

§ 2673. Excepted liability for damage unless caused by negligence of ship.—In a Federal case it appeared that the bill of lading excepted liability for damage to fruit by frost unless caused by negligence of the ship. The steamship was loaded with green fruit in one hold and general merchandise in another. On the vessel's arrival in New York in February it commenced discharging the fruit, which could have all been discharged during the day, which was a warm one; but in accordance with the request of certain consignees, the libelant assenting, the unloading was discontinued and was not again commenced until the fourth day thereafter, and completed the fifth day, the intervening days being cold. The fruit was transferred to a warehouse, and was subsequently found to be frozen, but was frozen before it was discharged from the vessel, and it was held that there was no negligence, and the exception in the bill of lading protected the ship from liability, and that she was not obligated during the cold weather to suspend discharging from the holds in which there was no fruit for the purpose of protecting the fruit in the other hold from liability to injury from frost.[8] But the ship may be liable for loss resulting from negligence in stowage even though within the exceptions of a bill of lading; as where the dunnage wood placed between all the drums of a consignment of glycerine on board a steamship had fallen out during the voyage from between two drums only, whereby they were cut by chafing together, and the glycerine leaking out, the voyage being a rough one, it was held that the only fair inference was that these two drums were not properly secured according to the usual manner.[9]

§ 2674. Warranted free from mortality.—Where live stock is insured under a policy with a warranty "free from mortality and jettison," reference must undoubtedly be had to the intention of the parties as evidenced by the language employed. Thus, mortality is held to mean a death arising from natural causes, and not a violent one; as where the live stock insured under a similar exception so wounded and bruised each other, by reason of the laboring of a vessel in a severe storm, that they died, this was declared a loss by the perils of the sea, and not within the exception.[10] The effect

[7] Jones v. Western Assur. Co. 198 Pa. St. 206, 47 Atl. 948.

[8] The Alesia, 35 Fed. 531.

[9] Marx v. The Britannia, 34 Fed. 906. See The Torsa, 85 L. J. P. 226, [1916] P. 257 (bill of lading exception of all loss by neglect, etc., case of bad stowage).

[10] Lawrence v. Aberdein, 5 Barn. & Ald. 107, 24 R. R. 299, 14 Eng.

of a special clause limiting the risk to mortality from certain causes would be to exclude mortality from other causes.[11] Reference must also be had to the fact whether the mortality arose from a peril insured against as the proximate cause, or whether it was superinduced by other causes, natural inherent vice, or otherwise.[12] In case the warranty "to be free from mortality or jettison" in an insurance on live stock has by practice among underwriters received a certain construction, the assured is not bound thereby, unless he is shown to have been cognizant thereof, either expressly or impliedly.[13]

§ 2675. Exception of loss from specified cause followed by qualifying clause.—If the policy contains a stipulation exempting the insurers from loss to a cargo from a specified cause limiting the generality of exception, it will be construed with reference to such qualifying clause. Thus, if a cargo of ice is insured, exempting the insurers for loss from the ice melting "in consequence of putting into port," this will not include a loss occasioned by the melting of ice from other causes, such as the leaking of the vessel, and the necessary unloading of ice to examine and repair the vessel in a tropical port where the vessel is by reason of distress.[14] But where a cargo of wheat on board a canal boat in the port of New York was insured against certain perils while "lying up as aforesaid," with an exception of ice from the perils enumerated, and the policy also gave permission that the boat be towed from place to place in port, the clause "lying up as aforesaid" covers the boat while being towed, and the insurers are not liable for injury by ice during that time.[15] Although in case of illicit or prohibited trade, and the exception be limited as to existing regulations, this clause will not bring a loss arising subsequently within the exception.[16] The company will be discharged only as to any loss arising from towing by a vessel of that character.[17]

§ 2676. Exception of loss or damage from ice.—If the policy contains an exception of liability for loss from ice, reference should be had to the fact whether ice is the proximate cause of the loss.

Rul. Cas. 296; Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 Barn. & C. 793, 5 D. & R. 641, 3 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 116, 27 R. R. 486.

[11] Jones v. Schmoll, cited in 1 Term Rep. 130n, 1 R. R. 196n.

[12] Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 Term Rep. 656.

[13] Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 Barn. & C. 793, 5 Dowl. & R. 641, 3 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 116, 27 R. R. 486.

[14] Tudor v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 554. See also as to application of principle, Dibby v. Gage, 14 Allen (96 Mass.) 261, 266.

[15] Dows v. Howard Ins. Co. 5 Rob. (28 N. Y.) 473.

[16] Wood v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 14 Mass. 31, 7 Am. Dec. 182.

[17] Grant v. Lexington Fire, Life & Marine Ins. Co. 5 Ind. 23, 61 Am. Dec. 74.

And if the policy be on time, the exemption is not limited to the season of navigation where ice is clearly the proximate cause of the damage;[18] but if the policy provides that it shall cease if the boat is "prevented or detained by ice or the closing of navigation from terminating the trip," the being detained by ice means detention in the ordinary course of navigation, and does not exempt a loss, the predominating and efficient cause of which is a storm; as where boats being towed are separated from the tugs by a gale which drives them ashore, where they are stranded, and ice forms around them in the night so that the tugs cannot reach them, even though the channel of the river is open, and the boats remain frozen in till a thaw, when they are sunk by the wind and ice and the cargo injured.[19] If the exemption is of liability for injuries in consequence of ice, except when lying between piers, the protection contemplated from piers is that where they are sufficiently near to each other as to prevent such injury from floating ice on both sides of the vessel, and if she is moored at the time of her injury between piers two thousand feet apart, she is not lying between piers within the intent of the policy, and, in the absence of evidence of the practical construction of such a clause the construction thereof is a question for the court.[20]

§ 2677. Exception of loss by barratry.—If the policy provides that the underwriter shall be free from all losses caused by barratry, mere carelessness or unskilfulness of the master will not release the insurer, there being no fraud or criminal conduct on his part.[1] And where barratry of the master is excluded, the assured being owners, and the command of the vessel devolved upon the second mate during the course of the voyage, his acts while in command were held those of a mariner, and one of the risks covered by the policy.[2] So an exemption of loss "by barratry of the master if the master is owner," it is held, will not release the insurers in case of an insurance on a vessel by the holder of a bill of sale, the vessel being registered in his own name, it appearing that the original owner was owner pro hac vice, having retained possession and control of the vessel, and victualing, manning, and sailing her at his own expense, and the master having fraudulently run her ashore, and the vessel being totally lost.[3] Again, if loss by barratry be ex-

[18] Allison v. Corn Exchange Ins. Co. 57 N. Y. 87.

[19] Brown v. St. Nicholas Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 332.

[20] Huntley v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 79 N. Y. Supp. 35, 77 App. Div. 196.

[1] Louisville Underwriters v. Pence, 93 Ky. 96, 40 Am. St. Rep. 176, 19 S. W. 10, 21 Ins. L. J. 493, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 21.

[2] Tate v. Protection Ins. Co. 20 Conn. 481, 52 Am. Dec. 350.

[3] Clark v. Washington Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 509, 1 Am. Rep. 135.

cepted, the insurers are not released by reason of mere error on the part of the pilot, where by a collision and consequent exposure, fire results.[4] And if a policy be to a named person "on account of whom it might concern," with a clause, "loss by barratry not taken if assured be owner of the vessel," the defense of barratry of the master would be valid, if the intention was to insure the owners of the vessel; or, the contract being indivisible, then the defense could be availed of if it was intended to insure the persons named and the owners.[5]

§ 2678. Excepted liability in bill of lading from damages arising from sweating, heat, steam, etc.—If the bill of lading excepts liability for damages to the cargo from "damages arising from sweating, heat, steam," etc., and it appears that the cargo was stowed in the customary manner, and that being a quantity of Brazil nuts and a portion of the crop particularly liable to become heated, and that it was carefully watched and ventilated so far as possible, but that stress of weather necessitated keeping on the hatches during a portion of the voyage, it is held that negligence of the vessel must then be shown to bring a damage to the cargo from heat and sweat within the exception.[6]

§ 2678a. Warranted "free from any claim consequent upon loss of time:" freight.—Where a policy upon freight is warranted free from any claim consequent upon loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise, and freight is lost by reason of necessary delay in repairing the steamer's main shaft in consequence of which the charter is canceled, a recovery is precluded for the resulting loss of freight.[7]

§ 2679. Explosion: loss from bursting of boilers or breaking or derangement of machinery: steamboat clause.—Insurers are not liable for damage resulting "on account of" bursting of boilers where by a policy of insurance upon the body, tackle, apparel, and other furniture of a propeller the insurers are not to be liable "for" the bursting of boilers.[8] So where the policy excepted from the perils insured against "damage that might be done by the bursting of boilers," but provided that only "loss or damage occurring subsequent to and in consequence of the bursting of boilers is covered by this policy," and the boiler of the vessel burst, the explosion

[4] Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 33, 50, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 26, 7 Ohio, 17.

[5] Paradise v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 6 La. Ann. 596.

[6] The Portuense (Johnson v. The Portuense) 35 Fed. 670 (annotated case).

[7] Bensaude v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. [1897] 1 Q. B. 29, 75 L. T. R. 405, 66 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 45, rev'g 75 L. T. R. 155, aff'd [1897] App. Cas. L. R. 609. See § 2783 herein.

[8] Strong v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 31 N. Y. 103, 88 Am. Dec. 242.

being so violent as to tear open the side of the vessel to such an extent that she was immediately submerged, it was held that as the vessel was rendered worthless the moment the rents and apertures were made, the loss was not subsequent to the explosion within the intent of the words, and that the policy did not cover the loss.[9] And where a marine contract binds the insurers for all losses occasioned by fire except from explosion of boilers while the vessel is navigated upon the waters named in the policy and within the assured's control, but in a subsequent clause excepts claims for loss or damage occasioned by the "collapsing of flues," this does not cover a loss by fire occasioned by the collapsing of a flue.[10] And if the policy provides that the insurers are to be not liable for any "breakage or derangement of the engine, or the bursting of the boiler, or any parts thereof," the insurers are only relieved from liability to indemnify the assured for broken or deranged machinery, and are not exempt from obligations to pay for a total loss, even though such loss could be traced back to the breaking of the machinery as its first cause.[11] So where the contract provided an exemption from liability for loss by the breaking of any part of the machinery, and the boat broke her shaft while being towed, and sprung a leak and sunk, it was held that the insurer was not released by the existence of one of the excluded causes, unless the loss was due to that cause.[12] In another case, where the stipulation was against "any loss occasioned by fire except when caused by explosion of boiler," and the policy also warranted against loss by "bursting of boilers, collapsing of flues, or the consequences of any character resulting from either of the foregoing exceptions," the insurer was held liable for all losses occasioned by fire except from explosion of boilers.[13] So where a steamboat was insured for a certain voyage, the company not to be liable for breakage or derangement of the engine or bursting of the boiler, or for effects of fire from any cause connected with the operation or the repair of engine or boiler, unless the damage was occasioned by stranding or sinking of the vessel after her engine or boiler shall have been put in successful operation, it was held that if the immediate or proximate cause of loss was stranding, notwithstanding the loss could be traced back to a breakage of machinery, the [9] Evans v. Columbian Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 146, 4 Am. Rep. 650.

[10] Louisville Underwriters v. Durland, 123 Ind. 544, 7 L.R.A. 399, 24 N. E. 221.

[11] Western Ins. Co. v. Cropper, 32 Pa. St. 351, 75 Am. Dec. 561.

[12] Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 31 L. ed. 497, 8 Sup. Ct. 534. See Orient Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67, 31 L. ed. 63, 8 Sup. Ct. 68.

[13] Louisville Underwriters v. Durland, 123 Ind. 544, 7 L.R.A. 399, 24 N. E. 221.

"steamboat clause" did not exonerate the insurers from liability.[14] But it is held that where the policy provides that the insurers shall not be liable for breaking of the machinery unless occasioned by stranding, this will render insurers liable, where the vessel is injured first by perils of the sea and afterward by stranding, for so much of the injury only as the assured proves to have been occasioned by the stranding.[15] If there be an exemption from loss by explosion occurring at the time of the entry or indorsement under a running policy, provided the occurrence "might be known to the applicant, the public, or the company at the time," the application should be made whether the property insured "was known to be involved therein or not," and the vessel's boiler has exploded at the time the application is made, the policy does not cover a loss on goods, although the goods are not known to be on board.[16] It is evident from the above cases that the courts will consider the proximate cause of the loss, in construing clauses of this character, in connection with the facts of the case, and that the tendency also is to favor the assured, where the construction so admits, without departure from the intent evidenced by the words chosen. Some of the cases, however, can well be compared with cases discussing the same principles under fire policies, noted elsewhere.[17]

§ 2679a. Perils of the harbor: exclusion of loss from bursting or explosion of boilers, unless, etc.—An injury to a lighter while proceeding up a harbor resulting from concussion or shock and not by reason of any waves or swell of the water, nor by any débris thrown upon her, but caused by an explosion of dynamite which was being transferred to a barge lying at a nearby pier, is not a loss under a policy insuring a lighter against perils of the harbor where that is the only provision under which it is claimed insurer is liable, although it would seem that said loss is not within an exception from liability in the same policy which excluded loss from bursting or explosion of boilers, unless caused by stress of weather, stranding, collision, or burning, nor within a warranty not to carry gunpowder or other explosives. A distinction was also made in that the policy insured only against perils of the harbor and not "all other perils and losses."[18]

[14] Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Cropper, 21 Md. 311.

[15] Heebner v. Eagle Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 131, 69 Am. Dec. 308.

[16] Mark v. Ætna Ins. Co. 29 Ind. 390.

[17] "This company is not to be held liable . . . in case of insurance upon a steamer for any injury to the machinery or boilers, unless occasioned by stranding, sinking, burning, or collision with another vessel:" Exception in a form used in San Francisco.

[18] Listers Agricultural Chemical

§ 2680. Warranted free from insurrection.—A warranty on a cargo of slaves to be free from insurrection means that the insurers shall not be liable for a loss therefrom, and not that there shall be no insurrection.[19] The case so holding is chiefly valuable at the present day because of the distinction between a warranty against an act and a warranty that there shall be no loss from that act; as well also as for the assertion therein of the principle that the proximate cause of the loss does not necessarily mean the last cause.

§ 2681. Limited or prohibited trade: prohibited waters.—If trade is limited to certain ports and places, or if trade with certain ports and places is excluded or prohibited by the terms of the policy, the stipulation binds the assured to an observance of the contract, and a breach avoids the contract, but in case a trade is confined to certain ports in specified places, or in designated seas, the assured may prove that the trade described in the policy included as a part thereof, or as incidental thereto, a direct voyage between certain of the ports to which it is limited.[20] But the ship's destination constitutes an important factor in determining the trade in which she is engaged;[1] and where trade with "all guano islands except the Chinchas" was prohibited, and the vessel loaded at Navassa, in the Caribbean Sea, with a product of that island claimed to be mineral phosphate, it was held that the insured must show that the character of the cargo was not such as to constitute a breach.[2] So if certain waters be prohibited, or if their navigation be prohibited within specified times, the insurer will be released by a breach of the stipulation by assured, and a permission to navigate certain waters above or below or within specified limits is binding upon the parties, and must be observed, or there can be no recovery.[3] And Works v. Home Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 202 Fed. 1011, 42 Ins. L. J. 862. See §§ 2797 et seq. herein.

[19] McCargo v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 202, 43 Am. Dec. 180.

[20] Mallory v. Commercial Ins. Co. 9 Bosw. (22 N. Y.) 101.

As to trade and employment of ship: representations and warranties, see § 2098 herein.

[1] Harvey v. Beckwith, 12 Week. Rep. 896, 10 L. T. 632, 2 H. & M. 429.

[2] Whiton v. Albany City Ins. Co. 109 Mass. 24. In this case public documents of the United States showing the recognized character of the island as a guano island was held wrongly excluded.

[3] Maine.—Cobb v. Lime Rock Fire Marine Ins. Co. 58 Me. 326.

Massachusetts.—Odiorne v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 101 Mass. 551, 3 Am. Rep. 401.

New York.—Bearns v. Columbian Ins. Co. 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 445; Wheeler v. New York Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Jones & S. (35 N. Y.) 247; Day v. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. 1 Daly (N. Y.) 13.

the same rule would also apply to the rules of an association.[4] In another case a vessel was insured, while on her voyage from Liverpool to New Orleans, which latter port was known to be her home port, "to navigate the Atlantic Ocean between Europe and America, and to be covered in port and at sea." Another clause ran thus: "Warranted by the assured not to use ports in eastern Mexico, Texas, nor Yucatan, nor anchorage thereof." The vessel was lost in the Gulf of Mexico on her return trip from New Orleans to Liverpool, and it was held that the insurance covered the loss.[5]

§ 2681a. Risk suspended while loading at specified island.—The surrounding circumstances having disclosed the fact that the insurance company considered the roadstead at an island called Baker's Island, as very unsafe, the wording of a policy on a vessel sailing at and from one port to another, via Baker's Island, "the risk to be suspended while vessel is at Baker's Island loading," was construed to mean while at Baker's Island, whether loading or not, if there for the purpose of loading. Such a case is within the general rule that the surrounding circumstances out of which a written contract grows and which surrounded its adoption may be resorted to, not to vary the terms of the contract but to ascertain the subject matter and the stand point of the parties in relation thereto.[6]

§ 2682. Warranty against illicit, prohibited, or contraband trade: against seizure therefor.—Although a trade which is made illegal by the laws of the country to which the subject insured is bound or to which it is to be carried is illicit trade, yet the tribunals of other countries will not recognize as illegal a trade which the officers of that government may, to suit their own purposes, choose to arbitrarily designate as unlawful.[7]

An exception of illicit trade does not necessarily concern actual

Ohio.—Wilkins v. Tobacco Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 30 Ohio St. 317, 27 Am. Rep. 455.

England.—Provincial Ins. Co. of Canada v. Leduc, 43 L. J. P. C. 49, 22 Week. Rep. 929, L. R. 6 P. C. 224, 31 L. T. 141, 2 Asp. M. C. 338.

See Greenleaf v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 25; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch (9 U. S.) 335, 3 L. ed. 117; Palmer v. Warren Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 360, Fed. Cas. No. 10,698.

Time policy; navigation limited, see § 2374 herein.

Prohibited ports or waters; warranty, see § 2400 herein.

On effect of navigating in forbidden waters in case of loss within waters covered by policy, see note in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 742.

[4] Harvey v. Beckwith, 12 Week. R. 896, 2 H. & M. 429, 10 Law T. 632.

[5] Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 30 L. ed. 858, 7 Sup. Ct. 821.

[6] Reed v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 95 U. S. 23, 24 L. ed. 348.

As to parol evidence, see §§ 185, 3802 et seq. herein.

[7] Thompson v. Mississippi Ins. Co. 2 La. 228, 22 Am. Dec. 129.

buying and selling, but refers to illicit acts concerning the management of the adventure, by reason of which the property is subject to seizure.[8] And if a trade is in no other way unlawful than in consequence of an accident over which assured has no control, the underwriters cannot avail themselves of it as a breach of warranty.[9] But a mere attempt at trading is held within the exception, and the risk is forfeited thereby.[10]

Under a warranty against seizure on account of illicit trade the underwriters are liable for a loss by illicit trade barratrously carried on by the master.[11] An insurer is also liable for damages sustained by the detention of a vessel having prohibited goods shipped by the master for smuggling, though there is a clause that the insurer shall be free from charge on account of any illicit or prohibited trade.[12]

If the goods described are known to be prohibited, they are not without the exception.[13] And the trading by a domiciled alien carried on between the United States and the enemies of his mother country is protected under the warranty against illicit trade.[14] Illicit trade is not however, legalized by the unauthorized permission of an officer of the government.[15]

The risk of illicit trade must be taken with knowledge, express or implied.[16] But if insurer and insured know there are contraband goods on board, and yet insurance is effected on lawful goods with a warranty against contraband, the warranty applies only to the lawful goods.[17] The exception also refers only to the goods of the assured, and not to those of other shippers.[18] And if the [8] Smith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 13,035; Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 6, Fed Cas. No. 374.

[9] Savage v. Pleasants, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 403, 6 Am. Dec. 424.

[10] Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 6, Fed. Cas. No. 374; Deerow v. Waldo Mutual Ins. Co. 43 Me. 460; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch (6 U. S.) 165, 2 L. ed. 249. See Higginson v. Pomeroy, 11 Mass. 104.

[11] The illicit trade must be carried on by the insured himself or with his knowledge and assent: Dunham v. American Ins. Co. 2 Hall (N. Y.) 422; Suckley v. Delafield, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 222.

[12] American Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 463, aff'g 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 9.

[13] Seton v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,675.

[14] Johnston v. Ludlow, 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) XXIX.

[15] Tucker v. Juhel, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 20.

[16] Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 6, Fed. Cas. No. 374.

[17] Bowne v. Shaw, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 489. See DePeyster v. Gardner, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 492; Maryland & Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Bathurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 159.

[18] Cucullu v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 464, 16 Am. Dec. 199.

vessel is admittedly a prize of war, as enemies' property, no defense can be rested on the warranty against illicit or prohibited trade in contraband of war.[19]

Again, there is no breach of warranty of illicit trade by the owner of a vessel unless she is engaged in a trade which would furnish ground for her legal condemnation;[20] and the cause must be a legal and justifiable one under the law of nations to bring the seizure or detention within the exception.[1] So if the perils are excepted of illicit trade and trade in articles contraband of war, and the vessel is not violating any belligerent rights because of want of knowledge of a blockade, and there is a hostile capture, the insurers are not released.[2] But a warranty against illicit trade releases the insurers in case of a breach, although the act be prohibited subsequently to the insurance.[3] And it is held that a condemnation jure belli and for a breach of municipal regulations will falsify the warranty by which the insurer was protected from loss from illicit trade.[4] So the fact that assured has deposited or disposed of the contraband goods before the seizure does not relieve him from the breach of warranty.[5]

The warranty against seizure from illicit trade does not release insurers from a detention which properly comes within the clause as to "arrests and detainments of princes."[6]

Warranty of "no contraband of war:" risk of capture covered: passengers not contraband: reinsurance. In another case the question was whether underwriters of a policy of reinsurance effected by the plaintiffs were freed from liability by reason of a breach of warranty "not to carry cargo other than kerosene oil" the "risk of capture" being covered. The reinsurance was subject to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy and it also "war-

[19] Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Edmond, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 138.

[20] Thompson v. Mississippi Ins. Co. 2 La. 228, 22 Am. Dec. 129.

[1] Carrington v. Merchants Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 495, 8 L. ed. 1021, cited in Stacey v. Emery, 97 U. S. 642, 646, 24 L. ed. 1035, 1036; Magoun v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 169, Fed. Cas. No. 8,961; Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co. 3 Sumn. (U. S. C. C.) 615, Fed. Cas. No. 1,792; Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 6 Allen (80 Mass.) 373, 394.

Compare § 2690 herein.

[2] Lovering v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 12 Pick. (29 Mass.) 348.

[3] Smith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 13,035.

[4] Cucullu v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 464, 16 Am. Dec. 199.

[5] Carrington v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 495, 8 L. ed. 1021.

[6] Mumford v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 449.

As to exception of "restraint of princes," etc., see note to § 2688 herein.

As to risks and losses: arrests: arrests, restraints and detainments, etc., see §§ 2737, 2739 herein.

ranted no contraband of war." At the time a state of war existed between Russia and Japan. There was a cable guaranty that consul for Japan had written the British consul that kerosene was not regarded as contraband, but no "further guaranty." The steamer, a neutral ship, was captured by a Japanese cruiser and condemned, two Russian naval officers, under German names, having been received on board as passengers, the court finding no proof that the captain or owners were ignorant of the fact that these persons were Russian officers. The plaintiffs paid the original policy as for a total loss and sued the reinsurers claiming indemnity. It was held that there was no breach of warranty, the term "contraband" being applicable to goods only and not to persons. That is, said term in its natural sense, and in the absence of special circumstances, or of something in the context pointing to another meaning, or unless the words are used in connection with some place, or trade usage in which they have acquired a secondary meaning, applies only to goods.[7]

§ 2683. Exception of perils of the sea.—If an insurance on goods and on commissions as consignee excludes "all loss and expense that may arise from the ordinary dangers and perils of the sea," a loss consequent upon thick weather is not within the policy, even though such exception would cover a loss by capture, yet the proximate cause must be considered, and the fact that the vessel had been taken and was in charge of a prize master and men, and was being taken into port where she was lost, does not make the insurers liable.[8] If the unseaworthiness of the vessel at the time of sailing on the voyage caused or contributed to produce the necessity for a jettison, the loss is not within the exception of perils of the seas, and the carrier is liable for nondelivery of the goods.[9]

§ 2684. Warranted free from capture, etc.: capture by authority of de facto government.—It may be stated as preliminary to the discussion of the warranty, or exception, free from capture, seizure, etc., that:—(1) a technical or actual capture or seizure is not necessarily within the exception of these risks:[10] (2) "capture" and

[7] Yangtsze Ins. Assoc. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assur. Co. (1908) 2 K. B. 504, 77 L. J. K. B. (N. S.) 995, 24 T. L. R. 687, 13 Comm. Cas. 283, 99 L. T. (N. S.) 498, 32 Sol. J. 550, 5 B. R. C. 53, aff'g Bigham, J., [1908] 1 K. B. 910, 24 T. L. R. 381, 77 L. J. K. B. (N. S.) 392, 32 Sol. J. 315.

[8] Law v. Goddard, 12 Mass. 112.

Perils of the seas and rivers as risk covered, see §§ 2797 et seq. herein.

Perils of the seas, etc.; proximate and remote cause, see §§ 2832 et seq. herein.

[9] Dupont De Nemours v. Vance, 19 How. (60 U. S.) 162, 15 L. ed. 584.

As to seaworthiness, see §§ 2151–2183 herein.

[10] See § 2685 herein.

"seizure" may be synonymous:[11] (3) the danger of capture may constitute the basis of loss within an exception of loss by detention:[12] (4) the exception, or warranty to be free from capture, seizure, etc., may be binding although written on the margin of the policy:[13] (5) an illegal seizure or attempt to seize may come within the exception:[14] (6) the said warranty or exception may by its very terms be limited or extended, as where it covers only a partial loss, etc., and: (7) said warranty may be so far connected or involved with other clauses as to necessitate a construction of all of them, as in case of warranty also against all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations, etc., including the question of proximate cause.[15]

It is not necessary that the capture be made under authority of a perfectly lawful government. A capture is lawful when made by a declared enemy, lawfully commissioned and according to the laws of war. Thus, where a vessel was warranted free from capture and was burned by the commander of a privateer, acting under a commission issued to him by the government of the confederate states, the loss was held attributable to the capture, and not a taking of pirates or assailing thieves or by fire, and the fact that the war is a civil one renders the capture none the less one[16] upon the ground that during the war of the Rebellion the

[11] See § 2686 herein.

[12] See § 2687 herein.

[13] See § 2689 herein.

[14] See § 2690 herein.

[15] As to points (6) and (7), see § 2688 herein. See next following note in this section, and as to proximate cause, see also c. LXXIV. (§§ 2832 et seq.) herein.

On liability of insurer under policy of marine insurance for losses arising out of state of war, see note in 5 B. R. C. 4.

[16] Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 394, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966. (In this case the insurance was on the ship warrant-free from capture, seizure, or detention, the risks covered being perils of the sea, fire, enemies, pirates, assailing thieves, restraints, and detainments, and the policy was executed prior to the secession); Swinnerton v. Columbian Ins. Co. 37 N. Y. 174, s. c. 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 361, 93 Am. Dec. 560 ("warranted free from loss or expense arising from capture, seizure, or detention, or in consequence of any attempt thereat." In this case the vessel was seized and sunk by a large body of men professing to act by authority of the state of Virginia); Fifield v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 47 Pa. St. 166, 86 Am. Dec. 523 ("loss by seizure, capture, or detention or the consequence of any attempt thereat;" vessel seized by privateer in commission of confederate government); Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co. 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 836 (same exception; vessel was seized by officers and crew of steamer belonging to confederate state); Dole v. Merchants' Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 51 Me. 465 (same exception; vessel seized by confederate cruiser; held, also, that the fact that the war is a civil one renders the capture none the less one, and that the words "capture and seizure" were broad enough to cover a taking by pirates; there was appended to the clause, however, seceding states were a de facto government, and although erected by unlawful and unconstitutional means, they were clothed with many of the highest attributes of government, had adopted a constitutional form therefor, had sufficient resources of men and money to carry on a war of unexampled dimensions, were recognized as belligerents by the British government, and treated as such from the outset by the supreme government, and therefore were the supreme power of the states in rebellion.[17]

§ 2685. A technical or actual capture or seizure not necessarily within the exceptions of these risks.—The fact that there is a technical or actual capture or seizure does not necessarily bring such capture or seizure within the exception as to these risks. Thus, the seizure of a vessel by the mutinous acts of the crew is not within a warranty to be free from capture, seizure, or detention.[18] And where the warranty was "free from loss or destruction by or arising from any belligerent nature, or any seceding state or states of the Union," it was held that although the forcible taking of possession by the United States government was a capture, yet it was not within the exception, and that there was neither an absolute nor a technical total loss, the government having satisfied the amount nearly in full.[19]

§ 2686. Capture and seizure may be synonymous.—If an insurance be against capture, but warranted free from seizure within a specified jurisdiction, the word "capture" will be held synonymous with "seizure" when the capture is made in a place excepted by the warranty.[20]

§ 2687. Exception of loss by detention.—If the goods insured are warranted free from detention by specified powers, and she is stopped by a blockading squadron of one of those powers, and the words "any stipulation in this policy to the contrary, notwithstanding"); Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 6 Allen (88 Mass.) 373 (same exception; vessel seized by armed steamer commanded by Semmes, a citizen of the state of Maryland claiming authority of confederate government. Maryland, however, had not then seceded.)

[17] Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co. 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 836. See also Robinson v. International Assur. Soc. 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 450, s. c. 42 N. Y. 54, 1 Am. Rep. 400, cases last note.

[18] Greene v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 9 Allen (91 Mass.) 217.

[19] Murray v. Harmony Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 396, 402, 1 Smith, 72, 7 R. R. 581, per Lord Ellenborough; Brandon v. Curling, 4 East, 410, 1 Smith, 85, 7 R. R. 592. But see Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xxi. secs. 32, 33, pp. 429–34.

[20] Black v. Marine Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 287.

ordered back under pain of capture and condemnation, this is a loss by detention by said power within the exception.[1]

§ 2688. Other cases as to exception of capture, seizure, and detention.—A warranty against any loss by seizure or detention extends only to partial losses occasioned by a seizure or temporary detention not followed by a condemnation.[2]

In case of a warranty to be free from capture or seizure in a port of discharge, the main question seems to be whether the vessel was in her port of discharge with the design of there discharging her cargo, and was within danger of capture from the land, and that she might be within said port if at a place where ships usually unload, or where she is lying on and off a river or estuary, provided she intends to discharge at such place, and that the mere fact of capture by a force from the shore is not of itself sufficient when the other factors are wanting.[3]

If the exception is from loss by French risks, a capture by a French privateer is within the exception, and discharges a policy,

[1] Wilson v. United Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 227.

[2] Johnston v. Ludlow, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 481, 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) xxix.

The following decisions, although not insurance cases, show the views taken by the courts as to like excepted perils specified therein and the application of governing principles concerning the same in such contracts exception of "restraint of princes:" bill of lading: when danger of mines excuses vessel from proceeding to ordered port: cargo landed at another port and export thereof prohibited: recovery of freight, lighterage and warehouse charges precluded. East Asiatic Co., Ltd. v. The Steamship Toronto Co., Ltd. 31 T. L. R. 543.

Restraint of princes, etc.: Something more than reasonable apprehension of restraint necessary to justify plea of: charter party. Mitsin & Co. Ltd. v. Watts & Co. Ltd. 85 L. J. K. B. 1721, [1916] 2 K. B. 826, 115 L. T. 348, 32 T. L. R. 622.

Exception of restraint of princes etc., and circumstances beyond shippers' control: bill of lading: vessel sailed from plague port and cargo damaged by fumigation at port where vessel compelled to call: exception not applicable. Ciampa v. British Indian Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. 84 L. J. K. B. 1653, [1915] 2 K. B. 774, 20 Com. Cas. 247.

Exception in bill of lading, of act of God and the King's enemies: vessel deviated and was torpedoed: carrier not protected. James Morrison & Co. Ltd. v. Shaw, Savill & Albion Co., Ltd. 85 L. J. K. B. 724, aff'd [1916] 2 K. B. 783, 115 L. T. 508, 61 Sol. J. 9, 32 T. L. R. 712.

As to risks and losses: arrests, restraints etc., see §§ 2737, 2738 herein.

[3] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *871–73; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 838 et seq.; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 963, pp. 1125–6, citing Dalgleish v. Brooke, 15 East, 295, 13 R. R. 476; Oom v. Taylor, 3 Camp. 204; Maydhew v. Scott, 3 Camp. 205, overruling Keyser v. Scott, 4 Taunt. 660, 13 R. R. 721; Jarman v. Coape, 13 East, 394, 2 Camp. 615, 12 R. R. 374; Reyner v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 662, 13 R. R. 723; Levin v. Newnham, 4 Taunt. 722, 14 R. R. 648; Mellish v. Staniforth, 3 Taunt. 499; Levy v. Vaughan, 4 Taunt. 387, 13 R. R. 643.

so that the insurers will not be liable for any loss which may subsequently happen.[4] But where the exemption was from capture, and the vessel was driven ashore and captured, the capture was held the proximate cause of loss.[5]

Warranted free from capture, etc., and all consequences thereof, or of any attempt thereat, and free from all consequences of hostilities. Where under such a warranty the vessel went ashore off the confederate coast, and part of the cargo was prevented from being saved by the interference of confederate officers, it was held that so much of the cargo as was lost as a consequence of hostilities was within the exception.[6]

Same warranty: fear of capture or seizure. In another case a marine policy was upon rice shipped on board a certain vessel "from" L "to all or any port or ports, place or places," in Cuba, with a provision as to delivery in case of war or blockade preventing the vessel entering the port to which she was bound, said delivery being deemed final and the whole freight being considered earned, and further providing; "Warranted free from capture, seizure and detention . . . and also from all consequences . . . of hostilities or warlike operations." The vessel sailed from L. to Havana and the master upon learning at a port of call that war had been declared and hostilities begun between the United States and Spain and that Havana was blockaded, refused, under the powers conferred upon him by the bill of lading to proceed with the voyage to Havana and took the vessel back to Liverpool where the rice was discharged, some being sold and some stored. Assured sued for the freight which they had paid and also the expenses incurred in connection with the discharge and storing. It was decided that no recovery could be had as the loss was not due to the consequences of hostilities, but to a proper exercise by the master of the discretion vested in him by the bill of lading. Mathew, J., said: "I am of opinion there has been no loss under the policy. There was no capture or seizure, and no attempt to capture or seize within the first part of the clause in the policy. . . . The vessel did not in fact encounter any direct hostilities. . . . Under the bill of lading the Master was entitled to go back and he went back, and claimed, and was paid, freight. The loss so incurred was clearly not a consequence of hostilities, but was due to the terms of the bill of lading. It seems to me that the loss was a consequence from the proper exercise by the master of his discretion under the bill of lading. The policy was not a policy against fear of capture or seizure."[7]

[4] Roget v. Thurston, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 248.

[5] Coolidge v. New York Fireman's Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 308.

[6] Ionides v. Universal Marine Ins. Co. 14 Com. B. (N. S.) 259, 32 L. J. C. P. 170, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 18, 8 L. T. 705, 11 W. R. 858. See Bolivia Republic v. Indemnity National Marine Ins. Co. 78 L. J. K. B. 596, [1909] 1 K. B. 785, 100 L. T. 503 ("warranted free from capture, seizure," etc., "and the consequences thereof, or any attempt thereat, piracy excepted and also from all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations, whether before or after declaration of war" there was a seizure for a political object of goods and stores destined for an expeditionary force which had been sent by plaintiffs to take possession of outlying territory on the borders of Brazil; a gunboat had been fitted out by certain persons partly Brazilians and partly Bolivians who objected to the establishment of Bolivian authority in the territory and desired to set up a free republic and the gunboat stopped the steamer carrying such goods, etc., and seized the same, it was held that the loss was not by "piracy" and insurers were not liable, that is, the seizure was within the warranty or exception); Robinson Gold Mining Co. v. Alliance Marine & General Assur. Co. 73 L. J. K. B. 898, [1904] A. C. 359, 91 L. T. 202, 53 W. R. 160, 9 Com. Cas. 301, 20 T. L. R. 645, [1902] 2 K. B. L. R. 489, 71 L. J. K. B. 94, 76 L. T. 858, 7 Com. Cas. 219, 51 W. R. 105, [1901] 2 K. B. 919, 70 L. J. K. B. 892, 85 L. T. 419, 6 Com. Cas. 244 (gold was insured warranted free of capture, seizure, detention, and the consequences thereof; same was requisitioned on eve of war, within the territory of the South African Republic: held that the gold was seized within the meaning of warranty and insurers were not liable).

Warranted free from capture, etc., and the consequences of hostilities: capture or seizure followed by shipwreck and subsequent condemnation: doctrine of relation back: total loss. In another case a policy for twelve months was expressed to be on disbursements but the rights thereunder were by agreement to be determined as if the insurance had been on hull and machinery. The usual perils, in a Lloyd's policy, of the seas, men of war, takings at sea, arrests, etc., appeared in the policy, but the risk was only against total loss although there was a clause: "warranted free from capture, seizure and detention, and the consequences of hostilities, piracy and barratry excepted" the policy was issued in 1905 and the vessel, a German one, sailed for Vladivostok, a naval port and base of naval operations in the war between Russia and Japan, she carried coal which had been declared contraband of war. While on a circuitous route taken to avoid Japanese cruisers she was obliged, by reason of injury from ice to seek a port of refuge and was stopped by a Japanese cruiser before she reached said port and declared to be captured for carrying contraband but while being navigated toward a court of prize she was wrecked, grounded and became a total loss as she lay. She and her cargo were thereafter condemned. It was decided that there was a total loss by capture which precluded recovery by the owner. Although other points were raised by counsel, it was declared by Lord Loreburn, L.C., that the real question was whether there was a total loss by capture, seizure, or detention, or the consequences of hostilities and that there was a total loss by capture "to say nothing of the other words, namely, seizure and so forth" on the day on which the ship was seized lawfully, even though the lawfulness of the capture was not authoritatively determined until afterwards. Earl Halsbury also declared that the ship was a total loss from the moment she passed into the possession of the Japanese cruiser, or forces, quoting from Lord Mansfield in Goss v. Withers.[8] A part of which quotation is as follows: "The ship is lost by capture though she be never condemned at all nor carried into any port or fleet of the enemy, and the insurer must pay the value;" and what was said in Ionides v. Universal Marine Ins. Co.,[9] was also concurred with, that is, that the words " 'warranted free from capture' etc., are to be construed as if those words were used in a policy against those events:" and it was further declared "that where, as in this case, the possession was taken by a hostile force and an adjudication of condemnation as prize by the proper tribunal followed on grounds recognized by the general consent of nations to be lawful cause of capture, the rightfulness of the seizure and consequently the change of property related back to the time of capture." [10] In the case which was affirmed, Cozens-Hardy, M.

[7] Nickels & Co. v. London & Provincial Marine & General Ins. Co. 70 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 29, 17 T. L. R. 54, 6 Com. Cas. 15, 5 B. R. C. 1.

[8] 2 Burr. 683.

[9] 14 C. B. N. S. 259, 32 L. J. C. P. 170, 10 Jur. N. S. 18, 8 L. T. 705, 11 W. R. 858.

[10] Andersen v. Martin [1908] L. R. App. Cas. 334, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 950, 99 L. T. N. S. 254, 24 T. L. R. 775, 52 Sol. J. 680, 13 Com. Cas. 321, 5 B. R. C. 66, aff'g [1908] 1 K. B. 601, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 569, 98 L. T. N. S. 146, 24 T. L. R. 208, 13 Com. Cas. 225, 10 Asp. M. C. 605, s. c. [1907] 2 K. B. 248, 76 L. J. K. B. 674, 97 L. T. 375, 10 Asp. M. C. 494, 12 Com. Cas. 309. Owing to the importance of the above decision we feel justified in citing the authorities relied on or considered by counsel in said case noting them in the order in which they appear with relation to the points involved. They are as follows, for appellant:—The Tobago (1804) 5 C. Rob. 218; The Maria (1799) 1 C. Rob. 340, 374; The Dispatch (1801) 3 C. Rob. 278; Der Mohr (1800) 3 C. Rob. 129; Der Mohr (1802) 4 C. Rob. 314; Hahn v. Corbett (1824) 2 Bing. 205, 9 J. P. Moore, 390, 3 L. J. C. P. 253, 27 R. R. 590; Hall's Internat. L. sec. 277; Arnould, sec. 829, and in reply. Hamilton v. Mendes (1761) 2 Burr. 1198, 1 W. Bl. 276, 1 Eng. R. Cas. 112; In re Banda & Kirwee Booty (1866) L. R. 1 A. & E. 109, 35 L. J. Adm. N. S. 17, 12 Jur. N. S. 819, 14 L. T. N. S. 293. For respondent: —Goss v. Witters (1758) 2 Burr. 683, 2 Ld. Kenyon, 325, 1 Eng. R. Cas. 1; Hamilton v. Mendes (1761) 2 Burr. 1198, 1211, 1 W. Bl. 276, 1 Eng. R. Cas. 112; Cory v. Burr (1883) 8 App. Cas. 393, 398, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 657, 49 L. T. N. S. 78, 31 Week. R. 894, 5 Asp. M. L. C. 109; Dean v. Hornby (1854) 3 El. & Bl. 180, 2 C. L. R. 1519, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 129, 18 Jur. 623, 2 Week. R. 156; Stevens v. Bagwell (1808) 15 Ves. Jr. 139, 10 Rev. Rep. 46; Mor-

R.,[11] declared that "the capture was the real cause of the loss and the subsequent perils of the sea were an irrelevant matter for all purposes we have to consider." Fletcher Moulton L. J., said: "I cannot see how we could possibly come to any other conclusion of fact than that this vessel was lost to the insured by seizure. If nothing else had happened that must have been the consequence. . . . In my opinion the doctrine of relation back is not involved in our decision on this case." Farwell, L.J., said: "I agree that I do not think it is necessary for us to consider the doctrine of relation back." And it was accordingly held that as between owner and insurer the question of relation back of the captors' title was immaterial, although Channel, J., in the same case[12] had held that although the capture did not of itself divest the owner of his property in the ship, by the subsequent condemnation the title of the captors was caused to relate back to the date of the capture so that the owner was devested of his insurable interest in the ship at the time she was wrecked, and therefore recovery on the policy was precluded.

§ 2689. Exception none the less binding because written on margin of policy.—A warranty to be free from capture, seizure, or detention renders the insurers no more liable for a loss within the exception than if contained in the body of the policy, and the legal effect of such a warranty is the same as if it had been that insurers should not be liable for such losses.[13]

§ 2690. Illegal seizure, or attempt to seize, within exception.—An illegal seizure or attempt to seize is so far within an exception against seizure as to exempt the insurers from loss under the warranty. This was so held where a vessel flying the British flag was intentionally fired into by a Russian fort and sunk, under an rough v. Comyus (1748) 1 Wils. K. B. 211; Alexander v. Duke of Wellington (1830) 2 Russ. & M. 35, 9 L. J. Ch. 36; Ruys v. Royal Exchange Assur. Corp. [1897] 2 Q. B. 135, 66 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 534, 77 L. T. N. S. 23, 8 Asp. M. L. Cas. 294.

See also Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 6 Allen (88 Mass.) 374, s. c. 2 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 394, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966 (considered under § 2684 herein): also note "where subject of insurance is lost after capture," 5 B. R. C. 77—considering above case and Magoun v. New England Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 157, Fed. Cas. No. 8,961 (obiter); Graham v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 113, Fed. Cas. No. 5,674; McCargo v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 202, 43 Am. Dec. 180; Law v. Goddard, 12 Mass. 112; Collidge v. New York Fireman's Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 308; Murray v. Harmony Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

[11] [1908] 1 K. B. 601.

[12] [1907] 2 K. B. 248.

[13] Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 394, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966. In Swinnerton v. Columbian Ins. Co. 37 N. Y. 174, 93 Am. Dec. 560, the stipulation was in margin of policy.

alleged mistake as to the nationality of the flag, there being a war between Turkey and Russia, although no hostilities then existed between England and Russia. The court was of opinion that the object of the Russians was to detain the ships.[14]

§ 2691. Warranted free from loss or damage arising out of collision of foreign powers or of our government with others.—Where the warranty was to be "free from all claim for loss or damage arising from or growing out of collision with foreign powers or of our government with others," and the vessel was destroyed by fire by reason of the burning of all the cotton in and about the city under orders of the insurgent military commander, in whose possession the city then was, during the war of the Rebellion, it was held that the loss was within the exception.[15]

§ 2692. Exception of loss from existing regulations does not include subsequently enacted decrees.—If the exception be of loss from existing regulations of any belligerent, the insurer is nevertheless liable for a loss arising under a decree passed subsequently to the execution of the policy.[16]

§ 2693. Warranted free from confiscation in ship's port or ports of discharge.—Under this warranty, if the port of discharge is that of one government, and the vessel is there boarded by a privateer of another government, and taken into one of the latter's ports and condemned, this is not a confiscation in the ship's port of discharge, but a capture by the latter government.[17]

§ 2694. Exception of risk of blockaded port: turned away, etc.: free of loss if not permitted entry, etc.—If there is a warranty that insurers "take no risk of a blockaded port, but if turned away the assured to be at liberty to proceed to a port not blockaded," it is held that the insurer is protected from every loss happening in consequence of a blockade, whether such blockade were strictly legal or not.[18] And under a clause of like character it is held that a fear of danger of blockade which prevents proceeding to [14] Powell v. Hyde, 5 El. & B. 607, 25 L. J. Q. B. 65, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 84, 4 W. R. 51. See Goss v. Withers, 2 Burr. 683, 694, 695, 2 Ld. Ken. 325, per Lord Mansfield; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii., sec. 18, p. 353. Compare, however, Carrington v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 495, 8 L. ed. 1021 (considered under § 2682 herein).

[15] Marcy v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 388.

[16] Wood v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 14 Mass. 31, 7 Am. Dec. 182.

[17] Levi v. Allnutt, 15 East, 267, per Lord Ellenborough, as to definition of "confiscation."

[18] Radcliff v. United Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 38, s. c. 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 277.

the port of destination releases insurers.[19] Again, where the warranty was to be "free from loss if not permitted entry," by reason of having negroes on board, and the vessel anchors at the usual place where vessels stop to be disinfected, and is lost before permission can be obtained to land the negroes, the insurers are liable.[20]

If an insurance is against all risks blockaded ports excepted, the exception is not of the port but of the risk of capture for breaking the blockade;[21] and the exception in such case is held not a warranty.[22]

§ 2695. Exception of loss or damage to goods or property on deck unless, etc.—If the policy stipulates that the insurers shall not be liable for loss or damage to property on deck unless by special agreement in writing indorsed on the policy, and the policy also provides that "it shall be lawful for such boats to load in such a manner as is usual and customary for vessels employed in the navigation aforesaid to be laden, without reference to any provisions on the same subject in marine law or custom applicable to vessels laden for sea voyages," the two stipulations must be construed together, and will permit the carrying of goods on deck without an agreement indorsed on the policy if it is customary to carry goods on deck of the character of those so carried, and there being no evidence that the insurers were ignorant of such custom, they were held liable for goods so carried without indorsement in writing consenting thereto.[1]

§ 2696. The memorandum clause: generally.—Under the memorandum clause covering certain enumerated articles perishable in their nature, the insurers stipulate a limitation of their liability, and the terms used are various,[2] giving rise to numerous cases as [19] Ferguson v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 5 Binn. (Pa.) 544.

As to risks and losses: fear of danger: blockade: as embargo, etc., see §§ 2776–2778 herein.

[20] Dickey v. United Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 358.

[21] Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch (9 U. S.) 335, 3 L. ed. 117.

[22] Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch (9 U. S.) 335, 3 L. ed. 117, cited in Palmer v. Warren Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 10,698; Wright v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 18,095, 6 Am. L. Reg. 490; Greenleaf v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 29; Wilkins v. Tobacco Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

[1] Allen v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 473.

[2] Such as "insured only against general average and actual total loss," "insurers not to be liable hereunder for any constructive total loss on such articles if any portion thereof be delivered in specie at the port of destination," "free from average under—per cent unless general," "free from average unless general," "free from average on (specified articles) except general," "free from average on (specified articles) under —per cent," "free from all average on (specified articles) unless general or otherwise specially agreed," or in case of a policy on goods liable to heat, "in case of aver-to their construction and effect. In certain cases there is a clause separate and apart from the memorandum clause, whereby all merchandise not excepted from the memorandum is "free from particular average and partial loss," and the insurance is against "loss or damage only when occasioned by stranding, sinking, fire, collision, or other extraordinary peril, and amounting to fifty per cent or more." Commissions and profits are insured free from partial loss and from particular and general average, and against total loss only, and other profits and commissions are insured against total loss of vessel only. The Common Memorandum in use in England was introduced in 1749, and, under the form in use at Lloyds and the statutory form, certain articles are "warranted free from average unless general or the ship be stranded;" certain other articles are "warranted free from average under ——— pounds per cent," and all other goods, also the ship and freight, are "warranted free from average under ——— pounds per cent unless general or the ship be stranded." [3] And what is known as the memorandum clause in marine policies, whereby the insurer is exempted from any partial loss of goods that are esteemed perishable in their nature, is intended to apply only when goods are perishable, and there is difficulty in proving whether the loss oc-age—per cent on the sum insured shall be deducted from the average," "free from particular average," "no loss or average shall in any case be paid under——per cent," and various other clauses. See remarks as to free of particular average clause. 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 901, pp. 1123 et seq., where this form is given: "Warranted free from particular average, unless the vessel or craft be stranded, sunk or burnt, each craft or lighter being a separate insurance."

[3] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (ed. 1887) 818, and form of policy 231, 232; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 882 et seq., pp. 1103 et seq. "It was first introduced here about the year 1749, before which time the insurer was liable for every injury, however small, that happened to the thing insured. It was, therefore, thought better by such stipulation to free him from small partial losses than to compensate him for the extraordinary risk by adapting the premium to the nature of the commodity. This must in such case either have rendered the calculation of the premium a matter of much nicety or else have made the policy too complicated:" 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *221 et seq. This author also says that in consequence of a decision in 1754 (Cartillon v. London Assur. Co., cited in 3 Burr. 1553), whereby the words "or the ship be stranded" enabled the insurer to prove his whole partial loss on the ship being stranded. The London Assurance Company and the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, the two great companies, omitted the words "or the ship be stranded" (Id. *224). The London Assurance Company afterward inserted the clause. See Mason v. Sperry, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 226, per Lord Mansfield; Cocking v. Frazer, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. *227. See also 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, secs. 902 et seq., pp. 458 et seq.

curred from the inherent quality of the articles or from the peril insured against.[4] So it is declared that: "The warranty or memorandum clause was introduced into policies for the protection of the insurer from liability for any partial loss whatever on certain enumerated articles, regarded as perishable in their nature and upon certain others, none under a given rate per cent." [5]

Whatever may have been originally intended in introducing the memorandum clause as to the recovery only of the surplus over the amount of percentage limited in case of loss, the practice is to hold the underwriters liable, in the absence of a contrary stipulation, for the whole amount of the loss, and not merely for the excess where the loss exceeds the rate of percentage specified.[6] And it is asserted that the rule is firmly established in the United States Supreme Court that insurers are not liable on memorandum articles except in case of actual loss, and that there can be no actual total loss where a cargo of such articles has arrived in whole or in part, in specie, at the port of destination, but only when it is physically destroyed or its value extinguished by a loss of identity, and that the rule is that articles warranted free of particular average, or free of average unless general are insured only against an actual total loss.[7]

§ 2697. What articles are within the clause.—It may be shown by evidence whether certain articles are perishable in their own nature,[8] or whether certain articles belong to the class specified;[9]

[4] Mayo v. India Mutual Ins. Co. 152 Mass. 172, 9 L.R.A. 831, 23 Am. St. Rep. 814, 25 N. E. 80.

[5] Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Co. v. Reliance Marine Ins. Co. 179 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 535, 30 Ins. L. J. 97, 101, per Mr. Chief Justice Fuller.

[6] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *871; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 838; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 884 et seq., pp. 1105 et seq.; 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 477, 478, sec. 1791.

[7] Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Co. v. Reliance Marine Ins. Co. 179 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 535, 30 Ins. L. J. 97, 102, per Mr. Chief Justice Fuller. See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co v. Beacham, 128 Md. 414, 97 Atl. 708 considered at end of next following section.

[8] United States.—Robinson v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 3 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 220, Fed. Cas. No. 11,949.

Maine.—Williams v. Cole, 16 Me. 207.

Massachusetts.—Tudor v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 554.

New York.—Coit v. Commercial Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 385, 5 Am. Dec. 282; Bakewell v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 246; Astor v. Union Ins. Co. 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 202.

Pennsylvania.—Klett v. Delaware Ins. Co. 23 Pa. St. 262; Nelson v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 5 Mart. (N. S.) (Pa.) 289.

[9] Moody v. Surridge, 2 Esp. 633, 5 R. R. 575; Astor v. Union Ins. Co. 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 202; Scott v. Bourdillion, 5 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 213.

as that prunes are "fruit." [10] So usage of the trade may be important in determining what articles are perishable in their own nature,[11] and the use of the words "all other articles perishable in their nature" will cover articles of that character not enumerated.[12] Fertilizer, when constituting a ship's cargo, will not be treated as if included in the common memorandum clause of a policy insuring it, which exempts the insurer from liability for partial loss in certain enumerated articles of a perishable nature, among which fertilizers are not included so as to defeat a claim for constructive total loss and abandonment.[13]

Distinction between memorandum articles and other property: "free of particular and general average."—A distinction is made, and it is declared that a different rule applies, between memorandum articles and other property, such as a vessel, that may be [10] De Pau v. Jones, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 437.

[11] Mason v. Sperry, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 226, per Lord Mansfield; Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33, 38, per Walworth, Ch. See Nelson v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 5 Mart. (N. S.) (La.) 289, and cases under first note under this section.

[12] Baker v. Ludlow, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 289. "Corn, fish, salt fish, flour, and seed are warranted free from average unless general or the ship be stranded; sugar, tobacco, hemp, flax, hides, and skins are warranted free from average under five pounds per cent and all other goods; also the ship and freight are warranted free from average under three pounds per cent unless general or the ship be stranded:" English form in use at Lloyds, Consolidated Stat. Ins. Law, 20 Vict. c. 23; 35 Geo. III. c. 63. "It is agreed that bar, bundle, rod, hoop, and sheet iron, wire of all kinds, tin plates, steel cutlery, hardware, and all other articles subject to rust, madder, sumac, willow and wicker ware (manufactured or otherwise) salt, guano, cigars except in tin packages), fireworks, saltpeter, grain, and seeds of all kinds possessing the power of germination, tobacco, Indian meal, fruits (whether preserved or otherwise), cheese, dry fish, vegetables and roots, rags, jute and hemp bags, bagging, and articles used for bags or bagging, hops, pleasure carriages, household furniture, printed books, personal effects, paintings, statuary, engravings and prints, skins and hides, musical instruments, looking-glasses, and all other articles that are perishable in their own nature are hereby insured only against general average and actual total loss, and the insurers are not to be held liable hereunder for any constructive total loss on such articles, if any portion thereof be delivered:" Form used by a San Francisco company.

The English marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) First Schedule; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 425; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 906, reads: "Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded—sugar, tobacco, hemp, flax, hides and skins are warranted free from average, under five pounds per cent, and all other goods, also the ship and freight, are warranted free from average, under three pounds per cent unless general, or the ship be stranded."

[13] Mayo v. India Mutual Ins. Co. 152 Mass. 172, 9 L.R.A. 831, 23 Am. St. Rep. 814, 25 N. E. 80.

insured. This point arose and was passed upon as evidently necessary to be determined in connection with the question of particular and general average and constructive total loss in the following case. It appeared that the policy was "on bills and disbursements free of particular and general average." An action in assumpsit was brought to recover, as alleged, under an insurance against loss on account of marine disaster to a named schooner in a specified sum for a balance due on a repair bill for work, etc., on said vessel, alleging also a stranding and constructive total loss and that said disaster was not a case of particular or general average and upon this phase of the case the distinction above mentioned was made. It was further decided that "particular average" as used in the policy meant partial loss, and "free of particular average" was equivalent to "against total loss only." The principal question, however, being whether there was a constructive total loss, it was decided, upon demurrer overruled and a default judgment, that there was such a loss and judgment was affirmed.[13a]

§ 2697a. "Free from particular average:" "average unless general:" where the ship has stranded: statutes.—The California Code provides: "Where it has been agreed that an insurance upon a particular thing or particular class of things shall be free from particular average, a marine insurer is not liable for any particular average loss not depriving the insured of the possession, at the port of destination, of the whole of such thing, or class of things, even though it become entirely worthless; but he is liable for his proportion of all general average loss assessed upon the thing insured." [14]

The marine insurance act of 1906, of England provides: "(1) Where the subject-matter insured is warranted free from particular average, the assured cannot recover for a loss of part, other than a loss incurred by a general average sacrifice, unless the contract contained in the policy be apportionable; but, if the contract be [13a] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Beacham, 128 Md. 414, 97 Atl. 708, considering Kettel v. Alliance Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 144; Marcardier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 39, 3 L. ed. 481, and distinguishing Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Co. v. Reliance Marine Ins. Co. 179 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 535, 30 Ins. L. J. 97 (upon point that insurance here was upon vessel and not on memorandum articles).

As to distinction between particular and general average, see § 3408 herein.

[14] Cal. Civ. Code, sec. 2711. Construed in California Canneries Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, Ltd. 25 Cal. App. 303, 143 Pac. 549, 44 Ins. L. J. 685, 692, where it is said: "Indeed, it is not denied that the law of marine insurance has always recognized two distinct classes of insurance, one against total loss only and the other against total or partial loss, and this distinction finds expression in sec. 2711 of the civil code."—Burnett, J.

apportionable, the assured may recover for a total loss of any apportionable part.

"(2) Where the subject-matter insured is warranted free from particular average, either wholly or under a certain percentage, the insurer is liable for salvage charges, and for particular charges and other expenses properly incurred pursuant to the provisions of the suing and laboring clause in order to avert a loss insured against.

"(3) Unless the policy otherwise provides, where the subject-matter insured is warranted free from particular average under a specified percentage, a general average loss cannot be added to a particular average loss to make up the specified percentage.

"(4) For the purpose of ascertaining whether the specified percentage has been reached, regard shall be had only to the actual loss suffered by the subject-matter insured. Particular charges and the expenses of and incidental to ascertaining and proving the loss must be excluded." [15]

Said statute also provides: "a particular average loss is a partial loss of the subject-matter insured, caused by a peril insured against, and which is not a general average loss."

"The term 'average unless general' means a partial loss of the subject-matter insured other than a general average loss, and does not include 'particular charges.' "

"Where the ship has stranded, the insurer is liable for the excepted losses, although the loss is not attributable to the stranding, provided that when the stranding takes place the risk has attached and, if the policy be on goods, that the damaged goods are on board." [16]

§ 2697b. Loss from defective condition of frozen meat cargo: "free from particular average and loss," etc.—In a policy "at and from" on a frozen meat cargo it was "warranted free from particular average and loss caused by the stranding, sinking, burning or collision of the ship or craft; . . . also partial loss arising from transshipment. Including all risk of craft, or otherwise to and from the vessel." The insurance also covered "loss from defective condition of the meat from every cause (except improper dressing) which shall rise during the currency of the insurance." At the inception of the risk the meat was in good order and condition, but on arrival at its port of destination it was in such a condition that it was condemned by the authorities as unsound and unfit for human consumption and was sold for the manufacture of manure. This unsound, unfit condition was not caused by improper dressing, but arose on board the vessel and not from transhipment, nor was the vessel or any craft stranded, sunk, burnt, or in collision, and it was decided that the assurer was not liable as the words warranted free from particular average and loss, etc., constituted a well known formula and have a particular meaning well understood, which is, that the policy is warranted free from particular average and free from loss and that the clause should be read: "Warranted free from particular average and free from loss unless caused by the stranding, sinking, burning or collision of the ship or craft, except that particular loss arising from transshipment will be covered, and all risk of craft or otherwise to and from the vessel will be covered notwithstanding." [17]

[15] Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 76; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 419; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 901. See also as to the rule under subd. (1) above, Chalmers & Owens Dig. of Marine Ins. (2d ed.) p. 119, quoted from in California Canneries Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, Ltd. 25 Cal. App. 303, 143 Pac. 549, 44 Ins. L. J. 685, 693. —Barnett, J.

[16] Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I. (Rules for Construction) subdivs. 13, 14; Butterworth's Twentieth Cent. Stats. (1900–1909) pp. 425–427; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) pp. 907, 908; Id. sec. 64, subdiv. (1). See § 2717 herein.

§ 2697c. Effect of rider: "free of particular average:" "absolute total loss of part" amounting to —— per cent.—A rider on the margin of a policy of marine insurance stating: "Free of particular average, but liable for absolute total loss of a part, if amounting to five per cent, "is in pari materia with a memorandum by which goods are "warranted by the assured free from average unless general," and qualifies the memorandum so that, instead of limiting the liability to an actual total loss, it permits recovery for an actual total loss of a part.[18]

§ 2698. Warranted free from average unless general.—The effect of the memorandum clause is not to enlarge the perils insured against, but to exempt the underwriters from losses of a certain kind or within those perils.[19] Before the introduction of the memorandum clause the insurer was liable for every damage to the thing insured, and the object in inserting such a clause was probably to protect the insurers from losses from inherent decay, although its effect is to free the insurer from partial losses, subject to such exceptions as the clause stipulates. But all articles enumerated in the memorandum clause are not in all cases perishable in their nature, and the exception may be broad enough to include other losses, or to cover such articles as the parties may choose to insert. And in construing this clause and determining its effect consideration must be given to the meaning of the word "average," and also to the exact language of the memorandum stipulation, as well as to the understood interpretation of the clause at the present day.[20]

[17] Otaga Farmers' Co-operative Assoc. of New Zealand v. Thompson, 79 L. J. K. B. 692 (1910) 2 K. B. 145, 102 L. T. 711, 15 Com. Cas. 28.

[18] Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Co. v. Reliance Marine Ins. Co. 179 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 1, 30 Ins. L. J. 97, aff'g 82 Fed. 296, 27 C. C. A. 134, cited in Chicago Ins. Co. v. Graham & Morton Transportation Co. 108 Fed. 271, 275, 47 C. C. A. 320, 323; Devitt v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 173 N. Y. 17, 22, 65 N. E. 777.

[19] Potter v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 197, Fed. Cas. No. 11,-339.

The clause "free from average unless general" is as to its effect, capable of two divisions: 1. A warranty to be free from average; 2. A warranty to be free from average unless general. In so far as it is a warranty to be "free from average," it covers only total losses arising from the perils of the sea and excludes partial losses. This principle is evidenced by all the cases, even those where the construction of other words used in this clause has been involved. Thus, Lord Mansfield declared in an early case that although the word "average" gave rise to an ambiguity,[1] as used in the clause, yet all partial losses were excluded and the insurer was not liable to any particular average.[2] In so far as the clause "free from average" is qualified by the words "unless general," the word "unless" means the same as "except," and the insurer is liable, under [20] Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389, per Livingston, J.; Brooke v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 5 Mart. N. S. 646; Whiting v. Independent Mutual Ins. Co. 15 Md. 297, per Bartol, J. See Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33, 38, per Walworth Ch.; Wilson v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1550, 1 W. Bl. 507, per Lord Mansfield; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *223, *231.

[1] See Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33; Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389, per Livingston, J.

[2] Wilson v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1550, 1 W. Bl. 507, per Lord Mansfield. So Mr. Justice Butler declared in another case that from the first introduction of the clause the underwriter had never been held liable, except where there was a total loss of the articles: Cocking v. Frazier, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *228. Lord Kenyon declared in 1793 that there could not be a recovery for a partial loss where there had been no stranding, where the words "or the ship be stranded" were also used: Andrews v. Vaughan, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *233. So Lord Alvanley and Mr. Justice Chambre in another case declare that the underwriter is not liable for partial losses. Dyson v. Rowcroft, 3 Bos. & P. 474, 7 R. R. 809. See also:

United States.—Morean v. United States Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 256, Fed. Cas. No. 9,064, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 219, 4 L. ed. 75.

Louisiana.—Skinner v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 19 La. 273.

Maine.—Williams v. Kennebec Ins. Co. 31 Me. 455.

New York.—Saltus v. Ocean Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 138; Bargett v. Orient Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Bosw. (16 N. Y.) 385.

England.—Manning v. Newnham, 2 Camp. 624, 3 Doug. 130, 12 R. R. 761; Reimer v. Ringrose, 6 Exch. 263, 20 L. J. Ex. 175; Wilson v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 2 Camp. 623, 12 R. R. 760.

the clause "free from average unless general," for all losses where there is a general average, but all other partial losses are excluded by the clause.[3] The court in a California case [4] illustrates the distinction by a New York decision in which it appeared that the policy covered a certain number of barrels of potatoes "warranted by the assured free from average unless general." The vessel arrived at its destination, and after some of the barrels had been unloaded, it sank with the remainder on board, and it was decided that insurers were not liable because of the warranty against particular average; there being no total loss; [5] and the California court, in view of this distinction, adds as to the case before it that: "It is entirely clear that within the meaning of these terms there was here no total loss or a general average loss, but only a partial and particular average loss." [6] An insurance on hides, "warranted by the assured free from average unless general," leaves the underwriters free from all partial losses of every kind which do not arise from a contribution towards the general average; and where only [3] The words "free from average unless general" are understood to be convertible with "total loss:" Bryan v. New York Ins. Co. 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 617, per Nelson, J.; Aranzamendi v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 2 La. 432, 22 Am. Dec. 136. "The insurer is liable for all losses arising . . . where there is a general average, but all other partial losses are excluded by the terms of the policy; the word 'unless' means the same as except . . . and is not to be construed as a condition, . . . and the words 'free from average unless general' could never mean to leave the insurer liable to any particular average:" Wilson v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1550, 1 W. Bl. 507, per Lord Mansfield. "It is well understood at the present day with respect to such articles that underwriters are free from all partial losses of every kind which do not arise from a contribution toward general average:" Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389, per Livingston, J.

United States.—Hernandez v. New York Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 326, Fed. Cas. No. 6,414. See further, Humphreys v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 429, Fed. Cas. No. 6,871.

Kentucky.—Louisville Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Bland Coleman, 9 Dana (39 Ky.) 143

Louisiana. — Gould v. Louisiana Mutual Ins. Co. 20 La. Ann. 259.

Missouri.—Edgar Thompson Steel Co. v. Boylston Mutual Ins. Co. 12 Mo. App. 244.

New York.—Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33; Maggrath v. Church, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 196, 2 Am. Dec. 173.

South Carolina.—De Pau v. Jones, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 437.

England.—Hedburg v. Pearson, 7 Taunt. 154, Holt N. P. 349; Great Indian Peninsular Ry. Co. v. Saunders, 30 L. J. Q. B. 218, 1 Best & S. 41, aff'g 2 Best & S. 266, 31 L. J. Q. B. 206, 9 Jur. (N. S.) 1326, 9 L. T. 386, 12 W. R. 106.

[4] California Canneries Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, Ltd. 25 Cal. App. 303, 143 Pac. 549, 44 Ins. L. J. 685, 692. —Burnett, J.

[5] Chadsey v. Guion, 97 N. Y. 333, cited under § 2707 herein.

[6] Id.—Burnett, J.

a part of the hides insured were lost, being less than one sixth of the sum insured by the policy, there can be no recovery.[7]

§ 2699. Or the ship be stranded or burns: unless the vessel be sunk, burned, or stranded.—This clause exists under the English form of policy and Lloyds policy under the common memorandum covering "all other goods, also the ship and freight." It also exists in numerous cases under policies in this country, sometimes as a part of the memorandum itself, and in other cases being contained in the body of the policy. In some instances the liability for a loss or damage exists only when occasioned by stranding, in others unless the vessel be stranded, or "unless occasioned by stranding." This clause was held in 1754 to be a condition, and upon the ship's being stranded the insured was let in to prove his whole partial loss.[8] Again, in 1790, Lord Kenyon declared that the stranding of the ship put the memorandum "in the same situation as any other commodity not mentioned in the memorandum, and the underwriters are liable for all damages sustained by it; for otherwise there would be a very considerable difficulty in ascertaining how much of the loss arose from the perils insured against, and how much from the perishable nature of the commodity, which was the very thing the memorandum was intended to prevent." [9] The same eminent authority, two years later, said that "'when a ship is stranded then the underwriters agree to ascribe the loss to the stranding as being the most probable occasion of the damage.'" [10] In a subsequent case before the court of King's Bench he affirms the doctrine of the decision of 1754, as well as that of the two succeeding cases above noted, and declares that if the ship be stranded, that destroys the exception, and lets in the general words of the policy, and it is also held that in case of stranding the insurer is liable for any partial loss sustained by any of the articles covered by the clause, even though the loss did not arise from the stranding, but solely from some other cause.[11] In this last case the ship struck on a sunken rock, and her planks being started the water flowed into the hold and over the cargo, and the ship was run on shore, where the water flowed in and over part of the cargo, but she was, however, able to proceed on her voyage, and arrived at her destination with the greater part of her cargo, although very much

[7] Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389.

[8] Cantillon v. London Assur. Co. 3 Burr. 1553.

[9] Browning v. Elmslie, cited 7 Term Rep. 216; 4 Term Rep. 783.

[10] Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 Term Rep. 783, 2 R. R. 519.

[11] Burnett v. Kensington, 7 Term Rep. 210, 1 Esp. 416, Peake's Add. Cas. 71, 4 R. R. 424, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 187. See also opinions of Mr. Justice Ashurst, Mr. Justice Lawrence, and Mr. Justice Gross in this case.

damaged, a small part having been left as entirely unfit for use. Neither the ship nor cargo received the damage in consequence of the stranding, but solely on account of striking on the rock, and if there had been no stranding, both the ship and cargo would have been totally lost. Part of the damage to the cargo happened after the stranding, and it was said that if no damage whatever were occasioned by the stranding, yet if the ship thereafter encountered bad weather and the cargo sustained an average loss, the insurers would have been liable, and, as will be noted, the stranding occurred while the memorandum articles were at risk, but if the risk had then terminated, the rule could not well apply.[12]

It is apparent, therefore, from the above cases that the clause "free from average unless general or the ship be stranded" excludes a recovery for partial or particular average loss where there is no stranding, and, as appears from the preceding section, there may be a recovery for a general average loss, and as the clause in question is now generally construed the rule stated under the first three cases under this section seems to prevail, and where the ship is stranded the insurers are liable, as to the articles covered for any average loss, to the same extent as if there had been no clause "free from average," and this is so even though the loss cannot be ascribed to the stranding, but proceeds solely from some other peril happening prior or subsequently to the stranding, provided the risk on the articles covered has not terminated at the time of the stranding. Another exception as to the liability for particular average in cases where a per cent limit is fixed will be noted hereafter. The above are also substantially the conclusions stated by Mr. Arnould, Mr. Maclachlan, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Phillips, and Mr. Parsons. So it is declared that: "If the ship be stranded, the underwriters agree to be responsible for any loss by sea damage on the enumerated articles, however trifling the extent of the deterioration may be, just as though no warranty to be free from average had been inserted in the policy;" and again, "The underwriter is liable for no particular average losses, or for none under the rates specified, unless the ship be stranded. But if the ship be stranded while the memorandum articles are on board, then the underwriter is liable to pay all particular average losses, whether caused by the stranding or not, just as though the memorandum did not exist."[13] In the last [12] Roux v. Salvador, 1 Bing. (N. C.) 536, 1 Scott, 491, 4 L. J. C. P. 156, overruled but not on this point, 3 Bing. (N. C.) 276, 4 Scott, 1, 2 Hodges, 209, 7 L. J. Ex. 328, per Lord Abinger.

[13] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *857, *860; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 821–23; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 887 et seq., pp. 1108 et seq.

edition of Mr. Arnould's treatise it is said: "The meaning of the memorandum, therefore, is: 1. That all losses, in the nature of general average, are to be paid by the underwriter as though the policy did not contain the memorandum: 2. That the underwriter is liable for no particular average losses, or for none under the rates specified, unless the ship be stranded: 3. But that if the ship be stranded while the memorandum articles are on board, then the underwriter is liable to pay all particular average losses, whether caused by the stranding or not, just as though the memorandum did not exist." [14] Again: "It is now settled that if the ship be stranded the insurer is liable for any partial loss on any of the articles, though it did not arise from the stranding, but from some other cause." [15] It is also said "The doctrine adopted in England appears to be that after a stranding the construction of the policy is the same in respect to all losses on goods on board at the time of the stranding, whether happening before or after the stranding, as if it had not contained this exception. . . . A stranding does not let in a claim for a loss that took place previously on goods that had been landed before the stranding. In Great Britain and in the United States, the insurers are, in the common form of the policy, generally I believe without exception liable for general averages of however small amount." [16] Mr. Parsons states substantially the above rules, but as to the rule that regards the insertion of the condition "unless," he says the "construction is now well settled, but we do not think that it rests on good grounds." [17] So in a comparatively recent work it is declared that: "The meaning and effect of this clause is that where the ship has stranded, the insurer is liable for the excepted losses, although the loss is not attributable to the stranding; provided that when the stranding takes place the risk has attached, and if the policy be on goods, that the damaged goods are on board." [18]

If the policy contains the words "free of particular average unless the vessel be sunk, burned, stranded, or in collision," and a collision occurs, the exception is destroyed, and ceases to operate from that moment, and subsequent losses must be borne by the underwriter, whether resulting from the collision or not.[19] In the case finally deciding as above, although the principal point was that of "collision" the court discusses the meaning of the words [14] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 887, p. 1108.

[15] 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *234.

[16] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 448, 449, secs. 1761–63.

[17] 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 630, 631.

[18] 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, sec. 911, p. 460.

[19] London Assurance v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 68 Fed.

"burned" and also of the word "stranded" in connection with the difficulty attending the construction of the term "collision" as a word of limitation in the same memoranda. Another important factor was that under the terms of the contract and the circumstances the contract was interpreted according to the English law. The court, per Mr. Justice Peckham, also said: "It appears in evidence also that there were in use two well-known forms of particular average clauses by maritime insurance companies, one or the other being usually stamped on the insurance certificates. One clause reads, 'Free of particular average unless caused by stranding, sinking, burning, or collision;' the other clause reads as in this case, 'Free of particular average unless the vessel be stranded, sunk, burned, or in collision.' The clause in use in this certificate was termed the 'English clause.' Many agents of English companies offered either clause, and the form in use in this case was regarded as a better clause for the insured than the 'caused by' clause. It did not appear, however, that the London Assurance Company used any other than the clause found in the memorandum in this case. Referring then to the English law upon the question as to the meaning of this language, the English courts, many years ago, decided it, and that decision has been adhered to ever since. The English courts have held, and do now hold, that the expression, 'free of particular average unless the vessel be stranded,' meant that if a loss occurred during the adventure, although from a cause not related in any way to the stranding of the ship, the insurers were liable upon the general language of the policy. . . .

"It thus appears that the learned judges of the Court of King's Bench a hundred years ago deliberately decided that the damage need not be the result of the stranding of a vessel. . . .

"Although the original language of the memorandum confined the exception to a stranding of the ship, it was afterwards extended so as to read, 'Free of particular average unless the vessel be sunk, burned, stranded, or in collision.' The same rule applies to all; and, if the vessel be either sunk, burned, stranded, or in collision, it is sufficient to render the insurer liable, although the loss does not result therefrom. . . . Having decided more than a hundred years ago what the meaning was, that meaning has been continuously attributed to the memorandum by the English courts up to the present time. The fact that the underwriters still continue its use under such circumstances shows that they have

247, 15 C. C. A. 379, 28 U. S. App. As to "collision," see §§ 2751 et 379 (aff'g 56 Fed. 44) aff'd 167 U. seq. herein.
S. 149, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 42 L. ed.
110, 26 Ins. L. J. 833.

adopted this construction, and that they intend this meaning. Any additional exception which they have placed in the memorandum since the first decision, and which forms a part of the original exception, must be given the same meaning. Originally, the exception contained only the word 'stranding,' but subsequently, and at different times, the words 'burned, sunk, or in collision,' were added to it, and they must all be given the same construction, as an exception that has been given to the word 'stranding,' had, if any of them occur, the memorandum is struck out, and the general words of the policy come in force. The question of whether the law of this country does or does not accord with the law of England in this matter does not arise in this case, and we express no opinion upon that question." [20] If slight fires occur in the coal in the bunkers of an iron ship, which are put out by pumping water on the coal and some injury is done by the heat to the ship's plating and otherwise, the ship is not "burnt" within the meaning of that term as used in the memorandum in the policy.[1]

§ 2699a. Where the words "on fire," instead of "burned" or "burnt" are used.—In a Federal case decided in 1914, the clause was: "warranted free from particular average, unless the vessel or craft or the interest insured be stranded, sunk, or on fire," in a printed slip attached to the margin of the policy; and in the body of the printed form of said policy it read: "warranted free from average unless general or the ship be stranded, sunk or burnt." It was held that the insertion of the words "on fire" instead of "burnt" clearly evidenced an intent to distinguish from the term and construction used in former policies and, in view of the testimony of an average adjuster of London, England, that under clauses containing the words "on fire" it was the practice there to consider the warranty open if some structural part of the vessel has been actually on fire, said clause would be so construed in accordance with the rule of strict construction against insurer as the warranty was drawn in the nature of an exception to its liability; and accordingly, as the fire in this case was on a structural part of the ship and endangered the ship by actually burning some part of it, it was sufficient to open the warranty clause and the warranty being open by reason of the ship being "on fire" insurer was liable.[2] This decision was affirmed in the Circuit Court of Appeals in 1915,[3] and the court, per Morrow, C. J., considers particularly the Glenlivet case[4] and says: "In that case fires had broken out in the coal bunkers of the vessel on different occasions and some damage was done to the structure of the vessel—a plate was cracked and some angle irons were burnt—and the question before the court was whether the ship had been 'burnt' within the meaning of the word as used in a particular average warranty in a policy of marine insurance. The court held that the ship was not 'burnt,' and the rule was there laid down that a ship is not 'burnt' within the meaning of the warranty unless the injury by fire be of so substantial a character that the ship as a whole can be said to be 'burnt' in the popular sense of the term. . . .

[20] London Assurance v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 110, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 26 Ins. L. J. 833.

[1] The Glenlivet [1893] L. R. P. D. 164, [1894] L. R. P. D. 48, 68 L. T. R. (N. S.) 860, 69 L. T. R. 706, cited in London Assurance v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 68 Fed. 247, 15 C. C. A. 379, 384, 28 U. S. App. 437, (aff'g 56 Fed. 44) per Acheson, Cir. J., aff'd 167 U. S. 149, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 42 L. ed. 110, 26 Ins. L. J. 833, also considered in case which is subject of § 2699a herein.

"And this is the condition in which we find the warranty in the present case, with the exception that the word 'burnt' has been entirely left out, and the words 'on fire' substituted therefor. The clause thus worded has never been construed by the courts of either the United States or Great Britain; and in our determination of the question we must be guided by the history of the clause as above set forth, and such additional light as has been thrown upon the subject by the testimony of the witnesses in the case. . . .

"What, then, was the true intent and meaning of the words 'on fire' in the clauses, 'warranted free from particular average unless the vessel or craft, or the interest of the insured, be stranded, sunk or on fire?' The learned proctors for the Insurance Company contend that the expression is synonymous with the word 'burnt' as used in the policies prior to the decision in the Glenlivet Case, and must be construed even as the word 'burnt' was construed in that case. If that construction be the true one, it follows that the ship cannot be deemed to be 'on fire' within the meaning of the warranty unless the injury by fire is of so substantial a character that the ship as a whole can be held to be 'on fire' in the popular sense of the term. In this construction we are unable to concur. But we do agree with the learned proctors for the Insurance Company that the words must be construed in the light of their popular meaning. That popular meaning is vastly different from the popular meaning of the word 'burnt.' In a strict, technical sense, perhaps, the words are closely allied. Generally speaking, it would be impossible to conceive of an object being 'burnt' which had not also been 'on fire,' although the Court of Appeals in the Glenlivet Case refers to angle irons as being 'burnt,' despite the fact that the angle irons could not have been on fire. And vice versa, no object could, in the nature of things, ever be said to have been on fire without also being burnt. All this, we say, in a strict, technical sense; but the term is not to be interpreted by any such method. In a general and popular sense the two expressions convey very different ideas to the mind. The word 'burnt' creates in the mind the idea of a definite, accomplished condition, a completed result. The words 'on fire' convey rather the idea of a present state or condition, regardless of any definite, fixed result. And this natural meaning, rather than any strained effect, must be the meaning attributed to the words in the present policy of insurance, and must be deemed to have been the construction placed upon them by the parties to the contract of insurance. Thus construed, it seems entirely plain to us that the Sardhana might well have been on fire, although the injury therefrom might not have been of so substantial a character that the ship as a whole could have been said to be either 'burnt' or 'on fire.' In the determination of the question we are, of course, confronted with the same difficulty which beset the English Court of Appeals, and we concur with that court that each case must be decided according to the actual facts appertaining to each particular case." It will be observed, however, that the court differs somewhat in its conclusion upon the point relating to the extent of, or substantial character of the injury by "fire."

[2] Pacific Creosoting Co. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. (U. S. D. C.) 210 Fed. 958, 43 Ins. L. J. 650, s. c. 184 Fed. 947, 40 Ins. L. J. 1282. The court in the above case says that previous to the Glenlivet case [1893] Prob. 164; [1894] Prob. 48, 68 L. T. R. (N. S.) 860, 69 L. T. R. 706, cited in London Assurance v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 26 Ins. L. J. 833, the word "burned" was used in the F. P. A. clause, and after the case was decided the words "on fire" were substituted for the word "burned;" and "That no case has been suggested where the words 'on fire' have ever been before the courts in the same relation in any other case."—Neterer, D. J.

[3] Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Creosoting Co. 223 Fed. 561, 139 C. C. A. 101, 46 Ins. L. J. 486.

[4] [1893] Prob. 164; [1894] Prob. 48, 68 L. T. R. (N. S.) 860, 69 L. T. R. 706, also quoting from Gow on Marine Ins. p. 179, noted under § 2699 herein.

§ 2700. Warranted "free from average under——per cent unless general" and like clauses.—The memorandum clause frequently contains a stipulation to be "free from average under" a specified "per cent unless general," or the policy may contain a clause covering other than memorandum articles, whereby it is stipulated to be "free from particular general average less than" a certain per cent, or not to be liable for a partial loss on enumerated articles unless it amounts to a certain per cent on the aggregate value, and happens by stranding, or "free from particular average and partial loss," and free from loss or damage only when occasioned by stranding, etc., and amounting to a specified per cent or more, and various other forms of substantially the same character. In construing these clauses reference must be had in all cases to the words used as evidencing the intent of the parties. The character of the terms may therefore be such as to operate as a limitation of all kinds of averages. Thus, where the stipulation was free from average under ten per cent, it was held to exclude certain extraordinary charges and damages under that per cent, although in the nature of general average.[5] So where the clause was "free from average under seven per cent unless general," it was held that there could be no recovery except for an actual total loss or a general average.[6] So in case of an insurance on a steamer warranted "free from average under fifteen cent unless general," the policy being valued, there can be no recovery for damages under the stipulated per cent;[7] nor for expenses for repairs under the specified per cent of the valuation where the insurer is not to be liable "for any partial loss on vessel or freight under five per cent, excepting in all cases general average."[8] If the stipulation was not to be liable "for the expense of docking or hauling out for repairs, nor for any loss except in cases of general average, unless the necessary repairs required solely by the disaster, shall amount to ten per cent of the agreed value of the policy," the docking and hauling out for repairs must be required solely by the disaster, and must not be under ten per cent of the agreed value to warrant a recovery.[9]

§ 2701. Unless it amounts to —— per cent and happens by stranding.—If the policy provides that insurers shall not be liable for "partial loss on salt, grain, etc., unless it amounts to seven per cent on the whole aggregate value of such articles and happens by stranding," the company is not liable for a partial loss on such articles, unless occasioned by the stranding of the vessel.[10] But where there was a stipulation not to be liable "for any partial loss on goods esteemed perishable in their nature unless it amounts to

[5] Coster v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 51, Fed. Cas. No. 3,264.

[6] Le Roy v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 226. It will be observed that the word "actual" total loss is used; there is, however, a question whether there must be a constructive total loss in such cases.

[7] Riley v. Ocean Ins. Co. 11 Rob. (La.) 255.

[8] Padleford v. Boardman, 4 Mass. 548; Kerr v. Quaker City Ins. Co. 33 Mo. 158; Wallace v. Ohio Ins. Co. 4 Ohio, 234; Perry v. Ohio Ins. Co. 5 Ohio, 305.

[9] Snapp v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 2 Handy (Ohio) 252.

[10] Lake v. Columbus Ins. Co. 13 Ohio, 48, 42 Am. Dec. 188.

seven per cent . . . and happens by stranding," and the policy, however, insured against perils of the sea by which the articles were lost, and not by stranding, the insurers were held liable.[11] So in another case, the insurance was upon freight valued stipulated not to be liable for any partial loss on certain enumerated articles or other goods perishable in their nature, "unless it amounts to seven per cent and happens by stranding, not for partial loss on . . . vessel or freight unless it amounts to five per cent," and it was held that a loss of freight over five per cent was recoverable, although there was no stranding, and the cargo consisted of perishable articles.[12]

§ 2702. Exception of "loss or average" under specified per cent: expense of repairs.—If there is an exception of "loss or average" under a specified per cent on the agreed value of the policy, it is held that the expense of repairs must be ascertained by deducting one third new for old, and if the net loss thus arrived at is under the stipulated per cent of the agreed value, there can be no recovery.[13]

§ 2703. Percentage: aggregate of losses in case of collision.—In a case in Massachusetts the policy provided against liability for partial loss "on vessel and freight unless it amounts to seven per cent," and a clause was attached to the margin of the policy whereby risk by collision was covered "according to the decisions of the supreme court of Massachusetts prior to 1853, provided that the company shall not in any case be liable for a greater sum than the amount insured by this policy," and it was held that a loss subsequent upon collision through the vessel's own fault, by reason of which the owner was obliged to pay damages to the owner of the other vessel, was not recoverable from the insurers, as it did not amount to seven per cent of the vessel's value.[14] It is declared that if the policy stipulates against liability for partial loss on the ship under five per cent, and by reason of a collision, without fault on either side, a sum is apportioned on the vessel insured on account of injury to the other vessel, and said sum is paid under decree of a foreign court, to the operation of whose laws the vessel is subjected at the time, and said sum so apportioned and paid, together with the vessel's own loss, exceeds five per cent, the insurers are liable for the whole amount, for the loss by the [11] Williams v. Cole, 16 Me. 207.

[12] Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 109.

[13] Kerr v. Quaker City Ins. Co. 33 Mo. 158; Wallace v. Ohio Ins. Co. 4 Ohio, 234; Perry v. Ohio Ins. Co. 5 Ohio, 305.

[14] Whorf v. Equitable M. Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 68, 10 N. E. Rep. 513; Wallace v. Ohio Ins. Co. 4 Ohio, 234. See preceding section.

collision is an entirety, and the items are not to be separated.[15] This rule, however, involves the discussion of other principles, and the case upon which it is based and principles discussed will be more fully considered hereafter.

§ 2704. Value only of cargo at risk and not of whole cargo forms basis of percentage.—If part of the cargo is delivered at the port of destination and a loss is sustained upon the balance thereof during the progress of a regular delivery or discharge, the insurer is liable if the loss amounts to more than the specified per cent of the value of the cargo then at risk, although the amount of the particular loss does not reach the specified per cent on the whole value of the cargo shipped,[16] and the same principle governs the case where the complete cargo is not on board, for the percentage is then also estimated of the amount of cargo then at risk, and not on the value of the whole cargo to be shipped.[17] But it is held that a total loss cannot take place after a part of the goods are safely discharged. Thus, it was decided that the insurers were not liable for the loss where a hundred barrels of potatoes out of sixteen hundred had been landed at the destination, and the balance on board was lost by the boat's sinking, the insurance being against total loss "free from average unless general" and "free from particular average." [18] And after the landing of a portion of a cargo at its destination, a loss of the balance from a risk insured against is only a partial loss within a warranty against particular average loss.[19]

§ 2705. "Each package subject to its own average" and similar clauses: separately valued.—If the policy contains a clause providing that each package shall be subject to its own average, this does not apply where the risk is upon cargo in bulk and not in packages. Thus, where the risk was described as "thirty-nine thousand eighty-five bushels bulk at one dollar and fifteen cents

[15] Peters v. Warren Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 463, Fed. Cas. No. 11,034; 3 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 389, Fed. Cas. No. 11,035, aff'd 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 99, 10 L. ed. 371. See § 2717 herein.

[16] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bosley, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 337. But see Gracie v. Maryland Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 84, 3 L. ed. 495; Moreau v. United States Ins. Co. 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 219, 4 L. ed. 75, per Washington, J.

[17] Rohl v. Parr, 1 Esp. 445, 5 R. R. 741.

[18] Chadsey v. Guion, 16 Jones & S. (48 N. Y. Super. Ct.) 267, aff'd 97 N. Y. 333; Gracie v. Maryland Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 84, 3 L. ed. 495.

[19] Gracie v. Maryland Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 84, 3 L. ed. 496, cited in Mobile Marine Dock & Mutual Ins. Co. v. McMillan, 27 Ala. 77, 102; Mansur v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 520, 524.

per bushel, sum forty-four thousand nine hundred and forty-five dollars, rate one per cent, premium four hundred and forty-nine dollars and forty-five cents," it was held that the clause did not apply, and that in determining the percentage of partial loss the proportion between the entire actual loss and the value of the entire shipment must be ascertained;[20] but if such a clause or a similar one is used, and the goods are shipped in separate packages separately valued, or it otherwise clearly appears that it is intended that each package be separately insured, or it clearly appears that it is intended to pay an average on each package, as if separate interests were separately insured, the underwriter is liable for a loss on each package to the extent of the per cent stipulated.[1] So where the hull and machinery were separately valued, and it was stipulated "average payable on the whole or on each, as if separately insured, warranted free from particular average under three per cent," and an expense was incurred in saving both from a total loss by fire, it was held that it should be apportioned against each subject insured separately, inasmuch as the insurance was in effect a separate one on each, but if by adding these together the claim did not amount to the limitation, there could be no recovery.[2]

§ 2705a. Same subject: effect of rider.—Where the policy stipulated: "no damage to be paid unless amounting to five per cent" and an attached rider contained the clause "warranted free from particular average under five per cent, each kind of goods and each bill of lading interest subject to separate average" is to be construed as meaning that the five per cent is to be computed upon the value of each kind of goods and each bill of lading interest and not upon the value of the entire cargo, and the term "average" is used in the sense of the per centum of damage necessary to constitute loss under the policy; that is, not insured against damage or partial loss unless equal to five per cent of the value of the particular kind of goods or particular bill of lading interest. "This appears to us to be the clear purpose and the plain reading of the language employed. Thus in Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company v. Reliance Marine Insurance Company,[3] by the memorandum the goods were expressly warranted by the assured 'free

[20] Haenshen v. Franklin Ins. Co. 67 Mo. 156; Benecke's Principles of Indemnities, 478 and note.

[1] Stevens on Average (5th ed.) 220–26; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *869; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 836; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 899 et seq., pp. 1120–1.

[2] Oppenheim v. Fry, 3 Best & S. 873, aff'd 5 Best & S. 348, 33 L. J. Q. B. 267, 10 L. T. 539, 12 W. R. 831.

[3] 179 U. S. 1, 8, 45 L. ed. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 1, 3, 30 Ins. L. J. 97.

from average unless general' and by the rider 'free from particular average, but liable for absolute total loss of a part if amounting to five per cent.' The court, speaking by the chief justice, remarked: 'The memorandum and marginal clauses were in pari materia, and to be read together. They were not contradictory, and the rider merely operated to qualify the memorandum by allowing recovery for an actual total loss in part, which could not otherwise be had. In other words the qualification was manifestly inserted so that, while conceding that under 'the memorandum clause no liability was undertaken for a constructive total loss, but only for liability for an actual total loss, the insurers might be held for an actual total loss, of a part.' The rider in that respect qualified the provision in the policy that, in order to constitute a claim under it, the partial loss must equal five per cent of the entire cargo. This policy covered the entire cargo. It insured 'all grain, flour, general merchandise, etc., shipped on board of the propellor, City of Duluth.' When therefore, a loss has occurred on any particular species exceeding five per cent of the value of the species, that is a loss under the policy to be borne according to the terms of the policy. That is to say, a loss being ascertained, the amount to be paid by the insurer is determined in the same manner as in the case of a loss exceeding five per cent upon the entire cargo. Liability under the policy is not enlarged by the rider, except with respect to what shall be deemed a partial loss. The measure of liability for a loss ascertained is that which attaches by law to the policy stated in the rule laid down by Mr. Parsons and other text-writers upon the law of marine insurance. That measure of liability is the proportion of the ascertained loss which the amount insured is of the value of the whole property insured and at risk. We perceive nothing in the language of the rider to change the proper construction of the language of the policy. There is nothing to indicate design to change the rule that if the insurance covers only a part of the value of the property insured, the insured stands as his own insurer as to the remainder. . . . We consider that the insurance company is liable for that proportion of the loss which the sum insured bears to the value of the subject insured." [4]

§ 2706. "Average recoverable on each package separately or on the whole."—In an English case two policies were issued on galvanized iron, "average recoverable on each package separately or on the whole." The insurance was "at and from warehouses at Bristol to London," and covered all risks in transit "until safely delivered on board export vessels, if so forwarded." The cargo was to be carried to the Thames and there delivered to the plaintiffs into barges, to be supplied them, and plaintiffs were to take the iron to another ship to be carried to Australia. There were thus two parts to the voyage for which the goods were insured. Part of the goods were damaged by perils insured against upon her arrival in the Thames. On arrival assured took the goods into their own control, noticed the damage, and the goods were landed to ascertain what packages contained iron that was damaged and the extent thereof. The underwriters were notified, but declined responsibility for undamaged goods, although they appointed a surveyor to attend to the examination on their behalf. The damaged and undamaged packages were separated, the former sold, and the remainder treated as undamaged goods, and shipped to Australia. The assured having thus elected to treat the insurance as being on each package, they claimed, in respect to those containing the damaged iron, the difference between the invoice price and the net sum resulting from the sale, which claim was allowed, as was also the cost incurred in respect to said packages. Assured also made the additional claim for costs incurred by reason of the unloading and examination, and it was held that the underwriters were not liable, in respect to the expenses incurred, in relation to any part of the cargo other than those cases which contained the damaged iron. Lord Esher, M. R., says: "They must put their claim in one of two ways. One way is to say that the undamaged goods were made of less value because of the damage to the other packages, because thereby they had lost their character, and would not sell for so much in the market. If they put their claim in this way, the answer is that it is contrary to the rules of insurance. The only other way to support the claim is to treat it as part of the damage to the damaged portion of the goods. As to this it is enough to say that it is impossible to make out how the damage to one part of the goods can be effected by an examination of the other part. What the assured did was no doubt a reasonable thing to do in their own interest, but they cannot throw the cost of doing it on the underwriters. In Stevens on Average, in part 1, section 3, article 10, it is pointed out that the underwriter engages to guarantee the assured against the direct operation of sea damage, and not against the consequential results; and the highest that could be said of the claim in this case is that it was in respect of damage which was a consequential result of the sea peril, and it is very doubtful if that could be justly said. The evidence which was given at the trial as to the practice of average adjusters in such cases shows that what was done in this case was in accordance with the practice, so that authority and practice are both against the plaintiff. As to the other arguments in support of the plaintiff's case it is quite impossible to say that what was done here was to save loss to the underwriters, and I think I ought to say also that it is clear that the insurance was on the iron, so that no claim could arise in respect to damaged packing cases." It was also said in an earlier part of the opinion: "I incline to think, though I do not think it material to our decision, that this was an insurance on the whole cargo, and not on separate packages."[5]

[4] Chicago Ins. Co. v. Graham & Morton Transportation Co. 108 Fed. 271, 47 C. C. A. 320.—Jenkins, Cir. J.

§ 2707. Effect of separate valuation of each package, etc.: when there is and when not an insurance on each separate package, etc.—The point of separate valuation of packages, parcels, bales, etc., of the same kind of goods is one concerning which there is a want of unanimity in the authorities as to insurance, under the clauses excepting losses under a specified per cent, and where the policy covers total loss only. We believe, however, that the following rules are fairly deducible from the authorities: If goods of the same kind are specifically invoiced and insured, or it clearly appears that the insurance covers specifically packages, bales, boxes, bushels, or other separate division valued and insured by such package, etc., or by number of packages in parcels, being a specific part or division of the whole, there may be a recovery of a total loss of each parcel, etc., and the rule also applies in case each article so separately valued clearly intended to be separately insured sustains a loss equal to the specified per cent of its value under the percentage clause.[6] But it would seem that the fact alone of a separate valuation of specific bales, packages, etc., is not sufficient where it is not the manifest intent of the policy to effect a separate insurance on each package, parcel, etc., as a distinct basis on which to compute the rate of exception; at least it is declared that although each parcel, bale, package, or box of an article is separately valued, this is not of itself a separate insurance on each parcel, bale, or package. Thus, in case of an invoice of one hundred and four bales of cotton at a separate valuation per bale, and a stipulation that "no loss or average shall in any case be paid under five per cent unless general," a total loss of four bales will not entitle assured to recover anything from the insurers.[7] It is obvious, therefore, that the main difficulty exists in ascertaining the intention of the parties. Again, although a separate valuation ought to afford some evidence of such intent, yet if the express clauses used and the whole policy clearly shows that notwithstanding the separate valuation it was not intended that there should be, in effect, such an insurance as that the separate packages, parcels, etc., should afford a distinct basis on which to estimate the loss or complete the rate of exception, then the policy will be given that construction. Notwithstanding the above rules may be open to discussion in view of the authorities, nevertheless the rule is settled that in the absence of any indication in the policy, by separate valuation or otherwise, of an intent that each parcel, bale, or package shall form the basis of a separate adjustment of the loss, and except for general average there can be no recovery for a total loss or destruction of a part only of the particular species, even though distinct parcels, packages, or bales be lost by the specified perils, and this is so whether the particular article be shipped in bulk or separate packages, boxes, or parcels.[8]

[5] Lysaght v. Coleman, 64 L. J. Q. B. 175, [1895] 1 Q. B. 49, 14 R. 22, 71 L. T. 830, 7 Asp. M. C. 552.

[6] Kettell v. Alliance Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 144; Haenshen v. Franklin Ins. Co. 67 Mo. 156. Examine Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389; Gracie v. Maryland Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 84, 3 L. ed. 495; Humphrey v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 429, Fed. Cas. No. 6,871, per Story, J.; Morean v. United Ins. Co. 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 219, 4 L. ed. 75; Louisville Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Bland, 9 Dana (39 Ky.) 143, 148; Guerlain v. Columbian Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 527.

[7] Newlin v. North American Ins. Co. 20 Pa. St. 312, s. c. 5 Clark (Pa.) 116, 1 Phila. 273. In a New York case the court says: "The various fallacies by which a contract such as the present has been construed as intended to cover a total loss of a part of the insured subject, when it was shipped in separate boxes or packages and valued separately, have now been rejected by the courts of the principal maritime countries;" but here the cargo was one thousand six hundred and fifty barrels of potatoes shipped in bulk, the adventure to continue until said goods and merchandise should be safely landed at the port of destination, and the contract here was upon the subject of insurance as an entirety, and such was evidently the intent of the parties: Chadsey v. Guion, 97 N. Y. 333. And this case is cited in another decision where an insurance was effected, "$14,300 on 6,000 boxes of lemons free of particular average, but liable for loss of part by jettison . . . lemons valued at 4.25 gold per box." The construction of other clauses and the question of repugnancy between printed and written clauses was involved, but, upon the point before us, the court held that this was not an insurance upon each box of lemons at the sum valued per box, but an entire single contract on the whole number of boxes, and that there must be a total loss of the whole or a loss of part by jettison: Hernandez v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. 6 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 317, Fed. Cas. No. 6,415.

[8] United States.—Gracie v. Maryland Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 84, 3 L. ed. 495; Humphrey v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 429, Fed. Cas. No. 6,871.

Connecticut.—Poole v. Protection Ins. Co. 14 Conn. 47.

Kentucky. — Louisville Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Bland, 9 Dana (39 Ky.) 143, 148.

Louisiana. — Brooke v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 646.

Missouri.—Haenshen v. Franklin Ins. Co. 67 Mo. 156.

New York.—Chadsey v. Guion, 97 N. Y. 333; Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33.

Pennsylvania. — Waln v. Thompson, 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 115.

Under a warranty free from particular average, recovery is precluded for parts of the goods, not separately insured, spoiled by leakage and subsequently thrown away when the vessel arrives at its destination. In such case there is no total loss or a general average loss, but only a partial and particular average loss.[9]

The English rule is thus stated: "Where memorandum goods of the same species are shipped, whether in bulk or in packages, not expressed, by distinct valuation or otherwise, in the policy to be separately insured, and there is no general average and no stranding, the ordinary memorandum exempts the underwriters from liability for a total loss or destruction of part only, although consisting of one or more entire package or packages, and though such package or packages be entirely destroyed or otherwise lost by the specified perils." [10]

[9] California Canneries Co. v. Canton Ins. Office Ltd. 25 Cal. App. 303, 143 Pac. 549, 44 Ins. L. J. 685.

[10] Ralli v. Janson, 6 El. & B. 422, 25 L. J. Q. B. 300 (2 Arnould on Marine Ins. [Maclachlan's ed. 1887] 1016), overruling Davy v. Milford, 15 East, 559, see 15 R. R. 279n, "so far as the judgment in that case was against the underwriters, the opinion of Gibbs, C. J., in Hedburg v. Pearson, 7 Taunt. 154, and the dicta of Abbott and Holroyd, JJ., in Cologan v. London Assurance Co. 5 Maule & S. 447, 17 R. R. 390; Id. note. It is well, however, to compare this rule with that stated by Mr. Arnould and restated by Mr. Maclachlan, where it is said: "If a cargo is made up of separate packages capable of a distinct valuation in the outset, and the insurance appears from the terms of the policy to be separately effected on each distinct package, there can be no doubt that the loss will be treated as a total loss on each package lost:" 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *1038; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 1018, citing Hills v. London Assur. Corp. 5 Maule & S. 569, 9 L. J. Ex. 25, 52 R. R. 843, per Lord Abinger; Lewis v. Rucker, 2 Burr. 1167, 1170, per Lord Mansfield; and also, as illustrating the rule, the cases noted by Mr. Maclachlan and mentioned in the preceding note herein. See 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 898, 1082 et seq., pp. 1118, 1349 et seq. Mr. Phillips thus states the rule: "Where an insurance is made free from average indiscriminately upon an article, without any provision in the policy indicating that a loss is to be adjusted on the different bales or packages or parcels separately, the assured cannot recover for a total loss on account of the destruction of a part of the insured shipment of articles of the same description:" 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 459, 462, sec. 1773, reviewing and citing many English and American cases. Mr. Parsons says: "In England the law seems to be that if the packages are separately valued the insured can recover for all that are totally lost, but not otherwise. It has been said that the rule is the same in this country, but we are not aware of any decision to that effect." In a note he says: "Whatever the law may be where each parcel is separately valued, it is certain in this country, where this is not the case, there can be no total loss of part:" 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 637, 638n. See marine insurance act 1906 of England, sec. 76, subdiv. (1) sec. 79, subdiv. (1) given in Appendix C herein.

§ 2708. Where articles of different kinds are each separately valued.—If there are articles of different kinds, each class or kind separately valued, and there is a damage on one of the articles in excess of its valuation, a recovery may be had for a total loss on the whole of that particular article or class.[11] Or if the loss on such particular article or class so separately valued equals as to its value the specified percentage, there may be a recovery.[12]

§ 2709. Where percentage is fixed for each particular class or impliedly fixed upon each enumerated article.—It it held that if certain specific articles belonging to different classes are insured warranted free from average, and the policy fixes a standard or rate percentage for each of the several classes, as fifteen per cent for one class and ten per cent for another class, etc., and the loss upon the articles of the particular class equals the rate fixed for that class, the insurer is liable, although otherwise where it does not equal the rate specified in the class.[13] If certain specifically enumerated articles, as in case of hides, flax, etc., under the memorandum clause, are insured in gross under the percentage exception, such clause applies to each specified article separately the same as if it immediately preceded the article enumerated, and if the loss on such article equals the specified rate per cent excepted, the underwriters are liable, and the same rule applies to an exception of partial loss in memorandum articles specifically enumerated. Thus, it is declared, "when the cargo consists of several distinct species or kinds of articles, all of which are embraced in the memorandum, each forms a separate class or thing, and the exception is to be applied to each separately, considered as an independent subject of insurance. . . . The construction of the policy is the same as if there were a special exception of each article by itself from partial loss, instead of grouping them together in one clause." It is suggested, however, by the same court that this might not be the true interpretation if the exception were in general terms of all perishable goods; but the court adds: "It certainly is the only reasonable one where the articles are specifically named." [14]

[11] Deiderick v. Commercial Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 234. In this case an abandonment was made of the particular article, which was sugar, separately valued, and it was held valid. Mr. Phillips, however, denies that an abandonment can be made in such a case: 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 360, 361, sec. 1661. See chapter herein on abandonment.

[12] Ocean Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 3 Conn. 357. See Silloway v. Neptune Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 73; 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 475, sec. 1788.

[13] Louisville Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Bland, 9 Dana (39 Ky.) 143; Silloway v. Neptune Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 73, per the court. See Hall v. Rising Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Disney (Ohio) 308, 12 Ohio Dec. 639.

[14] Silloway v. Neptune Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 73; 2 Arnould on

But where the policy provided that "the company shall not be liable for any partial loss on bar or sheet iron, iron wire, hoop iron, etc., grains of all kinds, etc., nor for any partial loss on hemp or flax unless the same shall amount to twenty per cent on the whole aggregate value thereof," it was held the insurer was exempted from any partial loss on bar iron, though the same exceeded twenty per cent.[15]

§ 2710. Where insurance is upon cargo in bulk: general designation of "all other goods:" goods of distinct kinds under one general designation.—It is well settled that if the insurance be upon the cargo in bulk, valued in bulk, and the policy not upon packages, parcels, bales, etc., the insurers are not liable for a total loss of part under a clause free from average. In such a case there is only an average loss on the whole.[16] In case of goods not specifically enumerated under the memorandum clause but designated generally as "all other goods" or the like, they constitute a mass of property separate and distinct from specifically enumerated articles, and their aggregate value forms the basis upon which the percentage fixed by the exception must be calculated, and to which aggregated mass the general exception applies, unless there be a specific exception of percentage applied to "all other goods" and the like, as an aggregate, in which case the loss is computed with reference to the exception specifically applicable.[17] Cases of the last character differ from those where goods which have no natural or artifical connection with each other, but are several separate articles essentially different in value, nature, kind, intended use, and manner of disposal on board, are insured under some general designation intended to include them all, and indicating their miscellaneous distinct character, such as "master's effects," or "any goods" of an emigrant, there being a clause "free from all average." Here the goods are not massed together to the extent of excluding a total loss of less than the whole, but the insurance is upon the Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *870; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 835, citing Stevens on Average (5th ed.) 223; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 898, p. 1118.

[15] Evans v. Commercial Ins. Co. 6 R. I. 47.

[16] Haenshen v. Franklin Ins. Co. 67 Mo. 156; Hills v. London Assur. Co. 5 Mees. & W. 569, 9 L. J. Ex. 25, 52 R. R. 843, per Lord Abinger; Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33, per Walworth, Ch. See Humphrey v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 429, Fed. Cas. No. 6,871, per Story, J.; Poole v. Protection Ins. Co. 14 Conn. 47.

[17] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *868; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 835, 836; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 898 et seq., pp. 1118 et seq.; sec. 1086, p. 1352; 2 Phillips on Marine Ins. (3d ed.) 473, sec. 1786; Stevens on Average (5th ed.) 223.

several distinct articles, and insurers are liable for a total loss of any specific thing.[18]

In a Federal case the warranty was "free from all average" without any exception. The insurance was upon personal effects belonging to assured and his family. It was also stipulated that all claims were to be adjusted according to customs of English Lloyds. There was a total loss with the exception that certain articles, of little value in comparison with the value at which the entire property was insured, were saved. Upon the assertion that the sole question was whether the loss was total or not no allowance was made for the articles so saved in specie and judgment was rendered for the full policy amount. Upon appeal, however, it was decided that the contract of insurance should be applied distributively to the different articles insured and therefore the value of the articles saved must be deducted from the total insured value of the personal effects, accordingly the judgment below was modified to this extent and as so modified was affirmed. It was also determined that the clause "warranted free from all average" was in the nature of an exception to the liability of insurer and should be construed, strictly against him; also that in view of the stipulation as to adjustment by the custom of English Lloyds and of the fact that the policy was that of an English corporation there was a presumption that the words in the average clause were used in the sense in which they were understood in the English law.[18a]

§ 2711. The question of addition of successive losses to reach the limitation: cases.—Under a policy on a ship providing that the insurers should not be liable for a partial loss under five per cent it is held in Massachusetts that successive partial losses occurring upon different passages by distinct storms or gales cannot be aggregated to reach the five per cent limitation, and that assured has the burden of proving, in case of two several disasters, that there was a partial loss amounting to five per cent from one gale or disaster.[19] The doctrine of this case is but the affirmance of a decision rendered in the same state nearly half a century prior thereto, under a voyage policy on the ship providing against liability for a particular average, unless it amounted to five per cent, and the vessel sustained damage in a gale and several months thereafter by collision with another vessel, it being held that the two losses could not be aggregated.[20] And both these decisions are followed in a Maine case in a policy upon the ship against partial loss under the same percentage.[1] Mr. Justice Story, however, while declaring no rule as to the ship, suggests the impracticability of ascertaining the injury to the ship by successive gales, especially where there has been great straining until she has been overhauled in port, and says in effect that he cannot see how the words should receive a different construction as to the ship and cargo.[2] In an English case a time policy on a ship provided, "The ship and freight shall be and are warranted free from average under three pounds per cent, unless general or the ship be stranded, sunk, or burnt." A loss was incurred on two successive voyages during the currency of the policy, although the loss on each particular voyage was under the specified rate per cent, but total loss added together exceeded three pounds per cent. It was held that the losses might be lumped together to reach the limited per cent so far as the voyages, though consisting of several passages, constituted an entire, distinct, and separate voyage.[3] Under another decision, the case being that of a voyage policy on the ship "free from average under three per cent unless general," distinct losses arising at different times were added together to reach the limitation.[4] As will be noted, the above cases were those of insurances upon the ship both under voyage and time policies. In another case, however, the stipulation provided against liability for any partial loss on goods, vessel, or freight under five per cent, "exclusive in each case," of all charges and expenses incurred for the purpose of ascertaining and proving the loss, and it was declared by Mr. Justice Story that successive losses on the cargo in the course of the voyage could be aggregated to reach the rate per cent limited, and also that the words "in each case" referred to the three separate subjects of insurance—goods, vessel, and freight.[5]

[18] Duff v. MacKensie, 3 Com. B. (N.S.) 16, 26 L. J. C. P. 313, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1025; Wilkinson v. Hyde, 3 Com. B. (N. S.) 30, 27 L. J. C. P. 116, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 482.

[18a] Canton Ins. Office, Ltd. v. Woodside, 90 Fed. 301, 33 C. C. A. 63, 61 U. S. App. 214, 28 Ins. L. J. 269, modifying Woodside v. Canton Ins. Office, Ltd. (U. S. D. C.) 84 Fed. 283. (In 90 Fed. 301 the words "personal effects" and "master's effects" etc., are discussed.)

[19] Paddock v. Commercial Ins. Co. 104 Mass. 521.

§ 2712. Same subject: conclusion.—In considering this question the main division is that of insurances upon cargo and freight and

[20] Brooks v. Oriental Ins. Co. 7 Pick (24 Mass.) 259.

[1] Hagar v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 59 Me. 460.

[2] Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987, per Story, J.

[3] Stewart v. Merchants' Marine Ins. Co. 16 Q. B. D. 619, 625, 55 L. J. Q. B. 81, 53 L. T. 892, 34 W. R. 208, 5 Asp. M. C. 506, 14 Q. B. D. 555.

[4] Blackett v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 2 Tyrw. 266, 2 Cromp. & J. 244, 1 L. J. Ex. 101, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 179.

[5] Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987; Brooks v. Oriental Ins. Co. 7 Pick. (24 Mass.) 259, 267, per Putnam, J.

upon the ship. As to the ship, the division of voyage and time policies exists, and under the latter the point is presented of separate and distinct voyages during the continuance of the risk and of an entire voyage, although consisting of several passages. As to goods and freight, the rule permits the aggregation of successive averages occurring on the voyage, passage, or period during the continuance of the risk on that subject insured. It is clearly evident, however, from an examination of all the cases above noted by us that they are conflicting so far as the ship is concerned, and if only the decisions in this country are considered, we have the Massachusetts and Maine cases directly asserting a doctrine against the aggregation of successive partial losses occurring upon different passages by distinct storms or gales, while opposed thereto is the opinion of that eminent jurist, Mr. Justice Story; although this is somewhat weakened by the fact that, in his argument, he asserts that he is both for and against the addition of successive losses, and also by his declaration that he would be inclined to adopt the decision in the earlier Massachusetts case were it not that the case before him related only to the cargo.[6] Again, in England the result of the most recent case, as deduced by Mr. Maclachlan,[7] is

[6] Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987, per Story, J.

[7] Opinions of Text-writers.—Mr. Parsons is of the opinion that successive losses may be added, and that "the weight both of reason and authority lead to the conclusion," although he qualifies this statement by adding: "A distinction in this respect may exist between the ship and the cargo, because it is said that the damage done to the ship at different times may be more easily discriminated than the damage to the cargo, which can only be discovered at the end of the voyage:" 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 635. Mr. Phillips says: "In regard to the cargo and freight, the practice of adjustments has always been to estimate the rate of the exception upon the aggregate loss of each passage or period during which the risk continues on the same subject;" and he adds: "The weight of authority leads to the conclusion that the exception applies to the aggregate of successive losses on the ship in the same manner as on the cargo:" 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 468, sec. 1780. So Mr. Arnould is of opinion that there never has been any doubt as to the freight and goods, "that the true rule is to take the aggregate amount of the whole damage occasioned in the course of the voyage; . . . that the rule is the same with regard to the ship, also:" 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *866. Mr. Maclachlan exhaustively considers the question, noting and comparing four of the cases considered under the last section. (Stewart v. Merchants' Marine Ins. Co. 16 Q. B. D. 619, 55 L. J. Q. B. 81, 53 L. T. 892, 34 W. R. 208, 5 Asp. M. C. 506; Brooks v. Oriental Ins. Co. 7 Pick. (24 Mass.) 259; Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987; Blackett v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 2 Cromp. & J. 250, 2 Lyr. 266, 1 L. J. Ex. 101, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 179. And in this connection he exhaustively discusses the use and meaning of the term "average," and says: "The root of all this difference and error is to be in conflict with the Massachusetts and Maine cases, but is in line with the intimation of Mr. Justice Story, favoring the aggregation of successive losses, but it qualifies that suggestion or opinion so far as time policies are concerned; and the same qualification, so far as this English case has any weight here, extends to Mr. Phillips' rule [8] and also so much of Mr. Parsons' rule as has any positive force.[9] It will be noted, however, although Mr. Parsons' opinion as first stated by him is positive enough, yet he immediately thereafter adds a qualifying clause, the effect of which is to take away the force of the preceding opinion and to leave no rule whatever stated as to the ship. With reference, however, to the conclusions arrived at by Mr. Parsons, Mr. Phillips, and Mr. Arnould,[10] the fact exists that the more recent Massachusetts and English cases and the Maine case above noted do not enter as a found in the term 'average' erroneously viewed as a general term nomen generale. . . . The use of this term differs in different countries," and that "in England the use of it has always been one precise and definite meaning," and he concludes that the result of the last decision in England (Stewart v. Merchants' Marine Ins. Co. 16 Q. B. D. 619) "is that the purposes of the three and five per cent clauses of the memorandum. Averages may be added to make up the percentage. In respect of ship, such averages may be added as occur within the agreed voyage in a voyage policy, or in composing several passages in its entirety. In respect of goods or freight, such averages may be added as occur during the voyage, or any part of it, on which and whilst these subjects of insurance are at risk." He severely criticizes, however, not only this case but also two of the others noted, viz., Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987; and Blackett v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 2 Cromp. & J. 250, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 179, and evidently does not agree with the conclusions favoring the aggregation of successive losses: 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 829 et seq.; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 893 et seq., pp. 1078 et seq. And see note, "Upon the origin, meaning, and history of the term 'average' as used in the maritime law:" Id. 919–26, where it is said: "Average, as the English form is of this ancient classical term, when used in connection with the contract of marine insurance, signifies the whole purpose of that contract, namely, the adverting from the individual adventurer by interposition of the underwriter of all the immediate consequences of the perils mentioned." But see Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 893, pp. 1116 et seq.; sec. 1032, p. 1289; Lowndes on General Average (4th ed.) 270. The memorandum clauses are in the English policy and in Lloyds' form: "Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average unless general. Sugar, tobacco, hemp, flax, hides, and skins are warranted free from average under five pounds per cent, and all other goods, also the ship and freight, are warranted free from average under three pounds per cent unless general or the ship be stranded."

[8] See note "Opinions of text-writers" above.

[9] See note "Opinions of Text-writers" above.

[10] See note "Opinions of Text-writers" above.

factor into the consideration of the point by them.[11] And this is important, although it cannot be assumed that these writers would or would not have changed or qualified their opinions, even with these cases before them had they been then decided. It may be noted here, however, that these later Massachusetts and Maine cases in effect affirm the doctrine of the early Massachusetts case considered by Mr. Phillips,[12] in determining what constituted the weight of authority, and the same point applies to Mr. Parsons'[13] opinion so far as it positively asserts anything. Mr. Maclachlan's[14] learned discussion, wherein he criticizes the result of the decision before him, is certainly entitled to weight, and we regret that he could not consider the more recent Massachusetts and Maine cases.[15] If the question rested alone upon the number of decisions in this country, the rule as to the ship is against the aggregation of successive losses, although mere numbers do not necessarily constitute what is known as the weight of authority, yet the constant reassertion of a principle is another matter. Nevertheless many reasons will suggest themselves to those familiar with this branch of the law and the practice of adjustments why there should in numerous cases be an addition of successive losses on the ship. In view, therefore, of the fact that the question is beset with so many difficulties, it is with much hesitation that we incline to the rule which permits the aggregation of successive losses under voyage policies, and also under time policies within the continuance of the risk, provided in the latter case such losses are also within a separate and distinct voyage, although in its entirety it may comprise several passages, unless the policy provides otherwise, as it does in some cases.[15a]

§ 2713. Where liability is limited to invoice value.—Where the goods were damaged to an amount not equal to the invoice value, but after the damage were worth the invoice value with the cost of importation added, and it was stipulated in the bill of lading that "in the event of damage, for which the ship is responsible, the liability shall not exceed the invoice value," it was held that the carrier was liable for the actual damage.[16]

[11] These cases were not decided until after the publication cited of their works.

[12] See note "Opinions of Text-writers" above.

[13] See note "Opinions of Text-writers" above.

[14] See note "Opinions of Text-writers" above.

[15] Paddock v. Commercial Ins. Co. 104 Mass. 521; Hagar v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 59 Me. 460.

[15a] See Marine ins. act 1906 of England, sec. 77, given under Appendix C herein.

[16] Brown v. Cunard Steamship Co. 147 Mass. 58, 16 N. E. 717, criticizing The Lydian Monarch, 23 Fed. 298; Pearse v. Quebec Steamship Co. 24 Fed. 285, 289.

§ 2714. Particular and general average losses cannot be aggregated, nor are general average charges included in partial loss.—If the particular average is less than the specified rate per cent. there can be no recovery, even though when added to the general average it exceeds the rate limited,[17] and it is held that in estimating the damages under a provision that there shall be no right of abandonment unless in adjustment, as of a partial loss, the sum to be paid by the insurer equals one-half the agreed value of the vessel, general average charges are not included.[18]

§ 2715. Addition of loss by jettison and salvage expenses.—If the policy stipulates against partial loss and to be "free from average" unless it amounts to ten per cent, a loss occasioned by necessary jettison may be aggregated with salvage expenses to equal the specified rate per cent; at least this is so held in a case where the boat, owing to stress of weather, ran upon a rock, necessitating a jettison and incurring of said expenses.[19]

§ 2716. Percentage clause qualified by agreement as to salvage and expenses.—If the policy stipulates against liability under a specified per cent, but the insurers agree in addition to pay proportionably for salvage, they are bound for their proportion of salvage expense, though the loss does not amount to the specified rate per cent limited.[20]

§ 2717. Whether certain other charges and expenses may be added.—If expenses are incurred to recover articles totally lost, the underwriters are not liable therefor where they are not responsible for the principal loss by reason of its being only a total loss of part under an insurance free from average.[1] So under a clause making it the duty of assured, in case of any loss or misfortune, to use all reasonable and proper means for the security, preservation, and relief of the property, although the insurers are liable for a proportion of any reasonable expenses incurred in saving the property from the operation of the perils insured against, yet it cannot be added to the damage sustained by the goods to equal the rate per cent specified.[2] The policy may expressly exclude all charges

[17] See Billow v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 La. Ann. 57; Hotchkiss v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Rob. (24 N. Y.) 489; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *866; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 834; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 894 et seq., pp. 1117 et seq.; 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 466, sec. 1779.

[18] Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co. 22 Pick. (39 Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727.

[19] Gazzam v. Cincinnati Ins. Co. 6 Ohio, 71.

[20] Shultz v. Ohio Ins. Co. 1 B. Mon. (17 Ky.) 336.

[1] Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389. See § 2706 herein.

[2] Indianapolis Ins. Co. v. Mason, 11 Ind. 171. As to liability under the suing and laboring clause, see Cory v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14; and expenses incurred for the purpose of ascertaining and proving the loss.[3] Otherwise, a question might exist whether such charges and expenses could be added to the damage to bring the loss within an exception limiting liability under the policy, although it seems to be the rule that such expenses and charges are not to be added to carry the loss beyond the limitation. So Mr. Phillips, in determining "whether the expenses of surveys, certificates, protests, and of the adjustment of the loss are to be included in determining whether a loss comes within any exceptions," thinks that the proper rule is that such charges and expenses must fall upon the party on whom the loss must have rested in case its amount had been ascertained without any expense.[4]

In a Federal case where the insurance was upon the hull under a stipulation to pay the loss if amounting to three per cent. it was held that while items for surveys, protest and adjusters charges were proper charges if the loss amounted to said per cent, still they could not be availed of to increase the loss to three per cent. An arbitrary charge of a salaried officer for superintending repairs was also rejected, it not being shown what his salary was, so that there was no basis for estimating what would be the pro rata for his time. The injury was to the rudder and because making full repairs would have necessitated a delay it was not repaired so as to put it in the condition it was in before the injury although it was made efficient, but the value of the vessel was thereby depreciated. Upon this point it was also decided that while something might be added to the cost of repairs for such diminution of value, still this was subject to the proviso that the combined amount shall not be in excess of the estimated cost of making complete repairs less the usual deduction for improvements; and as there was no evidence sufficient to show that said cost of proper repairs would have equaled the stipulated per cent the estimated depreciation in the value of the vessel could not be added to the cost of repairs as made, to bring the loss within the policy terms.[4a]

Under the Marine Insurance Act of 1906 of England "expenses

Juhel v. Marine Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412. In this case it is held that expenses incurred in attempting to recover the property may be recovered in addition to total loss.

[3] So excluded in the policies in Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987; Indianapolis Ins. Co. v. Mason, 11 Ind. 171.

[4] 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 476 et seq., sec. 1791; Benecke's Principles of Indemnities, 474; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *876; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 834; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 894 et seq., pp. 1117 et seq.

[4a] Bull v. Insurance Co. of North America, 218 Fed. 616, 134 C. C. A. 374, 45 Ins. L. J. 521. See § 2702 herein.

incurred by or on behalf of the assured for the safety or preservation of the subject-matter insured, other than general average and salvage charges, are called particular charges. Particular charges are not included in particular average.[4b]

§ 2718. Exception of loss under specified percentage: other insurers.—Under a policy containing the clause "free from particular average" under fifty per cent, certain amounts paid for agents expenses and salvors were claimed as reimbursable under the sue and labor clause, but upon exceptions taken it was held that recovery thereof was precluded when there are other insurers and the proportion of loss payable by the respondent is less than fifty per cent of the amount of the policy.[4c]

§ 2719. Exception as to leakage, breakage, dampness, etc.—If the policy expressly stipulates against liability for leakage or for damage or injury to goods from dampness, rust, change of flavor, etc., unless the same be occasioned from a specifically designated cause, reference must be had particularly to that cause in determining whether the insurer is liable. Thus, the insurers are exempt from liability for all leakage, ordinary or extraordinary, and from whatever cause, whether gradual or violent in its operation, except those specified in case the policy provides against liability for leakage unless occasioned by stranding or collision.[5] So where the policy stipulated against liability for leakage on molasses, etc., unless occasioned by stranding or collision, but in the margin was this memorandum: "On molasses, etc., if by shifting of cargo, owing to stress of weather, any cask become stove or broken, the staves started by each other, so as to lose their entire contents, and the same amount as to fifteen per cent on the quantity laden (being five per cent over ordinary leakage) the said excess of five per cent or over on the quantity shipped to be paid for by the company, but the company not liable for leakage arising from other causes than above mentioned," it was held that there could be no recovery for any loss by leakage, unless occasioned by stranding, nor for any loss by shifting of the cargo, unless such loss amounted [4b] See marine insur. act 1906 of England, sec. 64, subdiv. (2) sec. 76, subdiv. (4) given in Appendix C herein. See also § 2697a herein.

[4c] Buzby v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 31 Fed. 422 (Butler, J., briefly considered the point whether insurers were liable and said that "In this country it is undecided" but evidently the decision in sustaining the exceptions was based upon Aitchison v. Lohre, 4 App. Cas. 755, 2 Q. B. D. 501, 3 Q. B. D. 558, 49 L. J. Q. B. 123, 41 L. T. 323, 28 W. R. 1, 4 Asp. M. C. 168.

[5] Cory v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14.

As to leakage, breakage, "extraordinary leakage:" marine risks and losses, see §§ 2780, 2780a herein.

to fifteen per cent of the quantity laden;[6] and in another case wherein it was stipulated that the liability should not extend to leakage on liquids, etc., "unless occasioned by stranding or collision," and further providing by indorsement that the insurance was "on spirits of turpentine in cases packed in boxes on deck, free from loss by wet, breakage, leakage, or exposure," it was held that the insurers were exempted from liability for losses of which leakage was the proximate cause, whatever might be the cause by which the leakage itself was occasioned and, consequently, although occasioned by a peril insured against.[7] Again, in a policy on champagne wine valued by the case, it was provided that the insurers should not be liable for "damage or injury to goods by dampness, rust, change of flavor, or by being spotted, discolored, musty, or moldy, unless the same be caused by actual contact with sea water with the articles damaged occasioned by sea peril," and it was held that, so far as the sea water came into actual contact with any case or package, the insurers were liable for any injury occasioned either by such direct contact or by heat or dampness thereby generated, but not for any injury by dampness or change of flavor to other packages, no part of which came into actual contact with the sea water,[8] and under a like clause in a policy on a cargo of barley in sacks, the malting quality of which was impaired, it was held that assuming that the damage to the sacks of barley which were not reached by the sea water, was caused by damp vapor arising from other sacks that were reached by the sea water which came into the vessel through a peril of the seas, such damage was not caused by actual contact of sea water with the articles damaged within the meaning of the policy, and that the company was not liable;[9] and the same ruling has been applied to an insurance on packages of teas under a like clause.[10] But if the cargo insured is in bulk, and of such a character that actual contact of sea water with a part may by absorption extend to the whole, such other portions will be affected by the cause designated as that insurers will be liable for the whole damage, but if the damage is caused by effluvia emitted by another part of the cargo of a distinct character, the insurer is not liable, even though such latter cargo is damaged by sea water. This is so held in a case of grain in bulk and hides.[11]

[6] McLaughlin v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. 57 Me. 170.

[7] Neilson v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. 455.

[8] Cory v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14.

[9] Neideinger v. Insurance Co. of North America, 18 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 297, 11 Fed. 514.

[10] Cator v. Great Western Ins. Co. 8 L. R. C. P. 552, 42 L. J. C. P. 266, 29 L. T. 136, 21 W. R. 850, 2 Asp. M. C. 90.

[11] Woodruff v. Commercial Ins. Co. 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 122.

If a vessel upon becoming disabled at sea is stranded while being towed, and her bottom is damaged by pounding upon a reef, and upon first warehousing her cargo during repairs it appears in good condition although it is damaged by contact with sea water, handling, and being detained in a tropical climate, there is a loss by leakage occasioned by stranding within a policy excepting leakage unless occasioned by stranding, the policy also containing an exception of particular average unless the vessel be stranded.[12]

§ 2720. Whether under exception of loss under specified percentage the premium should be deducted.—It is held in Massachusetts that under an exception of liability "for a particular average" the percentage must be reckoned on the valuation, less the premium.[13] This rule has not been acted on in England, but the rule there is, says Mr. Arnould, "that the underwriter is liable whenever the loss under the limitations already pointed out amounts to five per cent or three per cent on the value in the policy or on the prime cost plus the premium and other costs of insurance," and this is restated by Mr. Maclachlan.[14] Mr. Phillips says, "The more scientific rule is to include the premium in estimating the value." [15] Mr. Parsons is of opinion that it should not be included "or else that it should be included also in estimating the amount of the value insured." [16]

§ 2721. Exception of liability under specified percentage: deviation.—If the policy stipulates against liability except the loss amount to a certain percentage and there is a deviation the insurer is not liable, unless the amount of the damage or loss sustained before the deviation equals the rate per cent specified, at least, this would seem to be the rule.[17] The case of a deviation, however, apparently rests upon different principles than that where the risk has terminated by its own limitation, and not by the breach of an implied condition in the policy.

§ 2722. Exception of claim arising from canceling of charter.—If a policy upon freight stipulates that "no claim arising from the canceling of any charter" shall be allowed, and the adventure is

[12] De Farconnet v. Western Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 110 Fed. 405, aff'd 122 Fed. 448, 58 C. C. A. 612, s. c. 190 U. S. 558, 47 L. ed. 1183, 23 Sup. Ct. 854.

[13] Brooks v. Oriental Ins. Co. 7 Pick. (24 Mass.) 259.

[14] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *870; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 838; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 900, p. 1122.

[15] 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 476, sec. 1790.

[16] 2 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 135, 136. See also 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 270, 271.

[17] Hare v. Travis, 7 Barn. & C. 14, 9 D. & R. 748, 5 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 348, 31 R. R. 139, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas 357.

frustrated by delay occasioned by perils of the sea while the vessel is on her way to a port of loading, and the voyage contemplated by the charter becomes impossible, the charter is not canceled, no agreement to actually set aside the charter being made by the parties, and insurers are liable.[18] [18] In re Jameson & Newcastle Steamship Freight Ins. Assoc. 2 L. R. Q. B. D. (1895) 90, 64 L. J. Q. B. 560, 14 R. R. 444, 72 L. T. 648, 43 W. R. 530, 7 Asp. M. C. 593, rev'g 1 L. R. Q. B. D. (1895) 510, per Lord Esher, M. R.

TITLE XI.

RISKS AND LOSSES.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

RISKS AND LOSSES.

§ 2730. What risks and losses may be insured against: liability: generally.
§ 2731. Abortion: public policy.
§ 2732. Accident disabling ship: chartered freight.
§ 2733. Advances: bottomry draft: entire contract: freight earned at intermediate port: salvage: owner's liability.
§ 2734. "All risks:" general policy: war risks.
§ 2734a. "All risks" mortality: policy on dog.
§ 2735. "All other perils," etc.: "all unavoidable perils:" "all such perils."
§ 2736. Same subject: instances.
§ 2736a. "Any cause whatever:" non-marine policy: war risk: total loss.
§ 2737. "Arrests, restraints, and detainments," etc.: marine risk.
§ 2738. "Arriving in port" does not cover arrival in cove.
§ 2739. "Unlawful" arrests, restraints, detainments, etc.
§ 2739a. Automatic sprinkler system: location: leakage: notice of defects.
§ 2739b. Automobile or motorcycle: "collision."
§ 2739c. Automobile or motorcycle: rented or used for passenger service or for hire: temporary use.
§ 2740. Bank's default: money deposited in bank: vested rights upon default.
§ 2740a. Bankers' policy: Lloyds: loss through forged bills: fraud.
§ 2741. Barratry defined: marine risk.
§ 2742. Barratry covers what: instances.
§ 2743. Barratry, what losses are not covered: general rules.
§ 2744. Barratry, what losses are not covered: instances.
§ 2745. Bilging: marine risks: "all other perils," etc.
§ 2746. Birth of issue.
§ 2747. Breach of promise of third party does not render insurer liable.
§ 2748. Capture or seizure: marine risk.
§ 2749. Cargo: taking on board additional cargo: marine risk.

§ 2750. Carriers: liability of warehousemen: conflict of laws.
§ 2750a. Carriers: insurance against derailment during transportation of goods: auto truck.
§ 2751. Collision: marine risk: generally.
§ 2752. What does and does not constitute collision: generally: instances.
§ 2753. Collision with "piers or stages or other structures," when not stranding.
§ 2754. Collision as loss by perils of the sea: proximate cause: damage to other vessel.
§ 2755. Collision: running down clause.
§ 2755a. Collision: sums paid for removal of obstructions: statutory commissioners.
§ 2756. Confounding of goods by breaking open of packages, etc.: marine risk.
§ 2757. Contingent liability of insurer: carrier: construction of policy.
§ 2758. Conversion: recovery and disposal of property by underwriter.
§ 2759. Decayed, rotten, etc.: marine risks.
§ 2760. Delay in voyage.
§ 2761. Electrical machinery and fixtures: electric lighting: fire risk: knowledge of insurers.
§ 2762. Embargo, what constitutes.
§ 2763. Embargo: effect upon charter-party.
§ 2764. Embargo: domestic and foreign.
§ 2765. Embargo: acts of foreign assured's own government.
§ 2766. Employee's fidelity: fidelity guaranty: contract guaranty.
§ 2767. Expenditures necessitated by the loss: marine risk.
§ 2768. Explosion defined.
§ 2768a. "One explosion:" boilers in battery form: "explosion" defined in policy: Pabst Brewing Co. case.
§ 2769. Explosion under fire risks: steam boiler.
§ 2770. Same subject: spontaneous combustion.
§ 2771. Same subject: where combustion and explosion inseparably connected.
§ 2772. Same subject: where fire precedes or causes the explosion.
§ 2772a. Boiler explosion "caused by unavoidable external violence:" marine risk.
§ 2773. Fallen building: what constitutes.
§ 2774. Falling walls, buildings, and structures.
§ 2775. Fallen building, etc.: wall weakened by previous fire.
§ 2776. Fear of danger: blockade: apprehension of embargo, etc.: marine risk.
§ 2777. Same subject: cases.
§ 2778. Same subject: conclusion.
§ 2779. Fire.
§ 2780. Fire: marine risk.

§ 2781. Freight.
§ 2782. Hail.
§ 2783. Hire: chartered freight: delay: derangement of machinery or engines: want of repairs: "free from any claim consequent on loss of time."
§ 2784. "Hull and machinery" does not cover "disbursements."
§ 2784a. Hull and machinery: "latent defects:" perils of "trial trips."
§ 2785. Improper navigation of ship.
§ 2786. Insolvency of purchasers: returns from trade: credit insurance.
§ 2787. Insolvency of debtors: meaning of "loss:" credit insurance.
§ 2788. Land dangers: marine risks.
§ 2789. Leakage and breakage: marine risks.
§ 2789a. Ordinary leakage and "extraordinary leakage" distinguished.
§ 2790. Lightning.
§ 2791. Live stock: same, slaves classed as animals.
§ 2792. Loss after termination of risk consequent upon injury during life of policy.
§ 2793. Same subject: conclusion.
§ 2794. Mortgage: unmarketableness by reason of liens, defects of title, etc.
§ 2794a. Mortgage clause: distinctions, validity and construction: generally.
§ 2794b. Mortgagor's and mortgagee's rights: generally.
§ 2795. When mortgagee's interest not affected by mortgagor's acts.
§ 2795a. Same subject: instances.
§ 2795b. When mortgagee's interest affected by mortgagor's acts: when mortgagee not insured party, but appointee.
§ 2796. Overheating without combustion.
§ 2797. Perils of the seas and rivers: dangers of navigation.
§ 2798. Same subject: what losses are covered.
§ 2799. Same subject: what losses are not covered.
§ 2800. Personal injuries to employees: against liability or for losses paid § 2801. "Personal injury and loss of human life" caused by explosion: recovery back of money paid therefor by insured.
§ 2802. Personal injuries to several by one cause constitutes separate accidents and not one accident.
§ 2803. Personal injuries to persons not employees: against liability or for losses paid.
§ 2804. Pirates, rovers, assailing thieves: marine risks.
§ 2805. Passage money: loss of.
§ 2805a. Plate glass insurance.
§ 2805b. Plate glass insurance: window breaking by suffragists: "civil commotion" or "rioting."
§ 2806. Profits.
§ 2807. Profits of lessee.

§ 2808. Promise of insurer to pay although loss not covered by policy.
§ 2809. Promissory note.
§ 2810. Railroad, right to recover from, although insurance paid.
§ 2811. Removal of goods in case of threatened fire: damages and expenses incurred.
§ 2812. Same subject: duty of assured: stipulation.
§ 2813. Same subject: how far assured must exert himself to save property.
§ 2814. Rents.
§ 2814a. Repairs of building by assurer: assured's liability to third persons.
§ 2815. Ship-owner's liability.
§ 2815a. Small-pox: assumption by assured of risk of: warranty.
§ 2816. Stranding defined: marine risk.
§ 2817. Stranding: cases.
§ 2818. Sue and labor clause: rescue clause: marine risk.
§ 2819. Telegraph cable.
§ 2820. Tenant's liability to pay rent: release of insurer.
§ 2821. Theft: fire risk, burglary or automobile risks.
§ 2822. Title insurance: same, mortgagee: defects in mortgagor's title.
§ 2823. Warehouseman: storage of goods in which assured has no interest: limited liability.
§ 2824. Water used to extinguish fire and save property.
§ 2824a. Water supply system useless.
§ 2825. Wind: tornado: hurricane.
§ 2825a. Workmen's compensation: insurance risk.

§ 2730. What risks and losses may be insured against: liability: generally.—There are certain general principles governing contracts of insurance and liability thereunder. Thus all losses or risks may be insured against except such as are repugnant to public policy, positive prohibition, or are occasioned by the insurer's own fraud or misconduct; there must be some interest at risk, but it is not necessary that the thing insured should have a price or be capable of being assigned.[19] And within these limits the parties may as a rule make such contracts as they choose, or may qualify or limit the liability assumed either by specification of the amount of indemnity or by the enumeration of certain perils, or by the exclusion of specified perils, or by a limitation of the trade in which the assured in marine risks may engage, or by other limitations in other risks too numerous to be stated, or the policy may be against all risks. It may be stated as a general rule that the loss must be occasioned by one of the perils in the policy to entitle the assured to recover.[20] The risk run must also correspond with that understood and intended to be run at the time of subscribing the policy in order to subject the insurers to the loss.[1] So the liability on a fire policy is simply to indemnify the assured for any loss actually sustained by him through the burning of the insured premises.[2] And as indemnity is the object of insurance, it is a rule in marine risks that where the loss is of a like nature with the specified peril, or substantially within its meaning, the underwriters are liable.[3] The loss of the voyage as to the cargo is not a loss of the voyage as to the ship.[4] And if a vessel by reason of the perils against which she is insured is unable to proceed with her original cargo, it is a loss of the voyage, though she may be capable of performing it with a lighter cargo.[5] If a cargo is insured on a canal boat against perils of the "seas, rivers," etc., these words will cover and include the perils of canal navigation.[6] So a contract of insurance must be regarded as a fire risk where the hazard is fire alone, and the subject is an unfinished vessel never afloat for a voyage and not a subject for marine navigation.[7] If it is clearly evident from the order for insurance and acceptance that neutral and belligerent risks were intended to be covered, such risks will be included.[8]

[19] Bell v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 5 Rob. (La.) 423, 39 Am. Dec. 542. As to void and illegal insurances, see §§ 2506 et seq. herein.

What risks and losses insured against in case of shipments to be subsequently approved and endorsed on marine policy, etc.; distinctions; waiver.—As we have elsewhere stated, marine insurance may be effected upon goods, merchandise, or property stipulated to be subsequently declared or indorsed upon the policy or otherwise,[8a] but it is nevertheless pertinent here to consider the point, with others, that in a Federal case a distinction is made, as to risks and losses or liability, between an open marine policy and one which is restrictive in that it stipulates that no risk is to attach to the policy until the amount and description of the same shall be approved and endorsed thereon by insurer, to be valued at the sum so indorsed, and also providing that "premiums as may be agreed upon [20] Swan v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 168, 4 L. ed. 361; Cleveland v. Winn, 8 Mass. 308.

[1] Norris v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 84, 2 Am. Dec. 360.

[2] Flanagan v. Camden Mutual Ins. Co. 25 N. J. L. (1 Dutch.) 506.

[3] Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. St. 491.

[4] Alexander v. Baltimore Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 370, 2 L. ed. 650.

[5] Abbott v. Broome, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 292, 2 Am. Dec. 187.

[6] Protection Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 6 Ohio St. 553.

[7] Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Pa. St. 2, 94 Am. Dec. 65.

[8] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bathurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 159.

[8a] See §§ 1576, 1736 herein.

at the time of the indorsement to be settled monthly in cash," for in such case the policy is held not changed into an open and unrestricted policy covering all risks which the assured elects to report, even after notice of loss, notwithstanding a custom extending over a long period of time as to reporting risks when convenient in due course of business after the departure of the vessel in the manner and form hereinafter stated, and the uniform acceptance of risks by insurer.[8b]

As a premise for the conclusions in this case said stipulations are divided into three parts or conditions: (1) Approval of the amount and character of the risk; (2) An endorsement thereof upon the policy by insurer, and; (3) an agreement as to the premium at the time of the indorsement. It is also declared in respect thereto that the first is a condition precedent and is essential and vital as affecting the entire character of the contract as a distinct one with relation to each shipment and so qualifies the usual unrestricted terms of an open policy. It is further asserted, however, that the other two conditions are not so clearly essential although the third one is a condition precedent and subsidiary to the first.

In addition to what is above stated it appeared that an open policy which had been continuously renewed for many years, had been attached to the front page of a blank book with printed pages and columns for this stipulated entries, and in this there was written an agreement that indorsements thereon were to be deemed made on the policy. Thereafter indorsements were entered in new pass books issued from time to time, but the policy was left pasted in one of the old books filled with indorsements. Blank insurance orders or "slips" were also furnished by insurer, which were filled out upon receipt of information as to the name of the vessel and the amount of shipment and these were sent at intervals and frequently in batches, usually through the mails, often after the vessel had been at sea for some days, and sometimes after its arrival abroad, and although in some instances of this latter kind insurer had refused premiums no risk had been rejected prior to the one in question in this action, and in this particular instance at the time the notice of shipments was sent and received by mail, both parties knew that there had been a total loss of the goods. The premiums were, however, fixed by a schedule of rules furnished by insurer, and not at each shipment.

Accordingly the point as to the distinction between risks and losses under an open marine policy and the insurance here under consideration was decided as first above stated; and it was further held that assurer was not bound to approve a risk after report of a loss, in the absence of evidence of a previous approval, and that no waiver was established by the course of dealing; also that the indorsement by insurer's clerk of a slip of paper notifying insurer of a shipment to be covered in the usual way, with the amount of the premium and the check mark indicating its readiness for entry in the books, did not show an acceptance of the risk in the face of its positive rejection by insurer as soon as it learned that it was on property already lost of which insurer is notified without delay.[8c]

[8b] See § 158 herein.

§ 2731. Abortion: public policy.—Death as the result of an abortion is not ground of recovery, it being against public policy to permit the enforcement of the claim.[9]

[8c] Delaware Ins. Co. v. S. S. White Dental Manufacturing Co. 109 Fed. 334, 48 C. C. A. 382, 30 Ins. L. J. 961 (rev'g 105 Fed. 642, certiorari denied 183 U. S. 700, 46 L. ed. 396, 22 Sup. Ct. 436), citing Orient Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 401, 16 L. ed. 524 (a case where insurance was upon coffee "laden or to be laden on board" etc., additional premium "to be fixed at the time of endorsement and such clauses to apply as the company may insert as the risks are successively reported;" and distinction is made as to the premium in this class of policies and the ordinary running policy in which the rate of premium to be paid is ascertained and inserted in the body of the policy at the time of its execution and the contract becomes complete and the policy attaches, etc., while in the policy in question there was something more to be done, in order to make the contract complete, than merely to declare the ship, that is the assured must pay the additional premium as fixed in respect to the particular shipment in order to make it complete and binding; holding also that unless the right to increase the rate is reserved in certain contingencies the rate cannot be thereafter varied by one of the parties if none of the contingencies exist. This case is also considered under § 1088, at pp. 2177, 2178 herein, and as to premium to cover additional risks to be approved, etc.: augmentation or diminution of premium, see § 1093 herein); Doville v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 12 La. Ann. 259; Schaefer v. Baltimore Marine Ins. Co. 33 Md. 109; Platho v. Merchants & Manufacturers Ins. Co. 38 Mo. 248; and considering Emery v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 398; Hartshorn v. Shoe & Leather Dealers Ins. Co. 15 Gray (81 Mass.) 240; E. Carver Co. v. Manufacturers Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 214. See Petrie v. Phenix Ins. Co. 132 N. Y. 137, 30 N. E. 380 (canal cargo policy: stipulation that risk not insured unless indorsed, approved and signed by insurer or its agent: evidence held to justify submission of acceptance to jury and its verdict that risk accepted was final). See § 1736 herein.

As to last point in above text, see § 104a herein.

As to "lost or not lost" insurance retroactive, see also §§ 105–108, 1443, 1444, 1563, 1564 herein.

As to goods to be shipped from time to time: insurance not to cover more than a specified amount by any one steamer or in any one place at one time: amount of insurance and not amount of loss is meant, see Hood Rubber Co. v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. 170 Fed. 939, 96 C. C. A. 99, 38 Ins. L. J. 1092, aff'g 161 Fed. 788.

[9] Hatch v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 550, 21 Am. Rep. 541, cited and principle applied in Burt v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 362, 366, 47 L. ed. 216, 23 Sup. Ct. 139.

Particular representations and

§ 2732. Accident disabling ship: chartered freight.—If an insurance is effected against loss of chartered freight under a clause in a charter party stipulating that the payment of the hire of the ship shall cease if, during the specified time, she becomes disabled by accident, and the ship sustains a damage by accident which is not discovered until after the expiration of the charter party, so that no loss of freight is sustained, no recovery can be had against the underwriters, even though renewal of the charter party is prevented by reason of delay for necessary repairs.[10]

§ 2733. Advances: bottomry draft: entire contract: freight earned at intermediate port: salvage: owner's liability.—If an insurance be effected on advances against a bottomry draft for the payment of which the vessel and freight are pledged, and the advances are made on an obligation of the master to pay within a specified time after arrival at the final port of destination, and the consignees at said port are directed to pay the same from the first amount of freight received, the contract is not divisible, the insurance begins when the risk begins, ends when it ends, and the lender's risk continues until the vessel reaches the final port or is lost. This contract differs from an insurance on ship or freight under a risk of this character. If freight is received at an intermediate port it does not then diminish the bottomry lender's risk on his advances, since it is not then legally available to him, and may never become so, and if the vessel founders and becomes a total loss before the final port is reached the insurers are liable, nor does the freight so earned and collected discharge the insurance pro tanto, although the bottomry lender would, however, be entitled to salvage, if any. As to the freight received, which was stated in a letter from the owner to be "only enough to pay expenses for discharging at a port of distress, and the owners got no benefit," it may be inferred that the master lawfully used it for the necessities of the voyage; nor under the German Code, article 452, does any personal liability rest upon the owner for contracts made by the master in his ordinary capacity. The perils insured against in this case were all those "of the seas which reduce the things hypothecated to a less value than the sums insured, or which prevent the collection of said draft in whole or in part." [11]

warranties; abortion; inquiries as to, see § 1987a herein.

Death caused by submission to illegal operation, see § 2616 herein.

[10] Hough v. Head, 54 L. J. Q. B. 294, 33 Week. Rep. 458, aff'd 55 L. J. Q. B. 43, 53 L. T. 809, 34 W. R. 160, 5 Asp. M. C. 505.

[11] Force v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 35 Fed. 767. Cited in Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mill Transportation Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 769, 155 Fed. 11, 17, 83 C. C. A. 607 (a case as to the limitation of liability of a shipowner to the proportion of any and all debts and liabilities that his

If advances to a vessel on a master's draft pledging vessel and freight are insured, and the managing owner by contract attached to such a draft pledges the vessel, owners, and freight, and agrees that said draft shall be paid out of the first freight, such advances are covered by the policy even though the draft on which they are made does not pledge vessel and freight. And in such case the payment of such draft and the consummation by execution of said contract need not precede issuing the policy in order to validate it, as it is sufficient that, if prior thereto, the agreement to pay and execution of the contract were made.[12]

§ 2734. "All risks:" general policy: war risks.—An insurance may be in general terms by a policy covering all risks. Thus, a policy against "all risks" inserted in writing covers everything that may happen except by the fraudulent acts of the insured.[13] And a policy insuring against all marine risks is just as binding and effectual as if the risks are specified in detail.[14] So an insurance on horses on a voyage against "all risks, including death from any individual share of the vessel bears to the whole, etc., under Act Cong. June 26, 1884, sec. 18, 23 Stat. 57, c. 121; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2945, and Rev. Stat. sec. 4283; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2943); Rudolf v. Brown (U. S. D. C.) 137 Fed. 106, 108 (a case of owner's liability for supplies; under above statutes of 1884 & 1851); The Colima (U. S. D. C.) 82 Fed. 665, 679 (a case of limitation of liability under Harter act; negligent loading, and object of statute); The Republic (Myers Excursion & Navigation Co., In re) 61 Fed. 109, 113, 9 C. C. A. 386 (a case of limitation of liability; corporate shipowners; construction, scope and object of statute); Miller v. O'Brien (U. S. D. C.) 59 Fed. 622, 623 (to point that general maritime rule is that if there be any salvage or any proceeds of any of the effects covered by bottomry the bondholders even attach thereon though ship be lost; also, liability of shipowner to contribute to payment of respondentia bond); Gokey v. Fort (U. S. D. C.) 44 Fed. 364, 365 (a case of limitation of liability; statutes of 1884, 1851 construed; collision; repairs); Laverty v. Clausen (U. S. D. C.) 40 Fed. 542, 543 (a case as to construction of limitation of liability of owners of vessels under statutes 1851, 1884); The Lykus (U. S. D. C.) 36 Fed. 919, 921 (case of advances on cargo; bottomry bond; freight); Miller v. O'Brien (U. S. D. C.) 35 Fed. 779, 781, 782, 783 (masters contract; bottomry bond; "I think that the 'obligation' that by the condition is to become void may be fairly construed as intended to mean only the personal obligation or agreement to pay the loan; leaving the pledge operative upon any salvage recoverable, in the same manner as where the saving clause is embodied in the instrument").

[12] Neall v. Union Marine Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 95 Fed. 491, aff'd 115 Fed. 776, 53 C. C. A. 338. Advances: advancements by charterer and master; advances on freight; description, see § 1706 herein. Bottomry and respondentia; description, see § 1710 herein.

[13] Goix v. Knox, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) Cas. 337. But see Marcy v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 11 La. Ann. 748.

[14] Parkhurst v. Gloucester Fishing Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 301, 1 Am. Rep. 105, 97 Am. Dec. 100.

cause whatever," will entitle assured to recover for the loss of a horse caused by injuries sustained on the voyage owing to heavy weather.[15]

An insurance, by an attached slip, against all risks in addition to the ordinary perils insured against in the usual form of a Lloyd's policy, will cover damage to goods by damp, wetting, and insects, owing to delay in transit by reason of the transport being disorganized by a civil war in Colombia the goods being insured from Savinilla, a seaport in Colombia, to Medellin a town in the interior, the transit being partly by rail, by boat up a river, and on mules.[15a]

A general policy unaccompanied with any warranty covers war risks of all kinds and of all countries.[16] This has reference necessarily, however, to such risks only as are legal, and involves other questions, such as concealment, etc., which have been considered elsewhere.[17] Where the underwriters assume the "risks contained in all regular policies," a loss by capture is within the policy. And parol evidence is not admissible to prove that the parties understood it as covering sea risks only.[18] But a loss happening from condemnation on the ground of an attempted rescue is not within a policy on the usual risks.[19] Whether a risk is a "marine" or "war risk" is sometimes a question; as when a steamer during the Civil War was chartered by the government and was wrecked by ice in the Potomac, it was held a "marine" risk.[20] And where the insurance

[15] Coit v. Smith, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 16.

[15a] Schloss v. Stevens, 75 L. J. K. B. 927, [1906] 2 K. B. 665, 11 Com. Cas. 270, 22 T. L. R. 774 (clause was: "Including all risk by craft or boats to and from the vessel and all risks [including fire] from the warehouse, factory or calendar while in transit by railway or any conveyances, and while in warehouse and/or shed or on wharf whilst awaiting forwarding or shipment and of transhipment and of all risks by land and by water by any conveyance until safely delivered into the consignees' warehouse or elsewhere.")

As to delay in voyage: risks and losses, see § 2760 herein.

Charter party: when duty of owner to effect insurance against war risks: damages, see Holland Gulf Stoomvart Mattschappij v. Watson Munro & Co. 13 Mar. L. C. N. S. 279. —Bailhache, J., 13 Mar. L. C. N. S. rev'd 113 L. T. 178.

[16] Barnewall v. Church, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 217, 2 Am. Dec. 180. See Parker v. Jones, 13 Mass. 173; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Edmond, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 138; Elting v. Scott, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 157.

[17] See chapters on Concealment, §§ 1786 et seq., and on Void and Illegal Insurances, §§ 2506 et seq. herein.

[18] Levy v. Merrill, 4 Greenl. (4 Me.) 180.

[19] Robinson v. Jones, 8 Mass. 536, 5 Am. Dec. 114.

[20] Reybold v. United States, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 202, 21 L. ed. 57.

When risk is fire and not marine under policy, although terms general average, etc., used, see United London & Scottish Ins. Co. In re (Newport Navigation Co's Claim), [1915] 2 Ch. 12, 84 L. J. Ch. 544, 20 Com. Cas. 300, 113 L. T. 400, 59 S. J. 529, was upon a Sidmouth license from Boston to Alexandria against loss by capture or "its being destroyed by the ordinary perils of the sea, fire, or otherwise," and the vessel was boarded by a British ship of war and the license so indorsed that its value was destroyed as to any other vessel, this was held a loss within the policy.[1]

The circumstances may be such as, without direct evidence thereof, to justify the conclusion that there has been a loss by a war risk. Accordingly where a vessel left London for Havre in a seaworthy condition and was last seen on the next day off Dungeness, and two other steamers had been torpedoed on the same day off Havre, and it also appeared that some of the ship's life buoys, also a bottle containing the company's envelope with the penciled words "Oriole—torpedoed—sinking," had been picked up, it was held that an underwriter of war risks excluded by the free of capture, etc., clause was liable, but that an insurer against ordinary marine perils, war risk excluded was not liable.[1a]

If all risks are taken, this covers mutiny and insurrection if not excepted; as in case of an insurance on slaves.[2] So a policy against all risks includes the barratry of the master and mariners, even when the owner of the vessel himself appoints them.[3]

§ 2734a. "All risks:" mortality: policy on dog.—A policy on a dog during transit, covering all risks, including mortality, from any cause, jettison and washing overboard; but walking at the port of destination to be deemed a safe arrival, is not limited merely to mortality, but includes all risks, and walking on three legs only by reason of an injury during transit is not walking within the terms of the policy.[4]

§ 2735. "All other perils," etc.: "all unavoidable perils:" "all such perils."—After the enumeration of certain perils which the insurer assumes in marine risks, there follows a general clause in which the English policy reads as follows: "All other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of said goods and merchandises and ship, etc., or any part thereof."[5] This is not, however, the exact language of all policies

31 T. L. R. 424, aff'g 31 T. L. R. 261, considered under § 2780 herein.

[1] Perkins v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 214, 215.

[1a] General Steam Navigation Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. (Same v. Janson) 31 T. L. R. 630.

[2] McCargo v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 334; Lockett v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 339.

[3] Parkhurst v. Gloucester Fishing Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 301, 97 Am. Dec. 100, 1 Am. Rep. 105. But see §§ 2736, 2742, 2743 herein.

[4] Jacob v. Gaviller, 87 Law T. 26, 7 Coml. Cas. 116, 50 Wkly. Rep. 428.

[5] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 47) Sched. I.; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 425.

using the general clause, for the form varies.[6] This clause, says Lord Ellenborough, "may have the effect of extending reasonable indemnity to many cases not distinctly covered by the special words; they are entitled to be considered as natural and operative words," and he also declares that they "comprehend and cover other cases of marine damage of like kind with those specifically enumerated and occasioned by similar cases." And the clause was held to cover a case where a vessel, being mistaken for an enemy's ship, was fired into and sank, the loss being within such a clause.[7] This language of Lord Ellenborough has been substantially adopted as a rule by textwriters both in England and in this country.[8] It is also substantially adopted by Mr. Justice Duer in a case in this country,[9] and by Lord Bramwell in an English case decided in 1887;[10] and although the words are broad enough, yet they are, to the extent above indicated, limited in their application by the specification which immediately precedes them.[11] It may be stated here, however, that Mr. Phillips, relying upon a case quoted under the preceding section,[12] is of opinion that if a clause of this character be [6] One form used on cargo reads: "All other losses and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, damage, or detriment of the said property or interest to which the insurers are liable by the rules and customs in . . . excepting such losses and misfortunes as are excluded by this policy," and on vessel the clause reads: "All other losses and misfortunes that shall come to the hurt or damage of the vessel hereby insured, or any part thereof, to which the insurers are liable by the rules and customs in . . . including the rules for adjustment printed on back hereof and the provisions of the civil code . . . excepting such losses and misfortunes as are excluded by this policy." So also in other cases the form varies.

[7] Cullen v. Butler, 5 Maule & S. 461, 4 Camp. 289, 17 R. R. 400, 1 Stark. 110, per Lord Ellenborough.

[8] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *842; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 789. But see Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 823, p. 1031; sec. 860, p. 1073; 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 544, 612–14; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 644–66, sec. 1126.

[9] Moses v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 159, per Duer, J.

[10] Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 56 L. J. Q. B. 626, 12 App. Cas. 484, 57 L. T. 695, 36 W. R. 337, 6 Asp. M. C. 200.

[11] Moses v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 159, per Duer, J.

See, as to this principle, Rich v. Lord, 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 322; Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266; Moore v. Magrath, Cowp. 9, 12, per Lord Mansfield (cited in Walsh v. Trevanion, 19 L. J. Q. B. 458, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 739, 743; Rook v. Lord Kensington, 25 L. J. Ch. 795, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 717, 722, 723); Lyndon v. Stanbridge, 2 Hurl. & N. 45, 51, 26 L. J. Ex. 386, 5 W. R. 590, per Pollock, C. B.; Bank of British North America v. Convilleer, 14 Moore P. C. 187, 4 L. T. 159; Regina (The Queen) v. Edmondson, 2 El. & E. 77, 83, per Lord Campbell, C. J.; Agar v. Atheneum Life Assur. Soc. 3 Com. B. (N. S.) 725, 27 L. J. C. P. 95, 4 Jur. (N. S.) 211, 6 W. R. 277.

[12] Goix v. Knox, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 337.

written in, it has a paramount force, and includes all perils which can be legally covered.[13] The Marine Insurance Act of England now provides that: "The term 'all other perils' includes only perils similar in kind to the perils specifically mentioned in the policy." [14]

§ 2736. Same subject: instances.[15]—Under the decisions this clause covers a loss by collision,[16] by explosion,[17] an injury caused by the vessel's being thrown over, owing to her fastenings at her moorings giving away at the ebbing of the tide,[18] an injury caused by the vessel's being blown over while in a graving dock for repairs after discharging her cargo,[19] a loss by barratry [20] when expressly insured against,[21] a loss incidental to capture or in the nature of jettison, as where specie was sunk, thrown overboard, in shallow water to save it from capture, the act not being that of assured,[1] and a loss caused by a mob of citizens of the confederate forces during the Civil War compelling the vessel to land and taking possession of her and her cargo, whereby the cargo insured was totally lost.[2] If the policy covers "unavoidable" dangers this does not refer to the duties of those in charge of the boat or to their mere neglect but to such perils as are incident to navigation and from their nature inseparable from it, and such as are embraced in the policy,[3] nor is the necessary sale and consumption of a cargo of provisions at an intermediate port covered by the general clause.[4] And where an insurance is only upon the ship, hulls and materials, machinery and boilers, under a time pol-

[13] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 666, sec. 1126.

[14] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I., r. 12; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 425; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 907.

[15] See § 2734 herein.

[16] Caldwell v. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. 1 La. Ann. 85.

[17] Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co. 11 Ohio, 147, 38 Am. Dec. 728; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 9 Mo. 411.

[18] Napier v. Wood, 4 (Shaw & D.) Ct. Sess. Cas. 19.

[19] Phillips v. Barber, 5 Barn. & Ald. 161, 24 R. R. 317. See Ellery v. New England Ins. Co. 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 14; De Vaux v. Janson, 5 Bing. (N. C.) 519, 7 Scott, 507, 2 Arn. 82, 8 L. J. C. P. 284, 3 Jur. 678.

[20] Jones v. Nicholson, 10 Exch. 28, 2 C. L. R. 1236, 23 L. J. Ex. 330.

[21] Words "all other perils," etc., are not sufficient to entitle assured to recover for a loss occasioned by barratry of the master where barratry not expressly mentioned as a risk insured against. O'Connor v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co. 20 Nov. S. R. (8 R. & G.) 519, aff'd 9 Can. L. T. 209. See §§ 2734, 2742, 2743 herein.

[1] Butler v. Wildman, 3 Barn. & A. 398, 22 R. R. 435.

[2] Babbitt v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 314; Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. St. 491 (the general clause in this case was "all such losses"); De Peu v. Russell, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 441, 2 Am. Dec. 676.

[3] Louisville Underwriters v. Pence, 93 Ky. 96, 40 Am. St. Rep. 176, 19 S. W. 10, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 21, per Holt, C. J.

[4] Moses v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 159.

icy, and although it covers perils of the sea and all other perils, losses and misfortunes which may come to her hurt, detriment or damage, a recovery cannot be had by shipowners for loss consequent upon dealing with a cargo between the date of a collision and the date of arrival, and costs and charges for discharging the same where said collision knocked a hole in the ship's bottom, by reason of which the cargo became rotten, offensive and worthless by the action of sea water and mud, and was ordered by the authorities to be abated as a nuisance which necessitated its discharge.[5]

If insurance against perils of "the seas, fire, jettisons, and of all other perils, losses and misfortunes," etc., is effected, upon freight valued at a specified amount, on the voyage, and the vessel is chartered to carry a cargo of coal at a certain freight per ton payable on delivery, the condition of things may become such that if nothing is done spontaneous combustion and fire would follow, so that the master may be justified in putting into port for the general safety of ship, cargo, and freight, and in such case if a greater part of the cargo is, upon survey and the recommendation of the surveyors, discharged and sold and the freight thereon is thereby lost, but the remaining coal is finally delivered at the port of destination and the discharged cargo could not have been reloaded and carried with safety, the loss, if not one by fire is nevertheless a loss ejusdem generis and covered by the general words "all other perils, losses and misfortunes" etc., therefore the defendants were held directly liable for the loss of freight as a partial loss.[6]

"Perils of the seas:" "All other perils, losses," etc.: "Institute Time Clauses:" "Inchmaree" clause.—A loss which is not caused by a peril of the seas or a peril ejusdem generis therewith is not recoverable under an insurance on the ship by a time policy of the usual kind, against perils of the seas, all other perils, etc., and including conditions of attached "Institute" time clauses; nor is recovery aided by these latter clauses when they are merely an addendum to the policy covering risks not covered therein as it stood and when they also neither enlarge the character of the risks insured against in said policy nor extend or expand risks, specifically mentioned in one of such added clauses, to matters ejusdem generis by the general words in the body of the policy. This applies and precludes recovery for the loss where a ship so insured is lying in dock and sustains damage to her hull by reason of the breaking of a part of the tackle of a floating steam crane and the falling of a boiler into the ship's hold into which it is thereby being lowered.[7]

[5] Field Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Burr (1898) 1 Q. B. D. L. R. 821, 78 L. T. Rep. 293, 67 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 588, aff'd 68 L. J. Q. B. 426 (1899) 1 Q. B. 579, 80 L. T. (N. S.) 445, 47 Wkly. R. 34, 8 Asp. M. C. 529.

[6] The Knight of St. Michael [1898] P. 30, 67 L. J. P. 19, 46 W. R. 396, 78 L. T. 90, 3 Com. C. 62, 8 Asp. M. C. 360 (relying in support of said view upon Stanley v. Western Ins. Co. 37 L. J. Ex. 73, L. R. 3 Ex. 71; Butler v. Wildman, 1 Camp. 123; McGibbon v. Queen Ins. Co. 10 Low. Can. Jur. 227; Nobels Explosives Co. Ltd. v. Jenkins, 1 Commer. C. 436; Porter's Ins. Law p. 123.) Gorell Barnes, J., also discussed the former and present doctrine of general average and contribution by underwriters, their direct liability, also the point of partial loss in connection therewith and particular average loss with relation to partial loss in such case. Citing Dickson v. Jardine, 37 L. J. C. P. 321, L. R. 3 C. P. 630; Price v. A 1 Ships' Small Damage Insurance Assoc. 58 L. J. Q. B. 269, 22 Q. B. 580, 61 L. T. 278, 37 W. R. 566, 6 Asp. M. C. 435.

[7] Stott (Baltic) Steamers, Ltd. v. Marten, 85 L. J. K. B. 97, [1916] 1 A. C. 304, 114 L. T. 91, 21 Com. Cas. 144, 13 Asp. M. C. 200, 60 S. J. 57, 32 T. L. R. 85, aff'g [1914] 3 K. B. 1262. The Institute Time Clauses provided: "3. In port and at sea, in docks and graving docks, and on ways, gridirons and pontoons, at all times, in all places, and on all occasions, services and trades whatsoever and wheresoever, under steam or sail with or without pilots, to tow and assist vessel or craft in all situations, and to be towed and to go on trial trips." "7. This insurance also specifically to cover (subject to the free of average warranty) loss of or damage to hull or machinery through the negligence of master, mariners, engineers or pilots, or through explosion, bursting of boilers, breakage of shafts, or through any latent defect in the machinery or hull, provided such loss or damage has not resulted from want of due diligence by the owners of the ship, or any of them, or by the manager. Masters, mates, engineers, pilots or crew not to be considered as part owners within the meaning of this clause should they hold shares in the steamer." The clause in the policy was of the usual kind insuring the ship against perils of the seas, men-of-war, fire, enemies, pirates, etc., and "all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment or damage of the goods, merchandise, or ship." By a policy provision the conditions of the Institute Time Clauses attached were included. Clause 7 was, however, deemed the only one of importance here. Lord Atkinson said: "This condition is styled the 'Inchmaree' clause or condition. It was admittedly specially introduced after the decision of this House in the case of Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton Frazer & Co. (12 App. Cas. 484, 17 Q. B. D. 195, 56 L. J. Q. B. 626, 57 L. T. 695, 36 W. R. 337, 6 Asp. M. Cas. 200) to cover injuries not caused by perils of the sea properly so called, or covered by the general words of such policies covering perils akin to, or resembling, or of the same kind as perils of the sea." It was claimed that the policy should be read and construed as if this 7th condition had been inserted in the body of the policy before the general words, so that in effect the policy should be held to cover not only the risks ejusdem generis as those specifically mentioned in the body of the policy itself, but also risks ejusdem generis as those mentioned in the 7th condition but this claim was declared to be "wholly illegitimate" and that the 7th clause was merely an addendum to the policy covering risks not covered by the policy as it stood and could not by adding to it general words, such as are found in the policy itself, expand it. The case of Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton Frazer & Co. 12 App. Cas. 498, was held to cover the case before the court.

As to latent defects: "Inchmaree" clause, see §§ 2169a, 2784a herein.

§ 2736a. "Any cause whatever:" nonmarine policy: war risk: total loss.—In an English case there was a question whether war risks came within a clause, under a nonmarine policy, whereby goods sent abroad on sale or return were insured before the outbreak of war for one year against loss from "any cause whatever," while in any place or in transit anywhere in Europe except in Spain or Russia. It appeared that the property so insured, and which consisted of jewelry, was sent, in accordance with the custom of the trade, to consignees in Frankfurt and Brussels on sale or return, and some of it was placed under the consignees control in bank in the latter place which became occupied by the Germans, war having broken out. This was the only evidence of loss, and it was held that it was not sufficient proof of a total loss within the above clause: "any cause whatever" as the policy was on the jewelry itself and not on the commercial adventure.[8]

§ 2737. "Arrests, restraints, and detainments," etc.: marine risk.—The usual clause is "arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever."[9] This may be divided into two general parts: The first concerns what constitutes an arrest, restraint, or detention; the second concerns the point who are kings, princes, and people. In determining what is an arrest much depends upon the original design with which the act was done, as well also as upon the existing conditions as to war. An arrest as such is to be distinguished from capture, although an arrest may be a capture. In an arrest there is a temporary detention, with no design to deprive the owner of the vessel, but to liberate or restore the ship or goods detained or to pay the value thereof; whereas in capture there is the design on the part of the captor to appropriate as a prize. But it is none the less an arrest where there is no restoration or payment of value, since the apparent design in doing the act controls. There may be an arrest at sea as well as in port or harbor, but if there is an arrest at sea of a neutral vessel, and a forcible taking into a belligerent port under pretense that she is an enemy or laden with hostile effects, it is such an act of war or hostility as makes it a capture, even though there is a subsequent restoration. So the detention in a hostile country of a vessel after war declared or letter of reprisal issued against the country to which the vessel belongs is of the nature of a capture, though there is a subsequent restoration. An arrest may take place by act of the government of the country to which the ship belongs or of any power which is friendly. Such are substantially the general principles enunciated by Emerigon and adopted by Mr. Marshall, Mr. Arnould, and Mr. Maclachlan.[10]

[8] Moore v. Evans, 86 L. J. K. B. 495, [1917] 1 K. B. 458, [1917] W. C. & I. Rep. 107, 115 L. T. 892, 33 T. L. R. 125, rev'g 85 L. J. K. B. 802, [1916] 1 K. B. 479.

[9] Also form used by Bureau of War Risk Insurance of the United States, see Appendix B herein. Also form given under Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I.; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 425; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 907. See Appendix C herein. The United States form, however, excepts the United States and the nations engaged in war with the enemies of the United States.

It is said by Tilghman, C. J., in a Pennsylvania case that: "There seems to be a difference between arrests, restraints, and detainments. An arrest operates immediately on the subject arrested, so does a detainment; for it supposes the subject detained to be in the hands of the detainer. But there may be a restraint where the subject restrained is not in the hands of the restrainer. Capture includes an arrest. Capture, strictly speaking, is generally made for the purpose of condemnation; but neutrals are often arrested and carried into port for the purpose of investigation. An embargo is a detainment as well as a restraint. But a blockade may be a restraint without arrest or detainment." [11] It may also be stated here that the clause "arrests, restraints," etc., most frequently comprehends the case of an embargo, under which head other cases on this point will be noted.[12]

The words "kings, princes, and people," etc., limit the effect of the preceding words of this clause, and a mob or numbers taking control of the vessel is not within the meaning of the word "people," which means the ruling power of the country, the supreme power, whatever it be, and the words "kings, princes, and people" are said to apply to nations in their collective capacity.[13]

[10] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 30, pp. 420 et seq.; 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *506 et seq.; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *812 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 765 et seq.; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 832 et seq., pp. 1043 et seq. See Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283; Fowler v. English & Scottish Marine Ins. Co. 34 L. J. C. P. 253, 18 C. B. (N. S.) 919, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 411, 12 L. T. 381, 13 W. R. 658. See § 2748 herein.

[11] Thompson v. Read, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 440, 443, per Tilghman, C. J.

[12] See §§ 2762 et seq. herein.

[13] Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 Term Rep. 783, 2 R. R. 519, per Lord Kenyon, C. J., and Buller, J.; reported also in 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 508b; Simpson v. Charleston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. Dudley (S. C.) 239.

What constitutes "restraint" of kings, princes, etc.: frustration of commercial adventure, see Scottish Navigation Co., Ltd. v. W. A. Souter & Co. (Admiral Shipping Co. Ltd. v. Weidener, Hopkins & Co.) 13 Mar. L. Cas. N. S. 246, 86 L. J. K. B. 336, 350, [1917] 1 K. B. 222, 115 L. T. 812, 22 Com. C. 154, 61 S. J. 85, 33 T. L. R. 71, rev'g 85 L. J. K. B. 409, [1916] 1 K. B. 429, 675.

The "arrests and restraints of princes" etc., clause in charter party refers to the extent to which the per-

It is declared in a Massachusetts case that "restraints" and "detainments" of princes have the same meaning, and that capture is a seizure as prize with the intent or expectation of obtaining a condemnation. "I know of no difference between the import of restraint and detention. They are respectively the effect of superior force operating directly upon the vessel. So long as a ship is under restraint, so long she is detained; and wherever she is detained she is under restraint." [14]

A declaration of war is a restraint of princes, and a loss directly or proximately caused by such declaration is within the meaning of a policy insuring goods before the outbreak of war by policies in the usual form including restraints of princes.[15] And the date of the seizure before declaration of war may be important where insured property is seized by assured's own government in contemplation of war.[16] The general question, however, whether there is an ils mentioned interfere with the obligations of the parties and their liability. F. A. Tamplin Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Anglo Mexican Petroleum Products Co. Ltd. [1916] 2 A. C. 397, 409, 86 L. J. K. B. 336, 350, 85 L. J. K. B. 1389, 115 L. T. 315, 21 Com. Cas. 299, 32 T. L. R. 677, per Lord Haldane.

When apprehension of "restraint" not sufficient of itself to justify plea of "restraint" of princes, etc.: charter party: damages: freight and cost of insurance, see Mitsui Co. Ltd. v. Watts, Watts & Co. [1916] 2 K. B. 826, 85 L. J. K. B. 1721, 115 L. T. 248, 32 T. L. 622.

[14] Richardson v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 101, 108, *109, 4 Am. Dec. 92, per Parsons, C. J.

[15] British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. v. Sanday & Co. [1916] A. C. 650, 85 L. J. K. B. 550, 114 L. T. 521, 21 Com. Cas. 154, 60 S. J. 253, 32 L. T. 206, 13 Asp. M. C. 289, aff'g Sanday & Co. v. British & Foreign Mar. Ins. Co. [1915] 2 K. B. 781, 84 L. J. K. B. 1625, 113 L. T. 407, 20 Com. Cas. 305, 59 S. J. 456, 31 T. L. R. 374, aff'g 31 T. L. R. 194. Lord Parmoor said: "It was argued that 'restraint,' coming in a context between the words 'arrest' and "detainments,' implied that this term in the policy did not attach and render the insurers liable unless force was either used or threatened. A similar argument was urged in the case of Miller v. Law & Accident Insurance Co. [1903] 1 K. B. 712, 720, 88 L. T. 370, 68 W. R. 420, 8 Com. Cas. 14, 9 Asp. M. C. 386, s. c. [1902] 2 K. B. 694, 71 L. J. K. B. 551, 50 W. R. 474, 7 Com. Cas. 151. In that case in consequence of a decree of the President stopping the discharge of all cattle from the United Kingdom until further notice, the captain took the vessel outside the port and transhipped the cattle. It was held by the Court of Appeal that there had been a restraint of princes, and Stirling, L. J., says: 'It seems to me that there was an active intervention of the government of the Argentine Republic, which was more or less an exercise of superior force because no officer of the army of the police force intervened.' My Lords I agree with the opinion expressed by Stirling, L. J. If the restraint in the present case has been imposed by political or executive acts, it is not the less a restraint, within the terms of the policy, because the master submits without opposition and without the presence of either actual or threatened force." See § 2996a herein.

[16] Janson v. Driefonstein Consolidated Mines, Ltd. [1902] A. C. 484, 5 B. R. C. 810 (for further citation of this case see note p. 4562 herein).

arrest or detention merely or a capture may depend upon the cessation of hostilities, as well as upon the declaration of war.[17]

Under the Marine Insurance Act 1906, of England "The term 'arrests, etc., of kings, princes and people' refers to political or executive acts, and does not include a loss caused by a riot or by ordinary judicial process."[18] It is also held in this country that such a clause applies to captures, detentions, etc., by the commissioned agents of a lawful government, and does not cover a loss caused by a mob in a foreign port.[19]

It is further asserted that these words "arrests," etc., do not have reference to legal proceedings instituted and legally conducted.[20]

The clause "arrests, restraints and detainments of all Kings" etc., in the body of the policy, covers the prohibition by the government of the port of destination of landing cargo, but if there is a warranty against capture, seizure and detention, the insurers in such case are not liable.[1] And where a vessel was boarded off the bar at Tampico, her port of destination, and ordered away by the French blockading squadron, this was held a restraint.[2] In this connection it is asserted by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall that a blockade is certainly "not 'an arrest' nor is it 'a detainment.' Each of these terms implies possession of the thing by the power which arrests or detains; and in the case of a blockade the vessel remains in the possession of the master. But the court does not understand the clause as requiring a concurrence of the three terms, in order to constitute the peril described. They are to be taken severally; and [17] Spencer v. Franco, 2 Burr. 695, Beawes, (4th ed.) 416, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 514a, per Lord Hardwicke, C. J. See also Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Burr. 1198, 1211, 1 W. Bl. 276, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 112, per Lord Mansfield.

[18] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41), sched. I. r. 10 (rules of construction); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) pp. 425–427; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) pp. 907, 908.

[19] McCargo v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 202, 43 Am. Dec. 180.

[20] Finlay v. Liverpool & Great Western Steamship Co. 23 L. T. (N. S.) 251.

[1] Miller v. Law & Accident Ins. Soc. 62 L. J. K. B. 428, [1903] 1 K. B. 712, 88 L. T. 370, 51 W. R. 420, 8 Com. Cas. 161, 9 Asp. M. C. 386, s. c. [1902] 2 K. B. 694, 71 L. J. K. B. 551, 50 W. R. 474, 7 Com. Cas. 151.

[2] Vigors v. Ocean Ins. Co. 12 La. (O. S.) 362, 32 Am. Dec. 118, citing Olivera v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 4 L. ed. 365. See § 2776 herein, "Blockade."

Emerigon notes the case of an arrest before the commencement of the voyage, that is, before the ship sails, which was the commencement of the risk under the law of that country, and says the "losses and damages happened to the vessel and all expenses made for her during that time are foreign to the insurers," but that rule does not apply to the case of goods. Still, in such case, "they are at the risk of the insurers from the moment of their being laden on board the vessel:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 30, pp. 422, 423.

if blockade be a 'restraint,' the insured are protected against it, although it be neither an 'arrest' nor 'detainment.' " A restraint may be created by the application of external force as in case of a besieged town, or a blockading force which prevents vessels therein from coming out. It does not imply that the limitation, restriction, or confinement must be imposed by those who are in possession of the person or thing which is limited, restricted, or confined.[3]

A detention by an epidemic and consequent damages is within this clause as to arrests, detention, etc.[4]

If goods of a neutral are in a belligerent port, prevented from being forwarded by the opposing belligerent, this is within the clause.[5]

Again, if necessities of state warrant an arrest, detention, or seizure by this government of a vessel of this country, this is covered by said clause.[6] So there may be a seizure by assured's own government for purposes of imminent war so as to constitute a loss and the policy be valid, where the insurance is effected before the war with underwriters of a country subsequently engaging in war with assured's country.[7] But although there might be a technical arrest or even capture of ship or goods by the home government, the liability of assurers, or the fact of an actual or technical total loss, may depend upon the amount reimbursed by the government.[8]

The test, as will be noted, is the commencement of the risk, so that in policies on the ship where the risk commences in port the [3] Olivera v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 189, 190, 4 L. ed. 355, per Mr. Chief Justice Marshall.

[4] Williams v. Smith, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 1, 2 Am. Dec. 209.

[5] Rodocanachi v. Elliott, L. R. 43 L. J. C. P. 255, C. P. 518, 31 L. T. 239, 2 Asp. M. C. 399.

[6] Touteng v. Hubbard, 3 Bos. & P. 291, 6 R. R. 791, per Lord Alvanley; Lorent v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 505; Hagedorn v. Whitmore, 1 Stark. 157; Green v. Young, 2 Ld. Raym. 840, 2 Salk. 444; 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 510a; Park on Ins. (6th ed.) 109. See § 2685 herein.

[7] Janson v. Driefonstein Consolidated Mines, Ltd. [1902] A. C. 484, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 857, 87 L. T. N. S. 372, 18 T. L. R. 796, 7 Com. Cas. 268, 5 B. R. C. 810, aff'g Driefonstein Consolidated Mines, Ltd. v. Janson [1901] 2 K. B. 419, 70 L. J. K. B. 881, 85 L. T. 104, 49 W. R. 660, 6 Com. Cas. 198, which aff'd [1900] 2 Q. B. 339, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 771, 48 W. R. 619, 83 L. T. N. S. 79, 16 T. L. R. 438, 5 Com. Cas. 296. See Nigel Gold Mining Co. v. Hoade, 76 L. J. K. B. 1006, [1901] 2 K. B. 849, 85 L. T. 482, 50 W. R. 108, 6 Com. C. 268. See §§ 299a, 2531 herein.

[8] See § 2685 herein. "I have no doubt that in point of strict law the assured is entitled to recover as for a total loss, deducting, however, the money paid him by the arresting government from the amount of his claim under the policy," referring to goods and seizure by home government or friendly power: 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 768. See Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 834, pp. 1047, 1048.

rule is said to be that an arrest thereafter of the ship, even though the voyage had not commenced, would be within the clause.[9]

§ 2738. "Arriving in port" does not cover arrival in cove.—"Arriving in port" does not cover putting in distress into a cove which is not a "port," and taking wood and water there, in the absence of a previous intention to do so,[10] since the word "port" does not include a recess of the sea to which resort is not had for landing goods.[11]

§ 2739. "Unlawful" arrests, restraints, detainments, etc.—Sometimes the clause covering arrests, restraints, detainments, etc., is preceded by the word "unlawful." In such case the qualification "unlawful" extends as well to "restraints and detainments" as to "arrests," and a detainment by a force, lawfully blockading a port, is not a peril insured against by a policy containing a warranty of neutrality.[12] Where a neutral vessel laden with a neutral cargo had sailed before the institution of a blockade, but before she could get out to sea was ordered back by the blockading squadron and abandonment immediately offered, this was held an unlawful restraint, for which the insurers were liable under a policy against unlawful arrests, restraints, etc.[13] But where a blockade is lawful, this makes a restraint so far lawful that the clause as to "unlawful arrests, restraints," etc., does not cover the loss.[14]

§ 2739a. Automatic sprinkler system: location: leakage: notice of defects.—If a policy insures against all direct loss or damage caused by water discharged, or that may leak from the automatic system erected in that portion of the building occupied by insured, and only describes the building and its location, the terms of the policy will, nevertheless, not be extended so as to cover loss sustained by insured by reason of his premises being flooded from a broken sprinkler which is located on a floor on the fifth story of [9] See Green v. Young, 2 Salk. 444, 2 Ld. Raym. 840; Rotch v. Edie, 6 Term Rep. 413, 3 R. R. 222; Visger v. Prescott, 5 Esp. 184, 8 R. R. 846; Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 312, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 510a.

[10] Hart v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 26 Nov. Sco. 427, 428, 440.

[11] Hart v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 26 Nov. Sco. 427, 428, 440.

[12] M'Call v. Marine Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 59, 3 L. ed. 487.

[13] Olivera v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 4 L. ed. 365. Cited in The Styria, 101 Fed. 728, 731, 41 C. C. A. 642; Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 6, 21, Fed. Cas. No. 374; Vigers v. Ocean Ins. Co. 12 La. 364, 361, 6 La. N. S. 601, 603; Saltus v. United Ins. Co. 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 409, *522, 414, *529; Thompson v. Read, 12 Serg. & R. 440, 444. See quotation from principal case under § 2737 herein.

[14] Thompson v. Read, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 440. (See quotation from this case under § 2737 herein.) See Patterson v. Marine Ins. Co. 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 417.

the building and is not occupied by him, but the policy will be limited to sprinklers in that part occupied by him which is on the second floor.[1] A provision of a policy insuring against loss by the accidental discharge of an automatic extinguisher, that notice shall be given of "any known defect," which shall render the system more than usually hazardous, and that it shall be immediately repaired, refers to defects in the system itself, and not to those in the fasteners of shutters on the windows of the buildings, although the use of the latter in a defective condition may make possible the breaking of the apparatus and its consequent discharge.[2]

§ 2739b. Automobile or motorcycle: "collision."—Where an automobile has passed through the guard rail of a highway bridge and has plunged into a stream below, there is a collision with the water and bed of the stream within the intent of an insurance of an automobile from accidents caused by collision.[3] And if an automobile, including its operating equipment attached thereto, is insured against loss or damage by collision with another object, insured is entitled to recover, where he lost control of the machine and it skidded so that the rear wheels were thrust across the guttering next adjacent to the roadbed and across a grass plot two feet wide between the guttering and the sidewalk, where the rear wheel collided with a granatoid sidewalk about six inches high, which collision caused said machine to overturn and fall across the gutter and roadbed, and which operated as the proximate cause of the loss, and this applies even though the policy excludes loss or damage caused by striking any portion of the roadbed, as said sidewalk and guttering constitute no part of the roadbed; for the roadbed consists of that portion of the road intended for travel and which is between the gutters on either side and does not apply to gutters constructed for draining water from the roadbed.[4]

§ 2739c. Automobile or motorcycle: rented or used for passenger service or for hire: temporary use.—It is decided that the words "rented or used for passenger service of any kind or for hire" in a policy insuring an automobile, imply more than the single act of renting or using and refer to the business of carrying passengers for hire as the term "passenger service" should be construed with

[1] Bottomley v. Royal Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 73, 76 N. E. 462.

Automatic sprinkler system; particular representations and warranties, see § 1995a herein.

[2] Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co. v. United States Casualty Co. 172 Mo. 135, 61 L.R.A. 766, 72 S. W. 635. See § 1995a herein.

[3] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70n, 85 Atl. 1941. See § 2633a herein.

[4] Styx v. Travelers' Indemnity Ins. Co. 175 Mo. App. 171, 157 S. W. 870, 42 Ins. L. J. 1385.

As to railway "roadbed," see § 2625 herein.

the words "rented" or "used" and the rule of construction in favor of assured should govern and a too narrow and rigid interpretation should be excluded. And this applies where the machine was not kept for the purpose of being so rented or used, but was only rented on a single occasion in the absence of another car which was kept for hire and was then in use, and the owner had resumed possession of the insured car and it was in the care of the owner's chauffeur all the time, and exclusively in his sole possession and control when it was burned sometime after the temporary use had ceased, and said use in no way contributed to the loss.[5]

§ 2740. Bank's default: money deposited in bank: vested rights upon default.—If the "assured" be guaranteed indemnity against the loss of a sum of money deposited in the bank, and the event designated—namely, the default of payment by the bank—takes place, the insurers are liable for the loss. The contract is one of insurance, but whether the contract be deemed one of suretyship or of insurance, the right of "assured" becomes vested under the contract upon default made by the bank, and any scheme subsequently entered into between the bank and its creditors, whereby the bank under a local statute is discharged, but not by way of accord and satisfaction, does not prevent a recovery, there being no assent to such scheme by "assured," and this is so even though the discharge is binding upon him by the local statute.[6] In a Scotch

[5] Crowell v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 169 N. Car. 35, 85 S. E. 37, 46 Ins. L. J. 82, following the principle asserted in Cottingham v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 168 N. Car. 259, L.R.A.1915D, 344, 84 S. E. 274, 45 Ins. L. J. 491 (where a chattel mortgage on automobile given after the policy was issued and paid before loss was held to merely suspend the insurance) and quoting from Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647 (as to meaning of "use") and citing Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wade, 95 Tex. 598, 58 L.R.A. 714, 93 Am. St. Rep. 870, 68 S. W. 977 (where a temporary, casual, isolated use of gasoline was held not to avoid the policy). As to effect of temporary violation of conditions, see §§ 2239, 2240 herein. When automobile is used as a "public conveyance provided for passenger service," see Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Joiner, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 806, 46 Ins. L. J. 644, considered under § 2876b herein.

When use with assured's permission of automobile for transportation of tourists and passengers for hire precludes recovery under stipulation that policy shall be null and void for breach of condition or warranty in fire policy that automobile shall not be used for carrying passengers. Elder v. Federal Ins. Co. 213 Mass. 389, 100 N. E. 655, 42 Ins. L. J. 524. See Orient Ins. Co. v. Van Zandt-Bruce Drug Co. — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 323.

[6] Dane v. Mortgage Ins. Corp. Lim. (Eng. C. A. 1894) 1 Q. B. D. L. R. 54, 63 L. J. Q. B. 144, 9 R. 96, 70 L. T. 83, 42 W. R. 227. In this case the money was deposited by plaintiff in the Bank of Australia; the discharge was effected under a colonial statute by agreement between the bank and the creditors aided by the court. See also Young v. Trustee case money was loaned to an Australian bank upon a deposit receipt, and the creditor insured the deposit with an insurance company, which guaranteed that in case the debtor failed to repay the deposit within twenty-one days from the date named in the deposit receipt, it would pay the insured the amount of the deposit with interest, the insured, however, upon such payment, to hand over to the insurers "the deposit and all his rights in respect thereof." The deposit, which became due on the 15th of May, was not paid, as the bank suspended payment on the 4th of April. On the 26th of April a scheme of compromise was sanctioned by the court of Victoria, by which a new company assumed the liabilities of the bank, and this scheme the appeal court approved with some alterations on June 19th. It was held that the insurer was liable for the amount of the deposit, since the insured had, upon the failure of the bank to make the repayment as provided, satisfied the condition of the policy by offering to transfer the deposit and all his rights in respect thereof.[7]

§ 2740a. Bankers' policy: Lloyds: loss through forged bills: fraud.—Under an English decision it appeared that the insured were bankers carrying on business in New York and they insured under a Lloyds policy which stipulated to hold them harmless and indemnify them: "By reason of any bonds, debentures, scrip, certificates, warrants, transfers, coupons, bills of exchange, promissory notes, cheques, banknotes, currency, coin, or other similar securities in which they are interested or the custody of which they have undertaken, and which now are or are by them supposed or believed to be or at any time during the said period of twelve months may be in or upon their own premises, or upon the premises of their bankers, or in any recognized place of safe deposit in New York or branches, or lodged or deposited in the ordinary course of business for exchange, conversion, or registration with the issuers thereof, or with any agent of such issuers, or with any persons employed to procure or manage the exchange, conversion, or registration thereof, being (while so in or upon such premises or so placed, lodged or deposited as aforesaid) lost, destroyed, or otherwise made away with by robbery, theft, fire, embezzlement, burglary or abstraction, or taken out of their possession or control by any fraudulent means, whether with or without violence, and whether from within or without, and whether by the clerks and servants of the said assured or any other person or persons, or by the negligence or fraud of the said clerks and servants." A customer had bills discounted for a large amount and the bank credited said customer with the amount they had actually paid for the bills and afterwards, in the ordinary course of dealing, they allowed the customer to draw checks for the amount, which they honoured against her account. It subsequently appeared, however, that the bills were forged and worthless. It was decided that the stipulation did not give a right to recover in a case of such a character, the bankers having been induced by fraud to enter into said contract and the underwriters were, therefore, not liable.[8]

Assets & Investment Ins. Co. Lim. (Scot. C. S. 1894) 31 Scot. L. R. 199.

[7] Laird v. Securities Ins. Co. Lim. (Ct. of Sess.) 32 Scot. L. R. 319. See § 339c herein.

§ 2741. Barratry defined: marine risk.—"Barratry," says Emerigon, "is a barbarous word, and unknown to antiquity. Pasquier says it comes from 'barat,' which signifies fraud, trickery, falsehood." [9]

An act of barratry relates to acts or conduct of the master or mariners in their character as such which is fraudulent or criminal against the owners, whereby the latter are damnified. It may be committed against the owners of the cargo or ship, or against the charterers of the ship, who are owners pro hac vice. It comprehends any gross malversation in office by the master or gross criminal negligence operating in fact to the owner's prejudice, whether so intended or not, any trick, cheat, or fraud, or any crime or willful, intentional breach of known law, or willful act of known illegality against the interests and rights and to the prejudice of the owners, and without their consent, or an act in evasion of or contrary to their orders and instructions, and even willful nonfeasance may in certain cases be barratry. It also includes every breach of trust dishonestly intended to the owner's prejudice, nor in the above cases is the intention on the master's part to benefit himself an essential ingredient of the offense.[10] A mere error or defect in judg-

[8] Century Bank of the City of New York v. Young, 84 L. J. K. B. 385, 112 L. T. 484, 20 Com. Cas. 90, 31 T. L. R. 127, aff'g 110 L. T. 261, 19 Com. Cas. 178.

[9] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 3, p. 292. But see English citations under next following note as to "trickery."

[10] United States. — Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659, per Johnson, J.; Macardier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 8 Cranch. (12 U. S.) 39, 3 L. ed. 481; Crousillet v. Ball, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 294, 1 L. ed. 840; Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 61, Fed. Cas. No. 3,733, per Washington, J.

Massachusetts.—Wiggin v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175; Wilson v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 360, 59 Am. Dec. 188; Stone v. National Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 34, 37, per Putnam, J.

New York. — Atkinson v. Great Western Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 531; American Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; Walden v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 128; Kendrick v. Delafield, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 67.

Ohio.—Germania Life Ins. Co. v.

ment or negligence on the part of the master, although the result is a total loss of the property, is not barratry of the master where there has been no criminal or fraudulent intent, and even though his conduct may not have been in any way wrongful, and while it is clearly the duty of the master to do all in his power to save property committed to his charge, yet if he fails in this through an error in judgment, the underwriters are not excused because of an exception of barratry in the policy.[11] So it is held that an act "inconsistent with written instructions," and an act "not consonant to the laws of the land," are within the description of fraud upon the owners as applied to the definition of barratry. It is not confined to moral fraud; culpa would express the idea better than dolus.[12] Under the Marine Insurance Act 1906 of England, "The term 'barratry' includes every wrongful act wilfully committed by the master or crew to the prejudice of the owner or, as the case may be, the charterer." [13]

§ 2742. Barratry covers what: instances.—Barratry of the master and crew covers thefts, pilferings, or embezzlements by either, and thefts by the mariners are covered, whether due care and vigilance of the master could have prevented them or not, and so also is willful destruction of property covered; [14] although it is held that a loss by embezzlement on the part of the crew does not render the insurer liable,[15] and also that stealing by the mariners other than Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 33, 1 Wkly. Law Bull. 26, 7 Ohio Dec. 17.

Pennsylvania. — Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 41 Pa. St. 286; Wilcox v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Binn. (Pa.) 574, 4 Am. Dec. 480.

South Carolina. — Messonier v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 155.

England.—Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126, 9 R. R. 385, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 345, per Lord Ellenborough; Dixon v. Reid, 5 Barn. & Ald. 597, 1 Dowl. & R. 207, 24 R. R. 481; Boehm v. Combe, 2 Maule & S. 172, 14 R. R. 611; Phyn v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 7 Term Rep. 505, 4 R. R. 508; Soares v. Thornton, 7 Taunt. 627, 1 Moore, 373, 18 R. R. 615; Heyman v. Parish, 2 Camp. 148, 149, 11 R. R. 688; Pipon v. Cope, 1 Camp. 434, 10 R. R. 720; Havelock v. Hancill, 3 Term Rep. 277, 1 R. R. 703; Hibbert v. Martin, 1 Camp. 538.

[11] Wolff v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 31 New Brun. 577, per Tuck, J.

[12] Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659.

[13] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I. r. 11; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 426; 15 Chitty's Stat. (1902–1907) pp. 907, 908. It is said, however, that "This does not profess to be an exhaustive definition." 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 839, p. 1054.

[14] Marcardier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 39, 3 L. ed. 481; Stone v. National Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 34; Lawton v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Cush. (56 Mass.) 500; American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 563, 37 Am. Dec. 278, aff'g 1 Hill (N. Y.) 25; Falkner v. Ritchie, 2 Maule & S. 290.

[15] Hicks v. Fitzsimmons, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 279, Fed. Cas. No. 6,460.

petty thefts is barratry.[16] Where a policy covers barratry, the losses arising through fire originating in the negligence of the master or mariners must be borne by the underwriters.[17] If the master, without the knowledge of his owner, lades on board the vessel such goods as will subject him to condemnation for illicit traffic, it is barratry.[18] Resistance by the master and seamen of a neutral vessel of a search by a belligerent is barratry.[19] The crew of a neutral vessel captured as a prize are not obliged to navigate her. It is the duty of the captors to take charge of her with a force of their own, and if they neglect to do this they do not take sufficient possession, and the neutrals may consider her as abandoned to them. But if an insufficient force is put on board, in consequence of a promise by the neutral crew to navigate her to the destined port, they are bound by their promise, and must be considered for the purpose agreed on as acting under the captors. If in violation of this agreement they take the vessel into their own hands, it is an unlawful rescue, which is an act of barratry.[20] A fire intentionally caused by the direct act of the master and crew for barratrous purposes is barratry.[1]

An insurance against all risks or the usual risks, there being no stipulation to the contrary, includes barratry of the master and mariners, and it is immaterial that the assured was the owner of the vessel and appointed the master and mariners. Thus, barratry of the master is insured against in a policy on a vessel "lost or not lost" which does not define risks assumed by the insurers otherwise [16] Stone v. National Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 34.

[17] Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659, citing:

United States. — Orient Mutual Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67, 73, 31 L. ed. 63, 66, 8 Sup. Ct. 68, 44 Leg. Int. 504; New Jersey Steam Navigation Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. (47 U. S.) 344, 426, 12 L. ed. 465, 500; Joy v. Allen, 2 Woodb. & M. 303, 320, Fed. Cas. No. 7,552; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & Western Transportation Co. 10 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 18, 34, Fed. Cas. No. 11,112.

Louisiana.—McDowell v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 7 La. Ann. 684, 685, 56 Am. Dec. 619.

Massachusetts.—Nelson v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 477, 496, 54 Am. Dec. 770; Copeland v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Metc. (43 Mass.) 432, 450.

Mississippi.—Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. 340, 379, 41 Am. Dec. 592.

New York. — Atkinson v. Great Western Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 531, 538; Matthews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 9, 21; American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 26 Wend. 563, 583.

[18] Suckley v. Delafield, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 222. See Hallett v. Columbian Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 272; American Ins. Co. of New York v. Dunham, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, aff'g 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 463, cited in Dole v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 394, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966.

[19] Brown v. Union Ins. Co. 5 Day (Conn.) 1, 5 Am. Dec. 123; Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 61, Fed. Cas. No. 3,733.

[20] Wilcocks v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Binn. (Pa.) 574, 4 Am. Dec. 480.

[1] Waters v. Merchants' Louisville than by a clause that they "are not in any case to be held to pay for any loss or damage in consequence of restraint, seizure, or detention by any legal or illegal power whatsoever, or for any loss, damage, or accident which may happen or occur to any vessel while she may be under such restraint, seizure, or detention;"[2] although acts of barratry, such as misconduct of the master and crew, by which the vessel is lost are held to be at the risk of the owner, and not within the terms of the policy unless expressly insured against,[3] and a loss by fire caused by barratrous acts is not covered when the policy contains no clause as to barratry.[4] Putting on board secretly by the captain contraband goods, whereby the vessel and cargo is condemned, is barratry.[5] An act of the master in violation of the laws of the land, as by trading with an enemy, is barratry.[6] Insurers are liable for barratry of second mate succeeding to command of a vessel while on her voyage by the death of the master and first mate, under a policy insuring against the barratry of the mariners but not against that of the master.[7] The fraudulent conversion by the master of the cargo to his use and absconding is barratry, even though the master is consignee or supercargo.[8] The sale or disposal by the master of any of the ship's furniture, tackle, outfits, etc., for his own use and benefit is barratry.[9] So also is the fraudulent sale and purchase by the master of the vessel,[10] or a fraudulent sale and application of the proceeds to his own use by the master, even though a part owner,[11] or deviating and selling

Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69, 1 McLean (U. S. C. C.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 17,266.

[2] Parkhurst v. Gloucester Fishing Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 301, 97 Am. Dec. 100, 1 Am. Rep. 105; Oliver v. Mutual Commercial Marine Ins. Co. 2 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 277, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 10,498.

[3] Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 41 Pa. St. 286; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661. See §§ 2734, 2736, 2743 herein.

[4] Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69, cited in Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 394, 433, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966.

[5] Baltimore Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 198.

[6] Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126, 9 R. R. 385, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 345.

[7] Tate v. Protection Ins. Co. 20 Conn. 481, 52 Am. Dec. 350.

[8] Cook v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 40, 6 Am. Dec. 353; Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126, 9 R. R. 385, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 345; Kendrick v. Delafield, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 67.

[9] Lawton v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Cush. (56 Mass.) 500.

[10] Steinbach v. Ogden, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 1.

[11] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 284, 304, 305, 56 Am. Rep. 31; Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 363, 368, 369, 19 Atl. 832; Voisin v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 41 N. Y. St. Rep. 884, 62 Hun (N. Y.) 4, 16 N. Y. Supp. 410, per Daniels, J.; Jones v. Nicholson, 10 Exch. 28, 23 L. J. Ex. 330, 2 C. L. R. 1236. See Wilson v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 360, 59 Am. Dec. 188. But see § 2743 herein.

the vessel by the captain.[12] Continuous acts of smuggling which reasonable diligence could have prevented is not covered.[13] But the barratry in case of smuggling may be immaterial where there is a warranty against seizure which constitutes the basis of loss.[14] Putting to sea for an intermediate port in an unseaworthy condition, barratry of the master and mariners being insured against, is not such an act as renders the owners of goods insured liable.[15] Fraudulent collusion with the enemy, whereby the ship is captured, is barratry.[16] So there may be barratry where part of the transportation is by land.[17] A deviation to enable the master to commit an act of barratry does not release the insurer.[18]

The fraudulent acts of the master, acting in conspiracy with others and loading the vessel with cases of dirt and shipping it as valuable cargo, and afterward boring holes in the ship and then abandoning the vessel at sea, the purpose being to obtain insurance moneys thereon, is a barratrous act covering the loss of cargo on board.[19] The fraudulent act of the master in sailing to a blockaded port is barratrous.[20] If the master so uses turpentine on board as to clearly violate his express duty, he is subject to the loss arising therefrom, as where it was used to increase the head of steam and took fire and burned the vessel, under an act of Congress requiring turpentine to be secured upon steamboats in metallic safes or metal apartments.[1] If a policy is against perils of the sea and barratry of the master, the barratry of the master is no defense to insurer from its liability for a loss from stranding by a peril of the sea and a subsequent barratrous sale.[2] So where in order to secure advances of money made to a person to enable him to become part [12] Dixon v. Reid, 5 Barn. & A. 597, 1 D. & R. 207, 24 R. R. 481; Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 11 Mart. (La.) 602, 13 Am. Dec. 358; Toulmin v. Inglis, 1 Camp. 421, 10 R. R. 715; Hucks v. Thornton, Holt N. P. 30, 40, 17 R. R. 594; Toulmin v. Anderson, 1 Taunt. 227.

[13] Pipon v. Cope, 1 Camp. 434, 10 R. R. 720.

[14] Cory v. Burr, 8 Q. B. D. 313, 52 L. J. Q. B. 657, 9 Q. B. D. 463, 8 App. Cas. 393, 49 L. T. 78, 31 W. R. 894, 5 Asp. M. C. 109.

[15] Brioso v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Daly (N. Y.) 246.

[16] Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620, 12 R. R. 758.

[17] Boehm v. Combe, 2 Maule & S. 172, 17 R. R. 611.

[18] Roscow v. Corson, 8 Taunt. 684, 21 R. R. 507.

[19] Voisin v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 41 N. Y. St. Rep. 884, 62 Hun (N. Y.) 4, 16 N. Y. Supp. 410. See Voisin v. Commercial Ins. 66 N. Y. Supp. 638, 32 Misc. 393 (as right of consignee to recover in such case), aff'd 70 N. Y. Supp. 147, 60 App. Div. 139.

[20] Goldschmidt v. Whitmore, 3 Taunt. 508.

[1] Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 41 Pa. St. 286; Act of Congress Aug. 30, 1853.

[2] New Orleans Ins. Co. v. E. D. Albro Co. 112 U. S. 506, 28 L. ed. 809, 5 Sup. Ct. 289, cited in Meyer v. Great Western Ins. Co. 104 Cal. 381, 387, 38 Pac. 82.

owner of a ship and be appointed captain, a mortgage of said share of the ship is effected on the ship to cover the mortgagee's interest upon instruction to the mortgagor and the co-owners of the ship, by the ship's husbands as well in their own names as for and in the names of all and every person or persons to whom the same should appertain, or in all against certain risks including perils of the sea and barratry of the master and mariners, it was held that if the mortgagee had nothing to do with the appointment of the captain, the mortgagor, it constituted no defense to an action by the mortgagee's executors that the ship was wilfully cast away by the captain, for if it had been so cast away recovery could be had for loss by perils of the sea; and even in case of said mortgagees taking part in such appointment, then as regards barratry recovery could be had.[3]

§ 2743. Barratry, what losses are not covered: general rules.—Although, as stated in the preceding section, mere nonfeasance may amount to barratry, yet acts done through negligence, unless so gross as to be per se evidence of fraud, are not barratrous, nor are those acts barratrous which proceed from mere errors of judgment or from incompetence or ignorance of the master, nor those which are merely accidental and which are not willful, nor done for some fraudulent or known unlawful purpose, and which involve no criminal or willful or fraudulent violation of that duty which is due to the owners. Not every illegal act is a criminal one. There may be an ignorant breach of blockade, or ignorant violation of a foreign law; there may be a mistake as to what is meant by the instructions, or a doubt as to his exact line of action within those instructions, and such acts are not barratrous. But fraud whereby the master seeks his own benefit or advantage to the prejudice of the owner's interest is not in such sense a necessary element; it is sufficient that it be any unlawful act of known criminality or of gross malversation, as stated in the preceding section. If, however, the act be in fact to the master's interest, it is fraud or evidence thereof.[4]

[3] Small v. United Kingdom Marine Mutual Ins. Assoc. (1897) 2 Q. B. L. R. 42, 311, 66 L. J. Q. B. 736, 46 W. R. 24, 76 L. T. 828, 2 Com. Cas. 133, 269, 8 Asp. M. C. 293.

[4] United States.—Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulters, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 234, 7 L. ed. 659; Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 61, Fed. Cas. No. 3,733, per Washington, J.

Massachusetts.—Wiggin v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175.

New York. — Atkinson v. Great Western Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 531; Grim v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 451, 457; Vos v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 187.

South Carolina. — Messonier v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 155.

England.—Phyn v. Royal Exch.

Barratry of the master and crew of a steamboat is not covered by a policy unless specially stipulated,[5] and though the act of the master be barratry, there can be no recovery unless it produces or is the cause of the loss, and the loss must happen within the time of the policy;[6] and the act must be committed within the time limit of the policy, and does not cover a seizure and condemnation to the government after the expiration of said period of time, and even though the forfeiture relates back to the time of the infraction of the law; the object is to prevent frauds on the government.[7]

§ 2744. Barratry, what losses are not covered: instances.—The master's failure to repair or to reship cargo is not barratry,[8] nor is an unintentional violation of a blockade.[9] Emerigon places at the charge of the insurers against barratry the damages occasioned through the desertion of sailors.[10] But if a vessel captured and libeled as prize is deserted by the crew, it is not barratry if not done malo animo.[11] Acts of misconduct committed with the owner's consent or by the owner himself are not barratry,[12] and where the master charters a vessel and mans and victuals her at his own cost, he is the owner pro hac vice, and no act of his will amount to barratry.[13] But where the insured charters the vessel

Assur. Co. 7 Term Rep. 505, 4 R. R. 508; Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 212, 7 D. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221; Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126, 129, 9 R. R. 385, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 345; Todd v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 240, 18 R. R. 768, per Lord Ellenborough; Heyman v. Parish, 2 Camp. 149, 11 R. R. 688; Everth v. Hannam, 6 Taunt. 375, 2 Marsh. 74, and cases in the first note under last section.

[5] St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661; Fulton v. Lancaster Ins. Co. 7 Ohio 5, pt. 2; Howell v. Cincinnati Ins. Co. 7 Ohio 276, pt. 1; Gazzam v. Ohio Ins. Co. Wright (Ohio) 202; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 41 Pa. St. 386. See also O'Connor v. Merchants' Marine Ins. Co. 20 Nov. S. R. (8 R. & G.) 514, aff'd 9 Can. L. T. 209, considered under § 2736, note 21 herein, see §§ 2734, 2742 herein.

[6] Swan v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 168, 4 L. ed. 361; Lockyer v. Offley, 1 Term Rep. 260, 1 R. R. 194; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659.

[7] Maiatigui v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 4 La. (N. S.) 413, 28 Am. Dec. 129. See Lockyer v. Offley, 1 Term Rep. 260, 1 R. R. 194.

[8] Stewart v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 Humph. (20 Tenn.) 242.

[9] Everth v. Hannam, 6 Taunt. 375, 2 Marsh. 74; Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 61, Fed. Cas. No. 3,733, per Washington, J.

[10] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 8, p. 310.

[11] Messonier v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 155. Desertion is a criminal offense: Rev. Stats. U. S. sec. 4596. See United States v. Mason, 34 Fed. 129. For forfeiture of wages for desertion, see The Rothemay, 34 Fed. 80; Disbrow v. Walsh Brothers, 36 Fed. 607.

[12] Ward v. Wood, 13 Mass. 539; Stamma v. Brown, 2 Strange, 1173, 1247, cited 8 East, 136, 9 R. R. 389; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 41 Pa. St. 286.

[13] Hallett v. Columbian Ins. Co. 8 excepting certain portions, the charters to pay the master and mariners, the charterers are not owner pro hac vice,[14] although where the master hires the vessel by parol for a term he is owner, and cannot commit barratry.[15] And a master may have such an equitable interest in a ship, as where he has given his note and pledged the vessel as collateral for purchase money, as to be so far the owner that he cannot commit barratry.[16] So where the master is also the owner the insurer is not liable for loss by barratry by him,[17] and the acts of the charterer in smuggling goods are those of the owner.[18] So where the master, who was general owner, let the ship on freight to insured for the voyage, the master retaining possession and command, it was held a mere contract of affreightment, and that the freighter was not the owner, and the master was not in a position to commit barratry.[19] One who hires the ship for the voyage and has exclusive control, possession, and navigation of the ship is the owner, and cannot commit barratry.[20]

The fact that the master is part owner has been held to make his acts not barratry,[1] although the better law seems to apply only to sole ownership.[2] But the fraudulent sale and purchase of a vessel by the master does not make him owner so far as barratrous acts are concerned.[3] The English rule, according to Mr. Arnould, turns upon the test (1) of the construction of the charter-party, and (2) whether at the time of loss the effectual and substantial control over the ship, master, and mariners is in the charterer for the purposes of the voyage, even though the master and mariners are in the pay and service generally of the general owner; and he adds, in most cases the question has been as to the charterer's liability to third parties or the general owner's lien for freight, and it is decided in effect, in cases noted by Mr. Arnould, that if an act which causes the loss is done by or with the privity of the general owner, and the owner for the voyage has no knowledge thereof and does not con-

Johns. (N. Y.) 272; McIntyre v. Bowne, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 229.

[14] McIntyre v. Bowne, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 229.

[15] Taggard v. Loring, 16 Mass. 336, 8 Am. Dec. 140.

[16] Barry v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 11 Mart. (La.) 630.

[17] Steinbach v. Ogden, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 1.

[18] Hobbs v. Hannam, 3 Camp. 93, 13 R. R. 764.

[19] Marcardier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 39, 3 L. ed. 481; Ross v. Hunter, 4 Term Rep. 33, 2 R. R. 319. But see Vallejo v. Wheeler, Cowp. 143, Lofft. 645.

[20] Marcardier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 39, 3 L. ed. 481. See Soares v. Thornton, 7 Taunt. 627, 1 Moore, 373, 18 L. R. 615.

[1] Wilson v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 360, 59 Am. Dec. 188; Harris v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 188.

[2] See § 2742 herein, "Barratry covers what."

[3] Steinbach v. Ogden, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 1.

sent thereto, this is an act of barratry, even though the general owner hires and victuals the master and mariners.[4] A deviation is not barratrous unless accompanied with fraud or crime, or willfully done for the purpose of ultimately benefiting the master, or done for his own private purposes,[5] and a deviation compelled by a mutinous crew is not a deviation as to the master.[6]

§ 2745. Bilging: marine risk: "all other perils," etc.—If the ship is thrown upon her beam ends, and her seams are opened and water enters, but no plank or timber is broken, this is not "bilging" within the meaning of that term as used in a marine policy.[7] Damage caused by her bilging where a ship is placed in a dock for repairs, occasioned by her tackling giving away accidentally in being taken out of the dock, is recoverable under the general clause as to all other perils, etc., the cause of the loss being alleged in a special count.[8]

§ 2746. Birth of issue.—Bunyon mentions insurances of this character as existing in England in cases of companies specially authorized to effect such contracts, the principal elements upon which the insurance is based being the chances of having issue dependent upon age, health, and other circumstances. We shall not, however, treat of this subject, because the practice of insurances in this country does not warrant so doing.[9]

§ 2747. Breach of promise of third party does not render insurer liable.—The insurer is not liable for losses arising from a breach of promise by a third party.[10]

[4] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *838; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 787, noting Vallejo v. Wheeler, Cowp. 143, Lofft, 645. See also Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 854 et seq., pp. 1067 et seq.; Soares v. Thornton, 7 Taunt. 627, 1 Moore, 373, 18 R. R. 615.

[5] Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126, 139, 9 R. R. 385, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 345, per Lord Ellenborough; Phyn v. Royal Exch. Co. 7 Term Rep. 505, 4 R. R. 508. And see cases on this point under section "Barratry covers what."

[6] See Scott v. Thompson, 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 181, 186, 8 R. R. 780, per Sir James Mansfield; Vallejo v. Wheeler, 1 Cowp. 143, 154, Lofft, 645, per Lord Mansfield; Elton v. Brogden, 2 Strange, 1264, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 413.

[7] Ellery v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 3 Pick. (20 Mass.) 45, 46.

[8] De Vaux v. J'Anson, 8 L. J. C. P. 284, 7 Scott, 507, 2 Arn. 82, 3 Jur. 678, 50 R. R. 786; 5 Bing. (N. C.) 519; Phillips v. Barber, 5 Barn. & Ald. 161, 24 R. R. 317.

As to injury to ship consequent upon breaking of part of tackle, etc., see Stott (Baltic) Steamers, Ltd. v. Marten, considered at end of § 2736 herein.

[9] Bunyon on Life Ins. 98.

[10] Parsons v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 197, 4 Am. Dec. 115.

§ 2748. Capture or seizure: marine risk.[11]—"Capture," as that word is used in marine policies,[12] involves, as the principal factor, the taking of the ship with intent to deprive the owner of her. This may be done in the act of war, or in a spirit of depredation by pirates, or by way of reprisals. It may be by a declared enemy lawfully commissioned and according to the laws of war, or by authority of a belligerent or of a de facto government recognized as a belligerent, and includes takings which are unlawful and unjustifiable by or contrary to the municipal laws of the country in which the contract is to be made and performed, and which are unlawful and unjustifiable by the fundamental and supreme law of the country of which the de facto government is actually a part. The term is sufficiently broad to comprehend every species of capture at sea; that is, every species of arrest, seizure, or detention which may lawfully be covered by the policy. Strictly speaking, however, a distinction exists between capture, properly so called, the object of which is to seize the vessel and cargo, and arrests and detentions, wherein the object is not to deprive the owner of her, but to take only contraband goods or enemies' effects on board of her. Another division is into just or unjust capture, or rather lawful and unlawful capture, the former being made by a declared enemy and according to the laws of war, and the latter being that made against the rules established by the law of nations. But whether a capture is just or unjust, lawful or unlawful, and whether or not the property in the thing insured be changed by the capture, cannot avail the insurers as a defense, for they are responsible, without regard to such facts. And in so far as the word is capable of a double meaning, the true rule of exposition is said to be, in the absence of a contrary intent expressed, to interpret it as having been used by the parties in the fullest and most comprehensive sense.[13]

[11] As to excepted risks and losses: warranted free from capture, etc., see §§ 2684–2690 herein.

As to risks and losses: arrests, restraints, etc., see §§ 2737–2739 herein.

As to abandonment and total loss: arrests, restraints, etc., see §§ 2996 et seq. herein.

[12] The policies issued by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance of the United States use the words "takings at sea." See Appendix B herein. The same words are also used in the English policies among the risks assumed, used also in form given under marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sched. I.; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 425; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 207. See Appendix C herein. The United States form, however, excepts the United States and the nations engaged in war with the enemies of the United States.

[13] United States.—Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co. (Mauran v. Ins. Co.) 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 836; Rhinelander v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 29, 2 L. ed. 540.

Maine.—Levy v. Merrill, 4 Greenl. (4 Me.) 180.

Maryland. — Barney v. Maryland Ins. Co. 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 139.

Massachusetts.—Dole v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 6 Allen (88 Mass.) 373, per Bigelow, C. J.

Pennsylvania. — Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. St. 491.

That insurer liable whether capture lawful or unlawful, see Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co., cited above; Radliffe v. United Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 38; Marsh v. Muir, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 134, 2 Am. Dec. 648; Goss v. Withers, 2 Burr. 683, 694, 695, 2 Ld. Ken. 325, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 1; Pollard v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 440, 5 R. R. 404; Powell v. Hyde, 5 El. & B. 607, 25 L. J. Q. B. 65, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 87, 4 W. R. 51; Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 5 R. R. 468, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 547; Price v. Bell, 1 East, 663. That it includes piracy, see Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co., cited above; Dean v. Hornby, 3 El. & B. 180, 23 L. J. Q. B. 129, 2 C. L. R. 1519, 18 Jur. 623, 2 W. R. 156, 97 R. R. 439.

Emerigon says a "capture is when one makes himself master of a ship in the act of war or in the spirit of depredation and with design to deprive the true owner of her;" that it includes "taking or seizing by way of reprisals;" and he distinguishes "two kinds of captures, one of which the object is to seize, the other of which the object is to take only enemies' effects or contraband goods found on board. The first is an absolute capture, properly so called. The second appears, then, not to fall within the definition I have given of capture. . . . We may distinguish, too, a just capture from an unjust one. A just capture is that which is made by a declared enemy according to the laws of war; Secundum jus gentium. Unjust capture is that which is made against the rules established by the law of nations. Whether a capture be just or unjust, the insurers are responsible." He also adds that it covers captures by friends or enemies, declared or not declared, "for whoever commits a depredation upon another is a pirate, and becomes an enemy:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. secs. 18, 27, 36, pp. 353, 412, 440: citing on last point Casaregis, Roccus, The Rota of Genoa, Scaccia, Valin and Pothier. Mr. Marshall says: "Capture is when a ship is subdued and taken by an enemy in open war or by way of reprisals, or by a pirate, and with intent to deprive the owner of it. Capture may be with intent to possess both ship and cargo, or only to seize the goods of the enemy or contraband goods which are on board. The former is a capture of the ship in the proper sense of the word; the latter is only an arrest and detention without any design to deprive the owner of it. Capture is deemed lawful when made by a declared enemy, lawfully commissioned and according to the laws of war, and unlawful when it is against the rules established by nations. But for every loss occasioned by capture, whether lawful or unlawful, the insurer is liable, the words of the policy being sufficiently comprehensive to include every species of capture to which ships at sea can ever be exposed." 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *495. See also 3 Kent's Commentaries, 304; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *808 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 761 et seq.; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 829, p. 1038, sec. 905, pp. 1127 et seq.; 1 Parsons on Ins. (ed. 1868) 575 et seq. See §§ 2684–2692 herein.

"The ship is lost by capture even though she be never condemned at all nor carried into any port or fleet of the enemy and the insurer must pay the value." Goss v. Withers, 2 Burr 683, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 1, 2 Ld. Keny. 325, quoted, per Lord Halsbury, in Anderson v. Marten [1908] L. R. App. Cas. 334, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 950, 99 L. T. N. S. 254, 24 T. L. R. 775, 52 S. J. 680, 13 Com. Cas. 321, 5 B. R. Cas. 66, case affirms [1908] 1 K. B. 601, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 569, 98 L. T. N. S. 146, 24 T. L. R. 208, 13 Com. Cas. 205, 10 Asp. M. L. C. 605.

A capture has also been held to include a mutinous seizure by passengers;[14] a loss by an insurrection of slaves;[15] the taking of a neutral ship and cargo by a belligerent jure belli; also the taking forcibly by a friendly power in time of peace, and even a taking by the government itself; nor is it necessary that the commission should issue from a lawful government.[16] So a capture is included under a policy on risks "the same as those contained in all regular policies of insurance."[17] And the fact that the vessel is seized and condemned, although the acts are based on a mistake of fact, constitutes a "taking at sea."[18] Insurer is also liable if a vessel is seized and condemned under an unlawful claim of right by the government making the seizure, where said claim of right is denied by the United States; for the master is not in such case bound to abandon under threat or warning of such illegal capture.[19]

It is a loss by capture and not a seizure in port, under a policy "no risk in port taken but sea risk," where the vessel is taken about two leagues from land and about four leagues from the port of destination, and the ship is there taken possession of by the captors, a prize master and crew being put on board.[20]

Emerigon says that insurers are not liable for capture arrived through fault of the captain, unless they have made themselves guarantors against barratry of the master.[1] And in an English case the assured was permitted to recover a loss as for capture, though there might have been a recovery for barratry, it appearing that the master conspired with the captor to effect the capture.[2]

An interesting point arose in an English case in that there was a change of ownership of the goods seized by reason of payment by the underwriters, between the dates of the seizure and the claim.

[14] Kleinwort v. Shepard, 1 El. & E. 447, 28 L. J. Q. B. 147, 5 Jur. (N. S.) 863, 7 W. R. 227.

[15] McCargo v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 202, 43 Am. Dec. 180.

[16] Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co. (Mauran v. Ins. Cos.) 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 836.

[17] Levy v. Merrill, 4 Greenl. (4 Me.) 180. Whether a capture is a loss by perils of the sea in case of a bottomry bond, see Appleton v. Crowninshield, 3 Mass. 443.

[18] Lozano v. Janson, 2 El. & E. 160, 28 L. J. Q. B. 337, 5 Jur. (N. S.) 1401, 7 W. R. 654.

[19] Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 415, 10 L. ed. 225, cited in Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, 2 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 338. Fed. Cas. No. 5,487; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 382, 41 Am. Dec. 592. Upon the point of legality or illegality of capture as not affecting right of assured to recover, see Goss v. Withers, 2 Burr. 683, 694, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 1, per Lord Mansfield.

[20] Duval v. Commercial Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 278. See also Levi v. Allnutt, 15 East, 267; Black v. Marine Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 287.

[1] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 18, p. 354.

[2] Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620, 12 R. R. 758.

Said goods were shipped before the war by neutral shippers to their own order on board a British vessel and under an option they were to be delivered at Hamburg to a German firm, as agents of the shippers, for sale. German underwriters at Hamburg insured the goods against war risks. They were seized and sold under an order of court. The property in the goods had not passed from the neutral shippers at the time of the seizure, thereafter the German agents of the shippers made claim against the underwriters for a total loss which was paid in full. It was admitted that the German underwriters became thereby the owners of the goods. About a year later a claim was made for the release of the proceeds of the sale under the Court order. The point therefore rested upon the position that at the time of the seizure the property in the goods was in the neutral shippers and at the time of the claim in said underwriters, who were the real claimants. The claim of the latter was disallowed and the proceeds of the sale condemned as enemy property.[3]

For the purpose of further showing what is subject to, and what constitutes capture or seizure, and inasmuch as the principles underlying the law governing naval prize are of considerable value upon this subject in marine insurance, we have briefly considered in the appended note certain important prize cases or decisions, and have also noted therein some other matters relevant thereto including definitions of "captor," "capture," etc., under the English Prize Court Rules of 1914.[4]

[3] The Palm Branch, 86 L. J. P. 17 [1916] P. 230, 2 P. Cas. 281, 115 L. T. 657, 32 T. L. R. 725.—Evans, P. The question raised in this case was declared to be a different one from that in The Miramichi, 84 L. J. P. 105, [1915] P. 71, 1 P. Cas. 13, and The Odessa, 84 L. J. P. 112, [1915] P. 52, 1 P. Cas. 163, [1916] 1 A. C. 145, 85 L. J. P. C. 49, 1 P. Cas. 554, and the views expressed in those cases were adhered to. Transfer flagrante bello, when invalid, see The Benito Estanger, 176 U. S. 568, 44 L. ed. 592, 20 Sup. Ct. 489.

[4] Outbreak of hostilities: an enemy's goods on a British ship are liable to be seized, even though the cargo consists of oil which has been pumped into tanks on shore for safe custody after being brought into a British port. The Roumanian, 85 L. J. P. C. 33, [1916] 1 A. C. 124, 1 P. Cas. 536, 114 L. T. 3, 13 Asp. Mar. C. 208, 60 Sol. J. 58, 32 T. L. R. 98; Judgment, 84 L. J. P. 65, [1915] P. 26, affirmed; The Miramichi, 84 L. J. P. 105, [1915] P. 71, approved; The Ooster Eems (1784) 1 C. Rob. 284n, 1 Eng. P. C. 136n, disapproved, as not of value as an authority; Brown v. United States, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 110, 3 L. ed. 504, distinguished.

Goods shipped at a Turkish port by a Turkish subject on board a British ship to his own order and discharged into a bonded warehouse are the proper subject of maritime prize where they are still in bond after the commencement of hostilities. The Eden Hall, 85 L. J. P. 119, [1916] P. 78, 2 P. Cas. 84, 114 L. T. 566, 13 Asp. Mar. C. 306, 60 Sol. J. 418.—Evans, P.

An assignment may be a cover to an enemy interest and a belligerent

Acts which increase or decrease the risk of capture, etc.: enforceability of agreements for the latter purpose.—The policy may be avoided by acts which increase or decrease the risk of capture and right will override a neutral claim when regarded only as a debt. The right of capture depends upon the proprietary interest in the thing captured at the time of the capture and is not affected by the secret liens or private engagements of the parties, therefore prize courts have rejected liens, of bottomry bonds, of mortgages, for supplies, etc. So where it appeared that neutral commission merchants shipped a cargo on a Spanish vessel on a voyage commenced before war was declared, and while proceeding to Havana she was captured by a vessel of the United States in May 1898; and the invoices stated that the said goods were shipped 'to order, for account and risk, and by order of the parties noted below," who are, in addition to the consignor, the vessel owners and other subjects of the enemy, while the bills of lading stated that the goods are taken "for account of whom it may concern," and there is no charter party, said property will be deemed to be that of the consignees during the voyage, so as to be subejct to capture, especially so when no claim to any part of the cargo is made by the consignor. In said case, however, a British company doing business in London laid claim to the cargo on the ground that they had advanced money for its purchase to a citizen of Montivideo and had received bills of lading covering the shipments, but it was held that the vessel was an enemy vessel and that the presumption that the cargo was enemy's property could only be overcome by evidence clear and positive to the contrary. The Carlos P. Roses, 177 U. S. 655, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 803.

Enemy mail ships are also held liable to capture as prize of war as no rule of international law exempts them therefrom, especially so where she is an armed vessel. The Panama, 176 U. S. 535, 44 L. ed. 577, 20 Sup. Ct. 480. See The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. (72 U. S.) 28, 18 L. ed. 564. See The Olinde Rodrigues, 174 U. S. 510, 537, 43 L. ed. 1065, 1076, 19 Sup. Ct. 851.

In a recent English case goods from German factories shipped by parcel post on a Danish vessel at Copenhagen before the Reprisals Order in Council of March 11, 1915, are held by the international law of prize, of enemy origin and continue enemy's property since the property of goods sent by sea only passes on actual delivery and when diverted into a British port and ordered discharged they may be detained and sold and the proceeds detained until the conclusion of peace. The United States, 86 L. J. P. 52, [1917] P. 30, 116 L. T. 19, 33 T. L. R. 134.—Evans, P. See §§ 2569a, 2737 herein.

Wireless installation: wireless telegraph. Although a hospital ship, constructed and adopted solely and wholly as such is entitled to protection from capture during hostilities under articles of the Hague Convention (Convention X of the Hague Conference, 1907, Arts. 1, 8), still where a German steamship fitted out as a hospital ship is not only unsuitable for use as such, but is undoubtedly fitted and intended for signalling purposes obviously to be used very largely in excess of the requirements of a bona fide hospital ship, and which has an abnormal number of signal apparatus and signal lights, and she is also seen to be acting in a very suspicious manner off the enemy's coast, while many of her documents are destroyed by the captain, she may upon capture be lawfully condemned as prize; and this is so although the Hague Convention provides that a wireless installation shall not take away the protection as above detention according to the common practice of the belligerent; nor is it necessary that such increase of risk should be that of rightful stated, for said Convention does not justify sending secret code messages. The Ophelia, 85 L. J. P. 169, [1916] 2 App. Cas. 206, 2 P. Cas. 150, 114 L. T. 1067, 32 T. L. R. 502, aff'g [1915] P. 129, 84 L. J. P. 131.

As to submarine sound-signaling apparatus, see § 2569a herein.

Capture within territorial waters of neutral. In a case decided in 1916, a steamship flying a neutral flag was captured in the Strait of Magellan while carrying coal and other supplies for German warships, and it was held that no proposition of international law was clearer, or more surely established, than that a capture within the territorial waters of a neutral, is as between enemy belligerents, for all purposes rightful, and that only the neutral State concerned can question the validity of the capture. It can only be declared void as to the neutral State and not as to the enemy. The Bangor, 85 L. J. P. 218, [1916] P. 181, 2 P. Cas. 206, 114 L. T. 1212, 32 T. L. R. 590, —Sir Samuel Evans, Pres. citing The Anne, 3 Wheat. [16 U. S.] 435, 4 L. ed. 428; The Lilla, 2 Sprague [U. S. D. C.] 177, Fed. Cas. No. 8,348; The Sir William Peele, 5 Wall. [72 U. S.] 517, 18 L. ed. 696; The Adela, 6 Wall. [73 U. S.] 266, 18 L. ed. 821. It was also said in the principal case that: "It was contended by counsel for the shipowners that this well-established rule of international law had been modified by the Hague Conference of 1907. Convention XIII. Assuming for the purpose of this judgment that Convention XIII. is binding, it is clear that the Convention was only directed to the relations between neutral Powers and belligerent Powers, and was only intended to apply to questions between neutral Powers and belligerent Powers as such. Its provisions were not intended to deal with any question between belligerents, and did not affect the rule relating to capture in territorial waters of a neutral State, as between two belligerent Powers, where the neutral State did not intervene." Id. 220.

It is held that the character of a Spanish merchant vessel which is enemy's property lying in the harbor, was not changed by the capitulation of Santiago, nor by the President's proclamation of July 13, 1898, as to the rights of private property nor by the cessation of active military operations, so as to exempt said vessel from capture for military purposes by the military authorities. Herrera v. United States, 222 U. S. 558, 56 L. ed. 316, 32 Sup. Ct. 179; Diaz v. United States, 222 U. S. 574, 56 L. ed. 321, 32 Sup. Ct. 184.

As to detention, subsequent seizure as prize, and condemnation of enemy vessel lying at port at outbreak of hostilities, and continuing to use it as port of refuge after offer of safe conduct, and after expiration of time limit, see The Pindos, 85 L. J. P. C. 209, [1916] 2 A. C. 193, 2 P. Cas. 146, 114 L. T. 960, 32 T. L. R. 489.

As to detention of merchant ship which is in enemy port at beginning of hostilities, see Arts. 1–4. Hague Convention given in Vol. 10 Amer. Jour. of Internat. L. (1916) pp. 242 et seq. See also 32 T. L. R. 98, 103.

As to law of freight in prize proceedings (neutral vessels), see article "Prize Cases in the English Courts Arising Out of the Present War" by Russell T. Mount, 17 Columbia L. Rev. pp. 185–207.

Under the English Prize Court Rules 1914 (Vol. III. Statutory Rules & Orders 1914 [Published by authority]), " 'Captor' shall mean any person taking or seizing, or having taken or seized, any ship or goods as prize, and shall (for the purpose of proceeding in any cause or matter) include the captor's solicitor (if any), or the proper officer of the Crown, capture in accordance with the law of nations.[5] In connection, however, with the above, what is said in a Federal circuit court case is pertinent here, and that is, that the fundamental rule "requires the holder of an insurance policy to have regard for the interests of the insurer, and to act in good faith so as not to incur a loss by unnecessary exposure of the insured property to perils which are obvious," and accordingly it is held that where a vessel is insured against war risks only and the policy covers those risks excluded by the warranty free of the capture, seizure, or detention clause, then, in such case, even though the owner of the vessel gave the master a letter of special instructions appointing for the ship a direct course deemed the most safe to prevent her capture, but she was caught in floating ice, unusual at that season and was compelled to deviate and was captured, said facts constitute no defense although false documents are carried, for the adoption of customary and reasonable means to promote the success of the adventure and to avoid known dangers does not afford a ground of exemption of insurer from his agreement under the policy terms; and this and shall include recaptor; 'Capture' shall include recapture; 'Cause' shall mean any prize proceeding instituted by a writ; 'Claimant' shall mean any person who shall assert a claim to ship or goods taken or seized as prize, or to compensation, and shall (for the purposes of proceedings in any cause or matter) include the claimants solicitor (if any), . . . 'Defendant' shall (for the purposes of proceedings in any cause or matter) include the defendant's solicitor (if any); . . . 'Month' shall mean calendar month; 'Owner' shall mean any person to whom by operation of law the property in a ship seized or taken as prize shall, in whole or part, have passed, and shall also include any person intervening in a cause on behalf of an owner, or intervening and claiming or alleging an interest in such ship; . . . 'Ship of war' shall include armed ship. 2. Unless the contrary intention appears, the provisions of these Rules relative to ships shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to goods and freight (if any) due or to grow due; and for such purpose the term 'ship' when used in these Rules shall also mean 'goods' and freight." "Procedure," under The Prize Court Rules 1914, Ord. I. Interpretation Statutory Rules & Orders, 1914, and amendments, Vol. III. pp. 105–213. By Order of Council, Aug. 5, 1914, also "Provisional" Order Sept. 30, 1914. See also "Manual of Emergency Legislation" p. 256. Id. pp. 366, 367.

As to validity of Orders in Council and "extent and binding force upon English Prize Courts of 'Orders in Council,'" see note under § 2569a herein.

As to Convention between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and France relating to prizes captured during the present Great European War, signed at London, November 9, 1914; ratifications exchanged December 21, 1914 (Great Britain Treaty Series, 1915, No. 2) see 10 Amer. Jour. of Internat. Law (1916) Suppl. pp. 20 et seq. As to Accession of Russia on March 5, 1915, to said Convention (Great Britain Treaty Series, 1915, No. 4); Id. p. 26.

[5] Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 3 L. ed. 421.

especially applies where measures taken to conceal the ship's destination do not increase the risk of capture, as in case of permission to run blockade, and also in view of the fact that said letter and other papers were surrendered.[6]

Again, although we have elsewhere considered the question of what the underwriter is bound to know as to political perils,[7] the necessity of disclosure as to contraband goods, belligerent risks, ships' papers, false clearance, etc.,[8] and also the law as to neutrality and national character,[9] still the following decision is especially relevant and of force here as it is directly in point as to acts done to decrease the risk of capture and the enforceability of agreements entered into for that purpose the facts upon which this decision was rendered were these: one Duffy, an American citizen engaged in commerce and domiciled at Buenos Ayres, shipped a cargo of hides and lard to Gibraltar. Buenos Ayres was then at war with Brazil. The brig on which the cargo was shipped was an American vessel and the Captain was a citizen of the United States and was also part owner of the vessel. In order to protect the cargo from capture from the Brazilians it was shipped as the property of one De Valengin and the bill of lading and other papers relating to it were made out in his name. The brig was captured on her voyage by a Brazilian cruiser, and was wrecked and the vessel and cargo totally lost, near Monte Video, while in possession of the captors, who were endeavoring to carry her into port, De Valengin being the ostensible owner of the cargo, he, with the consent of Duffy, prosecuted a claim for remuneration from the Brazilian government, insisting that the property belonged to him, that it was neutral property and therefore unlawfully captured and after his death his administrator finally recovered such compensation. In a suit by Duffy against said administrator, it was claimed that the agreement between De Valengin and Duffy to claim remuneration from the Brazilian government on the ground that the property was neutral, when in truth it was Duffy's and therefore belligerent and liable to capture by the law of nations, was fraudulent and immoral; and that the courts of justice of this country would not assist a party to recover money on such an agreement. It was held, however, that a contract of insurance on property covered as neutral, when it was in fact belligerent, is not invalid when its true char-

[6] Northwestern Steamship Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 161 Fed. 166.

As to change of voyage: deviation, etc., see chap. LXVI. (§§ 2365 et seq.) herein.

As to "liberty to run blockade:" seizure, see § 2142a herein.

[7] See § 1808 herein.

[8] See §§ 1818, 1832, 1833 herein.

[9] See §§ 2122 et seq. herein.

acter and the means taken to protect it have been fairly represented to the insurer, and Mr. Chief Justice Taney who delivered the opinion of the court declared: "It has been frequently held, that the device practiced in this case, of covering the property as neutral when in truth it was belligerent, is not contrary to the laws of war, or the laws of nations. And contracts made with underwriters in relation to property thus covered, have always been enforced in the courts of a neutral country, when the true character of the property and the means taken to protect it from capture, have been fairly represented to the insurer. The same doctrine has always been held where false papers were used to cover the property; provided the underwriter knew or was bound to know that such stratagems were always resorted to by persons engaged in that trade. And if such means may be used to prevent a capture, there can be no good reason for condemning with more severity, the continuation of the same disguise after the capture, in order to prevent the condemnation of the property, or to procure compensation for it, when it has been lost by reason of the capture. It is true the court of the capturing nation would never enforce contract, of that description; but they have always been regarded as lawful in the courts of a neutral country." [10]

§ 2749. Cargo: taking on board additional cargo: marine risk.—Whether the insurers are discharged by reason of the vessel's taking on additional cargo depends upon whether there is a departure from the contract of insurance or from the voyage insured, rather than upon the point of increase of risk.[1] We have seen elsewhere that a general policy on goods covers such general goods of assured as are on board at the time of loss, and includes substituted goods; that is, shifting or successive cargoes.[2]

§ 2750. Carriers: liability of warehousemen: conflict of laws.—If warehousemen are required under an agreement with carriers to insure goods warehoused in good and solvent companies, this does not render such warehousemen insurers of the goods, but if under such agreement a compress company is to insure cotton deposited with it by carriers for compression, and it was customary for ship-

[10] De Valengin v. Duffy, 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 282, 10 L. ed. 457.

[1] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Le Roy, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 26, 3 L. ed. 257, per Johnson, J. See chapter on Deviation.

[2] See chapters on description of property and subject-matter, §§ 1732 et seq. herein; Hill v. Patten, 8 East, 373, 377, 1 Camp. 72, 9 R. R. 469, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 595, per Lord Ellenborough; Tobin v. Hartford, 34 L. J. C. P. 37, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 598, 13 Com. B. (N. S.) 791, 17 C. B. (N. S.) 528, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 859, 10 L. T. 817, 12 W. R. 1062.

As to goods to be shipped from time to time: amount of insurance limited, etc., see paragraph at end of note 8c, under § 2730 herein.

pers to store their cotton with such company under permits from the carriers, the shippers being given bills of lading upon receipt of storage receipts issued by the company, said company is obligated to insure after the issuance of the bills of lading and so long as the cotton is held by it.[3] But a compress company which agrees to insure cotton against loss by fire for the benefit of carriers and owners, can be held liable only to such extent as there was a breach of the contract to carry insurance and for such damages only as are consequent upon or result therefrom. And an advancement of money to assured for the loss of property in possession of a bailee who had failed to comply with his agreement to procure insurance on it, which recognizes insurer's liability for the loss, constitutes a payment so as to prevent a recovery for the bailee's failure to procure insurance, whether the advancement was a loan to be repaid upon recovery from the bailee, or was borrowed from a third person on insurer's credit, or was provided for in the insurance contract.[4] A carrier's liability on a collateral contract to procure insurance on the property of shippers, is, however, not covered by a policy "to cover the liability of the insured as carriers and warehousemen." [5] The consignees of goods residing in Boston contracted with a transportation company in New York for the carriage of the goods from New York to Boston, and the delivery to them at Boston. The defendant's connecting carriers residing at Massachusetts received the goods from the New York transportation company. On her arrival at Boston the goods were demanded but refused, because delivery was not then convenient, and the same afternoon they were unloaded and placed in defendant's warehouse, too late for delivery. The same night the warehouse and goods were burned up, and it was held that defendants were liable for the goods, although under Massachusetts decisions a railroad company under similar circumstances would not have been liable.[6]

[3] Lancaster Mills v. Merchants' Cotton Press Ins. Co. 89 Tenn. 1, 24 Am. Rep. 586, 14 S. W. 317. Bill of lading; carrier's liability for loss by fire; negligence. See Merchants Cotton Press & Storage Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 151 U. S. 368, 373, 38 L. ed. 195, 14 Sup. Ct. 367; Insurance Co. of North America v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 152 Ind. 333, 53 N. E. 382.

[4] Deming v. Merchants' Cotton Press & Surety Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89.

As to subrogation, see §§ 3545 et seq. herein.

[5] Minneapolis, St. Paul & S. Ste. Marie Railroad Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 55 Minn. 236, 22 L.R.A. 390, 56 N. W. 815.

[6] Faulkner v. Hart, 82 N. Y. 413, 37 Am. Rep. 574.

Mutiny justifies a deviation and permits a recovery of expenses thereby occasioned. Tweedy Trading Co. v. Western Assur. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 168 Fed. 835, case aff'd 179 Fed. 103, 102 C. C. A. 397, 39 Ins. L. J. 1342.

§ 2750a. Carriers: insurance against derailment during transportation of goods: auto truck.—Where upon the margin of a transportation certificate of insurance, it was stipulated for insurance only against loss or damage by fire, collision or derailment on land, and marine perils while on ferries and transfers, and the goods were shipped by auto truck, and the hind wheels of the truck, during said transportation, skidded into the gutter and the truck capsized, it was held that such skidding was not a "derailment" within the meaning of policy, as that word was used only in connection with transportation by rail as distinguished from transportation by vehicles over land by other means than by rail and also in distinction from transportation by water.[7]

§ 2751. Collision: marine risk: generally.—Concerning collisions generally, in determining upon which vessel lies the fault of the collision the following points are important: 1. The character of the vessels, as whether the collision is between steamships or steam vessels, or between tugs, tows, and canal-boats, or between steam and sailing vessels or steam vessels and small craft, or between sailing vessels; 2. The relative situation of the vessels, as whether one vessel is at anchor or at the pier, or both vessels are pursuing their respective courses, involving also the question of right of way; 3. The negligence or mistakes of one or both the vessels, involving the question of sudden change of course, the observance of the usual rules of navigation, and the requirements as to signals, lights, and lookouts; 4. The surrounding circumstances, such as the compelling force of the tides and of currents, the perils of the sea, imminent danger, fogs, the necessity of changing course in extremis, the locality, whether river, harbor, or entrance thereto or open sea, the time and the character of circumstances of navigation necessary, as well as the degree of speed with reference to the kind of vessel, and all the attending circumstances. The fault may be that solely of the injured vessel, or the injury may be occasioned by the fault of the other vessel, or both vessels may be in fault, or neither; as in this last case, where there is some extraneous compelling force or peril of the sea, or some extraordinary and some unavoidable accident occasioning the collision, upon the determination of which facts rests fixing the loss upon the proper party.[8]

[7] Graham v. Insurance Co. of North America, 220 Mass. 230, 107 N. E. 915.

[8] For cases covering these general points, see in 32 Fed.: The Hackensack, p. 800; The America, p. 845; The Ogemaw, p. 919. In 33 Fed.: The Alaska, p. 107, aff'd 130 U. S. 201, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. 46, 527; The Ada A. Kennedy, p. 623; The Osceola, p. 719; The Wm. Craft, p. 847, and other cases. In 34 Fed.: The Secancus, p. 68; The Martello, p. 71; The Manhasset, p. 408; The Frank P. Lee, p. 480; The Atlas, p. 543; The Britannia, p. 546, aff'd 153

We have noted below certain authorities and although they are not insurance decisions still they are pertinent here, not only as illustrating what is stated above, but also in respect of their bear-

U. S. 130, 38 L. ed. 660, 14 Sup. Ct. 795; The Baltimore, p. 660; The Belle, p. 669; The City of Albany, p. 812; The St. Johns, p. 814; The John Cottrel, p. 907; The Pomona, p. 919, and other cases. In 35 Fed.: Van-Dyke v. The Bridgeport, p. 159; McCormick v. The Gladys, p. 160; The Eliza S. Pottor, p. 220; Union Ins. Co. v. The Bridgeport, pp. 222, 224; The City of Truro, p. 317; McAvoy v. The Mignon, p. 319; The Susquehanna, p. 320; Case v. The Susquehanna, p. 325; The Sammy, p. 327; The W. J. McCaldin, p. 330; The Gibson, p. 333; The Alaska, p. 555; The Morrisania, p. 558; The Osceola, p. 559; The City of New York, p. 604, aff'd 147 U. S. 72, 37 L. ed. 84, 13 Sup. Ct. 211; The Baltimore, pp. 613, 614; The Nettie, p. 615; The Farragut, p. 617; The Drew, p. 789; Pomona, p. 921, and other cases. In 36 Fed.: The Marion W. Page, p. 329; The Sammie, p. 568; The Mary Powell, p. 598; Ocean S. S. Co. v. The Talisman, p. 600; the Mercedes, p. 602, and other cases. See, also, The Woodrop Sims, 2 Dod. Adm. 83, 85, per Lord Stowell; The Sappho, 9 Jur. 560; Chappel v. Bradshaw (Md.) 13 Atl. 50; Reeves v. Ship Constitution, Gill. (U. S.) 579; Fed. Cas. No. 11,659; Tacoma Mill Co. v. The Blue Jacket, 3 Wash. Ter. 581, 19 Pac. 151; Philadelphia & Reading R. R. Co. v. Adams, 89 Pa. St. 31, 33 Am. Rep. 721; Hoffman v. Union Ferry Co. 47 N. Y. 176, 7 Am. Rep. 435; Austin v. New Jersey Steamboat Co. 43 N. Y. 75, 3 Am. Rep. 663; 2 Parsons on Contracts (7th ed.) 428, 435, *308 et seq.

Emerigon says: "There are three kinds of collision: that which happens from casualty, that which happens by the fault of someone, and that which happens without it being possible to ascertain by whose fault:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 14, pp. 327 et seq. See Abbott on Shipping (6th ed.) 228 et seq.; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *803 et seq.; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 23, 24, n. 730, 756, 757; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 827 et seq., pp. 1034 et seq., where the following language of Lord Stowell (in the Woodrop Sims, 2 Dod. Adm. 83, 85) is quoted: "There are four possibilities under which a loss of this sort may occur: 1. It may happen without blame being imputable to either party, as where a loss is occasioned by a storm or by any other vis major; in that case the misfortunes must be borne by the party on whom it happens to light, the other not being responsible to him in any degree; 2. A misfortune of this kind may arise when both parties are to blame, where there has been a want of due diligence and skill on both sides; in such a case the rule of law is, that the loss must be apportioned between them as having been occasioned by the fault of both; 3. It may happen by the misconduct of the suffering party alone; and then the rule is, that the sufferer must bear his own burden; 4. It may have been the fault of the ship which ran the other down, and in this case the injured party would be entitled to an entire compensation from the other." And see upon these several points the cases above noted in the 32d, 33d, 34th, 35th, and 36th Fed. Rep. As to entrance into New York harbor and international rules of navigation, see The Excelsior, 33 Fed. 554. See Marsden's Law of Collisions at Sea (ed. 1880), containing extracts from the merchants' shipping acts; International Register of 1863 and 1880; and local rules for the Thames, etc.; The "collision clause" article criticising Xenos v. Fox, 46 Law Times, 125.

ing upon the principles underlying the collision clauses in policies considered under the next following sections. It should also be borne in mind that not every collision occasioning damage to the shipowner is covered by the running down clause in marine insurance. The policy may, however, stipulate for full indemnity as appears in a Federal decision hereinafter considered.[9] [9] See last preceding note. Acts of negligence which do not contribute to the accident as a proximate cause, do not render a ship liable, even under the American as distinguished from the English rule of liability. The Curtin, 217 Fed. 245, 133 C. C. A. 519, aff'g 205 Fed. 989. If faults of vessel coming out of dense fog are glaring and numerous, the court should not be very astute to discover contributory fault on part of other vessel. The Persian, 224 Fed. 441, 140 C. C. A. 135. Where sufficient officers and crew on deck when collision impending to perform all necessary duties more need not be there. La Normandie, 58 Fed. 427, 7 C. C. A. 285.

Duty of master to observe reasonable care and prudence not only against present dangers, but against impending perils, and to take reasonable measures of precaution; when cannot set up defense of inevitable accident; unsafe anchorage. The Adventuress (U. S. D. C.) 214 Fed. 834. Inevitable accident; collision caused by vessel drifting from moorings; degree of prudence and care exercised such as circumstances reasonably required, The E. M. Peck, 228 Fed. 481, 143 C. C. A. 63, rev'g 201 Fed. 599. Collision when due to inevitable accident from breaking of steamer's tiller rope, and not from steamer's fault. The Olympia, 61 Fed. 120, 9 C. C. A. 393. What constitutes inevitable accident; collision in dense fog; steam vessels; both in fault; failure to listen to signals. The Bayonne, 213 Fed. 216, 129 C. C. A. 560. What is not inevitable accident; collision of tug and barge, with steamer lying at dock. The J. N. Gilbert, 222 Fed. 37, 137 C. C. A. 575. Inevitable accident construed; test of ordinary care and maritime skill. The Jumna, 149 Fed. 171, 79 C. C. A. 119, aff'g 140 Fed. 743.

Schooner and steamship crossing; changing location of lights; acts done in extremis. The Furnessia, 154 Fed. 348, 83 C. C. A. 126, aff'g 137 Fed. 955. Failure at sea to keep proper lookout and sound fog signals frequently; location of side lights. Palmer v. Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Co. (U. S. D. C.) 154 Fed. 683. What is keeping a "proper lookout" under art. 29, inland rules act, June 7, 1897, c. 4, 30 Stat. 102, Comp. Stat. 1913, sec. 7903; collision of steam vessels in fog, signals. The Tillicum (U. S. D. C.) 217 Fed. 976. Failure of sailing vessel to show torchlight when meeting steamer, when immaterial. Bigelow v. Nickerson, 70 Fed. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1, 30 L.R.A. 336. Absence of green light, when immaterial. The Robert Graham Dun, 70 Fed. 270, 17 C. C. A. 419, aff'g 63 Fed. 167. Speed of steamer where proper light not shown by other vessel. The Kaiserin Maria Theresa, 149 Fed. 97, 78 C. C. A. 691, rev'g 125 Fed. 145.

Obligation of steamer to reduce speed on entering fog bank and neglect to do so puts fault on her for collision. The Saale, 63 Fed. 478, 11 C. C. A. 302, aff'g 59 Fed. 716. Sailing vessel with efficient fog horn, when not in fault for collision in fog, the horn having become disabled. The Trave, 68 Fed. 390, 15 C. C. A. 485.

Harbors and navigable coast waters connecting directly with the ocean are within International Rules

A vessel is "in collision," within the meaning of an insurance of 1885, article 21, requiring steamers to keep to starboard side. See Rev. Stats. sec. 4233; The Victory, 68 Fed. 395, 15 C. C. A. 490, aff'g 63 Fed. 631; The Britannia, 153 U. S. 130, 38 L. ed. 660, 14 Sup. Ct. 795; The John King, 49 Fed. 469, 1 C. C. A. 323. Collision; as to navigation on harbors, lakes, and inland waters and navigation on great lakes, as affected by International Rules of 1885, and Revised Statutes, section 4233, see The North Star, 62 Fed. 71, 10 C. C. A. 262. Crossing courses; right of way; rules of navigation for rivers and harbors, 30 Stat. 96, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2885; The Pembroke (U. S. D. C.) 150 Fed. 193. Rules of navigation of inland waters as to narrow channels and collision construed; fault of tugs in collision with steamship. The Santa Maria (U. S. D. C.) 227 Fed. 149. Altering course to starboard so that each shall pass on port side of the other; navigation of great lakes, rules, act Feb. 8, 1895, c. 64, sec. 1, 28 Stat. 645, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2891, The William Chisholm, 153 Fed. 704, 82 C. C. A. 562. Varying from compass course which would keep steamer near center of channel; starboard crossing rule; stopping and navigating with caution. The City of Lowell, 152 Fed. 593, 81 C. C. A. 593, rev'g 139 Fed. 901, act June 7, 1897, c. 4, 30 Stat. 96, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2880. Vessel not at fault under Inland rules, but at fault for violating local rule. N. Y. Laws 1882, sec. 757, c. 410, requiring vessels navigating in East River, between Battery and Blackwell's Island to keep as near channel as possible. The Ashley, 221 Fed. 423, 137 C. C. A. 221, modifying 209 Fed. 965. East River, New York is not a narrow channel within article 25 of the Inland Rules and the only regulation as to navigation is section 757, c. 410, L. 1882, N. Y., which requires vessels to go up and down as near as possible in center of stream; duty of tugs with long tows in tidewaters. The Wrestler (The Wyomissing) 232 Fed. 448, 146 C. C. A. 442.

When tug colliding with anchored vessel is solely in fault. The P. I. Nevins, 67 Fed. 158, 14 C. C. A. 355. Obstruction of navigable channels of passage of other vessels; when vessel not in fault for anchoring; collision at night; when lights sufficient. The John McCullough (The Begonia) (U. S. D. C.) 232 Fed. 637.

Collision between tugs due to fault of towing tug changing course. The John I. Timmins, 233 Fed. 748, 147 C. C. A. 514. When tug, colliding with overtaking ferryboat by being swept against it by current and having incompetent wheelmen, is in fault. Long Island Ry. Co. v. Killieu, 67 Fed. 365, 14 C. C. A. 418. Collision between tug with tow and schooner; speed of latter immoderate and in that respect in fault; necessity of slacking speed in foggy weather; tug a total loss. 16 International Rules; The Oceania Vance, 233 Fed. 77, 147 C. C. A. 147, aff'g 217 Fed. 973. As to the degree of skill required of a towing vessel, see The S. S. Wilhelm, 59 Fed. 169, 8 C. C. A. 172, 16 U. S. App. 356. Ferryboat colliding with boat in tow of tug lying near pier and holding herself against ebb-tide; ferryboat in fault. Cornell Steamboat Co. v. The Jersey City, 51 Fed. 527, 2 C. C. A. 365, aff'g 44 Fed. 112, steamer with tow held in fault in collision with anchored vessel sounding fog bell, The W. H. Gilbert, 232 Fed. 547, 146 C. C. A. 505. Duty when transporting long and unwieldy tows; dredges excavating channel. The Wyomissing, 232 Fed. 451, 453, 146 C. C. A. 442. Collision between propeller and tug, case where both in fault in keeping too near piers and want of vigilant lookout, failure of policy, when the circumstances can be fairly described, within the tug in not keeping head to tide in crossing propeller's bows. The Amos v. Barstow, 66 Fed. 366, 13 C. C. A. 15. Where tug and vessel anchored outside boundaries prescribed by regulations of secretary of navy, both held in fault, for sinking of vessel in tow. Riley v. The Richmond, 63 Fed. 1020, 12 C. C. A. 1. Steamer and barge in tow, both with full view on clear day, both in fault. The Plymouth, 232 Fed. 687, 146 C. C. A. 613.

Proximate cause of collision with moored vessel was careless and negligent handling of moving vessel coupled with failure to have pilot on board familiar with river, winds and currents. The Yucatan, 226 Fed. 437, 141 C. C. A. 267. When vessels navigating Hudson unduly encroach upon rights of ferryboats by keeping too near ends of piers. The Princeton, 67 Fed. 557, 14 C. C. A. 527. Steamer colliding with yacht moored at wharf, steamer liable. The Elberon, 70 Fed. 720, 17 C. C. A. 357. Vessel moored at wharf, Revised Stats. sec. 4233, rule 12, requiring light, when not applicable. Denty v. The Martin Dallman, 70 Fed. 797, 17 C. C. A. 419. Small steamer moored at private wharf struck by large river steamer while landing, latter in fault. The John C. Fisher, 50 Fed. 703, 1 C. C. A. 624. Steamer at pier with stern projecting only a comparatively few feet, tugs towing dry dock held in fault for collision. The Crown of Galicia, 232 Fed. 305, 146 C. C. A. 348; New York City Charter, sec. 879, Laws 1901, c. 466, construed as to its being unlawful to obstruct harbor water by lying at exterior ends of wharves except at their own risk of injury from vessels entering or leaving any adjacent dock or pier. The Allemania, 231 Fed. 942, 146 C. C. A. 138.

Collision; as to loading cargo from lighter when ship not liable for the loss. New York Lighterage & Towing Co. v. The Hogarth, 70 Fed. 872, 17 C. C. A. 470. Cargo owners not responsible for fault of vessel in colliding. The Victory, 68 Fed. 395, 15 C. C. A. 490.

Collision of tug and sailing vessel, burden of proof on steamer as to fault of other vessel. Bigelow v. Nickerson, 70 Fed. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1, 30 L.R.A. 336. Schooner tacking unnecessarily across steamer's bow in narrow channel, steamer not in fault. The Philadelphia, 61 Fed. 862, 10 C. C. A. 127. Steamer and schooner meeting at night in open sea, when steamer in fault for collision in not allowing sufficient margin for passing. Henderson v. The City of St. Augustine, 68 Fed. 393, 15 C. C. A. 488, aff'g 52 Fed. 237. Collision of steamer with schooner at night, former in fault. The Ann J. Trainor, 152 Fed. 1021, 82 C. C. A. 332, aff'g 144 Fed. 896. Schooner with gasoline motor engine by whose power she is being propelled, her sails being furled, is a steam vessel as to collision with another steam vessel for the purposes of the applicable Inland Rules; contributory fault. The Machigonne, 230 Fed. 777, 145 C. C. A. 87. Change of course, imminent danger, sailing vessel. Bigelow v. Nickerson, 70 Fed. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1, 30 L.R.A. 336. Collision between sailing vessels, one sailing free and the other close hauled, change of course. The Robert Graham Dun, 70 Fed. 270, 17 C. C. A. 90, aff'g 63 Fed. 167. Where fault of one vessel is greater than that of the other, both being in fault, the degree of fault of each measures the liability. The Victory, 68 Fed. 395, 15 C. C. A. 490. Fishing steamers, both in fault; collision in fog. Inland rules act June 7, 1897, c. 4, sec. 1, 30 Stat. 99, Comp. St. 1913, sec. 7889, construed; fog signals, stopping engines, etc. . The Amagansett, 220 Fed. 827, 136 C. C. A. 437. See also The Beaver, 219 Fed. 134, ordinary use of language, as amounting to a collision.[10] There is also a collision, in an admiralty sense, within the exception "free from particular average unless the vessel be . . . in collision," even though the vessel is at rest and moored when she is run into, and the same effect should be given the particular average clause whether the case is one of stranding or collision.[11]

§ 2752. What does and does not constitute collision generally: instances.—A loss by collision without any fault on either side is a loss by perils of the sea.[12] So a policy against the peril of the seas covers a loss by stranding or collision, although arising from the negligence of the master or crew.[13] So also where the collision

135 C. C. A. 32, aff'g 197 Fed. 866. Collision in fog between steam and sailing vessels, former guilty of faults; failure to stop engines, etc., under art. 16, of Inland Rules. The Delaware, 213 Fed. 214, 129 C. C. A. 558. Fault of both vessels. The Caldy, 153 Fed. 837, 83 C. C. A. 19, aff'g 123 Fed. 802. Collision on Lake Huron during heavy fog; both vessels in fault; failure to respond to passing signals; violation of navigation rule 26, applicable to Great Lakes, act Feb. 8, 1895, c. 64, sec. 1, 28 Stat. 649, Comp. Stat. 1913, sec. 7936D. Pittsburgh Steamship Co. v. Duluth Steamship Co. 222 Fed. 834, 138 C. C. A. 260. Both vessels in fault; steamer and schooner; The Mary P. Mosquito (U. S. D. C.) 145 Fed. 960.

Limitation of liability under Rev. Stat. 4283; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1913, sec. 8021, applies to motor boat owner whose vessel is properly manned and equipped at the time of the accident and where the same occurs without his privity or knowledge he is not liable, nor is the negligence of those in charge of the navigation of the vessel to which he was not privy and of which he had no knowledge imputable to him. The Alota (U. S. D. C.) 228 Fed. 1006. Right to limit liability exists only where fault was without the privity or knowledge of the owner; duty of owner of sunken craft to immediately mark it as personal and cannot be delegated. Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, sec. 15, 30 Stat. 1152; Comp. Stat. 1913, sec. 9920. The Drill Boat No. 4 (U. S. D. C.) 233 Fed. 589. Steamship using channel of Havanna harbor and properly equipped, with full crew and licensed pilot, and using all means to prevent collision with lighter is not in fault. The Metis, 224 Fed. 902, 140 C. C. A. 346, aff'g 212 Fed. 798.

[10] London Assurance Co. v. Companhia de Moagens do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785. Cited in Packard v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 72 N. H. 1, 3, 54 Atl. 287.

[11] London Assurance v. Companhia de Moagens do Barriero, 15 C. C. A. 379, 68 Fed. 247 (citing The Granite State, 3 Wall. (90 U. S.) 310, 18 L. ed. 179, aff'd 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785); 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. 632; Harman v. Vaux, 3 Camp. 429, 14 R. R. 773, per Lord Ellenborough, C. J.; Roux v. Salvadore, 7 L. J. Ex. 328, 3 Bing. (N. C.) 266, 4 Scott, 1, 2 Hodges, 209, 43 R. R. 638; 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 46. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Pitts, [1893] 1 Q. B. 476, 5 R. 168, 68 L. T. 524, 41 W. R. 346, 7 Asp. M. C. 302.

[12] Peters v. Warren Ins. Co. 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 99, 10 L. ed. 371, 3 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 389, Fed. Cas. No. 11,035; Buller v. Fisher, 3 Esp. 67; Peake's Add. Cas. 183, 4 R. R. 902.

[13] Liverpool & Great Western Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. ("The results through the gross negligence of the other vessel,[14] or where the insured vessel is injured by collision, whether her own crew have been vigilant or careless.[15] A steamboat going west through Hellgate with the flood tide may without fault take the east channel after one whistle to a tug going up that channel, and where the latter loses one boat of her tow by collision, owing to her failure to go to the starboard side, she having answered the steamer's one whistle with one whistle, the tug is in fault.[16]

An impairment of the seaworthiness of a vessel by contact with another, is not necessary to constitute the affair a collision within the meaning of an insurance policy, when as a result of the impact cracks are made from one-half inch to one and three-quarter inches wide for a distance of eleven feet in the iron plating of the vessel's bulwarks.[17]

If a vessel insured against collision with any object but not against perils of the sea runs against a snag and springs a leak, which is temporarily repaired, and while being towed into port for repairs the leak is so far enlarged by the motion through the water that she begins to sink and is run aground and abandoned, the insurers are liable for a loss of the ship under the collision clause.[18]

Vessels may also be in collision, although but one of them is in motion while the other is at a wharf fully loaded and ready to proceed upon her voyage.[19] So the words "actual collision between any tug and any vessel" cover damage caused to a tug by striking upon an anchor attached to a schooner's bows by twenty or thirty fathoms of chain as said anchor is part of the ship.[20] So policies Montana") 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. 469. Cited in Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 421, 34 L. ed. 398, 403, 10 Sup. Ct. 934; American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. v. Bennett & Goodall, 207 Fed. 510, 125 C. C. A. 172, 42 Ins. L. J. 1783, 1787; Pennsylvania Ry. Co. v. Manheim Ins. Co. 56 Fed. 301, 303; Earnmoor Steam Ship Co. v. Union Ins. Co. 44 Fed. 374, 376; Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 363, 371, 19 Atl. 832.

[14] Smith v. Scott, 4 Taunt. 125, 126, 13 R. R. 568.

[15] Buller v. Fisher, 3 Esp. 67; Peake's Add. Cas. 183, 4 R. R. 902; Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 1, rev'g 13 Barb. 234, per Denio, J.; Street v. Augusta Ins. Co. 12 Rich. (S. C.) 13, 75 Am. Dec. 714; Hale v. Washington Ins. Co. 2 Story (U. S. C. C.) 176, 184, Fed. Cas. No. 5,916.

[16] Union Ins. Co. v. The Bridgeport, 35 Fed. 222, 224. See notes under § 2751 herein.

[17] London Assurance Co. v. Companhia de Moagens do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785.

[18] Reischer v. Borwick (Eng. C. A. 1894) 2 Q. B. 548, 63 L. J. B. 753, 9 R. 558, 71 L. T. 238, 7 Asp. M. C. 493.

[19] London Assurance Co. v. Companhia de Moagens do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, cited in Cline v. Western Assurance Co. 101 Va. 496, 503, 44 S. E. 700.

[20] Margetts & Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. In re, [1901] 2 K.

against "the risk of collision sustained" or against "loss sustained by collision with another vessel" mean the same thing, namely, collision with another vessel.[1] And if a vessel is anchored at the proper place where boats are usually anchored, or is lying on well-known anchorage ground out of the regular course of vessels, and where it may reasonably be expected that vessels are liable to be lying, steamboats or tugs with tows are in fault for collision, and liable for damage to the anchored vessel.[2] But the injury to a vessel from striking some portion of a vessel wrecked several hours before, and which is never raised, and the cost of raising which would have exceeded her value, is not from collision with another vessel within the meaning of marine insurance. It was also declared in the case holding as above that if a vessel is temporarily aground, or at anchor, or at her dock, and is run into by another vessel, this is a collision with another vessel within the meaning of marine insurance. But the court, per Lathrop, J., evidently distinguishes as to the first point, an English decision as follows: "So it may be true, as was decided in Chandler v. Blogg,[3] that a vessel strikes another vessel which is at the time under water, and resting on the bottom, this is a collision within the meaning of the policy, if the vessel is raised within a few hours. Mr. Justice Bingham, in this case adopted the view that 'collision' when used alone, without other words, meant two navigable things coming into contact; and that the sunken vessel, though she could not be navigated at the time, was still navigable, as she was raised within a few hours." The court also considers the case of Richardson v. Burrows,[3a] and says: "Though not reported . . . it was an action to recover for a partial loss of wheat shipped on a small schooner, which sailed from Lynn to England for Caen in France. During the night the vessel struck something which caused damage to the cargo. What the object was did not appear, but it was probably some old sunken wreck, or possibly floating wreck. After the evidence was in, Lord Coleridge inquired whether there were any cases of collision. None were referred to. Lord Coleridge ruled that he should hold that the word 'collision' meant collision with another ship, and did not mean either a rock or a sand bank or floating wreck. The jury were then discharged by consent, and judgment given for defendant. The case was decided December 16, 1880. While this is a nisi prius

B. 792, 70 L. J. K. B. 762, 85 L. T. 94, 49 W. R. 669, 9 Asp. M. C. 217.

[1] Burnham v. China Mutual Ins. Co. 189 Mass. 100, 109 Am. St. Rep. 627, 75 N. E. 74.

[2] Orison v. The Syracuse, 35 Fed. 367; The Drew, 35 Fed. 789. See The Mary Powell, 36 Fed. 598; The Nettie, 35 Fed. 615.

[3] (1898) 1 Q. B. 32, 67 L. J. Q. B. 336, 77 L. T. 524, 8 Asp. M. C. 349, 3 Com. Cas. 18.

[3a] Cited in Lowndes on Marine Ins. 199.

decision, it is of some weight."[4] Again, a ship does not "come into collision with any other ship or vessel" by running foul of the nets of a fishing vessel where said ship does not at any time come into contact with the hull of said fishing vessel which was, when sighted, a mile away.[5] So under a Virginia decision the striking a sunken or floating obstruction does not constitute a collision under an insurance of a ship and machinery and against loss or damage by the breaking of machinery caused among other things by collision.[6] Under a Federal decision if an insured vessel, under the running down clause, which is running alongside of another, but is entirely independent thereof as to ownership, management and navigation, and through concurrent negligence of both, another and smaller vessel was caused by the suction of the insured vessel to collide with still another vessel, said insured vessel is not in collision where she was not at the time of the disaster in contact with any other vessel and she herself sustained no injury, but was held responsible solely because her negligence contributed to placing the other vessels in a position which rendered collision inevitable. "The word 'collision' as used in marine insurance can no longer be limited to that fortuitously injurious contact of navigating vessels which is its obvious and national signification."[7] It was declared in this case, per Hough, Dist. J., in substantially the following words, that a tug and tow are regarded as one vessel, so also as to vessels which are so united under a single control that an impulse carelessly or negligently given to the controlling craft must be communicated to the other, both must be regarded as an entity, but if the control be but intelligently exerted, as in case of a flagship over a flotilla, or if there be no control at all there can be no collision without an injurious contact between the vessel insured and some other object.[8]

[4] Burnham v. China Mutual Ins. Co. 189 Mass. 100, 109 Am. St. Rep. 627, 75 N. E. 74, 34 Ins. L. J. 1005.

[5] Bennett Steamship Co. v. Hull Mutual Steamship Protecting Soc. Ltd. 83 L. J. K. B. 1179, [1914] 3 K. B. 57, 111 L. T. 489, 12 Asp. M. C. 522, 19 Ann. Cas. 353, 30 T. L. R. 515, aff'g 82 L. J. K. B. 1003, [1913] 3 K. B. 372. The clause was: "And it is further agreed that if the ship hereby insured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel and the assured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay and shall pay by way of damages to any other person or persons any sum or sums not exceeding in respect of any one such collision the value of the ship herein insured, the company will pay the assured such proportion of three fourths of such sum or sums so paid as its subscription hereto bears to the value of the ship hereby insured."

[6] Cline v. Western Assur. Co. 101 Va. 496, 44 S. E. 100.

[7] Western Transit Co. v. Brown (U. S. D. C.) 152 Fed. 476, aff'd 161 Fed. 869, 88 C. C. A. 617.

[8] Considering The Niobe, 7 Asp. M. C. 89 (1891) A. C. 401, 17 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th Ser.) 1016, 65 L. T. 502.

Under another decision in the Federal District Court it is held that actual contact between the insured vessel and another is necessary under the running down clause and said clause does not apply where the tow of the insured vessel is in collision with another vessel, notwithstanding said insured vessel has been held liable for the damages therefor.[9]

Under an English decision where there was insurance upon the hull and machinery under a time policy, which contained on an attached slip the Institute Time Collision Clause which provided that "if the ship hereby insured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel, and the assured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay, and shall pay, by way of damages, to any other person or persons any sum or sums not exceeding in respect of any one such collision the value of the ship hereby insured, this company will pay the assured such proportion of three-fourths of such sum or sums so paid as its subscription hereto bears to the value of the ship hereby insured, and in cases in which the liability of the ship has been contested or proceedings have been taken to limit liability with the consent in writing of this company, the company will also pay a like proportion of three fourths of the costs which the assured shall thereby incur or be compelled to pay." It was held that if by the negligent navigation of the insured vessel a collision with another vessel occurs and by reason of such collision the vessel with which the one insured was so in collision is thereafter herself forced into collision with a third vessel the negligent navigation of the insured vessel having set in force the final collision it was within the terms of said collision clause, the owners of the insured vessel having been held liable for the damage caused to both vessels, a recovery could be had against the underwriters for three-fourths of the damage they had been compelled to pay.[10]

In a New York case it appeared from the evidence that the master of a tugboat, regardless of the risk of attempting to take a tow through a field of too heavy or dangerous ice rammed it through in the night time, and it was held that injury sustained by reason thereof was not a collision within the intent of the policy. The court, per Parker, C. J., said: "Unquestionably, the injured may recover where the collision is due to the design of the master of another vessel or floating object; but when the master of the vessel insured designedly takes the chance of running into a perfectly apparent obstruction, although with the hope and expectation that the vessel will successfully meet the encounter, the contact is not a collision within the meaning of the term as employed in this contract. Collision, in its strict nautical and legal acceptation, originally meant the impinging upon one another of vessels while being navigated, but in course of time and by common usage, the application of the term has been so far extended, in this country, at least, as to include the impact of a vessel with other floating objects. . . . However, whether the term be treated by the courts as so fixed in character as to be restricted in its meaning to the coming together of two vessels, as is the rule in France, or so flexible as to include a variety of floating objects other than vessels, the idea of accident, so far as the insured is concerned, underlies it." [11]

[9] Coastwise Steamship Co. v. Ætna Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 161 Fed. 871, considering the Western Transit Co. case and also the Niobe case.

[10] France, Fenwick & Co. v. Merchants' Marine Ins. Co. 84 L. J. K. B. 1905, [1915] 3 K. B. 290, 113 L. T. 299, 20 Com. Cas. 227, 31 T. L. R. 321, aff'g 84 L. J. K. B. 138 (1914) 3 K. B. 827.

Under a warranty to be free of particular average unless the vessel be in collision, the term "collision" covers loss by a breaking in the ship's bulwarks, caused by her being struck by a scow on her return to dock because of trouble with her engine after she, being fully loaded, has cast off her moorings, and in such case the saving force to the insurers of the exception ceases to operate at once the collision takes place, without regard to the fact whether the subsequent loss arises from the collision or not.[12] And in a decision here wherein the contract was interpreted according to the English law it is decided that the clause "free from particular average unless the vessel be . . . in collision," as construed in England, makes an insurer liable, if the vessel is once in collision during the adventure after the goods are on board, for any loss covered by the general words in the policy, although it is not the result of the collision, and but for the collision would have been within the exception contained in the memorandum, and free from particular average as therein provided.[13] In a Massachusetts case insurer was not to be liable for any partial loss on the vessel or freight unless it amounted to a certain per cent, etc., and by a marginal clause it

[11] Newtown Creek Towing Co. v. Ætna Ins. Co. 163 N. Y. 114, 57 N. E. 302, 29 Ins. L. J. 1039, rev'g 48 N. Y. Supp. 929, 23 App. Div. 152. A case of "Towers' liability" policy; clause was: against "loss and damage arising from or growing out of any accident caused by collision and, or stranding, to any other vessel, or vessels, their freight and cargoes for each or any of them, for which said steam tug or its owners may be legally liable."

[12] The Liscard (Companhia de Moagens do Barreiro) v. London Assur. Co. (Same v. Manheim Ins. Co.) 56 Fed. 44, aff'd 68 Fed. 247, 15 C. C. A. 379, and 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785.

[13] London Assurance Co. v. Companhia de Moagens do Barreiro, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, cited in Ursula Bright Steamship Co. v. Amsinck, 115 Fed. 242, 245; De Farconnet v. Western Ins. Co. 110 Fed. 405, 413; International Navigation Co. v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. 100 Fed. 304, 318.

was stipulated that the risk was covered of loss by collision, "according to the decisions of the courts" of that state "prior to 1853, provided" that the liability should not exceed the above specified amount. In a case decided prior to said date[14] it was held that underwriters insuring a vessel against perils of the sea were bound to pay assured the amount paid by him to the owners of another vessel for damages suffered in collision with the vessel insured occasioned by the negligence of the master and crew of the latter, and the court declared that as the decision referred to had been reaffirmed, the policy irrespective of the marginal clause would have covered a loss by collision, even if inflicted by the insured vessel she was compelled, under such circumstances, to pay for it as well as for the loss suffered by herself; but as the insured vessel had been in collision and was herself alone in fault and the loss did not amount to the per cent specified there could be no recovery for the amount paid therefor by the owner.[15]

In determining, however, the question of insurer's liability, reference must be had to the exact terms of the contract, and if it is stipulated that the insurance is to fully indemnify assured for loss and damage arising from or growing out of any accident caused by collision or stranding resulting from any cause whatever to any other vessel or vessels for which the steamer, or its owner may be legally liable, such provision covers damages recovered by a scow owner against an insured tug by reason of other vessels having run into a sunken scow causing a total loss after she had been found drifting by the tug and had been taken in tow by her and moored to a slip, and the tug owner with full knowledge that the scow had sunk had left her in that unsafe place without doing anything to warn other vessels of her location, and the question of towage or salvage service is unimportant in this connection.[16]

A loss by fire caused by a collision is held to be covered by a policy insuring against fire except fire arising from certain causes, collision not being excepted, although such a policy does not cover loss from collision.[17]

§ 2753. Collision with "piers or stages or other structures," when not stranding.—Under a collision contract of reinsurance "against [14] Nelson v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 477, 54 Am. Dec. 770n, decided in 1852. Cited in The Barnstable, 181 U. S. 464, 470, 45 L. ed. 954, 21 Sup. Ct. 684, a case of libel by the owners of a schooner against a steamship for a collision whereby the schooner became a total loss, damage was caused by negligence of charterers in possession and navigating ship.

[15] Whorf v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 68.

[16] Ferguson v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 125 Fed. 141, aff'd 137 Fed. 1018, 70 C. C. A. 62, 670, 679.

[17] Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Nor-risk or loss or damage through collision with any other ship . . . or piers or stages or similar structures," the vessels during a heavy gale struck and were wrecked on the toe of the breakwater of Holyhead harbor, being driven by the force of the wind and sea against a sloping bank or mound called the toe of said breakwater while endeavoring to clear its end, it being made by a deposit of a number of large boulders forming said toe, behind which the wall of the breakwater was built. The vessels were totally lost, and the underwriter having paid therefor, sought recovery under this reinsurance, and it was held that the loss was by collision, and not by stranding; that the words "pier," "breakwater," and "toe" all denoted one and the same structure, within the expression "piers or stages or similar structures;" that "striking against" and "collision" could not be distinguished; that it was not necessary to constitute a collision that the upper works of the ship must strike some one of the things referred to in said clause, and it was none the less a collision because the keels of the vessels struck the toe, and therefore a recovery could be had.[18]

§ 2754. Collision as loss by perils of the sea: proximate cause: damage to other vessel.—Peters v. Warren Insurance Company,[19] decides that a loss by collision without fault on either side is a loss by perils of the sea. And also that the underwriters are liable for the injury and repairs to the vessel.[20] It therefore involves the discussion of the principles underlying proximate and remote cause. The facts were briefly these: By the law of a foreign port, to the wich & New York Transportation Co. 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 194, 20 L. ed. 378; Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 33, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 26, 7 Ohio Dec. 17.

[18] Union Marine Ins. Co. v. Borwick, [1895] 2 L. R. Q. B. D. 279, 281, per Matthew, J.; 64 L. J. Q. B. 679, 15 R. 546, 73 L. T. 156, 8 Asp. M. C. 71, 1 Com. Cas. 87. See London Assurance Co. v. Companhia de Moagens do Barreiro, 68 Fed. 247, 15 C. C. A. 379, aff'd 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. 785 (as noted under § 2751 herein); Cline v. Western Assur. Co. 101 Va. 496, 44 S. W. 100.

As to necessity of contact with another vessel. See also § 2752 herein.

[19] 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 463, Fed. Cas. No. 11,034, 3 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 389, Fed. Cas. No. 11,035, aff'd 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 99, 10 L. ed. 371. See also §§ 2751, 2752, 2755 herein.

[20] Peters v. Warren Ins. Co. 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 99, 10 L. ed. 371, cited in General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 352, 364, 14 L. ed. 452, 457; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (46 U. S.) 441, 503, 12 L. ed. 226, 255; Hale v. Washington Ins. Co. 2 Story (U. S. C. C.) 176, 185, Fed. Cas. No. 5,916; King v. Shepherd, 3 Story (U. S. C. C.) 349, 361, Fed. Cas. No. 7,804; Peters v. Warren Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 463, 468, Fed. Cas. No. 11,034; Edwards v. The Robert F. Stockton, Crabbe, 580, 582, Fed. Cas. No. 4,297; Sherwood v. General Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 Blatchf. 251, 252, Fed. Cas. No. 12,776; Van Hern v. Taylor, 7 Rob. (La.) 201, 202, 41 Am. Dec. 279; Matthews v. Howard Ins. Co. 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 234, 242.

operation of which the vessel insured was subjected at the time of accidental collision, it was decreed that the collision was not the result of carelessness on either side, and the loss was a general average to be borne equally by both parties, and by the apportionment assured was obligated to pay two thousand six hundred dollars in satisfaction of the decree. The opinion of the supreme court, sustaining Mr. Justice Story, was unanimous that the collision was the proximate cause of the loss and the contribution not the cause, but a consequence, and that the insurers were liable for the amount so paid.

The doctrine of this case is directly contrary to the decision given by Lord Dunham, C. J., in an English case shortly prior thereto, where the owner endeavored to recover as for a particular average loss as by perils of the sea, under substantially the same facts, or at least so far the same that the cases may be considered as resting on the same basis. The English decision holds that the insurers were not liable for the excess, as the obligation to pay was not a necessary or proximate effect of the perils of the sea.[1] In line with the decision of the United States supreme court are other cases and authority of great weight,[2] while the doctrine of the English case seems to be that now in force in England.[3] And the latter is the doctrine favored here by such writers of authority as Mr. Phillips[4] and Mr. Parsons.[5] It will be seen upon examination of the decision that in the cases other than that of Peters v. Warren Insurance Company, first above noted, the insured was obligated to pay the damage, on the ground of negligence or fault of the officers and

[1] De Vaux v. Salvador, 4 Ad. & E. 420, 6 Nev. & M. 713, 5 L. J. K. B. 134, 1 H. & W. 751, 43 R. R. 374, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 305. But see Heard v. Holman, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 544, 12 L. T. (N. S.) 455, 19 C. B. (N. S.) 1, 34 L. J. C. P. 239, 13 W. R. 745.

[2] Hale v. Washington Ins. Co. 2 Story (U. S. C. C.) 176, Fed. Cas. No. 5916, denied in General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 351, 14 L. ed. 452, rev'g 1 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 251, Fed. Cas. No. 12,776; General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 351, 14 L. ed. 452, rev'g 1 Blatchf. 251, Fed. Cas. No. 12,776; Walker v. Boston Ins. Co. 14 Gray (80 Mass.) 288; Blanchard v. Equitable Safety Ins. Co. 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 386; Nelson v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 477, 54 Am. Dec. 770; Matthews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 1, 9, rev'g 13 Barb. 234. But see Street v. Augusta Ins. Co. 12 Rich. L. (S. C.) 13, 75 Am. Dec. 714.

[3] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 24; 2 Id. 729, 730. Examine also 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *800, *806; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 792, p. 987, sec. 821, p. 829; Judicature act, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, sec. 25, subsec. 9.

[4] 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 66, 170 et seq., 177 et seq., 201; secs. 1137, 1272, 1416, 1436.

[5] 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 551 et seq., 554.

crew of the insured vessel. But the negligence or the collision must be the proximate cause of the loss, and the collision being the proximate cause it is a loss for which insurers are liable, and neither the damages or amount of contribution can be the proximate cause, but must be a direct legal consequence of the peril. If a peril insured against causes the loss, and the remote cause is the negligence of the master and crew, the underwriters are nevertheless liable, without regard to the fact whether or not the policy covers barratry; therefore, the question of negligence ought to be eliminated.[6] Again, such damages or amount of contribution may be fairly considered as incident to a peril insured against, attributed thereto, and falling as a legal consequence thereof.[7] And the assertion of the principle in Peters v. Warren Insurance Company [8] seems most reasonable that, if the thing insured becomes by law directly chargeable with any expense, contribution, or loss, in consequence of a particular peril, then that peril is the cause of such expense.[9]

But a case of this kind is to be distinguished from that where a ship damaged by collision seeks port for repairs, and in discharging and reshipping the goods for that purpose they are damaged by the necessary handling and by the delay. In such case the collision cannot be considered the proximate cause of the damage to the goods by said handling and delay.[10] It is also held that the insurance of barges against collision with other vessels is not a ground for recovery of damages for detention during repairs, as such damages are not within the rule as to proximate cause as they are too remote.[11]

§ 2755. Collision: running down clause.—The liability of the insurers under what is known as the "running down clause" will depend largely upon the exact terms used. It generally provides for the payment by the insurers of a specified proportionate sum, usually three-fourths, which the insured shall become liable to pay,

[6] Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 691, 1 McLean, 279; Walker v. Maitland, 5 Barn. & Ald. 171, 24 R. R. 320.

[7] See McCargo v. New Orleans Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 202, 43 Am. Dec. 180, as to consequences incident to perils insured against. See also Magoun v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 157, Fed. Cas. No. 8,961; Perry v. Ohio Ins. Co. 5 Ohio, 305.

[8] 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 99, 10 L. ed. 371.

[9] See 3 Kent's Commentaries, 301n.

[10] Pink v. Fleming (C. A.) 59 L. J. Q. B. 559, 25 Q. B. D. 396, 63 L. T. 413, 6 App. M. C. 554. See Emery v. Huntington, 109 Mass. 431, 12 Am. Rep. 725.

[11] Shelbourne & Co. v. Law, Investment & Insurance Corp. [1898] 2 Q. B. 626, 79 L. T. (N. S.) 278, 67 L. J. Q. B. 944, 3 Com. Cas. 304, 8 Asp. M. C. 445.

and shall pay, for damages or injuries sustained by another ship by collision through accident or negligence with the insured vessel; and where a vessel, having collided with another, was sold under a decree of admiralty to pay the damage and proceeds of her sale, and the amount paid was two thousand one hundred pounds, the vessel being sold for less than her value, which was three thousand pounds, it was held that under such a clause as the above, insurers were only liable for three-fourths of the two thousand one hundred pounds.[12] And under a clause so providing it is also held where shipowners had not paid over to the other ship half the amount of the damage sustained by collision, but had only allowed it on account by deducting it from half the amount or damage to their own ship, this was not a sum which the owners had become liable to pay and had paid[13] nor, so it is held, does it cover demands for personal injuries.[14] But where a vessel is collided with and sunk by a tug having a ship in tow, and both the tug and tow are found liable in damages therefor, the tow may recover the same from the insurers under a like clause as the above, even though the tow herself was not directly in collision.[15] Again, where under this clause the insured is sued for damages for a collision, but [12] Thompson v. Reynolds, 26 L. J. Q. B. 93, 7 El. & B. 172, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 464. See § 2752 herein.

As to collision or running down clause in connection with constructive total loss, see Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Globe Navigation Co. 236 Fed. 618, — C. C. A. —.

As to "'full protection policy' introduced by certain Liverpool insurance companies," see 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 796, p. 994.

[13] London S. S. Ins. Co. v. Grampian S. S. Co. 24 Q. B. D. 663, 59 L. J. Q. B. 549, 62 L. T. 784, 38 W. R. 651, 6 Asp. M. C. 506.

[14] Taylor v. Dewar, 5 B. & S. 58, 33 L. J. Q. B. 141, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 361, 10 L. T. 267, 12 W. R. 579. But see Coey v. Smith, 22 Ct. Sess. Cas. (N. S.) 955.

[15] McCowan v. Baine (H. of L. Eng. 1891) App. Cas. 401, 65 L. T. 502, 7 Asp. M. C. 89, 28 Scot. L. R. 943, 17 Ct. Sess. Cas. (S. C.) 1061, Lord Bramwell dissenting. It was said in this case that the clause ought to cover all damages consequent upon an actual collision for which assured is liable, and that the court could not adopt a construction which would narrow the meaning of the term "collision" to direct contact between the two hulls or some part of the ship's structure, but that the clause extended to injuries caused by the impact of the hull of the insured ship or of her boats or steam launch, even though the latter were not insured as parts of the ship, and that the words also covered an indirect collision, such as the driving of another vessel by impact therewith against the injured ship, or if a tug were towing barges and a barge were driven against any other vessel owing to the improper navigation of the tug, thereby causing damage to the other vessel, that the insurers would be liable, even though there had been no impact of the tug itself with the injured ship: Id. per Lord Selborne.

[16] Xenos v. Fox, 4 L. R. C. P. 665, aff'g 3 L. R. C. P. 630; 38 L. J. C. P. 351, 17 W. R. 893.

successfully defends and obtains judgment, the insurers are not liable for expenses of defending the claim.[16]

§ 2755a. Collision: sums paid for removal of obstructions: statutory commissioners.—Underwriters are held not liable for any moiety or sum paid directly or indirectly to any person causing an obstruction consequent upon a collision to be removed, and this applies where the insured owners of a vessel had paid a sum as damages to the owners of another vessel, which had sunk by reason of a collision, for which both vessels were to blame, and commissioners, acting under statutory powers, had caused the obstruction to be removed, for which removal the owners of the sunken vessel had paid, and the policy provided that the collision clause should not extend to any sum which the assured might become liable to pay, or should pay for removal or obstructions under statutory powers.[17]

§ 2756. Confounding of goods by breaking open of packages, etc.: marine risk.—If by a peril of the sea bales, packages, etc., containing goods of the same character but having distinctive marks of ownership are so disturbed as to break open, and the goods are so scattered and confounded that the several ownerships are indistinguishable, this is not of itself a loss at the charge of the insurers where the goods still retain, although commingled, the form and substance of that particular kind of merchandise, as in the case of cotton, and there still remains in the several owners their proportionate ownership in the whole property.[18]

[17] Tatham v. Burr (1898) App. Cas. L. R. 382. See Burger v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assur. Co. [1900] 2 Q. B. 348, 69 L. J. Q. B. 838, 82 L. T. N. S. 831, Com. Cas. 315, 48 W. R. 643, 9 Asp. M. C. 85.

[18] So held in Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 3 C. P. 427, 37 L. J. C. P. 169, 18 L. T. 632, 16 W. R. 1010. This decision is explained and distinguished in a bill of lading case under a clause of exemption of liability for "inaccuracies, obliteration or absence of marks, members, or description," etc., where there was a shortage of delivery and the question was of liability for unmarked goods and apportionment among consignees. Sandeman & Sons v. Tyzack & Branfoot Steamship Co. Ltd. [1913] App. Cas. 680, 83 L. J. P. C. 23, 109 L. T. 580, 29 T. L. R. 694, 57 S. J. 752. And it is asserted, per Viscount Haldan, L. C., that said Spence case was a claim against insurer as for a total loss, and that the consignee who claimed in the action had to establish his total loss and "failed for obvious reasons" and it, therefore, presented no real analogy to the Sandeman case. It is also declared per Lord Moulton, that in said Spence case the participating parties "were judged to possess the mixed mass in proportion to the probable amounts of their contributions to it. The fact is that the conclusions of the courts in such cases, though influenced by certain fundamental principles, have been little more than instances of cutting the Gordian knot—reasonable adjustments of the rights of parties in cases where complete justice was impracticable of attainment. I doubt whether even the fundamental principles

§ 2757. Contingent liability of insurer: carrier: construction of policy.—If the policy provides that in case goods insured are lost, damaged, or destroyed while in care of a common carrier the insurer shall advance the assured an amount equivalent to the insured value of the goods, pending an investigation and determination whether the carrier is liable for the loss at common law, and, if the carrier is liable, then such amount as shall be received from the carrier is to be paid the company in discharge of said advance, and the bill of lading to the carrier provides that it shall have the full benefit of any insurance on the goods, the policy is in effect a provision for contingent liability of the insurer, who is liable, if the carrier is not; and if the carrier be found liable, the money paid by the insurer will be held simply as an advance pending the determination of the point of liability of the insurer, or carrier, and the latter has no right to insurance money.[19] And the taking of an obligation by an insurer, in complying with its contract to, in case of loss, advance money to the assured, pending the collection of the claim from the one primarily liable, for a return of the money, not if the insurer was not liable, but in case some other person should prove to be so, will be held to be a concession of liability on the part of the insurer.[20]

§ 2758. Conversion: recovery and disposal of property by underwriter.—If the policy makes it incumbent upon the underwriter in case of loss to recover, save, and dispose of the insured property for the benefit of all concerned, he has the right of possession where a loss occurs, and cannot be held liable for a conversion in so taking and disposing of the property.[1]

§ 2759. Decayed, rotten, etc.: marine risks.—If articles of merchandise, decayed, rotten, or otherwise, are damaged by reason of the intrinsic nature or proper or inherent vice of the article, and it appears that the loss was so occasioned, the insurer is not liable therefor except he so stipulates.[2] And if a vessel is old and decayed,

. . . would be strictly adhered to in extreme cases where they would lead to substantial injustice. . . . If the judgment be carefully read, it will in my opinion, appear that the court . . . did not purport or intend to make any addition to the law as to the effect of commixtio as previously enunciated by recognized authority."

[19] Gulf Coast & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Zimmerman, 81 Tex. 605, 17 S. W. 239.

[20] Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & Surety Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89.

[1] Schuyler v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 56 Hun (N. Y.) 493, 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 659, 10 N. Y. Supp. 205, aff'd 134 N. Y. 345, 32 N. E. 25, 22 Ins. L. J. 150, 48 N. Y. St. Rep. 213 (two judges dissenting).

[2] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 9, who says: "Losses proceeding from the proper vice of the subject and its intrinsic nature, ex vitio rei et intrinseca ejus natura, are not at the charge of the but nevertheless her condition is such that she may be run for some time, the insurer is not obligated to make good that which is decayed and rotten unless she sustains a loss by a peril insured against, which is of such a nature that repairs cannot be made so that the decayed and rotten parts may be used as before the accident.[3]

§ 2760. Delay in voyage.—The insurers guarantee only the safe arrival of goods. They do not guarantee speedy arrival nor arrival in time of an advantageous market, nor do they incur loss from delay in the voyage, unless the delay is produced by a peril insured against or the cargo be subject to deterioration by mere lapse of time;[4] and in case of an insurance on passage money the insurers do not contract that the vessel shall deliver her passengers within a given time.[5] Nor does an insurer on freight guarantee that it shall be earned in any stated time, and is not liable under an insurance of freight for loss thereof earned by detention of the ship by sea perils. It is sufficient that the freight be earned.[6] Under insurers:" Taylor v. Dunbar, L. R. 4 C. P. 206, 38 L. J. C. P. 178, 17 W. R. 382; Boyd v. Dubois, 3 Camp. 133; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 618, sec. 1089.

[3] Hyde v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 410, 14 Am. Dec. 196, per Porter, J.

[4] Salisbury v. Marine Ins. Co. 23 Mo. 553, 66 Am. Dec. 687. See Bradford v. Levy, Ryan & M. 331, 2 C. & P. 137, 31 R. R. 657; Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 Term Rep. 656.

When delay in transit by reason of the transport being disorganized by civil war and consequent damage to goods by damp, wetting, and insects, renders insurer liable, see Schloss v. Stevens, 75 L. J. K. B. 927, [1906] 2 K. B. 665, 11 Com. Cas. 270, 22 T. L. R. 774, considered under § 2734 herein.

As to war risks and clause excluding claims arising from delay: sue and labor clause: expenses, see Wilson Bros. Bobbin Co. v. Green, 86 L. J. K. B. 713, [1917] 1 K. B. 860, considered under § 2818 herein.

As to delay under strike clause: charter party: refusal of crew to sail owing to fear of submarines, see Williams Brothers, Ltd. v. Naamlooze Vennootschap Berghuys Kolenhandel, 86 L. J. K. B. 334, 21 Com. Cas. 253.

As to delay preventing discharging: strike clause: charter party: demurrage: meaning and construction of clause, see Central Argentine Railway, Ltd. v. Marwood, 84 L. J. K. B. 1593, [1915] A. C. 981, 113 L. T. 786, 13 Asp. M. C. 153.

As to charter party: time charter: "restraint" of princes: delay beyond that contemplated, see Scottish Navigation Co., Ltd. v. Souter & Co. (Admiral Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Weidert, Hopkins & Co.) 13 Mar. L. Cas. N. S. 246, 86 L. J. K. B. 336, 350, [1917] 1 K. B. 222, 115 L. T. 812, 22 Com. Cas. 154, 61 S. J. 85, 33 T. L. R. 71, rev'g 85 L. J. K. B. 409, 1181, [1916] 1 K. B. 429, 675.

[5] Howard v. Astor Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 38. See Marks v. Nashville Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 6 La. Ann. 127; Willis v. Cooke, 5 El. & B. 641, 25 L. J. Q. B. 16, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 1164, 4 W. R. 54, and examine Gibson v. Bradford, 24 L. J. Q. B. 159, 4 El. & B. 586, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 520, 3 W. R. 183, 99 R. R. 633.

[6] Mayo v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 374. See McGaw v. Ocean Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (40 Mass.) 405; Everth v. Smith, 2 Maule & S. 278, 5 M. & L. 6, 15 R. R. 246.

a policy "at and from" a foreign port unreasonable delay in commencing the voyage after making the policy, whereby the risk is materially varied, avoids the contract.[7] We have already considered the question of delay in connection with deviation, as well as what is reasonable and unreasonable delay, justified or not justified by the purposes of the voyage.

§ 2761. Electrical machinery and fixtures: electric lighting: fire risk: knowledge of insurers.—If a building and the electrical machinery and fixtures therein used for generating and transmitting electricity for electric lighting are insured against loss by fire, it will be assumed that the insurers in making the contract did so with a knowledge of the purposes for which the machinery was used, and that they understood at the time that electricity would be transmitted from the dynamos, and would be a powerful force in and about the building. They must also be presumed to have contemplated the effects which fire would naturally produce in connection with the electrical machinery and apparatus used. Therefore, where a fire in a remote part of the building caused a circuit, whereby there was an increase of electric current brought into the dynamo, producing a resistance which being transmitted to other machinery caused a strain and a breaking to pieces of the same and other injuries, the insurers were held liable.[8] A clause providing that the insurance does not cover any loss or damage to property caused by "electric current whether artificial or natural" cannot be added to the Wisconsin Standard fire policy, which is also a statute providing for insurance against all direct loss or damage by fire except as henceforth provided and which also contains certain exceptions including lightning, but provides that liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed "by specific agreement hereon," and said policy and statute also forbid attaching thereto any additional provision, etc., and, therefore, all direct loss by fire caused by an electric light current is recoverable.[9] If insurance is effected on a building and machinery used for generating electricity, and thereafter a fire occurs in the building which is speedily extinguished, but as a result of the fire, in a part of the building remote therefrom, what is known as a "short circuit" was produced, from which machinery was greatly damaged, this is a damage by fire within the meaning of the policy. The fire was a direct and proximate cause of the damage according to the meaning of the words, "direct and proximate cause." [10]

[7] De Wolf v. Archangel Marine Bank & Ins. Co. 43 L. J. Q. B. 147, L. R. 9 Q. B. 451, 39 L. T. 605, 22 W. R. 801, 2 Asp. M. C. 273, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 609; Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 108, 1 M. & Scott, 165, 1 L. J. C. P. 20, 1 Dowl. P. C. 262, 34 R. R. 631.

[8] Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540, 29 L.R.A. 297, 33 N. E. 690.

[9] Wausau Telephone Co. v. United Fireman's Ins. Co. 123 Wis. 535, 101 N. W. 1100.

§ 2762. Embargo, what constitutes.—An embargo, as already briefly noted, is within the clause as to "arrests, restraints, detainments," etc. Although a war measure used generally in time of war, or to avert threatened hostilities under a power vested in the government, it is nevertheless also a commercial measure, having for its avowed object the protection of commerce and the avoiding of war. It may prohibit the departure of ships or particular vessels or goods from any or all ports of the country. It may be imposed for the purpose of facilitating or manning of a fleet, or to conceal the progress of an expedition intending to sail from a particular port, in which and like cases it is a military instrument, and partakes of the nature of war. It springs from temporary causes, may be limited to a certain period, or may be indefinite as to time. Emerigon says the word in Spanish signifies seizure and sequestration, but it is taken there in France "for a general prohibition to let any vessel go out of port until a new order." It is generally construed as a mere suspension, and not as a condemnation of trade.[11]

§ 2763. Embargo: effect upon charter party.—It is held that a detention or embargo does not break up the voyage under a charter party, nor determine a contract of affreightment and that the voyage must be prosecuted after the embargo is removed.[12]

[10] Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 20 L.R.A. 297, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540, 33 N. E. 690.

[11] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 1, 6 L. ed. 23, per Marshall, C. J.; Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 312, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433; 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 508a; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. secs. 30, 31, pp. 420, 425 et seq.; 3 Story's Commentaries, 340, 346; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *814; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 766; Blackstone's Comm. 270; 1 Kent's Comm. (5th ed.) 281, sec. 13. "An interdiction of trade is not always the result of a general permanent law. It is not infrequently a temporary restraint, having no relation to commerce or revenue, but imposed or enacted with a sole view to political objects. Such is the character of an embargo, general or special—a prohibition of the departure of all or of particular vessels from all or some of the ports of the country in which it is laid. This prohibition, whether limited to a certain period or indefinite as to time, as it springs wholly from temporary causes, is always regarded as temporary in its nature. Hence, it is construed as a mere suspension of the trade that it prohibits, not as a condemnation of the trade as in itself unlawful; and this distinction has in some cases important effect upon the construction of the policy." 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 350, 351, sec. 39. See Appendix G herein.

[12] Hadley v. Clarke, 8 Term Rep. 259, 4 R. R. 641.

§ 2764. Embargo: domestic and foreign.—Under a general policy a domestic embargo equally with a foreign one is a peril insured against, and is an arrest, restraint, or detainment; for an insured may be indemnified against acts of his own government where it is not the object of the policy to violate the law, or where the loss does not arise from assured's violation of the law. An insurance against loss from an embargo which the government of the parties may impose in the future is not against the policy of the law, and is valid.[13]

If the insurance be upon a neutral ship "at and from" an enemy's port, and an embargo is there laid, the assured may give notice of abandonment. It is covered by the clause as to arrests, etc., and if the embargo continue, there may be an abandonment and recovery as for a total loss.[14]

§ 2765. Embargo: acts of foreign assured's own government.—Some question has arisen whether, where the assured is a foreigner, he can be indemnified as to acts of his own government. It is declared to be the law that an insured foreigner cannot be indemnified against the hostile acts of his own government.[15] But there is a distinction between an embargo in times of peace between the countries of assured and assurer and an embargo laid by reason of existing or threatened hostilities.[16] In this country the rule seems to be that an embargo by the government of a foreign assured is as much within the contemplation of the contract as any other embargo, and that an innocent assured cannot be held a party to the peaceful legislative acts of his own government, or to have such an actual participation therein as to be precluded thereby from seeking a remedy under a policy effected with an underwriter here; pro-

[13] Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 312, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433; McFee v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 2 McCord (S. C.) 503, 13 Am. Dec. 757; Lorent v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 505; Green v. Young, 2 Ld. Raym. 840, 2 Salk. 444; Hagedorn v. Whitmore, 1 Stark. 157; Touteng v. Hubbard, 3 Bos. & P. 291, 302, 6 R. R. 791.

That further performance of contract made impossible and illegal by outbreak of war and placing of embargo on goods which are the subject matter of contract, see Edward Grey & Co. v. Tolme & Runge (No. 1) 59 L. J. 218, 31 T. L. R. 137, s. c. (No. 2) 31 T. L. R. 551.

[14] Rotch v. Edie, 6 Term Rep. 413, 425, 3 R. R. 422, also reported in 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 511a. See Francis v. Ocean Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404, per Sutherland, J.

[15] Touteng v. Hubbard, 3 Bos. & P. 291, 302, 6 R. R. 791, per Lord Alvanley, C. J.; Glaser v. Cowie, 1 Maule & S. 52, 54; Lubbock v. Potts, 7 East, 449, per Lord Ellenborough; Eden v. Parkinson, 2 Doug. 732; Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283, 9 R. R. 558; Thelluson v. Fergusson, 1 Doug. 361. See c. xi. herein.

[16] Aubert v. Gray, 32 L. J. Q. B. 50, 3 Best & S. 163, 9 Jur. (N. S.) 714, 7 L. T. 469, 11 W. R. 27, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 139.

vided, however, there is no intentional violation by assured or his agents of the laws of his own country, and perhaps if the case is such as to give rise to a fair presumption that the risk was not contemplated by the parties, the presumption should be overcome by proof. The above conclusions are at least fairly deducible from the authorities cited below. The English rule is thus stated by Mr. Maclachlan: "The assured is not to be identified with the acts of his own government unless the existence of hostilities between it and the government of the insurer renders any such contract of indemnity incompatible with that highest law—salus populi—under the insurer's givernment," which is less restricted than Mr. Arnould's rule, and more in accord with that believed to exist in this country; and as asserted in the last edition of the latter's treatise an embargo may be by the home or foreign government on British or foreign property.[17]

§ 2766. Employee's fidelity: fidelity guaranty: contract guaranty.[18]—(a) Preliminary statement. Inasmuch as certain principles underlying fidelity guaranty involve in some degree the obligations and liabilities of sureties, we have noted briefly, in addition to such cases as are strictly those of insurance, several important decisions concerning sureties involving principles somewhat analogous to those applicable to contracts of insurance of this character, although what is stated under the next subdivision of this section as to this contract being one of insurance and indemnity should be considered in applying these "surety" cases.[19]

(b) Nature or purpose of fidelity guaranty: construction.—In order to determine what constitutes a risk or loss under this contract

[17] Francis v. Ocean Ins. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404, per Sutherland, C. J.; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co. 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 299, per Kent, C. J.; Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 320, Fed. Cas. No. 10,433, per Washington, J. See 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 352, 353; 2 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1846) 589–96, where the English rule and that in this country and the cases under the rules are fully discussed; note to 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 508b, 509b, where Park on Ins. (6th ed.) 609–14, is quoted at length; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 494 et seq., secs. 913–15, 1060; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 779 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 737, 738; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 833, 834, pp. 1046 et seq.

[18] As to representations and warranties: guaranty insurance, see § 2002a herein.

[19] At the time of writing the first edition of this treatise the then comparatively few guaranty insurance decisions justified the insertion of certain analogous points as to sureties and while these have been retained in this edition nevertheless some of the later guaranty insurance cases, considered under this and other sections herein, so far discuss such analogous "surety" principles as are applicable that it is unnecessary for us to enter upon any extended review here of additional authorities relating strictly to sureties as such.

the nature or purpose thereof constitutes an important factor. We have seen that it has been settled after much discussion by at least the weight of authority, that the bonds or contracts of those companies which guarantee the fidelity of employees and which make the business one for profit, are essentially insurance contracts, especially so where the terms of the contract itself closely resemble the essential elements of an insurance contract, and this applies even though the attitude of "surety" is assumed in form; therefore the rights and liabilities of the parties are governed in case of ambiguity by the rules of construction applicable to insurance rather than by the rule strictissimi juris which determines the rights of ordinary guarantors or sureties without pecuniary consideration.[20]

Another point to be considered in connection with risks and losses is that fidelity guaranty insurance is a contract of indemnity;[1] and inasmuch as obtaining full indemnity is the general purpose it should not be defeated except by limitations which are expressly and clearly set forth without ambiguity in the contract.[2] [20] See §§ 206c, 221b, 222a, 339–339b herein.

See also the following cases:

United States. — Dominion Trust Co. v. National Surety Co. 221 Fed. 618, 137 C. C. A. 342, 46 Ins. L. J. 77. Examine Pacific County v. Illinois Surety Co. (U. S. D. C.) 234 Fed. 97, 98.

Illinois.—City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. Lee, 204 Ill. 69, 68 N. E. 485, aff'g 107 Ill. App. 263.

Indiana. — United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Poetker, 180 Ind. 255, L.R.A.1917B, 984, 102 N. E. 372, 42 Ins. L. J. 1394, 1400 (rule applied to bonds of president and cashier of bank required to give bonds under Burns' Annot. Stat. 1908, sec. 3331).

Kentucky.—American Bonding Co. of Balt. v. Ballard County Banks Assignee, 165 Ky. 63, 176 S. W. 368.

New York.—National Surety Co. v. Stallo, 156 N. Y. Supp. 988, 171 App. Div. 206, 47 Ins. L. J. 341 (rule applied to application: guardianship bond).

Ohio.—Livingston v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 76 Ohio St. 253, 81 N. E. 330, 36 Ins. L. J. 699, 704–5.

Oklahoma. — Southern Surety Co. v. Tyler & Simpson Co. 30 Okla. 116, 120 Pac. 936.

Tennessee.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 125 Tenn. 658, 148 S. W. 671.

Texas. — National Surety Co. v. Murphy-Walker Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 174 S. W. 997; Griffin v. Zuber, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 288, 113 S. W. 961.

Wisconsin. — Whinfield v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. 162 Wis. 1, 154 N. W. 632; First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Md. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893.

As to distinction between contracts of indemnity and suretyship or guaranty: a case where bond was to indemnify a surety company from loss on its bond to indemnify for loss occasioned by employee whose fidelity was guaranteed, see Hall v. Equitable Surety Co. — Ark. —, 191 S. W. 32.

[1] See § 27h herein.

That guaranty insurance is a contract of indemnity, see also definition thereof in § 12 herein; People (ex rel. Gosling) v. Potts, 264 Ill. 122, 106 N. E. 524.

[2] Dominion Trust Co. v. National Surety Co. 221 Fed. 618, 137 C. C. A. 342, 46 Ins. L. J. 77, 79. Examine

Again, in the construction of bonds for the faithful performance of duties or obligations reference should be had to the hazards against which security is sought, as well as to the situation of the parties, the principal as well as the surety, and also the character of the employment or trust.[3] So the rule of construction against insurer and in favor of assured will also apply in determining whether, in view of the nature of the employment and the character of the bond, a shortage constitutes an embezzlement and whether the state statute or the Federal law under which the employment was held should govern; accordingly it is decided that the latter laws which impose a liability upon such employees will control.[4]

(c) Validity and binding obligation of fidelity guaranty: modification, restrictions or limitations.—There is no doubt that in insurance of an employee's fidelity the parties may make such terms and conditions as are valid under the law and which they may agree upon, and the terms of the contract, including those matters which constitute a part thereof, must govern in all cases, and will bind the parties thereto to the extent of the obligations validly assumed. This proposition is fully sustained by the authorities under this entire section and elsewhere herein.[5]

As to including what constitutes a part of the contract in applying the above rule, it is determined that where a bond of a cashier of a state bank insures against pecuniary loss by reason of his fraud or dishonesty amounting to embezzlement or larceny, and said bond is given under the requirements of a statute the obligors are bound in the performance of the conditions which the statute declares it shall contain, even though they are not specifically mentioned or provided for in the bond itself, nor have the sureties any

John Church Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. 13 Ga. App. 826, 80 S. E. 1093.

[3] Rochester City Bank v. Elwood, 21 N. Y. (7 Smith) 88 (action on bond: nonsuit and nominal damages: judgment reversed and new trial granted).

Fidelity guaranty insurance: construction: place of contract. See Dixie Fire Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. 162 N. C. 384, 78 S. E. 430; Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. — R. I. —, 94 Atl. 859. See § 231b herein.

[4] Griffin v. Zuber, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 288, 113 S. W. 961 (action was brought by sureties on the bond of a Postmaster to recover of a fidelity guaranty company the amount of shortage in the Postmaster's accounts under a bond agreeing to "indemnify and keep indemnified the said assured to the extent of" a specified sum "from and against any and all loss which they might be put to, incur or suffer by reason of any personal act or acts of larceny or embezzlement committed by the said Postmaster," etc.).

[5] See §§ 2190, 2531b herein.

What is part of policy, see §§ 185–198 herein.

power to change the character or legal effect thereof. In other words the statutory conditions are imported into the contract the same as if expressed therein in so many words; and the obligations of sureties or guarantors for hire are more especially within the application of and reason for the rule than are those of personal sureties who have bound themselves for accommodation without pecuniary reward.[6]

A fidelity guaranty contract may also by mutual agreement be modified and new terms be substituted for the original stipulations in which case the parties will be bound by the contract as modified.[7]

So a bond given by a subagent to a general agent may be modified to cover a continuance of the agency under a new agreement contemporaneous with that under the bond.[8]

Limitations or restrictions are generally assented to and specified by the parties whereby the character, nature and extent of the acts done by the employee for which assurer will indemnify assured, and the contract in such case is only binding within the terms thereof and will not be extended beyond the restrictions where there is no ambiguity; as where the restriction is to loss sustained by "personal dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement of the employee" it will not cover acts which are not those specified but which amount more nearly to forgery by the employee, even though assured's loss is as complete as if money had been stolen or embezzled.[9] But an employer cannot enlarge the liability of one insuring him against loss as fixed by the terms of the bond by establishing rules for the conduct of his business.[10]

Whether validity of bond depends upon signature of employee as condition precedent, see § 178a herein, also § 54b herein, and see note to subdiv. (ee) this section.

[6] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Poetker, 180 Ind. 255, L.R.A.1917B, 984, 102 N. E. 372, 42 Ins. L. J. 1394; Burns' Ann. Stat. 1908, sec. 3331 (bond in this case was held an "official bond" under the statute Id. sec. 1278). Compare Adams v. Williams, 97 Miss. 113, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855, 52 So. 865 (official bond of treasurer of levee board: additional conditions in bond do not invalidate).

When official bonds are valid and void, see note 82 Am. Dec. 760–64. See Absmuths v. Bowyer, 39 Okla. 376, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1060 and note, 135 Pac. 413 (not void: bond not required by law but issued).

As to common or statutory law as part of contract, see §§ 194 et seq., 1916, subdivs. (e), (f), (j), 2002a herein.

[7] Rice v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 103 Fed. 427, 43 C. C. A. 270.

As to alteration and modification of policy, see §§ 265–276a herein.

[8] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hamlin, 100 Wis. 17, 75 N. W. 421.

[9] Dominion Trust Co. v. National Surety Co. 221 Fed. 618, 137 C. C. A. 42, 46 Ins. L. J. 77.

[10] Great Northern Express Co. v. National Surety Co. 113 Minn. 162, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775 and note, 129 N. W. 127.

(d) Nature or extent of liability: generally.—It is declared that as to the nature or extent of liability that the position of one who insures the fidelity of an employee is not only that of an insurer, but in some sort that of a surety as well, and in both or in either of these capacities his liability is primary and direct.[11]

(e) Reinsurance of surety insurer: liability of reinsurer to original reinsurer where former is mere surety.—Where a surety company transfers or turns over practically to another company its entire business and good will, and the transferee company assumes the same and agrees to assume and fulfil all obligations and liability under bonds issued by the transferring company and to adjust all losses and litigations, such reinsurer is liable to the original insured in an action on a bond issued by the transferring surety company.[12] Another phase is presented as to reinsurance of sureties and that is: If an obligation reinsuring a surety on a bond of a foreign corporation, to enable it to transact business in the state so stipulates, the policy holders of said foreign corporation are entitled to enforce directly against said reinsurer whatever liability is imposed under its policy upon the original insurer, and this applies where the latter becomes insolvent. In the case so deciding it appeared that a foreign corporation for the purpose of engaging in business in Texas filed its bond with the Commissioner of Insurance and Banking payable to the commissioner in a certain sum as required by statute with a guaranty company as surety. The obligation of defendant upon which the suit against it was based and which was filed with the bond in the insurance department, recited that it had reinsured the surety company against all liability as surety on said bond, which was attached and made a part thereof; also that it was further agreed that the contract of reinsurance should run to and inure for the benefit of said commissioner and to any and every party who might be a beneficiary under the bond and that an original action or actions against the reinsurer might be maintained upon the bond and its contract just as if the reinsurer had signed said original bond. A judgment in [11] Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 115 Ky. 863, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 239, 103 Am. St. Rep. 356, 75 S. W. 197, 32 Ins. L. J. 808, 814, per Settle, J. The court nevertheless asserts and applies the rule above stated, under subdiv. (b) herein that the contract is one of insurance to be construed against insurer in case of ambiguity.

[12] United States v. Brent (U. S. D. C.) 236 Fed. 771 (contract guaranty: sub-contractor).

As to relations between parties, and between insured and reinsurer, see § 117 herein.

When suit may be brought against reinsurer: rights of original insured, see §§ 135 et seq. also § 132 herein.

the lower court for plaintiff was, however, reversed, but proof of the reinsuring obligation where it was sought to charge reinsurer the liability primarily resting upon said foreign insurance company to its policy holders, was by means of the copy of said instrument certified by said commissioner and it was held that inasmuch as said document was not of such a character as was required or permitted to be recorded the commissioner's certificate could give it no legal authenticity.[13]

In a Federal case, peculiar in that it is declared that the precise question had never been passed upon in any reported decision, it is held that where an insurance company reinsures its risks and the reinsurer under its contract reinsures the risk with others to a certain per cent there is as to a defendant reinsurer, who is one of the said reinsuring companies, no privity between it and four other reinsuring companies, whether those originally bound or one who came in afterwards by taking the place of another who had canceled his risk, and even though they all had contract relations with the first reinsurer each was wholly independent of the others, so that in an action by the original reinsurer the liability of defendant reinsurer is not dependent upon the extent to which the substituted reinsurer became liable, or whether it became liable at all. In connection with this point other points were decided, but it is necessary for a clear understanding of what was determined to state the facts which the circuit court of appeals held controlling, although it excluded other facts which the lower court considered in reaching its conclusion which was reversed; said facts were as follows: A French society and body corporate consisting of about seventy [13] Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 106 Tex. 46, 155 S. W. 1176, 42 Ins. L. J. 1083 (bond filed under Act of March 20, 1909, art. 4870–1; Acts 31st Leg. c. 102) rev'g 152 S. W. 816. The court, per Phillips, J., said: "(2) There can be no doubt that this contract inured to the benefit of holders of policies of the Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co." (the foreign company which filed the bond with the state) "and that Anderson was entitled thereunder to directly enforce against the plaintiff in error whatever liability his policy imposed upon that company; but under no law was it authorized to be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Insurance & Banking and it therefore evidenced only a common law obligation. "(3) While available to every beneficiary of the statutory bond to which it refers, for the enforcement of all demands protected by that instrument, its terms plainly demonstrate that primarily it was a contract of indemnity to the Republic Guaranty & Surety Co. against loss by reason of its suretyship upon that bond. A surety upon such a bond may, of course, protect itself by this character of reinsurance of its liability, to inure at the same time to the beneficiaries of the bond, but the statute makes no provision for the filing of such a contract in the insurance department; and otherwise the Commissioner is not its legal custodian." See this case also near end of subdiv. (gg) herein.

exchange brokers in Paris, which is designated for brevity as the Broker's Society, insured each of its members against three-fourths of the loss not exceeding a specified sum in any one case or a maximum of a smaller sum occasioned by theft or embezzlement of his employees. It effected reinsurance with the plaintiff, likewise a French corporation for five years, against any loss not exceeding in a single case a quarter of a million francs and not more than the difference between that amount and the maximum of a million francs for which the Broker Society might be liable to any of its members, ninety per cent or more of the risk assumed by plaintiff was by agreement to be reinsured in at least three other companies, approved by the Broker's Society. The reinsurers were to countersign the policy and accept its articles, though plaintiff remained liable to the original insurer for full performance of his contract. One-fifth of this risk so assumed was reinsured for the same period with defendant, a Maryland corporation. By an agreement between them this reinsurance was canceled three years after the date of plaintiff's reinsurance of said Broker's Society, subject, however, to prior incurred losses. During a period covering a few days over four years from the date of said first reinsurance by plaintiff, although said fact was unknown by any of the parties at the time of said cancelation, an employee embezzled an amount, nearly one half of which was taken before the date of cancelation and the balance thereafter. Before the expiration of the five year period of plaintiff's contract the entire amount embezzled was "known and declared" so that the latter became liable to said society for three-fourths the aggregate amount less the quarter of a million francs, that is, plaintiff was liable for defalcations, both before and after said cancelation, if said losses constituted a single embezzlement and amounted to over a third of a million francs, but as to defendant, the cancelation operated to discharge him from all liability for future embezzlements covered by plaintiff's policy, especially so in view of the fact that such cancelation was expressly "subject to losses incurred prior to said date;" and as to the loss which occurred prior to said date, inasmuch as plaintiff was not liable therefor because the amount thereof was not a loss constituting a single embezzlement amounting to over one third of a million francs, therefore defendant was not liable therefor as the latter's liability could not be increased or affected by embezzlements or thefts committed after its said release by cancelation. The court, per Knapp, C. J., said: "Clearly the defendant was a mere surety, and it is well settled that liability in such cases cannot be enlarged by implication. The plaintiff was at liberty to hold the defendant for the full five years of its contract. It could refuse a release altogether or allow it upon conditions which would have bound the defendant to contribute for such a loss as was actually suffered. It saw fit to cancel the defendant's contract of reinsurance on a certain date, subject only to prior losses, and except as to those losses it has no legal claim against the defendant." Another point was that although the defendant received and retained its share of three full premiums for the three years its reinsurance was in force, still it carried its share of the risk during that period and was then released, therefore the contention was not sustained that defendant was equitably bound to contribute in proportion to the time it was on the policy, and its percentage of the risk which plaintiff had been compelled to pay.[14]

(f) "Embezzlement" or "larceny" generally, under guaranty insurance clauses containing these words.—In determining what constitutes embezzlement or larceny, the language of the bond with whatever words of limitation or restriction are used must be considered, and also those circumstances, if any, to which the undertaking relates. The certainty or extent of the pecuniary loss sustained is not the determinative test, for the acts of the employee may make the loss as complete as if he had stolen or embezzled money and still the insurer not be liable.[15] And in deciding that there was no embezzlement by a cashier of a bank the court in a Missouri case considers as important the point that there was no intent on the part of said cashier to convert the funds of the bank to his own use.[16] The contract also stipulates for indemnity of the [14] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. French Mutual General Society of Mutual Ins. Against Theft, 212 Fed. 620, 129 C. C. A. 156, 44 Ins. L. J. 86 (rev'g French Mutual General Society of Mutual Ins. Against Theft v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 203 Fed. 558, 42 Ins. L. J. 865) certiorari denied (mem.) 234 U. S. 758, 34 Sup. Ct. 676, 58 L. ed. 1579, Woods, C. J., (dissenting) said: "I am unable to concur in the reasoning and conclusion of the majority opinion, because, in the settlement of insurance, it gives to the defendant, as a reinsurer as of the date of the cancelation of its policy, the entire benefit of the required deduction of one fourth of the risk carried by the insured employer and of the 250,000 francs carried by the original insurer, the Brokers Society, whereas, construing all the contracts together, it seems to me clear that these deductions should be made for the proportionate benefit of all the reinsurers at the date of the ascertainment of the entire loss. Even if the latter construction of the contract be regarded doubtful, it should be preferred, since it produces a fair equality of burden, while giving the defendant the benefit of the entire deductions, results in an inequality of burden which could not have been in contemplation either when the defendant's contract was made or when it was canceled. Elaboration is not attempted because it would be a mere repetition of the full and strong reasoning of the district judge."

[15] Dominion Trust Co. v. National Surety Co. 221 Fed. 618, 137 C. C. A. 42, 46 Ins. L. J. 77, 79.

[16] Farmers' State Bank v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 133 Mo. App. 705, 113 S. W. 1147, 38 Ins. L. J. 262.

obligee, and the language adopted as descriptive of the acts for which that indemnity is guaranteed must be considered; and the fact that the employee gained nothing financially by his acts of fraud and dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement is of no avail where the motive for an intention to gain by said acts exists and they are done under an agreement with another whereby the employee is promised financial benefit from the wrongful transaction which causes a loss to assured within the terms of the guaranty.[17] Nor is it necessary that there should have actually been a misapplication of money for himself by a clerk to render a surety liable on a bond for the faithful performance by the clerk of his duty, for if the employee aids another in defaulting, the sureties are liable.[18]

The preceding statements are based upon decisions in fidelity guaranty cases, but it is necessary in considering questions relating to "embezzlement" or "larceny" as those words are used in the bonds of this class of insurers, to resort to statutory law, at least so, after ascertaining by construction of the contract the extent, if any, to which they are intended to govern insurers liability; for in certain cases, as will hereinafter appear, when used in connection with other words the courts have refused in effect to give them force, for the reason that the said terms "embezzlement" or "larceny" are held not to restrict the right of indemnity contemplated by the guaranty, while under other decisions they have been given full force and effect as restricting insurer's liability to what is technically meant by said words as defining an offense or crime, or, to be more explicit, to such fraud or dishonesty only as amounts to the offense or crime of embezzlement or larceny. The importance, therefore, of giving the statutory definitions of these terms is apparent, and although it goes without saying that the meaning or construction of the words "embezzlement" or "larceny" depends upon no principle governing insurance contract law, still the application of their meaning or construction when ascertained is involved under fidelity guaranty insurance contracts. In view, therefore, of what is above stated we have given in the appended note citations of authorities with only brief mention of the essentials, gist or gravamen of these offenses or crimes, together with definitions thereof, noting also the distinctions between them. We will state here, however, that the essentials of the term "embezzlement," [17] Rankin v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 86 Ohio St. 267, 99 N. E. 314, 41 Ins. L. J. 1753. See Mo. App. case near end of subdiv. (g) herein.

[18] London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Co. v. Goodwin, 3 Exch. 736, 6 Railw. Cas. 177, 18 L. J. Ex. 337 (principal and surety).

embodied in the definition thereof, in similar or like relations to those sustained under fidelity insurance bonds, are generally: (1) The existence of some fiduciary relation, or some relation of employment, trust or confidence, express or implied: (2) money, or property must have come into a person's care, custody or control, or he must have been intrusted therewith by virtue of such employment, or fiduciary, trust or confidential relation: (3) The money or property must be that of another: (4) There must be a wrongful, fraudulent, or unlawful appropriation or conversion of said money or property by the person in possession or control thereof by virtue of such relation of employment, trust or confidence: and (5) Intent to so fraudulently, wrongfully, or unlawfully appropriate it to his own use.[19] In North Carolina there is an embezzlement [19] Although the citations in this note are of decisions which appear to cover similar or like relations as those sustained between employer and employee, or as exist in other positions of a fiduciary character under fidelity guaranty insurance contracts, still, caution should be exercised in applying in any case, any decision based upon statutes of other states which are various in their provisions and adapted to various contingencies and in some instances are dependent upon still other statutes.

United States.—Wooddell v. Territory, 187 Fed. 739, 109 C. C. A. 487 (Pen. Code Ariz. 1901, sec. 460, essentials of embezzlement are, being intrusted with, or having in possession or control property for use of another, and fraudulently appropriating it to any use or purpose not in due or lawful execution of trusts); Jewett v. United States, 100 Fed. 832, 41 C. C. A. 88, 53 L.R.A. 568 (U. S. Rev. Stat. sec. 5209, as to wilfully misapplying bank funds: "wilful misapplication" covers embezzlement).

Alabama.—Barr v. State, 10 Ala. App. 111, 65 So. 197 (Code 1907, sec. 6828, offense is complete if defendant embezzled or fraudulently converted to his own use money which came into his possession by virtue of his employment though money belonged to another than employer); Wall v. State, 2 Ala. App. 157, 56 So. 57 (Code 1907, sec. 7161, form 49: "embezzles" has technical meaning: essentials are a breach of duty or trust in respect of property, money, or effects belonging to another and in the party's possession by virtue of some trust, duty, agency, or employment on the part of accused, and the wrongful or fraudulent appropriation thereof to his own use); Knight v. State, 152 Ala. 56, 44 So. 585 (essentials are coming rightfully into possession and fraudulently converting to own use or to the use of another or fraudulently secreting the property with intent to convert).

Arizona.—De Leon v. Territory, 9 Ariz. 161, 80 Pac. 348 (embezzlement defined under Penal Code sec. 460: essentials are being intrusted with property for use of another and fraudulent appropriation for any purpose not in due execution of trust); Thomas v. Territory, 9 Ariz. 180, 80 Pac. 320 (embezzlement by clerk, agent, or servant defined under Penal Code, sec. 426: essentials are fraudulent appropriation by such clerk, etc., of another's property in his control by virtue of such employment).

Florida.—Neal v. State, 55 Fla. 140, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 371, 46 So. 845 (Gen. Stat. 1906, sec. 3311: essentials are fraudulent conversion to own use anything of value intrusted to one, if an agent fraudulently and feloniously converts to his own use the money of his principal; but where there is no such admission or which has come into his possession, care, custody or control by virtue of his employment; but put on basis of larceny as to punishment); Tipton v. State, 53 Fla. 69, 43 So. 684 (embezzlement defined under Gen. Stat. 1906, sec. 3311: essentials of offense are possession of property by person sustaining relation of confidence or trust to owner of property and a breach of trust or conversion or appropriation in violation thereof).

Iowa.—State v. Carmean, 126 Iowa, 291, 106 Am. St. Rep. 352, 102 N. W. 97 (essentials of embezzlement are: fraudulent conversion or misappropriation of money or property received in a fiduciary capacity; but if funds intrusted to corporation are not received by officer thereof and he has no knowledge of their misappropriation and he did not intentionally fail to apply them to purposes for which intrusted, there is no embezzlement by him).

Kentucky.—National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Gibson, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 101, 101 S. W. 895 (embezzlement defined, under Ky. Stat. 1903, sec. 1202, as fraudulent conversion by an agent to his own use of money or property belonging to another which shall have come into his possession as agent).

Louisiana.—State v. Pellerin, 118 La. 547, 43 So. 159 (embezzlement is not a common law crime and its meaning must rest upon the statute: "embezzle" defined: essentials are, wrongful and felonious appropriation of property intrusted to servant, agent or employee by employer: is more comprehensive than "larceny:" Rev. Stat. sec. 905, as am'd by Acts 1888, No. 31, p. 23).

Michigan.—People v. Messer, 148 Mich. 168, 14 Det. Leg. N. 157, 111 N. W. 854 (embezzlement by cashier, officer, servant or agent of bank defined under Comp. L. sec. 11,562: money, or other property in possession or custody).

New Jersey.—State v. Egan, 84 N. J. L. 701, 87 Atl. 455 (failure to return or account for money on demand is not an essential although it may be evidence of crime of embezzlement: essentials are, fraudulent conversion to defendants own use, of money or property or fraudulent secretion with that intent. Comp. Stat. p. 1795, sec. 168).

New York.—People v. Miller, 169 N. Y. 339, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546, 62 N. E. 418. (It is embezzlement and not larceny where one honestly receives possession, upon express or implied trust of money, etc., and thereafter fraudulently converts such money, etc., to his own use); People v. Burnham, 104 N. Y. Supp. 725, 119 App. Div. 302, s. c. 106 N. Y. Supp. 57 (to support conviction of officer of insurance company of larceny under Pen. Code, sec. 528, subd. 2, essentials are, possession as bailee or officer and appropriation to his use or that of any other person with intent to defraud).

Oklahoma.—State v. Duerksen, 8 Okla. Cr. Rep. 601, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1013, 129 Pac. 881 (fraudulent intent is implied when agent in possession of principal's funds, converts them to his own use without said principal's knowledge or consent).

"Embezzlement is the fraudulent conversion of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted. There must be a conversion, but this may be either actual or constructive" State v. Ensley, 177 Ind. 483, 97 N. E. 113.

"So far as necessary to define embezzlement for the purposes of this case," one of fidelity guaranty insurance, "it may be defined as the fraudulent conversion of the money or personal property of another which is in the possession of a trustee, servant, agent, or bailee in a trust capacity. There can be no embezzlement unless in the record, and there is only prima facie evidence which a judgment against the principal imports as to the sum or amount which the property charged to have been embezzled was, at the time of the conversion, held in trust." Milwaukee Theatre Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 92 Wis. 412, 66 N. W. 360.

The term "embezzle" is a technical word having a legal signification and is a fraudulent appropriation by a person to his own benefit of money or property of another with which he is intrusted and is "uniformly defined as importing an appropriation or conversion with a fraudulent and criminal intent. The subject is not a new one to this court because in the case of Hanna v. Minnesota Life Ins. Co. 241 Mo. 383, l. c. 401, 145 S. W. 412, this court said: 'Embezzlement is the fraudulent and felonious appropriation of another's property by a person to whom it has been intrusted or into whose hands it has lawfully come,' State v. Casey, 207 Mo. 1, l. c. 11, 123 Am. St. Rep. 365, 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 878, 105 S. W. 645. At common law the crime of embezzlement did not exist, it being regarded as a breach of trust or duty. The same is wholly statutory, and a sort of a statutory larceny committed by persons who have lawfully secured possession of the property, and who afterwards criminally appropriate the same to their own use. The act not being a crime at common law, and having no criminal signification thereunder, we are not hampered in giving it its proper technical meaning, as, for instance, the case of larceny, with which this court was dealing in State v. Baker, 246 Mo. 339, 152 S. W. 46," per Revelle, J., in State v. Burgess, 268 Mo. 407, 414, 188 S. W. 135, under Rev. Stat. 1909, sec. 4552. See also State v. Pate, 268 Mo. 431, 439, 188 S. W. 135.

"Embezzlement is purely a statutory offense. It was unknown to the common law and the statute was enacted for the purpose of supplying what were regarded as defects in the common law of larceny, so as to reach and punish for the fraudulent conversion of money or property which could not be reached by the common law. And while our statute denominates the offense larceny, and concludes by providing that the person so committing an act of embezzlement shall be deemed guilty of larceny, yet embezzlement is generally regarded as a separate and distinct crime, and is so treated. The distinction between embezzlement and larceny is that embezzlement is the wrongful conversion of property without trespass, or where the original taking and possession is lawful. In order to constitute the offense, it is necessary that the property embezzled should come lawfully into the hands of the party embezzling, and by virtue of the position of trust he occupies to the person whose property he takes. Under our statute, referred to, it is necessary to show; first, the trust relation of the person charged, and that he falls within that class of persons named; second, that the property or thing claimed to have been embezzled or converted is such property as is embraced in the statute; third, that it is the property of another person; fourth, that it came into the possession, or was placed in the care of the accused under and by virtue of his office, place or employment; fifth, that the manner of dealing with, or disposing of, the property, constituted a conversion and appropriation of the same to his own use; and, sixth, that the embezzlement or fraudulent conversion of the property to his own use was with the intent to deprive the owner of his property. A mere detention of money belonging to another without a fraudulent intent to convert it to the use of the one by whom it is detained and to deprive that other person of such property does not constitute embezzlement. The appropriation of money held by an agent the surety is to pay, it constitutes error for the court to charge the jury in an independent action by the surety on its bond, that there is not, under our statute, larceny, unless it be done with the fraudulent intent to deprive the owner of his property, or the use and benefit thereof. The mere fact of appropriation or use of the property may be an innocent exercise of dominion, if the intention exists to repay or restore it. It is the fraudulent intent that constitutes the offense—the intention to make an absolute appropriation as contradistinguished from a temporary use without any design to defraud the owner or deprive him of his property. If the legislature intended to make the mere use of money or other property mentioned an offense, it should not have used the language in the act, which says, to 'embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use.' " State v. Moyer, 58 W. Va. 146, 149, 150, 6 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 344, 52 S. E. 30, per Sanders, J., under sec. 19, c. 18, Acts 1903, amending and re-enacting sec. 19, c. 145 of Code providing that "If any officer, agent, clerk or servant . . . of any incorporated bank or other corporation . . . embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use," etc.

In order to constitute larceny it is not necessary that the person wrongfully taking another's property should have the purpose of obtaining a pecuniary advantage or gain for himself. If he takes for the purpose of giving the property to a third person it is larceny. In every larceny there must be a taking from the possession of the owner against his will, but the taking need not be by the hand of the accused himself, for if he causes another person to take the goods for him his offense is larceny. He who procures another to take the property is, if present, guilty as principal, and if absent is guilty as an accessory before the fact. This was applied where the fidelity insurance bond of a cashier guaranteed to reimburse the bank for such pecuniary loss as it might sustain by reason of any fraudulent or dishonest conduct of the cashier, in connection with his duties, amounting to embezzlement or larceny, and among the specific allegations it was set out that said cashier caused the teller to pay certain checks and notes with the intention of appropriating, etc., the amount of money which they represented. The case turned upon a question of pleading and is noted more fully under subdiv. (gg) herein. Canton National Bank v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 111 Md. 41, 73 Atl. 684.

"Larceny at common law was the felonious taking of the property of another against his will with the intent to convert it to the use of the taker, or as some authorities hold, the use of the taker and a third person. Embezzlement, which is a statutory offense, consists in the fraudulent appropriation to one's own use of money or goods intrusted to him by another. In larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking of the property, whereas, in embezzlement the fraudulent act consists in the appropriation of the property to the use of the taker or a third party, but the felonious or fraudulent intent is of the essence of the offense in each case." Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 105 Md. 490, 66 Atl. 495, 36 Ins. L. J., 589, 591, per Schmucker, J.

"There is a distinction between embezzlement and larceny. The distinguishing element of the latter crime is the taking and carrying away or asportation of the property the subject of the larceny. In embezzlement the property is lawfully in the possession of the accused by reason of some fiduciary relation between the accused and the owner. The crime of larceny would be complete if there was a taking and carrying away from the owner, of his money or property with a felonious intent, although the

was no controversy about the fact that the employee converted the specified amount of plaintiff's money to his own use and that the only question for it to decide was whether he did that with a fraudulent intent.[20]

In applying what is stated at the beginning of this section as to the rule of construction against insurer, consideration should also be given, in connection with the words "embezzlement" and "larceny," to such statutory provisions as declare a rule of construction and require that words and phrases be given their plain and ordinary or usual sense, but that technical words be given a meaning according to their technical import.[1] In a Texas case where the money or property taken was afterwards restored or recovered or the owner recompensed. Under section 75, of the Criminal Code, under which the defendant was indicted, strictly speaking, the crime of embezzlement is complete when there is a fraudulent conversion by the accused of money or property of his employer without his consent. Generally, there is a conversion only where there has been a refusal, or at least a failure to pay, or there are circumstances from which such refusal or failure can be implied. Whether there has been such conversion would, of course, depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, the e act nature of the relation between the parties, the contract of employment or agency and the course of dealing of the parties with each other." People v. Ehle, 273 Ill. 424, 431, 432, 112 N. E. 970, per Craig, J.

"The distinction between larceny and embezzlement is one fully recognized in the criminal law of this state as well as in England. While the two offenses have much in common, for the purpose of prosecution they have uniformily been regarded as distinct. In every larceny there must be a trespass in the original taking of the property; that is, in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking. State v. Shermer, 55 Mo. 83, and cases cited; State v. Ware, 62 Mo. 602. Whereas embezzlement is the fraudulent and felonious appropriation of another's property by a person to whom it has been intrusted, or into whose hands it has lawfully come." State v. Casey, 207 Mo. 1, 10, 11, 123 Am. St. Rep. 367, 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 878, 105 S. W. 645, per Gantt, J.

Embezzlement defined and essentials stated, 2 Wharton's Crim. Law (11th ed.) p. 1468, sec. 1256. For other definitions of "embezzle," "embezzlement" and distinctions, see 3 Words & Phrases, "embezzle," "embezzlement," pp. 2351–2358; 2 Id. (2d series) pp. 244–253.

[20] Dixie Fire Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. of Balt. 162 N. Car. 384, 78 S. E. 430 (bond stipulated "that if the employee shall in the position of general agent in the employer's service make good to the employer within thirty days any loss sustained to the employer by larceny or embezzlement committed by the employee during the term . . . this obligation shall be null and void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect." Action to recover for breach of bond was brought by Dixie, etc., Co., against the American, etc., Co., who furnished the bond guaranteeing fidelity of general agent of insurance company: judgment mentioned in above text as prima facie evidence was obtained in action by the employer against the employee).

[1] See State v. Pate, 268 Mo. 431, 438, 188 S. W. 139, where Rev. Stat. sec. 8057, so providing is applied in construing the words "embezzle" and question was whether the embezzlement should be determined by construing and applying the state law defining that offense, or by the Federal law under which the employee held his position and which rendered him liable for his misconduct in his official capacity, it was held that the Federal law controlled.[2]

(g) Whether the phrases "amounting to embezzlement or larceny," or, "any acts of larceny or embezzlement," restrict recovery to losses occasioned by acts which are criminal or import a criminal offense.—In a frequently cited Kentucky case, insurer agreed to reimburse the employer for pecuniary loss sustained "by any act of fraud or dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement." It was part of the employee's duty to make out weekly pay roll checks payable to himself, have them signed, and obtain the cash thereon at the bank. These checks he raised and cashed, appropriating for himself the excess over the amounts for which they were actually issued. He also fraudulently retained some of the money collected by him for insured, or took it from the cash drawer. A judgment below for defendant was reversed. In holding insurer liable, the court, per Settle, J., said: "It is not material, therefore, whether the fraudulent and dishonest acts of Weitkamp, which caused loss to appellant were committed by the making of false entries in its books, by the raising of its checks, or by extracting money from its money drawer; . . . appellant under the terms of the bond would be, and is, liable for the loss which he occasioned. There can be no doubt, under the evidence in this case, but that Weitkamp was authorized by appellant, and that it was a part of his duty, to receive money due it from its customers, and to draw money from the bank in which appellant's accounts were kept; and it was also his duty to account to appellant for the moneys thus received. His failure to do so was dishonest and fraudulent, and, in fact, constituted an act of embezzlement; and for the loss resulting to his employer thereby, appellee's liability is fixed by the terms of the bond. It was not necessary, in order to fix the liability of appellee upon the bond, that appellant should produce, in support of any claim that it might have arising thereunder, such proof as would convict Weitkamp of the crime of larceny or embezzlement as defined by the laws of Kentucky. Such a narrow construction of the provisions of the contract is not required by the law, and was never contemplated by the parties to it. While larceny is a common law crime, yet in this state it is to a great extent statutory. Embezzlement is purely a statutory crime, but the terms 'larceny' and 'embezzlement,' in the bond or policy sued on, are used as generic

"convert" under Rev. Stat. 1909, sec. 4550.

[2] Griffin v. Zuber, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 288, 113 S. W. 961.

terms to indicate the dishonest and fraudulent breach of any duty or obligation upon the part of an employee to pay over to his employer, or account to him for, any money, securities, or other personal property, the title to which is in the employer, that may in any manner come into the possession of the employee." [3] In an Illinois case the court, per Hand, C.J., declared in substance and so held that the phrase, "amounting to larceny or embezzlement" does not qualify the word "dishonesty" in a guaranty clause of a fidelity bond, insuring against loss "sustained by the employer by or through the dishonesty, or any act of fraud of the employee amounting to larceny or embezzlement;" and, applying the rule of construction against assurer and in favor of assured, assurer was held liable under the said bond for any financial loss sustained through the employee's dishonesty even though his conversion to his own use of moneys collected by him would not subject him to an indictment and conviction for larceny or embezzlement; also that the intent of assured under such a guaranty was to protect himself from financial loss through the employee's dishonesty even though the act by which the loss was occasioned was not criminal, and that it was immaterial that the employee could not have been convicted of larceny or embezzlement. This was applied where the employee, whose fidelity was guaranteed, was intrusted with the collection of rents for insured on the basis of a salary and commission and the use of a flat in which to live, and he collected the rents, converted them to his own use and absconded.[4]

[3] Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding Co. 115 Ky. 863, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 239, 103 Am. St. Rep. 856, 75 S. W. 197, 32 Ins. L. J. 808 (bond guaranteed to "reimburse the employer to an amount not in excess of the penalty of this bond, for such pecuniary loss as the employer shall have sustained of money, securities, or other personal property belonging to the employer, or for which the employer is responsible, by any act of fraud or dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement committed by the employee during the continuance of this bond, in the performance of the duties of said office, or position, or such other position," etc.).

[4] City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. Lee, 204 Ill. 69, 68 N. E. 485, aff'g 107 Ill. App. 263, where Ball, P. J., makes a substantially like statement. The case of McElroy v. People, 202 Ill. 473, 66 N. E. 1058, was urged by counsel as an authority for the point that said conversion of rents by the employee did not amount to larceny or embezzlement, as said employee had an interest in the funds to the extent of his commissions and that therefore there could be no recovery on the bond, but this contention was not sustained by the court for substantially the reasons stated in the above text, although the authority of that decision was not disputed by the court, but only its application under the condition of the bond in suit in the principal case. The City Trust Co. Case (204 Ill. 69, above) is considered and held not applicable in Dominion Trust Co. v. National Surety Co. 221 Fed. 618, 137 C. C. A. 342, 46 Ins. L. J. 77 (also noted under subdiv. (g) this section);

In another case in that state the bonding company agreed under certain conditions to "reimburse the employer to an amount not in excess of the penalty of this bond, for such pecuniary loss as the employer shall have sustained of money, securities, or other personal property belonging to the employer, or for which the employer is responsible, by any act of fraud or dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement." There was also another following clause in the bond relating to renewal which provided: "in which case the company shall remain liable for any dishonest act of the employee, amounting to larceny or embezzlement." It was declared that this condition was somewhat different from that of the condition under consideration in the preceding case,[5] in this, that in the bond here the words "fraud or dishonesty" and the words "amounting to larceny or embezzlement" were both phrases qualifying the word "act;" also that the words "fraud" and "larceny" and "embezzlement" were used as generic terms to indicate the dishonest and fraudulent breach of any duty on the part of an employee to pay over to his employer, or account to him for any money, etc., the title to which was in the employer, and that might in any manner come into the employee's possession. In other words as stated in the syllabus to this case, said clause is an indemnification only as against any loss that may have been sustained, (1) by acts of fraud, or (2) by dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement, and the court itself concludes that "these bonds were intended to protect" insured "from financial loss from just such dishonest acts" of the employee "as the evidence in the case shows;"[6] said acts and facts were; that the employee as general agent—and also as manager of a certain department, had collected premiums belonging to appellee for which he failed to account or even to notify said appellee that they had been collected, and under the terms of their contract he was entitled to deduct commissions from his collections, but was obliged to remit the balance.[7]

cited in Farmers' State Bank v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 133 Mo. App. 705, 113 S. W. 1147, 38 Ins. L. J. 262, 265, as holding that the insurance was only against the fraudulent and dishonest acts of the employee and as not supporting the citing case which holds as appears under this subdiv. (f) where it is fully discussed. It was declared in the citing case that although the language in the Illinois case was "similar, the arrangement is different and renders it ambiguous."

[5] City Trust Co. Case, 204 Ill. 69 above.

[6] Relying as to this point upon the City Trust Co. Case (204 Ill. 69, above) and Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 115 Ky. 863, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 239, 103 Am. St. Rep. 856, 75 S. W. 197, 32 Ins. L. J. 808.

[7] American Bonding & Trust Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 125 Ill. App. 33.

In an English case the word "embezzlement" is held to have the same meaning in a fidelity guarantee policy as in an indictment.[8] So where the bond stipulated that it secured insured against loss by reason of the fraudulent or dishonest acts of an employee "amounting to embezzlement or larceny" and it appeared that said employee acted as agent in obtaining orders for certain goods, was to receive them from the employer and return them or the money collected therefor within a specified time, it was held that recovery was precluded unless a criminal offense was proven upon evidence which would sustain a conviction, and therefore that a nonsuit should be granted in the absence of evidence that goods shipped to said employee had been received by him, or that they had been in his actual control, or that he ever collected or received the proceeds from their sale.[9] In a Missouri case it is held that conceding that the

[8] Debenham Ltd. v. Excess Ins. Co. Ltd., 28 T. L. R. 505.—K. B. D. (condition was: "This was an action on a fidelity policy issued to the plaintiff by the defendants, whereby the latter agreed 'to reimburse to the employer [the plaintiffs] to the extent of the sum stated against the name of the respective employed set forth in the schedule contained herein, such pecuniary loss, if any, as the employer shall sustain by any act of larceny or embezzlement, on the part of any one or more of the said employed in connection with the respective duties stated in the schedule hereto.'" Mr. Justice Hamilton said that "the term 'embezzlement' in this policy meant the same thing as it meant in an indictment. There was no reason for giving it any less strict meaning in the policy by which the plaintiffs were insured than if a direct charge was being made. It was of the very essence of it that the jury must be satisfied that what the man did he did fraudulently and dishonestly; because mere carelessness, mere puzzleheadedness, mere objection to discharge his routine business and keep accounts, mere unwillingness to come back to England and settle his account, mere careless omissions would not of themselves constitute, or even evidence, the crime that it is said was committed, unless there was evidence to show that which he did was dishonestly done. But if he fraudulently embezzled, that was to say, made away with money that was really his employer's; and if he converted it to his own use, so that he might have the benefit of it and might cheat them out of it, then, if the jury were satisfied of that, they were entitled to say, and should say, that there was the embezzlement against which the plaintiffs were insured. In the result the jury disagreed and were discharged."

[9] Reed v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 189 Pa. 596, 42 Atl. 294 (the trial judge whose opinion was adopted by the supreme court divided the fraudulent or dishonest acts insured against into two classes "namely, fraudulent or dishonest acts in violation of equity, good conscience and the civil law, and dishonest acts which go beyond that line and subject the perpetrator of them to the penalties of the criminal law. By the express terms of the bond the defendants insure against fraudulent or dishonest acts of the second category only, to wit: [as expressed in the bond] those amounting to embezzlement or larceny. Embezzlement or larceny are both terms of the criminal law and in no respect are they terms of the contract law. Therefore, unless a criminal offense be proved against Leiding cashier of a bank had been guilty of fraud in his transactions still said acts did not constitute embezzlement, as mere fraud or dishonesty alone not amounting to crime did not come within the obligation, since the terms of the bond only guaranteed to "make good and reimburse to the employer such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer by reason of fraud or dishonesty of the said employee in connection with the duties of his position, amounting to embezzlement or larceny." The facts were as follows: Said cashier permitted another, with whom, without the bank's knowledge he was a silent partner in the produce business, to check on certain drafts, deposited to his credit, before any returns had been received on said drafts, and upon their return unpaid he had canceled the same, crediting them by other drafts, still permitting his partner to check on them, and these transactions were continued until said partner's account was largely overdrawn. It was stated in the opinion that there was no other evidence that the drafts were wrongful or that the cashier attempted to convert the funds of the bank to his own use or that of the firm. The amount overdrawn was subsequently reduced by deposits by the partner so that the balance remaining so overdrawn by reason of said acts was only about one-third of the original amount, and this balance was sought to be recovered under the bond.[10] With all respect for the Court in this case, and having in view that caution which should be exercised in considering any decision declaring what, in a certain jurisdiction, constitutes embezzlement, a term which had no definite meaning at common law, we submit that it is not so obvious as it might otherwise be why other evidence than the above facts was necessary to show a consummated intent on the cashier's part to actually convert the funds of the bank to the use of his firm, and so necessarily to his own use. It is not an unreasonable conclusion from the facts that he had actual knowledge that the bank's money was being used to aid a business in which he, without the bank's knowledge, was a silent partner and that he, while acting in his fiduciary capacity and in the course of his employment, permitted that money to be obtained in the admittedly fraudulent manner above stated with the intent to thereby realize whatever benefit might be derived from its use by the firm and by him personally by reason of his interest as partner. It is difficult to understand wherein lies the difference between knowingly and fraudulently aiding his partner to appropriate the bank's money for the use of his, the cashier's firm, and the bond does not insure against his acts").

[10] Farmers State Bank v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 133 Mo. App. 705, 113 S. W. 1147, 38 Ins. L. J. 262. Compare Ohio and English cases under subdiv. (f) this section.

his own intended benefit, and the personal and fraudulent appropriation by himself of a like amount from the same source;[11] and the point strongly suggests itself whether in the latter case such a wrongful, fraudulent appropriation by the cashier himself personally would not have been such a conversion amounting to embezzlement as to justify a recovery on the bond. We regret that no statement is made in the opinion in this case[12] concerning what degree of fraud or dishonesty would so far constitute a crime for the purposes of the obligation as to amount to embezzlement under the law of that state.

In conclusion: Whatever may be the general trend of opinion in cases involving merely a discussion of the question here under consideration, it will be seen from the decisions wherein the issue has been directly raised and determined that the authorities are not fully in accord as to the effect which the use of the words "embezzlement" or "larceny," or the phrase "amounting to embezzlement or larceny" has upon the liability of insurer for losses. We suggest, however, the following:—(1) One consideration in this connection is that suit is brought to recover upon the contract and the remedy is in reality ex contractu to recover the reimbursement for loss agreed to be paid by insurer and is not an action based upon tort to recover a penalty; it is an action ex contractu upon assurer's undertaking to pay assured a certain amount of money upon the failure of the principal in the bond to do or not to do a certain thing.[13] (2) In view, therefore, of the factor that action or suit to recover is based upon the contract the point of construction of that contract becomes important, so that the language used in the condition upon which the obligation of the surety insurer rests must be a basis for the determination of its liability and as these conditions vary not so much in their general tenor as in their exact wording and the juxtaposition of words it is difficult to find a common ground upon which to formulate any rule other than the general one of construction against insurer in case of ambiguity and such other rules as are generally applicable and which are considered elsewhere herein.[14] (3) Another point is, Can or cannot the parties embody in their contract the statutory essentials or definition of an offense or crime without also importing into said contract in effect the statutory offense or crime itself with all the express and [11] See on this last point, London, Brighton & South Coast Railway Co. v. Goodwin, 3 Exch. 736, 6 Railw. Cas. 177, 18 L. J. Ex. 337 (considered under subdiv. (e) this section).

[12] Farmers' State Bank v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 133 Mo. App. 705, 113 S. W. 1147, 38 Ins. L. J. 262.

[13] See Edward F. Gerber Co. v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. (U. S. D. C.) 216 Fed. 980, 45 Ins. L. J. 102, considered under subdv. (dd) this section.

[14] See subdiv. (b) this section.

implied requirements of the statute as to the evidence and proof necessary to make out that offense or crime as such? In brief: Do or do not the parties by adopting a statutory definition and essentials of an offense or crime thereby also adopt all that which the statute expressly or impliedly imports as to proof thereof? (a) If the parties do thereby necessarily so adopt all that which such statute expressly or impliedly requires in respect to proof, then the words "fraud" or "dishonesty," or similar words, preceding the phrase "amounting to embezzlement or larceny" would logically seem to be narrowed down exclusively to the words "embezzlement" or "larceny," towards the establishment of which as an offense or crime all evidence must perforce be directed if recovery is sought for a loss occasioned by the acts of the person whose fidelity is guaranteed. (b) If then this view is adopted and the contract is otherwise binding and enforceable, and the language used is so clear and unambiguous as to need no construction, and it is clearly apparent therefrom that it was the intent of the parties to adopt all that which a statute defining "embezzlement" or "larceny" imports and requires as to proof of said offenses or crimes, and said parties unequivocally intended to thereby restrict their right to recover, they will be bound by the contract as they have made it. (c) Again, it is not an unreasonable assumption or inference that assured never intended to contract himself out of court by the use of language which would impose upon him such a restricted right to indemnity; therefore, if the above view be held to prevail it might reasonably be urged that the contract would in most cases seem to be a mere "scrap of paper" in so far as assured is concerned, for although he had contracted for indemnity nevertheless all the elements of embezzlement or larceny could exist according to the definitions of those offenses or crimes,[15] and still recovery be precluded unless his proof be of the commission of them as offenses or crimes, notwithstanding the evidence admissible would be otherwise sufficient to sustain an action on the contract itself.[16] (4) On the other hand ambiguity in these clauses is shown in some degree at least by the very fact that courts are not unanimous in their decisions as to the meaning thereof, therefore, if the language of the contract is so ambiguous as to require interpretation then the rule of construction against insurer and in favor of assured and indemnity will apply so as to preclude limiting or qualifying the words "fraud" or "dishonesty" or the like, by the words "embezzlement" or "larceny" or by the phrase "amounting to embezzlement or larceny," and so prevent restricting recovery to those cases only where the loss is occasioned by acts which are proven to be such as to sustain a criminal charge or to import a criminal offense under such a charge. (5) Whatever force, however, the above suggestions may have, it is undoubtedly true that, in this matter as well as in others where the courts are not in harmony, decisions in any state will follow whatever rule is laid down by prior adjudications of the highest courts in that particular state under the rule stare decisis.

[15] See subdv. (f) this section.

[16] See subdv. (gg) this section.

(h) What constitutes fraud or dishonesty amounting to embezzlement or larceny.—Under a bond to indemnify the bank for all losses arising "from the fraud or dishonesty of the cashier amounting to embezzlement or larceny" insurer is liable, where the cashier of a bank by a known to him false certificate extends to a depositor a credit to which he is not entitled, and this is done in pursuance of an arrangement whereby the cashier is to derive a financial benefit from the transaction and loss results to the bank. The court, per Shauck, J., said: "Counsel for the obligor further insist that the default of the cashier was neither embezzlement nor larceny, and that, therefore, it was not within the terms of its obligation to make good 'such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer by reason of the fraud, or dishonesty of said employee . . . amounting to embezzlement or larceny.' The parties were stipulating for the indemnity of the obligee. They were not concerned with the enforcement of the criminal laws of the state. It was not intended to indemnify against loss from the cashier's negligence or bad judgment. They adopted as descriptive of the misconduct contemplated the phrase 'fraud or dishonesty amounting to embezzlement or larceny.' If only indemnity on account of conduct amounting to technical embezzlement or larceny had been intended, that intention would have been naturally expressed more clearly in fewer words. Certainly we should not reach the correct conclusion with respect to this question if we should deny all effect to the words 'fraud or dishonesty amounting to,' which denial is involved in the argument of counsel for the obligor. It is very likely true that the cashier did not expect or intend that the bank should suffer loss from his transactions with Chadwick. She had doubtless quickened the pulsation of his venerable heart with dazzling stories of her enormous wealth, and he reached the conclusion, usual in such cases, that he could fraudulently and dishonestly exercise his authority as cashier to his own pecuniary advantage, and without loss to the bank. The fraud, dishonesty, and misuse of his authority as cashier were intended. That his conduct was for gain is the only motive suggested by the circumstances. If his own admission to that effect is not properly shown in the record, or if it is not competent in this case, that motive is clearly shown by the letter of Chadwick presented in the record, in which, during these transactions, she effectively solicited the false certification of a check for a large amount, proposing as an inducement, 'I will pay you and Mr. B. well for this favor—and I am sure it will be safe.' To this the only answer from counsel is that there is no evidence that Spear ever realized any financial gain from these transactions. The reply may be as brief as the answer. Motive and intention may be as well shown by the hope of illicit gain as by its realization. A decision in favor of the Guaranty Company upon this ground would imply that its business in this state consists in the collection of premiums." [17] In another case the obligation bound insurer to make good the losses which might result from the employee's misconduct as teller and bookkeeper, and also covenanted to make good such losses of the bank, not exceeding a specified sum, as might result from such fraudulent conduct or acts of fraud of said employee in connection with his duties as cashier, as should be equivalent to embezzlement or larceny. Under the evidence the defalcations when the cashier's bond was in force, was on account of overdrafts paid by him without the bank's authority, but it was declared that it did not appear that he embezzled or appropriated any part of the proceeds of these overdrafts, or received any benefit therefrom, and it was held that though he was individually liable therefor to the bank the loss was not one within the obligation of the bond.[18] This decision, was, however, reversed upon the ground that the bank had failed to comply with the condition of the teller's bond requiring it to give notice after information had of the teller's acts of speculation, etc., and by reason of its negligence in failing to examine and verify his accounts, and accordingly that there could be no recovery on the cashier's bond because there would have been no cashier's bond if the bank had observed the stipulations of the teller's bond in these matters, inasmuch as he was a defaulter in a large sum, understated liabilities, and of other moneys abstracted from bills receivable. But what would seem an important fact was that after he became cashier he continued his speculating or gambling and thefts so that his total stealings amounted to more than double the capital of the bank.[19]

[17] Rankin v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 86 Ohio St. 267, 99 N. E. 314, 41 Ins. L. J. 1753.

[18] Guarantee Co. of North America v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 100 Fed. 559, 40 C. C. A. 442.

[19] Guarantee Co. of North America v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 183 U. S. 402, 22 Sup. Ct. 124, 46 L. ed. 253, a decree was rendered against the guarantee company on both bonds in 68 Fed. 459, which was aff'd on appeal, 47 U. S. App. 91. The case was then taken to the Supreme Court, 173 U. S. 582, 43 L. ed. 818, 19 Sup. Ct. 551, by certiorari, and the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals was rev'd on the ground that

Nor is insurer liable under a clause agreeing to reimburse assured for any loss sustained "by or through the personal dishonesty, amounting to larceny or embezzlement of the employee" where the loss is due to acts which are more nearly those of forgery than of larceny or embezzlement; as where the employee, a president of the corporation and also a stockholder therein, held a number of valid stock certificates, each for a small number of shares, and at different periods he surrendered these to himself as president canceled them and then as president reissued to himself new certificates for a greatly increased number of shares which raised certificates he then sold and pledged. In such case assured is not aided by the fact that its loss is as complete as if the money were stolen or embezzled.[20] And where the stipulation was to make good and reimburse to the employer such pecuniary loss as it might sustain during the term of the bond, "by reason of any fraudulent or dishonest acts of the employed in connection with the duties of said position, amounting to embezzlement or larceny." The position referred to was that of general agent of the employer company and the bond had been renewed for a year. All moneys collected during the term of the bond were paid over to assured, but on accounts other than those so collected by said agent; that is, a part of said amounts were directed to be credited on other accounts owing by the employee to assured who had no knowledge that they were so applied. The court, per Boyd, J., said: "The necessary elements to bring Brumbaugh's acts within the statute are 1st, agency; 2nd, receipt of money for, in the name of, or on account of his principal, as such agent, and 3d, a fraudulent conversion thereof. . . . As the point is now presented to us, the agent used his principal's money received during the term and under the conditions of the bond and applied it to his own use—that is, to the payment of debts he owed the principal, on account of collections previously made by him for which he was liable, and it was therefore as much a conversion of the principal's money as if he had paid it to some third party. . . . There is no allegation that the Harvester Company was in any wise responsible for, or knew of, the use of the money, which the decree of the circuit court was not final. A final decree was rendered against the company, 80 Fed. 766, 26 C. C. A. 146, modified and aff'd 100 Fed. 559, 40 C. C. A. 442. This last mentioned Circuit Court of Appeals Case is cited in Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 105 Md. 490, 66 Atl. 495, 36 Ins. L. J. 589, 592, as sustaining the point that there must be proof of dishonest acts of the employee within the contemplation of the bond: that fraud and dishonesty are not presumed but must be proven.

[20] Dominion Trust Co. v. National Surety Co. 221 Fed. 618, 137 C. C. A. 42, 46 Ins. L. J. 77. The case of City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. Lee, 204 Ill. 69, 68 N. E. 485, declared not applicable.

the appellant was liable for under the bond, by Brumbaugh to pay other debts he owed it. If it had been accepted with such knowledge, another question would have arisen." Accordingly it was held that there was a fraudulent conversion of said money so collected and credited for which assurer was liable.[1] Again where a fidelity policy was issued to indemnify assured for any pecuniary loss he should sustain by any "fraud or dishonesty" of a commercial salesman employee in his employment, which should amount to "embezzlement or larceny" and he was authorized to collect on sales and required to remit such collections to assured, and in terminating his employment he retained a certain amount out of said collections, claiming that it was due him for arrears of salary and expenses, and sent a check for the balance to his employer with a statement of items, it was held that the claim that the amount retained was due him was made in bad faith and that the appropriation thereof constituted larceny under the state Code, which made it larceny for an agent or servant to appropriate to his own use any money or property which he had in his possession as servant or agent with the "intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property or of the use and benefit thereof;" also that the money was not appropriated under any claim of title, but under a claim of indebtedness and therefore its retention was not within the Code provision making it a sufficient defense that the "property" was "appropriated openly and avowedly under a claim of title preferred in good faith, even though such claim is untenable" especially where it is also provided by the same statute that it "shall not excuse the retention of the property of another to offset or pay demands held against him." Accordingly a judgment in favor of plaintiff was affirmed.[2]

[1] American Bonding & Trust Co. of Balt. v. Milwaukee Harvester Co. 91 Md. 733, 68 Atl. 72. The court relies upon Frownfelter v. State, 66 Md. 80, 5 Atl. 410 (which relies upon Inhabitants of Colerain v. Bell, 9 Mete. [50 Mass.] 499; Gwynne v. Burnell, 7 Cl. & F. 572), and cites:

United States.—Hecox v. Citizens Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 535.

Indiana.—Rogers v. State, 99 Ind. 218.

Minnesota.—County of Pine v. Williard, 39 Minn. 125; State v. Baumberger, 28 Minn. 226.

Missouri.—State v. Smith, 26 Mo. 226.

New Jersey.—State v. Sooy, 39 N. J. L. 539.

New York.—Stone v. Seymour, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 19.

Pennsylvania. — Commonwealth v. Knettle, 182 Pa. 176.

Virginia. — Crawn v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 282.

England.—Rex v. Hall, Russ & Ry. 463, 2 Bishop New Crim. L. (ed. 1892) sec. 377; Roscoe's Crim. Ev (456).

[2] Matthews & Co. v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. Ltd. 111 N. Y. Supp. 76, 127 App. Div. 195, aff'd (mem.) 195 N. Y. 593, 89 N. E. 1102. Pen. Code secs. 528, 548.

(i) What acts do not constitute embezzlement or larceny.—In a Maryland case insurer agreed to reimburse and make good to the employer all losses sustained by it of moneys, etc., in the possession or custody of the employee, or for the possession or custody of which he was responsible "directly occasioned by larceny or embezzlement" on the part of the employee in connection with the duties of his office or position, which was that of general agent of an insurance company for certain territory. The bond also stipulated that the obligor should not be responsible for loss resulting from bona fide mistakes or mere errors of judgment, also that it was intended to cover only such dishonest acts of said employee in his position, etc., "as amount to larceny or embezzlement" and there was a further provision that the "true intent and meaning" of the bond was to preclude liability thereunder for moneys diverted from the employer through "larceny or embezzlement" on the part of the employee, and that said obligor should not be liable for the amount of any balance found due from said employee to the employer. It appeared that under the terms of the employment, said agent was to receive commissions for his compensation and was to make certain expenditures or disbursements in carrying on the agency transactions, he was also permitted to retain his balances for three months, sometimes longer, as certain contingencies sometimes arose in the course of business which might not only exhaust monthly balances, but even leave a credit in favor of the employee. Whatever was due the employer was remitted by the agent's own checks, as the agency moneys were not required by the principal to be kept as separate deposits, but the agent deposited the balances due said employer to his own credit without objection being made thereto. The great fire in Baltimore compelled the agent's principal to cease operations and go into a receiver's hands who sought recovery on the bond for loss alleged to have been sustained by failure of said employee to pay over a claimed balance due on demand. The latter neither concealed nor denied the amount of the "balance" prima facie due by him, but permitted an examination of his accounts, although he asserted that his claims against his principal exceeded his debts, and a part of said claims was for special services rendered and expenses incurred claimed to have been necessitated for the purpose of holding the business together after the great fire. It was held that there was no such sufficient evidence of a dishonest attempt to appropriate or withhold the alleged "balance" as to constitute larceny or embezzlement. The court, per Schmucker, J., first defines larceny and embezzlement;[3] and, it having been contended that as said agent's office was in New York, the alleged offense must be deemed to have been committed in that state and amounted to larceny there, under its statute, and that the insurance law there, also brought such an agent as the employee in this case[4] within the statutory definition of larceny or embezzlement, the court also declares that the law of that state had not done away with the necessity of proving the felonious or fraudulent intent at the time of taking, or appropriating, or withholding the property in order to establish the offense of "larceny" or "embezzlement."[5] It was further said by the court that "proof of a balance due from employee to the employer, and failure to pay the same when demanded, was not sufficient to bind the surety. There must be proof of dishonest acts of the employee within the contemplation of the bond. Fraud and dishonesty are not presumed. They must be proven . . . If at the end of three months he was unable to pay or simply failed to pay what was due, that fact without proof of some fraudulent disposition of the money animo furandi would not have sufficed to have convicted him of larceny or embezzlement. If the company had required him to deposit the money to its credit and draw upon it as its agent and for its use, and thus intrusted him with the mere custody or possession of it, and he had applied it to his own use, the case would have been different. The mere failure to pay a debt without compulsion, even by one having the financial ability to pay it, is neither larceny nor embezzlement. . . . The claim made by Tuttle for special services and expenses . . . does not raise a prima facie presumption of dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement;" and it was further declared that "even though he was undoubtedly dilatory and perhaps indifferent in sending in his accounts after the fire," etc., still it would not legally justify a verdict for the plaintiff in view of the fact that he asserted his right to credits and an indebtedness to him in excess of the balance against him.[6] In another case a bond was given to indemnify insured against loss by the misappropriation, misapplication or mis-

[3] For definitions and essential elements of these offenses, see subdv. (f) this section.

[4] "Every person appointed or acting in this state as agent of any insurance corporation who receives or collects any moneys as such agent, shall be responsible in a trust or fiduciary capacity to such corporation therefor." Sec. 38, N. Y. Ins. Law (Consol. L. c. 28, Laws 1909, c. 33) revised from L. 1873, c. 688, sec. 1.

[5] Citing to this point, People v. Laurence, 137 N. Y. 517, 33 N. E. 547; Justice of Court of Special Sessions, etc. v. People, 90 N. Y. 12; Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 329; People v. Pollock, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 613; People v. Grim, 3 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 317.

[6] Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 105 Md. 490, 66 Atl. 495, 36 Ins. L. J. 589.

use in any manner or by any means of certain paper or plates furnished by insured to a printing company under a contract whereby the latter was to restore the identical paper printed and cut into wrappers. The bond further stipulated that it was to be of full force and effect if the printing company should "in any manner dispose of same or convert them to their own use amounting to a larceny or embezzlement of said paper and plates." It was declared and so held that the bond should not be construed to mean that the paper must necessarily have been stolen or embezzled in order to create a liability thereunder; and that the indemnity guaranty provision was separable in that it created a liability in two contingencies, (1) if the printing company should in any manner or by any means misuse, misappropriate or misapply the paper, or (2) should in any manner amounting to larceny or embezzlement dispose of the same or convert it to its own use; and, therefore, the intent of the bond was, to protect the bailor against all wrongful acts of the bailee in using the former's property and that said bond would be breached by any misuse or misappropriation of said paper by the printing company after it had been delivered to it.[7]

(j) When embezzlement or larceny does not include mere indebtedness or debts, or advances by employer.—In the absence of allegation or proof that an employee has through fraud or dishonesty diverted from the employer moneys, securities, or other property, or that he has committed larceny or embezzlement of such property, the fact that the employee on settlement is found to owe the employer is not of itself sufficient to show that the debt originated in fraud or dishonesty, in embezzlement or larceny, for inasmuch as the law presumes that every man acts honestly until the contrary is evidenced some fact must be shown tending to prove that the debt originated in fraud or dishonesty.[8] So where the bond

[7] N. K. Fairbank Co. v. American Bonding & Trust Co. of Balt. 97 Mo. App. 205, 70 S. W. 1906. Distinguished in Farmer's State Bank v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 133 Mo. App. 705, 113 S. W. 1147, 38 Ins. L. J. 262, 265, which is considered under subdiv. (g) this section.

[8] Monongahela Coal Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 94 Fed. 732, 36 C. C. A. 444, s. c. (mem.) 175 U. S. 727, 44 L. ed. 339, 20 Sup. Ct. 1023. In this case the clause was "make good and reimburse to the employer to the extent of the sum of ten thousand dollars, and no further, all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer of moneys, securities, or other personal property belonging to the employer in the possession or custody of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible, directly occasioned by larceny, or embezzlement on the part of the employee in connection with the duties of the office or position in the service of the employer . . . and occurring during the continuance of this bond, and discovered . . ., provided always that said company shall not be liable by virtue of this bond for any mere error of judgment or of a surety company stipulated that it would "make good and reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer of money, securities or other personal property in the possession of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible by any act of fraud or dishonesty on the part of said employee in the discharge of the duties of his office or position as set forth in said statement referred to, amounting to larceny or embezzlement," it expressly restricts liability to such acts of fraud or dishonesty as amount to larceny or embezzlement, and does not extend to and include every liability or claim which may accrue in favor of the employer against the employee, as where the employee drew on his account as agent various checks in favor of different parties, a portion of which, however, said agent accounted for as being used in the employer's business, the remainder being used for his personal benefit. He made no attempt at concealment of the amounts, or of his checking on his account as agent and aided, upon notification by the bank that his account was short, in an endeavor to discover the discrepancy. It was declared that the law presumes every man honest until the contrary is shown and that the evidence did not establish that the discrepancy in the said agent's accounts arose from fraud or dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement.[9] Again, something more than the relation of debtor and creditor must exist to constitute embezzlement under the Tennessee Code, since by the requirements thereof the accused must in order to be subject to punishment for embezzlement injudicious exercise of discretion on the part of said employee on and about any of the matters wherein he shall have been vested with discretion. . . . It being the true intent and meaning of this bond that the company shall be responsible aforesaid for moneys, securities or property diverted from the employer through fraud or dishonesty on the part of the employee within the time specified in this bond." See United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Overstreet, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 248, 84 S. W. 764; Milwaukee Theatre Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 92 Wis. 412, 66 N. W. 360.

[9] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bank of Batesville, 87 Ark. 348, 112 S. W. 957, reversing judgment in favor of plaintiff for amounts expended by agent employee (" 'a loss by carelessness or inattention to business might be the foundation of a just claim against the employee by the employer, which would impose no liability on the company by the terms of its obligation in the bond. If, with the consent of the employer, express or implied from the course of dealings between it and the employee, the latter retained moneys, charging itself with them, it would be no obligation covered by insurance on indemnity of the company. It follows, therefore, that the fact that the account between the employer and the employee shows an indebtedness from the latter to the former, is not sufficient to support a claim on the bond against the company.' ") Id. 356, per Hart, J., quoting from Monongahela Coal Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 94 Fed. 732, 36 C. C. A. 444.

sustain the relation of officer, agent, or clerk of a company, firm, or private person, and the money or property of another must have come into his possession by virtue of his employment and he must have fraudulently converted the same to his own use. Accordingly it is held in that state that the general agent of an insurer is not guilty of embezzlement of its funds where he is also general agent of other insurers and kept the funds of all of them on deposit in bank on his individual account and checked thereon for his expenses and business needs, and the employer insurer had authorized said agent to appoint local agents from whom he received reports of insurance effected by them, and remittances for premiums, and he was permitted without objection by said employer insurer with knowledge of the facts to deposit said premiums so collected in his own name, although he was required to make daily reports of the amounts of premiums and also monthly reports of balances which were to be paid within sixty days.[10] Nor does a loss occasioned by poor business judgment, whereby an employee becomes indebted [10] Dixie Fire Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 128 Tenn. 70, 157 S. W. 416; Shannon's Code, sec. 6576. ("To make a case of embezzlement" under said Code the "person charged must occupy one of the relations indicated, 'officer, agent, or clerk' and he must 'fraudulently convert to his own use' the money or property of another person, which has come into his possession, or is under his care by virtue of such employment. It is clear that, if a merely debtor and creditor relation existed at the time of the acts complained of, there could be no conviction under a charge of embezzlement. . . . If the principal knows that the agent is accustomed to making such conversion, and raises no objection to it, but accepts the agent's individual checks habitually for balances found due against the agent, he must be held as consenting to the conversion, and to the creating of the relation of debtor and creditor merely, between himself and the agent, since the deposit in the bank in the individual name of the agent creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and the agent. . . . We do not gainsay the proposition that if it be made to appear that an agent has appropriated the money of his principal to his own use, nothing else being shown, a case of fraudulent conversion is made out under which a charge of embezzlement can be sustained. But if the principal habitually permits his agent to convert his money, by depositing it in bank in his own name, and accepts the agent's individual checks in payment from time to time, as occasion for payment arises, he must thereby be held to understand that the money is subjected to the perils of the agent's individual business, and when it is lost in that business it is then too late for the principal to bring a charge of embezzlement. That is just what happened in the present case." Id. 76, 78, 79, per Neil, C. J., citing and approving Monongahela Coal Co. v. United States Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 94 Fed. 732, 36 C. C. A. 444; Williams v. United States Fidelity Co. 105 Md. 490, 66 Atl. 495; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Peoples Bank, 127 Tenn. 720, 157 S. W. 414; State v. Covert, 14 Wash. 652–7, 45 Pac. 304; State v. McFetridge, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L.R.A. 223, 54 N. W. 1, 998, disapproving Commonwealth v. Smith, 129 Mass. 104, 110).

to an employer, constitute larceny within the meaning of that word in a fidelity guaranty bond according to a Washington decision, wherein said term is defined as the taking of money or property of another with criminal intent to deprive the true owner of its use and benefit.[11] And a failure of the treasurer of a corporation to pay over, to his successor on demand, moneys in his hand in which under an arrangement with the corporation he is to pay interest, does not constitute such an embezzlement thereof as will render the insurer liable on a bond to reimburse to said corporation any such pecuniary loss as he may sustain "by reason of fraud or dishonesty of the employed in connection with the duties referred to, amounting to embezzlement or larceny" for in such case the employee is, as to such moneys, merely a debtor of the corporation.[12] So advancements by the employer to the employee of money and other property and credits to enable him to prosecute his work with the expectation that it would all be charged in the final settlement between them, are not recoverable from the surety where the employee decamped without repayment of said advances on his account. But a distinction exists in this, that the surety is responsible for money collected and appropriated by said employee on contracts for his employer where the bond stipulates that the surety will make good any and all pecuniary loss "amounting to larceny or embezzlement" on the employee's part.[13] [11] John Lee Clarke, Inc. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 73 Wash. 62, 131 Pac. 468 (bond was to protect against pecuniary loss "by any act of larceny or embezzlement" of an employee).

[12] Milwaukee Theatre Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 92 Wis. 412, 66 N. W. 360 ("the defendant corporation did not contract to pay any mere debts which Obermann might owe to the theatre company, but only to reimburse it from pecuniary loss resulting from embezzlement or larceny. . . . So far as necessary to define embezzlement for the purposes of this case, it may be defined as the fraudulent conversion of the money or personal property of another which is in the possession of a trustee, servant, agent, or bailee in a trust capacity. There can be no embezzlement unless the property charged to have been embezzled was, at the time of the conversion, held in trust. A mere debtor does not embezzle the money of his creditor by failing to pay the debt when due. . . . Interest is the compensation for the use of money. When the theatre company resolved that Obermann should pay them interest on moneys in his hands and charged him with such interest, and Obermann assented, the necessary implication was that he was to have the use of the money. He was to pay for the use of it," per Winslow, J.).

[13] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Overstreet, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 248, 84 S. W. 764 (surety obligated itself to "make good and reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer, of money, securities, or other personal property in the possession of the employee in the discharge of the duties of his office or position as set forth, amounting to larceny or embezzlement;" also that "It being the true intent and meaning of this bond that the company shall be responsible only as aforesaid, for moneys, securities, or property diverted from the employer through fraud, or dishonesty amounting to larceny or embezzlement." O'Rear, J., said: "Appellant did not undertake to secure Davidson's debts nor that he would fulfil his contract to do the work for appellee that he had engaged to do. It merely undertook to indemnify the employer against Davidson's peculations by which he might have misappropriated the former's funds to the latter's own use, without the consent of the former, and which had been intrusted to the latter's care, or which had come into his possession, or to which he had got access, by virtue of his employment.") Examine Coyle v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 217 Mass. 268, 104 N. E. 559, 43 Ins. L. J. 667, considered under subdv. (q) this section. See further as to advancements, debts, etc., subdiv. (m) this section.

(k) "Any act or acts of fraud, dishonesty, forgery, theft, embezzlement, wrongful abstraction or misappropriation."—A loss resulting from the nonfraudulent mistake and mere error on the part of an employee agent in giving an excess payment check for the price of goods which he had authority to buy is not within a clause of a bond indemnifying the principal against loss of money, or property sustained by "any act or acts of fraud, dishonesty, forgery, theft, embezzlement, wrongful abstraction or misapplication," on the part of the agent.[14]

[14] Kansas Flour Mills Co. v. American Surety Co. of N. Y. 98 Kan. 618, 158 Pac. 118 (judgment for defendant was affirmed, the court, per Burch, J., said: "The plaintiff says the words 'fraud,' 'dishonesty,' 'forgery,' 'theft,' and 'embezzlement' are superfluous, because whatever meaning they might have is embraced in the words 'wrongful abstraction.' Whatever force the word 'wrongful' may have as indicating wilfulness and bad purpose is spent on the word 'abstraction' and is not carried over to the word 'misapplication.' 'Misapplication' is wrong application, and the bond should not be interpreted to read 'wrongful wrong application.' The word 'misapplication' speaks for itself and includes applications merely amiss and not vicious because of moral turpitude. The court is not willing to accept this interpretation of the bond. All the words used should be considered as employed for a purpose, and the collocation should be taken into account in arriving at their meaning. So considered it is plain the purpose of the bond was to cover all kinds of depravity. Some kinds were named in terms having fixed and definite legal meanings—'fraud,' 'forgery,' 'theft,' 'embezzlement.' In order that other kinds might not sift through this enumeration, words more general in their signification were inserted 'dishonesty,' 'wrongful abstraction.' The term 'wrongful abstraction' does not sum up all that goes before it, but fills some of the gaps in what goes before, and the word 'misapplication' was manifestly employed to attain the same end. If this were not true we would have one field of conduct, embracing many varieties, covered with great particularity and in the utmost detail, while another and distinct field, embracing just as many varieties of innocent conduct—error, omission, mistake, oversight, neglect—was covered by a single word, 'misapplication,' which is ambiguous. The word is commonly used to denote use of money or property improperly, illegally or wrongfully in the corrupt sense. Under these circumstances the court concludes the word was inserted

(1) Pecuniary loss by reason of "fraud and dishonesty" does not restrict recovery to loss occasioned by criminal acts.—It is held in New York that the "fraud or dishonesty" resulting in a loss to the employer need not amount in degree to a crime for which the employee could be indicted or convicted in order to enable the employer to recover under a bond stipulating for reimbursement to said employer for such pecuniary loss as he might sustain by reason of fraud or dishonesty of an employee; and the failure of the employee to account for goods delivered to him as manager of his employer's store, under a written contract whereby he agreed to either return the goods or the money for them within a specified time, constitutes a loss within the terms of the bond for which insurer is liable.[15] It is also declared in substance, per Hook, Cir. J., in a Federal case, that the words "fraud or dishonesty" are not restricted to losses which are occasioned by the employee's criminal acts or to conduct which imports a criminal offense, and while relating to criminal matters they must be given a broader interpretation than clauses insuring against "embezzlement and larceny" or "fraud and dishonesty amounting to embezzlement or larceny," so that acts which show any breach of trust or want of financial integrity coupled with deceit and concealment exercised in a position of trust and confidence and occasioning financial loss, will constitute both fraud and dishonesty, and the test is not whether the employee intended to personally profit. In the above case the bond was conditioned to "make good and reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer, of money, securities, or other personal property in the possession of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible, by any act of fraud or dishonesty on the part of said employee, in the discharge of the duties of his office or position." It was further stipulated that assurer should be responsible only "for moneys, securities, or property diverted from the employer through fraud or dishonesty on the part of the employee." The employee was a salaried officer or treasurer of insured, largely entrusted, between directors' meetings held semi-annually, with the management of his employer's affairs, and he was also authorized to execute notes and accept drafts representing its bona fide indebtedness and he fraudulently and dishonestly and without insured's knowledge accepted drafts drawn on him by another, which he knew represented no valid indebtedness of his employer, and he paid such to complete the thought and purpose indicated by the preceding words and not to introduce and deal with a new class of acts."

[15] Union Pacific Tea Co. v. Union Surety & Guaranty Co. 86 N. Y. Supp. 466, 43 Misc. 50.

drafts from his employer's funds and he continued this course after being instructed not to do so, concealed his conduct and falsified his reports, he also fraudulently and dishonestly took credit upon his books for disbursements he never made resulting in a shortage of his accounts as treasurer which he failed and refused to pay and through the drawer's insolvency pecuniary loss resulted to insured causing its failure. The claim that there was no showing of breach of the clause as to fraud or dishonesty in the fidelity bond was not sustained.[16]

(m) Advances: "any other indebtedness:" debts: loans: personal dishonesty: fraud and dishonesty.—Where a bond from a subagent to a general agent of an insurance company provides for the faithful discharge of his duties as such subagent and the faithful accounting of all moneys due on policies, etc., and also stipulates that the sureties are liable to the obligee for all moneys advanced to said subagent and for all endorsements on notes and for "any other indebtedness," his sureties are liable for his failure to pay over such collections and advances, and all other sums due in the line of his agency, but not for debts having no connection therewith.[17] But under a Pennsylvania decision advancements to salesman without salary but on commissions to be earned and which are required by him to carry on his business and for personal expenses are in effect a loan by the obligees to the salesman, and the unearned balance or any part thereof remaining unpaid constitutes a debt due from him. A distinction exists between such a case and one in which a salesman receives into his hands, or is intrusted with property belonging to his firm in which he has no interest whatever, as in case of samples to be exhibited but not for sale and which are to be returned on demand, or payments received from customers for which he is to account.[18]

[16] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Egg Shippers Strawboard & Filler Co. 148 Fed. 353, 78 C. C. A. 345.

[17] Kaufman v. Marshall, 89 Ark. 1, 115 S. W. 680 (a suit in chancery by sureties, seeking to cancel bond and cross complaint by parties seeking to maintain the bond), relying upon and following Byington v. Sherman, 64 Ark. 189, 41 S. W. 423.

As to actions on agent's bonds, see §§ 708–712 herein.

[18] W. Bodek Co. v. Sacks, 67 Leg. Intel. (Pa.) 46 (condition was that if the principal shall, whenever thereunto requested, give a just and true account of all moneys, goods, chattels and other things, the property of the obligees, as have come into his hands in his employment as salesman, or otherwise, and shall and do immediately whenever thereunto required by the obligees, pay and deliver to them all such money, goods, chattels and other things, the property of the said obligees; as shall be in his custody or possession, then the obligation to be void, or else to be in full force and effect). As to loan, see Coyle v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 217 Mass. 268, 104 N. E. 559, 43 Ins.

So in a Kentucky case advancements are held not recoverable, although if money is collected by the employee on his employer's contracts it would be a loss under the guaranty.[19]

In an Iowa case the bond secured plaintiff against loss from any fraud or dishonesty of the employee during the term of the bond. The employee was under contract to sell certain goods in specified territory, make periodical reports, remit a certain proportion of collections if any amount was due thereon to plaintiff, and upon expiration of his contract was to account for all unsold goods. Said agent after expiration of the agency contract refused to settle matters, or permit an examination of his books and accounts, or to make any statement concerning the disposal of the goods and amounts owing thereon. It was held that the bond was breached. Upon the trial defendant introduced no evidence and a directed verdict was returned on plaintiff's motion and recovery awarded and upon appeal judgment was affirmed.[20] But it is also held in that state that under a fidelity bond securing against personal dishonesty of factors or brokers a merely technical conversion of property, or the knowingly failing or refusing to account for and turn over property when demanded, or the proceeds of the sales thereof, then in said employee's possession, does not constitute such a dishonest act as to breach the bond.[1] Nor can liability on a bond which insures against loss through an agent's fraud or dishonesty be extended to cover failure to pay for the goods purchased by a factor or broker, notwithstanding the application and letter of advice requested that the bond cover the liability of one engaged in an agency or commission business, and also desired credit with applicant; and the idea that a surety company is guaranteeing the payment of a debt contracted with the plaintiff and not the honesty of an agent, is excluded where the language of a bond clearly and explicitly provides that it will make good and reimburse to insured all and any pecuniary loss it may sustain in the form of money, securities, or other personal property in the possession of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible, "by any act of fraud or dishonesty on his part in connection with the duties of the office or position" mentioned in the bond.[2]

L. J. 667, considered under subdv. (q) this section.

[19] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Overstreet, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 248, 84 S. W. 764, fully considered under subdv. (j) this section.

[20] Dr. Blair Medical Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. — Iowa, — (1902) 89 N. W. 20.

[1] Sinclair & Co. Ltd. v. National Surety Co. 132 Iowa, 549, 107 N. W. 484 (insurer not liable).

[2] Orion Knitting Mills v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Knitting Mills v. Guaranty Co.) 137 N. Car. 565, 70 L.R.A. 167, 50 S. E. 304, 2 Ann. Cas. 888 (in this case it was sought to hold the defendant lia-

(n) Bond stipulation to faithfully discharge duties of office, pay over and account for moneys, etc.: mutual association officer.—Although the business of a mutual association is under the management of a board of directors, and the president subject to its control, both are governed not only by the articles of its incorporation, but also by state statutes which specifically enumerate their respective duties and powers and limit the same, so that any act of the president not in conformity therewith or contrary thereto, constitutes a breach of duty which is not excused by the fact that such board directed the same and acquiesced therein, for the board itself in such case can exercise no authority contrary to the laws of the state and said articles of incorporation; and where a bond, given by the president as required by the articles of incorporation enumerates certain conditions,[3] and in conclusion provides, that he shall faithfully discharge "all other duties now and hereafter required of him by virtue of his said office, it will not be construed as relating only to what precedes, but it has reference to matters not previously connected and is broad enough to include any breach of duty. But he is not responsible for the act of a bonded cashier in placing, without his knowledge, on the corporation's books, funds to the credit of the wrong account; although it constitutes a breach of the bond to divert, to the payment of the expenses of litigation, assessments collected to pay death losses. A liability is, however, created on said bond to the extent of the amount due unpaid beneficiaries from a particular fund, where said president, who fully comprehends the association's financial situation and inability to then pay losses in full, makes excessive payments to certain beneficiaries to the exclusion of others who are entitled to participate therein.[4]

(o) Dishonesty: acts of omission or commission, done or committed in bad faith.—In a Wisconsin case the employee while act-ble for the amount of a debt incurred for goods bought as an independent purchaser by one specified in the bond as an employee, under a claim to the effect that the bond did not cover the risks contemplated).

[3] Bond was conditioned that he should "render a true account of his office and of his doings therein to the proper authority when required thereby or by law, and shall promptly pay over to the persons or officers entitled thereto, all moneys which may come into his hands at the termination of his office, and shall promptly account for all balances of money remaining in his hands at the termination of his office, and shall exercise all reasonable diligence and care in the preservation and lawful disposal of all money, books, papers and securities, or other property pertaining to his office, and deliver them to his successor, or to any person authorized to receive the same; and if he shall faithfully and impartially discharge all other duties now and hereafter required by virtue of said office, then this bond to be void, otherwise in full force."

[4] Sherman v. Harbin, 125 Iowa, 174, 100 N. W. 622, s. c. 124 Iowa, 643, 100 N. W. 629.

ing as assistant cashier and cashier, permitted another to obtain fictitious credit at the bank by "kiting checks" said practice consisting in allowing the other to receive credit for checks drawn on other banks in which he had no funds and then permitting him to withdraw from the employer bank moneys sufficient to meet the amount of said fictitious checks so deposited whereby the bank's funds were depleted to a large amount exceeding the guaranteed indemnity sum in the bond. There was also some evidence tending to show that the employee had profited to some extent by this practice. In addition, it further appeared that these acts were done by the cashier after he had been explicitly and directly instructed not to cash any checks given by said depositor on outside banks unless the banks on whom said checks were drawn advised him that they would be paid on presentation. Under the stipulations of the bond insurer agreed to "pay to the employer the amount of any loss or damage that shall happen to the employer in respect to any funds, property, or estate belonging to or in the custody of the employer, through the dishonesty of any of the employees, or through any act of omission or commission of any of the employees, done or committed in bad faith, and not through mere negligence, incompetency, or any error of judgment, whether such dishonesty or such act of omission or commission occurs in the performance of any duty or trust specially assigned to such employee or occurs otherwise," not exceeding a specified amount. It was found by the court below that the above stated acts of the employee constituted dishonesty and acts of omission or commission done and committed in bad faith, and not through mere negligence, incompetency or any error of judgment and on appeal a judgment for plaintiff to the amount of the bond with interest was affirmed.[5]

(p) Personal dishonesty or culpable negligence: negligence: gross negligence: ordinary care.—In a New York case a bond was issued to a street railway company guaranteeing and indemnifying against any loss by reason of "the personal dishonesty or culpable negligence" of an employee, and it was also stipulated that insurer should not be liable for "any act or thing done or left undone by any employee in obedience to or in pursuance of any instruction or authorization received by him from the employer . . . nor for any mere error of judgment, nor any injudicious exercise of discretion . . . wherein he shall have been vested with discretion." It was further provided that it was "expressly understood and agreed that the company shall in no way be held liable hereinunder to make good any loss by robbery that the employer may sustain unless the same be occasioned by or with the connivance or culpable negligence of some one or more of said employees." It was claimed that insurer was liable for a loss sustained through the culpable negligence of the employee, from whom a canvas bag containing quite a sum of money was taken while he was in the discharge of his duties in conveying, in a covered wagon, insured's money from one of its stations to the bank. The evidence of the actual loss rested upon the uncontradicted account thereof given by the said employee and the driver of the wagon from which the bag disappeared. There was no claim of any defect in the manner in which the work of the employee was done so far as the mere doing of it was concerned. It was held, therefore, that inasmuch as it was inconceivable under the uncontradicted version of the circumstances, given by said employee, that the bag could have been taken without his culpable negligence or dishonesty, and as there was no direct charge that he was dishonest, a presumption or inference of culpable negligence was raised. O'Brien, J., said: there was "imposed upon the employees of the company the duty and necessity of exercising active vigilance and care. The mere recital of how that duty was performed on the day of the loss raises a presumption that care and vigilance were not exercised. The question of whether upon the evidence Wickham was guilty of culpable negligence was properly submitted to the jury . . . we think that their verdict should not be disturbed" and judgment for plaintiff was affirmed.[6] In a Tennessee case an action was brought against the insurer to recover for loss sustained by a railroad company through the alleged negligence of its clerk. Insurer claimed that it was exonerated under a clause of the guaranty which provided that: "The company shall not be liable hereunder for any loss occasioned by mistake, accident or error of judgment on the part of any employee; or by robbery, unless by or with the connivance or culpable negligence of the employee." The bond further stipulated that "culpable negligence as used in this bond shall be deemed and held to mean failure to exercise that degree of care and caution which men of ordinary prudence and intelligence usually exercise in regard to their own affairs of the same character" a rule of insured upon the subject of "order notify" shipments made provisions as to shipments consigned "to order" with directions to notify the consignee and precluded receiving agents from delivering such shipments until surrender of the original bill of lading properly endorsed. It was held that a violation of this rule by the delivery of goods consigned to the shipper's order against the purchaser attached to a bill of lading whereby insured in order to cancel liability caused by the negligence of said clerk paid a large amount in excess of that specified in the bond constituted culpable negligence within the intent of the bond but that these contracts were in form bonds with collateral conditions limited by the sum expressed therein called the "penalty" which the judgment could not exceed.[7] Under a Federal decision where a guaranty company agreed to make good and reimburse to a bank; any pecuniary loss sustained by it through the personal dishonesty and culpable negligence of its receiving teller under a bond containing almost identically the same condition and the same definition as in the Tennessee case above considered, it was decided that the terms of the contract were perfectly plain and did not call for the exercise of the highest or an extraordinary degree of care and caution, but only such as men of ordinary prudence and intelligence usually exercise in regard to their own affairs; that the two things are not substantially the same but essentially different and, therefore, it was error to instruct the jury that the degree of care and caution, failure to exercise which would constitute culpable negligence was "the very highest, you might almost say the highest possible," "the very highest" and "an extraordinary and a very high degree," for such charge conveyed to the jury an enlarged idea of the right of the bank and the obligation of insurer. It was also held that negligence is actionable only when loss or injury proximately results therefrom, and to be thus proximate the loss or injury must be a natural and probable consequence which ought to have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated in the light of the attendant circumstances. It was decided that personal dishonesty and culpable negligence of said employee were not proven by evidence that certain money was taken from the chest of the bank, where it appears that it might have been taken by others who had equal access thereto as had the bonded employee, and that over these others he had no supervision or control, and the manner in which it disappeared was not shown.[8]

[5] First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893. See First National Bank v. National Surety Co. 130 Fed. 401, 64 C. C. A. 601, 66 L.R.A. 777 (where condition of bond same as in above case) considered near end of subdv. (x) this section.

[6] City Trust Safe Deposit & Surety Co. of Phila. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 68 N. Y. Supp. 601, 58 App. Div. 18, aff'd (mem.) 171 N. Y. 666, 64 N. E. 1119.

[7] Louisville & Nashville Rd. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 125 Tenn. 658, 148 S. W. 671.

[8] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines National Bank, 145 Fed. 273, 74 C. C. A. 553, 35 Ins. L. J. 880, cited (upon point of negligence being actionable, etc.) in Mella v. Northern Steamship Co. (U. S. C. C.) 162 Fed. 499, 511–12. See comments on principal case in Finch v. City of Ottawa, 190 Fed. 299, 303–4, 111 C. C. A. 199, given under subdiv. (gg) this section.

The general rule that mere negligence on the part of assured does not constitute a defense,[9] applies to an action on a fidelity or surety corporation bond unless the negligence amounts to fraud or bad faith.[10]

Concerning the question of negligence, the following cases are important: In a suit against a cashier of a bank and his sureties on their bond, where the defendants pleaded, severally, it is no defense to the suit that the directors have been negligent in examining his account where the negligence occurred after the bond was executed, nor that, prior to the execution of the bond, the cashier had lost money by gambling, such fact not relating to the business which was the subject of suretyship. To avoid the bond on the ground of fraud on the part of the bank or its directors there must be a fraudulent concealment of something material for the sureties to know.[11] And a loss due to the bonded employee's carelessness is not within the intent of a bond indemnifying insured against loss occasioned by the fraud or dishonesty of said employee amounting to larceny or embezzlement.[12] But insurers are liable under a guaranty of fidelity and diligence in duty of a clerk for a loss of money, owing to the negligence of said employee in leaving a large sum of money exposed in his room while absent at lunch.[13] In another case it appeared that before the delivery and acceptance of the bond of a cashier, and before the sureties had become guarantees for his diligence, honesty, and fidelity, the directors of the bank had published a statement under the provisions of the law of its organization, whereby the affairs of the bank appeared to be well managed and prudently and honestly administered, and which was intended to and did convey the belief that the cashier had up to that time acted as a trustworthy person, and the sureties were in-

[9] See §§ 2838–2848 herein.

[10] First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893.

[11] Atlas Bank v. Brownell, 9 R. I. 168, 11 Am. Rep. 231 (cited in note to Thompson's Bank Cases, 614. considered in Grand Lodge A. O. United Workmen v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. 38 R. I. 276, 284, 94 Atl. 859, as follows: "The sureties on a cashier's bond sought to avoid liability on the ground that the directors had failed to inform them relative to the personal habits of the cashier without any inquiry on the part of the sureties. The court held that the mere giving and accepting the surety bond was not a relation sufficiently confidential to impose upon the directors that duty."—Vincent, J.; and the citing case holds that where the failure to observe the obligations of the bond in performing certain duties was gross negligence, a verdict for defendant was properly directed). See Bank of United States v. Etting, 11 Wheat. (24 U. S.) 59, 6 L. ed. 419.

[12] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bank of Batesville, 87 Ark. 348, 112 S. W. 957.

[13] Citizens' Ins. Co., In re, 16 Can. L. J. (N. S.) 334 (Quebec).

duced in consequence thereof to assume the bond obligation. The cashier was, in fact, a defaulter at the time, and the directors by the use of slight care might have learned this fact. An action was brought upon the bond for subsequent embezzlements, and the court refused a recovery against them. The court, however, declared that the sureties could not claim immunity upon account of any report made after they became sureties, the reports being sworn to by the cashier. It was said that it could be assumed that upon his representations and upon what appeared upon the books of the association the directors were induced to certify to their accuracy; that although the directors may have been negligent in the discharge of their duties, whereby the cashier was enabled to misappropriate the funds of the bank and to conceal its true condition, by false reports to the comptroller of the currency and by false entries, yet inasmuch as the sureties had covenanted that the principal should "well and properly perform" his duties, and should "well and truly account for all moneys," etc., that should pass through his hands, their covenant was "unconditional, and no failure on the part of directors of the association short of actual fraud or bad faith can be deemed sufficient to exonerate them from its performance." The decision, however, as above noted, rested upon the particular facts of the case, and did not controvert this doctrine so stated by the court.[14] So an instruction is misleading which informs the jury in broad terms, in an action by a receiver upon an indemnity bond given to hold a bank against fraud of a specified officer, that if they found that the directors were careless in the bank's management generally they should find for defendant.[15]

Negligence, however, while existing may be but an incident and not the basis of a judgment as where "it is not intended to hold [14] Graves v. Lebanon National Bank, 10 Bush (73 Ky.) 23, per Lindsley, J., quoted from in United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Blackly, Hurst & Co. 117 Ky. 127, 136, 77 S. W. 709, distinguished in Grant County Deposit Bank v. Littell's Extx. 108 Ky. 442, 444, 56 S. W. 669, cited as being within same principle of law in Deposit Bank of Midway's Assignee v. Hearne, 104 Ky. 819, 823, 48 S. W. 160, quoted from in Trimble v. Read, 97 Ky. 713, 720, 31 S. W. 861, as to fraud asserted in ignorance by one obligated to use reasonable diligence, cited in Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Scott, 81 Ky. 540, 545; Thompson's Bank Cases, 492, n. 614. See further, Tapley v. Martin, 116 Mass. 275, per Morton, J.; Thompson's Bank Cases, 611n, 614–18. The court in this case cites Minor v. Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 46, 7 L. ed. 47; United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 720, 6 L. ed. 199; Franklin Bank v. Stevens, 39 Me. 532; Farmington v. Stanley, 60 Me. 472. See Board of Supervisors v. Otis, 62 N. Y. 88. See § 2002a herein.

[15] Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Courtney, 186 U. S. 342, 46 L. ed. 1193, 23 Sup. Ct. 120.

that mere negligence on the part of the guaranty may afford a defense, but to hold that a warranty binds the warrantor, and that the breach on his part constitutes a defense to an action on the bond," to recover for loss through delinquences, embezzlement or larceny on the part of an employee.[16]

Gross negligence or want of such reasonable diligence and skill as the duties of the office necessitate, or dishonesty in the exercise of the office, render the sureties liable as a rule, although honest mistakes of judgment do not.[17]

Upon the question of ordinary care in getting at the state of accounts of an employee, an insured employer is not chargeable with the negligence of an expert employed by it to examine the accounts, provided that in employing him for that purpose reasonable or ordinary care was exercised as to his competency for the work.[18]

(q) Liability for acts of fraud or dishonesty, "embezzlement" or "larceny," etc.: scope of duties: other or additional employment or duties.—If a bond provides that the employer may at any time transfer the employee from one position to another and shift any employee about at pleasure without any notice to insurer, and that the latter shall be and remain liable, and also stipulates for indemnity "whether such dishonesty or such act of omission or commission occurs in the performance of any duty or trust specially assigned to such employee or occurs otherwise," the appointment of an assistant cashier to the position of cashier without the knowledge or consent of insurer does not constitute any defense to an action for loss sustained by the employer through the dishonest acts of the employee.[19] And where the bond insures against dishonesty as receiving teller in a bank, or in the duties to which in the employer's service he may be subsequently appointed or assigned, it covers his acts of fraud and dishonesty as assistant cash-

[16] Livingston & Taft v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 76 Ohio St. 253, 81 N. E. 330, 36 Ins. L. J. 699, 707, per Spear, J. s. c. Livingston v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 27 Ohio Civ. Ct. Rep. (17 Cir. Dec.) 662.

[17] Common Council of Alexandria v. Case, 2 Cranch (U. S. C. C.) 363, Fed. Cas. No. 10,447; Union Bank v. Forest, 3 Cranch (U. S. C. C.) 218, Fed. Cas. No. 14,356; Minor v. Mechanics Bank of Alexandria, 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 46, 64, 7 L. ed. 47; Commercial Bank of Albany v. Ten Eyck, 48 N. Y. 305; Bank of Washington v. Barrington, 2 Pa. 27, 2 P. & W. 37; Bank of St. Mary v. Calder, 3 Strob. (S. C.) 403; Melville v. Doidge, 6 Com. B. 450, 18 L. J. C. P. 7, 12 Jur. 922.

[18] Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of N. Y. v. Western Bank, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 639, 94 S. W. 3, 35 Ins. L. J. 692.

[19] First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893.

As to representations and warranties as to duties of position, see § 2002a, subdv. (n) herein.

ier although insurer had received no notice of his appointment as said assistant cashier.[20] So where upon and after suspension of the business of a bank the cashier of the bank, whose fidelity is guaranteed, continues in the employment of the bank examiner and of the receiver, he is none the less in the service of the bank, at least so up to the day on which the receiver takes possession of the books, papers and assets, where the bond contemplates service other than as cashier, as when it insures fidelity of the employee "in connection with the duties of the office or position hereinbefore referred to, or of the duties to which, in the employer's service, he may subsequently be appointed;" and where the bond also provides for insurer's liability for acts of fraud or dishonesty of the cashier during the "continuance of this bond" and "discovered within six months thereafter, and six months from the death, dismissal, or retirement of the employee, from the service of the employer," the surety company insurer is not discharged from liability for acts discovered more than six months from the date when the bank examiner took charge of its affairs but within six months from the date of the resignation of the cashier.[1] And if a principal in a suretyship bond receives and embezzles moneys under his appointment and in pursuance of his duties, the faithful performance of which are secured by the bond, it will not avail insurer as a defense in avoidance of his liability that other and greater duties and responsibilities are imposed upon him where such duties, or the duties of a new position do not interfere with or modify those under the original appointment for the faithful performance of which the sureties are obligated, provided such other or new duties are not such as to make the obligation one so entirely outside the parties' intent that it would be inequitable to impose them upon the contract. This applies where it appears that the general manager of an association whose fidelity was guaranteed was to have supervision of the insured corporation's affairs under the supervision of a board of directors and was also to perform such duties in the detail work of said association as should be prescribed from time to time by said board, and the by-laws provided that it should be the treasurer's duty to receive all moneys due the association and keep account thereof, but the evidence showed that it was the duty of said general manager, as understood by both parties to the contract to receive the cash and deposit it in the bank, that he had charge of the books and that a statement was presented and accepted at each meeting of the directors showing the amount of money received by him and that it was in the treasurer's hands Accordingly, although the application for the bond stated that said manager's position was merely clerical, the question whether the loss was covered by the contract was properly submitted to the jury, and a verdict and judgment for plaintiff was sustained.[2] Again, a bond indemnifying an employer against loss through acts amounting to larceny or embezzlement on the part of an employee in the performance of his duties as bookkeeper, or in such other position as he might be called upon to fill, covers a loss sustained through the employee raising checks and appropriating the money thereby received from the bank, whether he was at the time acting as bookkeeper or in some other capacity in his employer's service.[3] Nor does an employee cease to be an employee merely because the method of fixing his compensation has changed.[4] As to additional employment, sureties for the faithful performance of the duties of the bookkeeper of a bank are liable for his errors in that capacity, although he also performs the duties of teller, unless the errors were connected with or induced by the latter employment.[5]

[20] Fidelity Casualty Co. v. Gate City National Bank, 97 Ga. 634, 33 L.R.A. 821, 54 Am. St. Rep. 440, 25 S. E. 393, 32 Ins. L. J. 808.

[1] American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 160, 42 L. ed. 987, 18 Sup. Ct. 563, s. c. 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. 552, 29 Ins. L. J. 3, aff'g 72 Fed. 484, 18 C. C. A. 657, s. c. 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644.

A new appointment, however, will terminate the liability of sureties on a bond given after the first appointment, and the employment of a bank cashier for a period of one year, after appointing him to office for a period to continue at the pleasure of the trustees, constitutes a new appointment.[6] And where an assistant cashier,

[2] Harrisburg Savings & Loan Assoc. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 197 Pa. St. 177, 46 Atl. 910 (condition in bond was: "make good and reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer, of money, securities or other personal property in the possession of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible, by any act of fraud or dishonesty, on the part of said employee, in connection with the duties of the office or position hereinbefore referred to, and occurring during the continuance of this bond, or any renewal thereof," etc., also not to be liable "for any mere error of judgment, or injudicious exercise of discretion on the part of the said employee, in and about all or any matters wherein he shall have been vested with discretion, either by instruction or rules and regulations of said employer") the court, per Mestregat, J., approves Shackmaxon Bank v. Yard, 150 Pa. 351, 358, 24 Atl. 635.

[3] Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 115 Ky. 863, 103 Am. St. Rep. 356, 75 S. W. 197, 32 Ins. L. J. 808.

[4] Adams Co. v. Nesbit, — S. Dak. —, 159 N. W. 869.

[5] Home Savings Bank v. Traube, 75 Mo. 199, 42 Am. Rep. 402.

[6] Wapello State Savings Bank v. Colton, 133 Iowa, 147, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 493 and note, 110 N. W. 450. See Westervelt v. Mohrenstecker, 76 Fed. 118, 22 C. C. A. 93, 40 U. S. App. 221, 34 L.R.A. 477; First National Bank v. Briggs, 69 Vt. 12, 37 L.R.A. 845, 37 Atl. 231.

whose fidelity is guaranteed and who owns only a few shares of stock, acquires a majority of the stock, becomes a director, and also cashier, the policy determines, even though it permits him to perform other duties than those specified in the bond.[7]

Again, where the loss insured against was such as might be sustained by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of the employee "in connection with his duties as specified . . . amounting to embezzlement or larceny," and his duties as secretary were to receive and deposit all moneys received by the employer, to indorse checks for deposit only, but he was not authorized to sign checks or accept drafts, or pay out on account, or withdraw money, and it was not within the scope of his duty to pass upon applications for loans nor perform other duties which, while necessary to the working out of his fraudulent schemes, were wholly without any of his specified duties, so that his dishonest acts in inducing the employer, which was a loan company, to accept a loan to a fictitious person, on fictitious security, and in procuring money from the bank, where moneys of the employer were on deposit, on a check issued by said employer in the name of the fictitious borrower by forging the name on the check, do not render the bondsman liable, for they are without the obligation of the bond, and within an exception of liability where the acts of the employee are not "within the direct scope" of his duties.[8] In a Massachusetts case it appeared that a fidelity bond agreed to make good to assured, called the "employer" all loss sustained by him through any act of a person designated as the "employee," whose position was described as that of "agent or collector" whose duties were the "collection of accounts assigned to" assured, for which he was to receive a "commission or percentage as collected." This was in accordance with an agreement where the so-called "employee" who was in business on his own account was to be assisted by the said assured "employer" and under said agreement, which was made a part of the bond which was renewed several times, the "employee" made collections of money from accounts receivable and due to him from his customers and earned in his said business. These accounts were from time to time assigned to assured for cash at their value less a certain per cent, said receivables were then collected by the "employee" from his customers the same as if no assignments had been made. There were annual settlements upon which "interest and expenses" were added to cash advanced originally, and that sum was deducted from the amounts collected by the "employee" on the assigned accounts. The "balance" was settled in cash or by assignments of new accounts receivable on which the "employer" made a new advance, or partly in cash and partly by a new assignment on which a new advance was made. The "employer" received a monthly profit on these transactions. During the entire period of the original bond and its renewals, before the renewal in question, no commissions or any other compensation was received by the "employee" for collecting these assigned accounts. Money was collected and used by him for his own benefit by said "employee" on accounts assigned to the "employer" assured. Action was brought against insurer to recover reimbursement for the failure to pay over the amount so collected and used. It was held upon a verdict for plaintiff below and exceptions that judgment should be entered for defendant as the bond did not cover the misappropriation by the so-called employee, and although it could have been found by the jury to have been dishonest, it was not done in the course of the described employment. The court, per Loring, J., declared that "We are of opinion (taking the view of the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff) that the true relation between the plaintiff and Mudge" the employee so called "was materially different from that stated in the bond" which was "that existing in the ordinary case of an 'agent or collector' employed to collect accounts assigned to his employer for his (the employer's) benefit, the 'agent or collector' receiving for so doing a 'commission or percentage' on the accounts as they are collected," and a distinction was made between said transactions in this case and embezzlement of collections where an "agent or collector" is paid commissions as collections are made, and has no other interest in or relation to the accounts collected, and in that capacity misapplies or embezzles the amount collected, for this misappropriation was not made or committed in the course of such an employment. A contention of defendant that the real nature of the transaction was, as matter of law, a running account by way of a loan secured by the accounts assigned to assured by the so-called "employee" was not sustained, although the court said that, "doubtless the jury could have found that to be the true relation" between them "but they were not bound as matter of law to do so;" nor was the defendant's further contention sustained that "as matter of law, on the evidence" said designated "employee" had "authority to use the money collected by him in his business in which case . . . his failure to account for the sums collected by him would not have amounted to embezzlement and so would not have come within the terms of the bond." [9]

[7] Farmers & Mechanics Bank v. United States Fidelity & Surety Co. 28 S. Dak. 315, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1152, 133 N. W. 247.

[8] Livingston & Taft v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 76 Ohio St. 253, 81 N. E. 330, 36 Ins. L. J. 699, s. c. Livingston v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. (17 Cir. Dec.) 662, holding that a conversion of checks payable to a fictitious payee by the secretary of a loan company constitutes an embezzlement sufficient to charge the insurer on a fidelity guaranty bond, when, etc. ("The demurrer to the petition should have been overruled, and the judgment below is therefore reversed and the cause remanded."—Henry, J.)

If the description of the employee's duties is in fact misleading, even though not intended to mislead, a judgment dismissing the complaint will be affirmed; as where the described duties were taking orders and delivering goods sent to him C. O. D. but in addition thereto he was a manager of a sort of branch shop with a supply of merchandise, making sales to customers dealing with him directly, and it was impossible to determine from which, of either, or possibly a commingling of both, the shortage came for which recovery was sought.[10] Again, a bond was executed for the faithful performance of duty by an "assistant clerk" in a bank. He was employed as a messenger. Afterward, he was promoted to the next higher clerkship, and still later to the position of bookkeeper. In the last position he was stationed near the money-drawer, and from time to time abstracted money from it and made false entries to conceal his crime. The last promotion was without the knowledge of his sureties on the bond, and it was held that they were not liable for the embezzlement. The reasons advanced were, however, that a surety is not to be held beyond the precise terms of his contract; that his liability is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of his contract; and that the surety is discharged if, without his consent, the principal parties make a new agreement inconsistent with the terms of the original agreement or in the mode of performing them. The distinction, therefore, between this rule of strict construction and that of liberal construction in favor of assured, applicable in fidelity insurance contracts, is apparent.[11]

(r) Fraud and dishonesty of member of partnership.—The bond was to make good and reimburse to insured any loss that might be sustained by him of money or other securities by any act of fraud or dishonesty with reference to the funds committed to him

[9] Coyle v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 217 Mass. 268, Ann. Cas. 1917C, —, 104 N. E. 559, 43 Ins. L. J. 667 (bond stipulated to make good and reimburse "to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer, of money, securities or other personal property in the possession of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible, by any act of fraud or dishonesty on the part of said employee in the discharge of the duties of his office or position as set forth in said statement referred to, amounting to larceny or embezzlement." Id. 217 Mass. note at p. 271.)

[10] Buchner v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. 128 N. Y. Supp. 1007, 144 App. Div. 326, 40 Ins. L. J. 1510, aff'd 207 N. Y. 672, 100 N. E. 1125. See § 2002a, subdv. (n) herein.

[11] Manufacturers' National Bank of Newark v. Dickerson, 41 N. J. L. 448, 32 Am. Rep. 237 (action to recover penalty on bond).

or of any improper use of said funds, or any other act other than that of mere error of judgment, or injudicious exercise of discretion on the part of one who was then a member of assured's firm under a contract to purchase cotton with funds furnished by assured, which contract was shown the guarantor before execution of the bond. It was held that upon proof of misapplication of the guarantee's funds, and that the bonded individual was an active member of the firm and had received the guarantee's funds, a cause of action arose against the guarantor on the bond which should have been submitted to the jury and a judgment of nonsuit was reversed.[12]

(s) Extent of duty and liability as to supervision, inspection, etc., to prevent default.—While it may be generally stated that the surety will be released or discharged from liability on its bond by the failure of assured to comply with the stipulations of the bond or the requirements of a representation or warranty which induced the execution of the contract, and to exercise in accordance therewith the stipulated degree of care or supervision over the employee, whose integrity is guaranteed, in the matter of his accounts or in respect to the faithful performance of the duties of his position in his fiduciary capacity or employment, nevertheless the conditions of the bond or contract, the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances must be considered, for what would constitute compliance under one set of conditions would not so operate under other circumstances, a distinction, however, exists under the decisions between the absolute failure to comply and an attempt to comply which is insufficient in that the proper degree of care is not exercised.[13]

[12] Clifton Manufacturing Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 60 S. Car. 128, 38 S. E. 790.

That partnership funds cannot be embezzled by member of firm unless statute expressly so provides, see State v. Hogg, 126 La. 1053, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 830, 83 So. 225.

When sureties on bond for fidelity of firm of agents not liable for funds misappropriated by one member of firm after its dissolution and retirement of other partner from business, even if obligee does not know of such dissolution, see Standard Oil Co. v. Arnestad, 6 N. Dak. 255, 34 L.R.A. 861, 63 N. W. 107.

[13] National Surety Co. v. Western Pacific Ry. Co. 200 Fed. 675, 119 C. C. A. 91 (requirement that all reasonable steps and precautions be taken to prevent loss; but this does not require employer to examine books of bank, where employee deposited, to ascertain its solvency); Larrimore v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 21 Cal. App. 767, 132 Pac. 1050 (warranty as to accounting: no recovery); Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Colorado Ice & Storage Co. 45 Colo. 443, 103 Pac. 383, 38 Ins. L. J. 1094 (under no obligation to exercise continuous diligence in making investigations as to habits and character as to employee); Atlantic City Aerie No. 64, Paternal Order of Eagles v. International Fidelity Ins. Co. 83 N. J. L. 583, 85 Atl. 325 (examination

As instancing what is above stated there is such a breach of the bond of the treasurer of a union as precludes recovery for a shortage where the insured union fails to comply with its agreement to verify the treasurer's accounts and the amount of money in his possession at the periods stipulated in the bond.[14] But where quarterly inspections by the bank officials, and also frequent daily inspections by the president were made of the cashier's accounts, which inspections covered the counting of cash and securities in the cashier's custody or charge, with the exception that it was impossible at such times to verify accounts with certain corresponding banks which would seldom balance on the same day, it was decided, that a requirement of an inspection of the cashier's accounts, at least once in every twelve months, including an examination of all cash and securities in his custody or charge, was sufficiently complied with and recovery could be had.[15]

If, however, there is nothing in the application or renewal of a bond which requires an insured employer to do so, he is under no obligation to exercise continuous diligence in making investigations so as to be at all times thoroughly advised as to the habits and character of his employee during the entire period for which he is bonded.[16] Again, in determining the duty or obligation of insured in the matter of inspection and supervision over the employee for the prevention of default, the provisions of the bond in this respect supersede what is stated in the application and operate as a waiver of any other requirements than those which the surety has specified in the bond, in other words, the surety has substituted its own requirements for the things insured had, in the application, stated it would do.[17]

(t) Liability conditioned upon discovery of fraud, defalcations, etc.—An indemnity bond which limits insurer's liability to losses occurring and discovered during the continuance of the bond, or any renewal thereof or within a specified time thereafter, does not contravene public policy, nor is it invalid on the ground that it fixes a period of limitation within which actions for fraud or mis-held insufficient and insurer not liable where by proper inquiry defalcation would probably have been discovered).

As to representations and warranties: examination of accounts, etc., what is and is not sufficient compliance, see § 2002a, subdivs. (f)–(h) herein.

[14] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Downey, 38 Colo. 414, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 323 and note, 120 Am. St. Rep. 128, 88 Pac. 451, 36 Ins. L. J. 279.

[15] Equitable Surety Co. v. Bank of Hazen, 121 Ark. 422, 181 S. W. 279.

[16] Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Colorado Ice & Storage Co. 45 Colo. 443, 103 Pac. 383, 38 Ins. L. J. 1094.

[17] United American Fire Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. 146 Wis. 573, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 661, 131 N. W. 994, 40 Ins. L. J. 1805.

take may be brought, different from that prescribed by statute.[18] And if in order to impose liability upon insurer the bond is conditioned that the loss must be discovered during the term of the bond or within a specified time thereafter, the fact that the bonded officials conspired together to conceal their fraud or embezzlement, does not aid assured corporation where it has failed to discover such official's dishonesty or embezzlement within the specified time.[19]

(u) Prosecution of employee as condition precedent to liability. —If the policy contains as a condition precedent a stipulation that the employer shall, at the company's request, use all diligence in prosecuting the employee to conviction of any fraud or dishonesty, the expense thereof to be borne by the insurer in case of conviction, it is held that such a clause is reasonable and the failure on the company's request to prosecute an employee for embezzlement precludes a recovery.[20] But where a bond guaranteeing an employer against loss sustained by reason of fraud and dishonesty of any of its employees contains a requirement that the employer shall if and when requested by insurer at its expense, use all due diligence in prosecuting any employee to conviction for any fraud or dishonesty which he shall have committed and in consequence of which a claim shall have been made under the bond and that "such action, when requested, by the employer shall be a condition precedent to recovery under the bond," said requirement is satisfied if the employer, when requested to prosecute an employee charged

[18] Ballard County Bank's Assignee v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 150 Ky. 236, 150 S. W. 1. Ky. Stat. sec. 2519, Clay, C., said: "Similar provisions to the one in question have been upheld in the courts, and it is well settled that where the liability of the insurer is limited to losses discovered within a specified time, there is no liability unless the fraud, dishonesty or negligence, causing the loss, not only occurred but was discovered within the time limit. American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. 552, 170 U. S. 160, 42 L. ed. 987, 18 Sup. Ct. 563; New York Fidelity Co. v. Consolidated National Bank, 71 Fed. 116, 17 C. C. A. 641; Guaranty Co. of North America v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 80 Fed. 766, 26 C. C. A. 146 (rev'd 173 U. S. 582, 43 L. ed. 818, 19 Sup. Ct. 551); Proctor Coal Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 134 Fed. 434; California Savings Bank v. American Surety Co. 82 Fed. 866; De Jernette v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 98 Ky. 558, 33 S. W. 828.

[19] Larrabee v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. 250 Pa. 135, 95 Atl. 416.

[20] London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Fearnley, 5 App. Cas. 911, 43 L. T. 390, 28 W. R. 893, 45 J. P. 4 H. L. Ir. the Lord Chancellor dissenting (principal and surety); La Canadienne Compagnie D'Assurance sur la Vie v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. (Can.) 9 Rap. Jud. Que. B. R. 183.

As to furnishing information and every description of aid for prosecution of principal, see Hough v. American Surety Co. 90 Mo. App. 475.

As to notice and proofs of loss: notice affecting loss: guaranty insurance, see § 3336 herein.

with fraud uses all diligence in endeavoring to secure a conviction; a conviction is not a condition precedent, and this applies where assured's agent went before the grand jury and presented proof of the fraud, but no indictment was found and the employee was discharged.[1] And a clause in a one year indemnity certificate providing that insurer shall not be liable for embezzlements by the collector of insured and making it obligatory upon the insured, if required to do so by the surety, "to prosecute the defaulting officer to conviction or judgment" is of doubtful meaning and must therefore be construed in favor of the insured and cannot be deemed to require a criminal prosecution and conviction of the officer and is satisfied by a judgment recovered against him by insured in a civil action.[2]

(v) Extent of liability: time limitation for occurrence of losses: future acts are covered and not past defaults unless so stipulated.—These fidelity guaranty insurance contracts also, in the absence of an expressed intent to the contrary, bind the surety or insurer for future losses only, and if it is intended that past defaults should be covered language should be used which clearly evidences such purpose as existing in the minds of the parties at the time the bond was executed; nor in this connection is there any presumption that if a series of acts are alleged to have occurred between two dates that the first and last acts occurred respectively on the first and last dates.[3] And if insurer in direct and express terms makes its surety

[1] Union Pacific Tea Co. v. Union Surety & Guaranty Co. 86 N. Y. Supp. 466.

[2] Sullivan v. Fraternal Surety Co-operative Union, 73 N. Y. Supp. 1094, 36 Misc. 578.

[3] Adams v. Western Surety Co. 35 S. Dak. 194, 151 N. W. 890 (the bond in this case was executed January 9, 1913, for one year after January 18, 1913. The complaint alleged that between the 18th day of January, 1912, and the 24th day of February, 1913, the employee [Nesbit] fraudulently and dishonestly appropriated to his own use various sums aggregating an amount of money in excess of the amount agreed upon as indemnity under the bond. A demurrer on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was overruled. It was held that the demurrer should have been sustained and judgment for plaintiff was reversed. It was contended that at least a part of the money was misappropriated after the bond. "This is upon the theory that where a series of acts are alleged to have occurred between two dates it will be presumed that the first and last acts occurred respectively on the first and last dates named. But we know of no such presumption of law. Of course, under the allegations of the complaint, it is possible that some, or even all, of the acts complained of may have occurred after the bond was executed; but on the other hand it is just as possible that all of the acts complained of occurred prior to the execution of the bond, and for which appellant would not be liable. . . . This presents a question that is altogether novel to this court. Of course a bond could be so framed as to render a surety liable for past delinquencies, but language must be bond prospective by restricting its liability to a time commencing at an expressly specified date, it is not retroactive and excludes lia-used that clearly shows such was the intention and understanding of the surety when the bond was executed. . . . Has the assured in this case any reasonable ground to expect the indemnity it is now contending for? In other words, is there anything in the bond to furnish grounds for any such expectation? By the terms of the bond, appellant covenants to make good and reimburse respondent for any and all pecuniary loss sustained by respondent 'by reason of the fraud or dishonesty' of the said defendant, Nesbit, not exceeding the amount named in the bond, and that said bond shall 'be and continue in force for one year from January 18, 1913.' The first clause including, as it does, any and all pecuniary loss that might be sustained by respondent by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of the said Nesbit, is broad enough, standing alone, to include losses that occurred before the execution of the bond as well as after; and because the latter clause, fixing the period within which the bond is to continue in force, does not expressly limit respondent's liability to losses that occurred between January 18, 1913, and January 18, 1914, counsel contend that it fails to provide any limitation whatever as to the time of occurrence of losses, except that they must occur before the 18th of January, 1914. With this contention we cannot agree. It is the general if not the invariable rule that contracts such as fidelity bonds, insurance policies, and the like, look only to the future and bind the surety or insurer only for losses that occur in the future; and in the absence of language in the bond or policy clearly showing a contrary intent on the part of a surety, we hold that appellant is not liable for losses that occurred before the bond was executed." Per Polley, J. "This court, I think, correctly holds as matter of law, that under the terms of the bond plaintiff can recover only for a defalcation occurring within the bonded period. Suppose then, that plaintiff had shown conclusively, by evidence, that a defalcation had occurred, but had wholly failed to show that it occurred within the bonded period—would it be entitled to a judgment? Clearly not." —Per Smith J., concurring. McCoy, P. J., dissented, evidently upon the ground that a general demurrer was not the proper remedy and that the test was: whether evidence could have been introduced under the complaint sufficient to make out a prima facie case; whether evidence could not have been introduced showing the defalcation alleged to have been at a time covered by the bond); Sinclair & Co. Ltd. v. National Surety Co. 132 Iowa, 549, 107 N. W. 184 ("the bond provided that defendant should not be liable for any sum whatever which the employee at the commencement of the bond term owed his employer. As it was given to cover the personal dishonesty of the employee and not to guarantee payment of his debts, it is manifest, we think, that defendant is not liable, for any money collected by Higgins & Ogilvie before the bond went into effect and which was afterwards dishonestly converted by them. . . . At the time of the execution of the first bond Higgins & Ogilvie had been plaintiff's brokers, handling goods for some time, and under the evidence was indebted to plaintiff for goods sold. As to this amount, defendant was not responsible, no matter if the money thus received was thereafter dishonestly converted" per Deemer, J.). See United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Fultz, 76 Ark. 410, 89 S. W. 93, 35 Ins. L. J. 149.

As to attachment and duration of risk: fidelity guaranty, see § 1443a herein.

bility for a defalcation existing prior to said specified time of commencement of liability.[4] So it is declared in a Georgia case that: "It seems to us absolutely free from doubt that, under the contract between the insurance company and the receiver, it was never contemplated that the company should be in any manner responsible or liable for any breach of duty or misfeasance on the part of any employee of the receiver, which occurred before the bond was executed. The company simply undertook to guarantee the faithful and honest discharge of duty by the employees named in the bond, from and after its date. The contract as to its operation, related exclusively to the future, and not to the past." [5] And although in order to cover up prior shortages or defaults the employee may have credited up the amounts to wrong accounts, still if after the bond insuring against his dishonesty is executed said employee accounts for and turns over all moneys collected by him no liability exists against insurer.[6]

The bond may, however, so specifically provide for indemnity for losses arising out of past defaults as to justify a recovery.[7]

In the case of a surety on the bond of a re-elected county treasurer the liability extends only to defaults during the term for which

[4] Mystic Workers of the World v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 152 Ill. App. 223, 39 Natl. Corp. Rep. 708 (distinguishing Roper v. Sangamon Lodge, 91 Ill. 518, following Stern v. People, 96 Ill. 475, and citing United States v. Boyd, 15 Pet. (40 U. S.) 187, 10 L. ed. 706); Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Bank of Timmonsville, 139 Fed. 101, 71 C. C. A. 299 (stipulation was: "That any claim made under this bond, or a renewal thereof, shall embrace and cover only for acts and defaults committed during its currency, and within twelve months next before the date of the discovery of the act or default upon which such claim is based." There was a special deposit of bag of silver coin May 19, 1900, the bond was executed March 17, 1891, and the last renewal was dated from March 17, 1901. After default and flight of the cashier whose fidelity, etc., was guaranteed, said bag was not found in the vault, but the evidence as to the time when the default in respect to said money or coin was committed was so wholly uncertain that there could only be surmise and speculation as to said time of default and it was held that in order to justify a recovery for the amount of this loss there must be sufficient evidence tending to show that it occurred within twelve months prior to discovery of the loss).

[5] Dorsey v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 98 Ga. 456, 25 S. E. 52, per Lumpkin, J. A case where a fidelity insurance company by its bond guaranteed a receiver of a railroad that certain specified employees should faithfully, etc., perform their duties and faithfully and truly account for all moneys, property, and other things which might come into their possession in their respective employments, and insurer was held not liable to assured for acts of an employee which occurred before the bond was executed.

[6] Model Mill Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 365.

[7] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Prigge, 90 Minn. 370, 96 N. W. 917.

the bond was given.[8] So where the office of a town treasurer is an annual one, sureties are not liable on his official bond for misappropriations of money made after the expiration of the official year and before the successor qualifies.[9]

(w) Continuing employee in service after default: concealment: knowledge of assured or surety.—So recovery for future defalcations is precluded as against sureties on a new bond the execution of which in the presence of the employee is permitted without informing the surety, if it is ignorant thereof that the employee had been continued in the service of collecting money for insured upon repayment of money embezzled, for in such case a fraud is perpetrated upon insurer. If, however, it does not appear upon the record whether or not the sureties had knowledge of said facts a new trial will be granted for the determination of that point.[10]

[8] Van Sickel v. County of Buffalo, 13 Neb. 103, 42 Am. Rep. 753.

See the following cases:

Alabama.—McPhillips v. McGrath, 117 Ala. 549, 23 So. 721.

Arizona. — Territory v. Cooke — Ariz. —, 17 Pac. 10.

Kansas. — McMullen v. Winfield Bldg. & Loan Assoc. 64 Kan. 298, 56 L.R.A. 924, 67 Pac. 892 (when liability of surety on bond of officer of corporation extends to defaults of entire year when officer not elected until after first of year of bond but had held successive terms and had been continuously in office for several years before and after date of commencement of his office as fixed in the bond).

Louisiana.—Max J. Winkler Brokerage Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 119 La. 735, 44 So. 449 (bond for one year to indemnify for losses from embezzlement by one proposed to be employed: insurer not liable for losses sustained after termination of year of bond although certificate for renewal filled out and returned to co-insurer but said certificate stated that the employee was not then in default and it was ascertained that he had been in default before the expiration of the year). See § 2002a, subds. (f), (g), (o) herein.

Mississippi.—Board of Supervisors of Lauderdale County v. Alford, 65 Miss. 63, 3 So. 246.

As to nonliability on reinsurance contracts for embezzlements after date of cancelation, where guaranty not retroactive but only applied to losses after its date, see United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. v. French Mutual General Society of Mutual Ins. Against Theft, 212 Fed. 620, 129 C. C. A. 156, 44 Ins. L. J. 86, rev'g French Mutual General Society of Mutual Ins. Against Theft v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 203 Fed. 558, 42 Ins. L. J. 865, considered under subdv. (e) this section.

[9] Norridgewock v. Hale, 80 Me. 362 14 Atl. 943. See Bigelow v. Bridge, 8 Mass. 275; State of Louisiana v. Powell, 40 La. Ann. 241, 4 So. 447; South Carolina Soc. v. Johnson, 1 McCord (S. C.) 41. Compare Yawger v. American Surety Co. 212 N. Y. 292, L.R.A.1915D, 481, 106 N. E. 64, considered under subdiv. (bb) this section.

[10] Connecticut General Ins. Co. v. Chase, 72 Vt. 176, 53 L.R.A. 510, 47 Atl. 825.

As to concealment, see §§ 1844, 2002a, subd. (b) herein.

As to misrepresentations and warranties: guaranty insurance: knowledge of assured, etc., see § 2002a, subdivs. (k)-(m) herein.

But where there is nothing to show that the employer had knowledge of the employee's gambling habits, said fact has no material bearing upon the right to recover.[11] Again, a material departure from the terms of the contract where it affects the substantial rights of insurer, operates as a release from its liability on a bond guaranteeing the faithful performance by an agent of his duties, as when the employer permits said employee to continue the transaction of the agency business without requiring him to make weekly reports as stipulated in the guaranty contract.[12] But it is also held that one who at the request of the principal, and without the knowledge of the obligee, signs a bond for the principal's conduct as an insurance agent is not released by the principal's previous neglect in the same employment to make payments promptly which were subsequently made good, nor by the obligee's continuing him in his employment after such default, and if the surety allows his name to remain without protest after learning of such default, he is liable in future.[13]

(x) Renewals: fidelity guaranty.[14]—As to the effect upon risks and losses, or upon liability, where there are renewals of fidelity guaranty insurance bonds, the decisions are not in harmony. Necessarily the determination of this question ought to depend upon the language of the original and renewal bond or bonds, and generally if it appears that it was intended that renewals should cover the same subject matter, the same risk, and the same liability as the original bond, then such intent should govern and the bonds be held one entire or continuous contract, but otherwise if the deducible intent shows that each renewal, or any one renewal was intended to be a separate and distinct contract in nowise dependent upon or connected in terms with the original bond, or upon any other prior or subsequent renewal; and in ascertaining this intent, the rules of construction governing insurance contracts should be considered. Beyond this general rule the decisions rest upon no common ground. The following authorities, however, are submitted:

It is held in Tennessee, that if a bond is renewed there is still only one contract and one penalty, the renewal being a new bond

[11] Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Colorado Ice & Storage Co. 45 Colo. 443, 103 Pac. 383, 38 Ins. L. J. 1094.

[12] Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dewey, 83 Minn. 389, 54 L.R.A. 945, 86 N. W. 423.

[13] Home Ins. Co. v. Holway, 55 Iowa, 571, 39 Am. Rep. 179.

[14] As to attachment and duration of risk: renewals: guaranty insurance: whether new contract or continuation of old one, see § 1470a herein.

As to renewals generally, see §§ 1459 et seq. herein.

As to representations and warranties: renewals: guaranty insurance, see § 2002a herein.

As to measure of recovery: guaranty insurance, see § 3454b herein.

merely for the purpose of extending for a new period of time the indemnity stipulated for in the original bond.[15] Under a Kentucky decision if the original bonds contain the same conditions, as, where they each guarantee insured against loss during the continuance of said term or any renewal thereof on discovery during said continuance, or within a specified time limit thereafter, the contract is a continuing one, so that if a greater part of the loss takes place by the bonded employee's defalcation during the term of the second bond, but it is not discovered until after renewal thereof, there may be a recovery for a total loss occurring from inception of the risk and up to the limit of the guaranty; and recovery is not limited to the amount of loss subsequent to the renewal thereof.[16] In an Ohio case it is determined that both the renewal and the original bond should be construed together, not only because they related to the same subject matter, but because each in terms related to the other; that the terms of the original bond showed that when it was issued a renewal or continuation thereof was contemplated and an instrument was executed whereby insurer continued the original bond subject to all its terms and conditions, etc.; and the contention that both instruments were in legal effect the same as though the original bond had been executed for the entire period covered by both bonds, that is for two years instead of for one was sustained. The court, per Shauck, J., said: "By the material stipulations of the original bond the obligor undertook to make good any loss which the obligee might sustain by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of its cashier, 'committed during the continuance of said term or any renewal thereof and discovered during said continuance or any renewal thereof, or within six months thereafter.'" Here are no words of severalty or discrimination respecting the time of the discovery, and since it would not be within the proper function of interpretation to supply such words the terms of the stipulation must be regarded as within the same construction. This view is enforced by the consideration that the term during whose continuance a deposit was contemplated by the original instrument is the term which was continued by the express terms of the second; no terms are used to suggest that any difference in the relation of the parties was intended by the second instrument than such as would have existed

[15] First National Bank v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 110 Tenn. 10, 100 Am. St. Rep. 765, 75 S. W. 1076.

[16] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Shepherd's Home Lodge, No. 2, 163 Ky. 706, 174 S. W. 487. See also Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. 133 Ky. 74, 117 S. W. 393.

if the original bond had been for two years. It is conceivable then that, if this question had been anticipated by the parties at the time of the execution of these instruments, clearer terms would have been used to express their intention with respect to it. But certainly in view of their stipulations nothing more favorable to the obligor can be concluded than that an interpretation against it is doubtful. (1) It being entirely clear that within the contemplation of both parties their stipulations were for the purpose of affording indemnity to the obligee, all substantial doubts with respect to the meaning of the terms they employ should be so resolved as to effectuate that obvious intention." [17]

It is held, however, that a renewal bond is a new and independent contract and not a continuation of the original bond where the terms of the two appear upon comparison to be essentially different as is also the subject matter and the later bond makes no reference to the former instrument which had expired. This applies where by the earlier bond insurer makes itself liable for such acts of the bonded employee as amount to "embezzlement or larceny" and under the last policy its liability covers pecuniary loss growing out of "any act or acts of fraud, dishonesty, forgery, theft, larceny, embezzlement, wrongful abstraction or misapplication, or misappropriation or any criminal act by "said employee" directly or through connivance in any position and at any location in assured's employment and the term of said insurance depended upon certain conditions and was for no definite time and so differed from that fixed in the original policy which was for a definite time; nor in such case is the contention that the later policy was a continuation of the pre-existing insurance and not a new and independent contract aided by the claim that as an inducement to write the first bond insured agreed to renew, continue or extend it from time to time, for consideration of the premium paid, and without any further or additional cost, expense, trouble or annoyance to [17] Rankin v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 86 Ohio St. 267, 99 N. E. 314, 41 Ins. L. J. 1753. The condition of the first bond was "make good and reimburse to the said employer, such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of the said employee in connection with the duties of his office or position, amounting to embezzlement or larceny, and which shall have been committed during the continuance of said term, or any renewal thereof, and discovered during said continuance or any renewal thereof, or within six months thereafter," etc. The second bond provided that the insurer "hereby continues in force" the original bond, specifying the term of one year beginning with the end of the term of the first bond "subject to all covenants and conditions of said original bond."

insured.[18] So under a Mississippi decision where the original and renewal bonds were each issued for the term of one year, and upon the same conditions, it is decided that the original bonds and each of the renewals do not constitute one continuous contract but are separate and distinct contracts and therefore liability for losses was confined to those only which occurred during the term or separate life of each bond, that is during one year and discovered during the continuance or renewal, or within six months after the expiration of said term. The case, however, also turned upon the held to be insufficient allegation of the complaint in that it failed to specifically allege that the acts in question were done during the continuance of said term or any renewal thereof, and discovered during said continuance or any renewal thereof, or within six months thereafter, and there was a failure to declare upon the particular bond or renewal current at the time.[19]

The terms of renewals are also held to be governed by new applications instead of the original ones, where the former are required and made, and by the terms of the original bond, it is stipulated to continue for one year only subject to renewals so long as the employer may wish "to continue this bond" and insurer shall consent to receive a like or agreed premium, for in such case the matter of renewals is one of agreement between the parties.[20] And in a New York case it is decided that such renewals cover separate and distinct liabilities, but it was so stipulated.[21] Again, a bond given by a re-elected president of a corporation is a new and independent undertaking, and in no sense a renewal or continuance of his previous bond, even though incorporating the covenants and conditions of said prior bond.[1]

Another point is that if no definite term for the duration of the bond is stated therein but the application justifies the understanding by the applicant that its renewal depends on payment at the end of the year of the annual premium and the contract is silent as to the party who may exercise the option to terminate the contract, it may be ended by the one who procured it and who is obligated to pay the premiums. In other words, where the application has been made a part of the bond and its language taken in [18] Miners' & Merchants' Bank v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 233 Fed. 654, 147 C. C. A. 462.

[19] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Williams, 96 Miss. 10, 49 So. 742.

[20] Danvers Savings Bank v. National Surety Co. 166 Fed. 671, 92 C. C. A. 423.

[21] Alex. Campbell Milk Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 146 N. Y. Supp. 92, 161 App. Div. 738.

[1] Sherman v. Harbin, 125 Iowa, 174, 100 N. W. 629, distinguishing First National Bank v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 110 Tenn. 10, 75 S. W. 1076.

connection with that of the bond imports that while the bond may run indefinitely, but one year at a time, and be continued providing the annual premium is paid, the contract is a continuing one only by force of mutual consent, and, if assent is refused by the applicant for the bond, to a continuance of the contract liability to his future conduct, the risk does not attach.[2] It is further decided that the sureties on the second term of a bond of a treasurer must, in order to release themselves, show that a deficiency occurred during a former term.[3]

If fictitious credits by falsifying his accounts are given a customer by a bank clerk, and these acts have extended over a series of years covered by different bonds, the liability of the surety on the last bond will be determined by appropriating the customer's deposits during said time to the checks drawn during the same period, and if by said tests the drafts have not exceeded the deposits, the bank has sustained no loss for which the last surety is chargeable; and in such case transactions which occur during the absence of the clerk, who has for a short time overstayed his vacation, must also be considered, for he must be regarded as still in the bank's service where the latter has recognized their relations as still existing for the purpose of adjusting the liability of his bondsman for losses occasioned by reason of such fictitious credits being given.[4] Again, if by the terms of the bond the liability is not to lapse if the bond is renewed at the end of the term, but it is not to be cumulative, the total liability under the original and renewal bonds is limited by the specified amount in the bond.[5]

(y) Notice of acts of employee affecting loss: precautions against loss.—If a guarantee requires notice to the guarantor immediately of any criminal offense of the employee whose fidelity is insured,

[2] Bryant v. American Bonding Co. 77 Ohio St. 90, 82 N. E. 960, 37 Ins. L. J. 72 (bond was to state guaranteeing faithful performance of his duty by state officer).

[3] Pine County v. Willard, 39 Minn. 125, 39 N. W. 71; Roper v. Sangamon Lodge, 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60. See Crawn v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 282, 4 S. E. 721.

[4] First National Bank v. National Surety Co. 130 Fed. 401, 64 C. C. A. 601, 66 L.R.A. 777 (in this case the surety company agreed to pay to the employer bank "the amount of any loss or damage that shall happen to the employer, in respect of any funds, property or estate belonging to or in the custody of the employer, through the dishonesty of any of the employees, or through any act of omission or commission of any of the employees, done or omitted in bad faith, and not through mere negligence, incompetency, or any error of judgment," etc.). See First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893 (where condition of bond same as above) considered under subdv. (o) this section.

[5] American Bonding Co. v. Morrow, 80 Ark. 49, 96 S. W. 613.

and for which insured may make claim, a failure to give the required notice avoids the policy.[6] And where the policy stipulates that the assured shall within a specified number of days after discovery of any fraud or dishonesty of the employee, and any matter in respect to which any claim is intended to be made, notify the society at its office in writing, stating as far as the case will permit all the particulars thereof, and that the guarantee shall end as to all future acts of frauds and dishonesty by the employee after discovery thereof, such conditions refer only to claims intended to be made, and concerning acts of fraud or dishonesty which may be the foundation of a claim against the insurers,[7] this question is, however, considered more fully elsewhere herein.[8]

(z) Limitation clauses affecting actions or suits: statute of limitations.[9]—A fidelity guaranty bond may, without contravening public policy, limit the liability of insurer on such bond to losses occurring and discovered within a specified term, where such guaranty does not attempt to fix the period within which suit shall be brought; nor is such a condition violative of a statute providing when an action for relief on the ground of fraud may be commenced, and that such right of action shall not be deemed to accrue until after discovery, but also that no action shall be brought after the expiration of a certain number of years after perpetration of the fraud.[10] And construction of such limitation of the [6] Molson's Bank v. Guarantee Co. of North America, Montr. L. R., 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 376. Where the policy stipulates that the books are kept in a certain manner and will be so kept, and that immediate notice be given the insurer, upon the employer's ascertaining the fact, of any criminal offense entailing or likely to entail loss to the employers and for which a claim was liable to be made under the policy, and the evidence showed no proper supervision of the books and that the guarantors were not notified until a week after the employee's defalcation and after he had left the country, a recovery was refused: Harbor Commissioners of Montreal v. Guarantee Co. of North America, 22 S. C. R. (Can.) 542, 30 Can. L. J. (N. S.) 215. If an employer is insured against pecuniary loss sustained by him by reason of the dishonesty of employees "committed and discovered during the continuance of this agreement, and within three months from the death, dismissal, or retirement of the employee," and it is also stipulated that immediate notice be given to the company on the discovery of the employee's fraud or dishonesty, and the defalcation was not discovered until after the policy had lapsed, and the company was not notified thereof until eleven days after the discovery, when the employee had left the country, recovery was denied: Commercial Mutual Building Soc. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co.

[7] Byrne v. Muzio, 8 L. R. (Ir.) 396. Montr. L. Rep., 7 Q. B. 307.

[8] See § 3336 herein.

[9] See chapter LXXXI. (§§ 3181 et seq.) herein.

[10] Ballard County Bank's Assignee v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 150 Ky. 236, 150 S. W. 1; Ky.

right to sue, will be against the maintenance of any claim calculated to impair the indemnity or suretyship under a bond furnished by a paid or compensated surety in a form prepared by it.[11] So where a bond guaranteeing the integrity of an employee provides that no action, suit or proceeding in law or equity shall be maintained on said bond, unless the same was commenced within one year from the time of making claim on insurer for the loss in respect to which said action is brought, such provision does not require insured to first exhaust its remedies against others who may be liable before bringing suit on the bond, for the covenant is that insurer will pay to insured the amount of any loss or damage sustained under its indemnity, not that it will pay only after other probable or possible remedies have been exhausted.[12] And that breach of contract which creates a liability on the bond is what is meant by a limitation of the right to bring suit on the bond to a specified period after the first breach of the contract guaranteed.[13] Again, as to insured's rights if the policy fixes a time limit from the larceny, embezzlement, or default of the employee, within which insurer or the surety will pay the loss, it is bound thereby and suit may properly be brought after the expiration of said time, at least a demurrer to a petition will not be sustained where it alleges that more than the time so specified has elapsed since the employee's default.[14]

The statute of limitations begins to run and a cause of action accrues from the time when pecuniary loss results in case damage is required to be shown before a party who is guaranteed indemnity is entitled to recover; said statute, however, begins to run from the date of default in performance, irrespective of the question of damage suffered through the employee, where the bond is conditioned upon the performance of a certain act. If there are several breaches of an agent's bond an action is not barred as to subsequent breaches even though the limitation period has expired as to a prior breach, for the statute runs to each breach from the time of its occurrence. Accordingly in case of a bond guaranteeing that

Stat. secs. 2515, 2519. See § 3181 herein.

[11] Fitger Brewing Co. v. American Bonding Co. of Balt. 115 Minn. 78, 131 N. W. 1067.

[12] First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893. See Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding Co. 115 Ky. 863, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 239, 103 Am. St. Rep. 856, 75 S. W. 197, 32 Ins. L. J. 808, considered at end of subdv. (ee) this section.

[13] Fitger Brewing Co. v. American Bonding Co. of Balt. 115 Minn. 78, 131 N. W. 1067.

[14] Oklahoma Sash & Door Co. v. American Bonding Co. — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1151.

agents shall "well and faithfully perform their duties as such agents," etc., the condition is broken where loss occurs through the breach and the statute begins to run from the time when loss to the obligee results from their misconduct.[15]

(aa) Extent of liability: aggregate amount of bond: fund for creditors, how reached.—If a bond is given conditioned upon the principal faithfully holding, transmitting, and paying over all moneys received by him for transmission to foreign countries, and also faithfully keeping and paying over all moneys received by him upon deposit and the principal absconds, the extent of liability upon said bond is limited in the aggregate by the amount of the undertaking and such amount constitutes a fund which is subject to the payment pro rata of the creditors and is to be distributed among them in accordance with the amount respectively due them, so that said fund can be reached only by an action or suit in a court having equitable jurisdiction; and liability on said bond is not determined as to a single claimant by his diligence in prosecuting a claim against the fund, for he does not thereby become entitled to priority of payment.[16]

(bb) Extent of liability on successive official bonds: contribution by sureties.—Under a New York decision the questions of liability on official bonds for successive terms and also of the extent of liability of a surety seeking contribution were determined. It appeared that the bond of a supervisor and ex-officio treasurer of a town provided that if he should faithfully account for all moneys that "may come into his hands, as such supervisor, and pay over the same pursuant to the provisions of law or the order or resolution of the board of trustees of the town of . . . , and shall faithfully perform the duties of his office to the best of his skill and abilities, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect." The treasurer's duties under the town charter were to receive and hold the town's moneys and to "keep a correct account of all moneys received and paid out by him, and when required, to furnish to the board a statement of the moneys in his hands." Upon his re-election he gave a second bond, but with another surety. Before the bond for the first term expired he had deposited sums aggregating a large amount of the town's money in a bank, only a small proportion of which had been drawn out by him during said period. After re-election he continued his [15] Northern Assurance Co. of England v. Borgelt, 67 Neb. 282, 93 N. W. 226, 32 Ins. L. J. 266.

[16] Illinois Surety Co. v. Mattone, 122 N. Y. Supp. 928, 138 App. Div. 173, 39 Ins. L. J. 1083, under Laws 1907, c. 185, as am'd by L. 1908, c. 479, citing upon amount of liability Guffanti v. National Surety Co. 118 N. Y. Supp. 207, 133 App. Div. 610, aff'd 196 N. Y. 452, 90 N. E. 174; Musco v. United Surety Co. 117 N. Y. Supp. 21, 132 App. Div. 300, aff'd 196 N. Y. 459, 90 N. E. 171.

deposits and as only a small amount was drawn against the same a final balance for the two years to a large amount of the town's money was left in the bank. At the time the second bond was given the bank was insolvent and could not have paid the deposit although said bonded supervisor had no knowledge of said fact. His successor in office made demand for payment of this balance and obtained judgment in a foreign jurisdiction against the surety on the second bond,[17] who, not as a volunteer but by force of said adjudication, satisfied the same, and this action was brought by its receiver to enforce an equitable contribution. It was contended that as said supervisor while acting as his own successor continued his account during his second term the sole liability rested upon the second surety, but it was held that he did not thereby account for the money which came into his hands during his first term and had not paid it over pursuant to law, and that to the extent of the loss suffered during the first term the first as well as the second surety was liable to the town, therefore the latter, having not voluntarily but by force of said adjudication, discharged a debt for which the defendant as first surety was equally bound, it was entitled through the remedy of contribution to enforce an equitable division. It was also claimed that without identity of liability between sureties there was no right to contribution, but this argument was held to be without force.[18]

[17] In Town of Cicero v. Grisco, 240 Ill. 220, 88 N. E. 478.

[18] Yawger v. American Surety Co. 212 N. Y. 292, L.R.A.1915D, 481n, 106 N. E. 64, 44 Ins. L. J. 489, s. c. 142 N. Y. Supp. 1151, 157 App. Div. 911, s. c. 141 N. Y. Supp. 491, 156 App. Div. 504, the court, per Cardozo, J., said: "It is important to bear in mind the nature of a public officer's liability for public moneys received by virtue of his office. His liability does not grow out of negligence. It is absolute, admitting of no excuse, except perhaps the act of God or the public enemy, Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135, 142, 34 L.R.A. 678, 56 Am. St. Rep. 612, 45 N. E. 375; Smythe v. United States, 188 U. S. 156, 23 Sup. Ct. 279, 47 L. ed. 425. . . . The allegation in this complaint is, in substance, that the Lincoln bank lost the money, and lost it during the first period, at the end of that term it was no longer money in Grisco's," (said supervisor's) "hands; it was no longer money in bank; it was merely a fictitious and misleading entry on the balance sheet. In these circumstances it is impossible to hold that Grisco accounted for the money by keeping his books as if he still held it. The fact is that he had already lost it, and he has never put it back. He may have been innocent of any wilful wrong, but that does not absolve him. He may have been ignorant of the loss, but that again does not absolve him. He did not account for the money by innocently carrying forward a fictitious balance any more than he would have accounted for it by carrying forward such a balance with guilty knowledge. . . . Before the first term was ended the money had been lost and something more than mere words was needed to restore it. . . . It is argued, however, that if the first surety was liable to the town for the deposits lost during the first term, the second surety on a proper construction of its bond, was not, and that

(cc) Discharge or release from liability.—A general rule is that if a condition known to the obligee upon which a surety agrees to be bound is not complied with, the surety is discharged and parties who have entirely failed to keep their agreement, cannot enforce the fulfilment of the covenant; and the party who commits the first substantial breach of a contract, is precluded from maintaining an action against the other party for a subsequent failure to perform.[19] Liability under the bond will also be terminated by the death of the employer, for it extends only up to that time, and this applies even though the employer's business is continued by his executors.[20] So fraud perpetrated against the rights of sureties without identity of liability between sureties the right to contribution fails. We think the argument as applied to the case at bar is without force. The second surety in paying this loss was not a volunteer. It resisted the town's suit and did not pay till its liability was adjudged. Town of Cicero v. Grisco, 240 Ill. 220, 88 N. E. 478. The adjudication seems to be in accord with the settled rule in Illinois. Morley v. Town of Metamora, 78 Ill. 394, 20 Am. Rep. 266; Cowden v. Trustees of Schools, 235 Ill. 604, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 131, 126 Am. St. Rep. 244, 85 N. E. 924. At all events the second surety having discharged the defendant's liability not officiously, but under compulsion of law, has brought itself within the reason and the equity of the rule of contribution. Aspinwall v. Sacchi, 57 N. Y. 331; Pease v. Egan, 131 N. Y. 262, 273, 30 N. E. 102. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the town treasurer did not account for the town's moneys and pay them over to his successor by taking office a second time and giving a new bond, and that to the extent that the moneys were lost during the first term the defendant continued liable."

See further as to right of sureties to contribution:

United States.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Naylor, 237 Fed. 314, — C. C. A. —.

Alabama.—Carter v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 134 Ala. 369, 92 Am. St. Rep. 41, 32 So. 632.

Kentucky.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. McGinnis' Admr. 147 Ky. 781, 145 S. W. 1112.

New York.—People v. Metropolitan Surety Co. 161 N. Y. Supp. 616, 175 App. Div. 43.

Ohio.—Assets Realization Co. v. American Bonding Co. of Balt. 88 Ohio St. 216, 102 N. E. 719.

Pennsylvania.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Phillips, 235 Pa. 469, 84 Atl. 432.

Texas.—First State Bank of Teague v. Hare, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 190 S. W. 1113.

West Virginia.—Central Banking & Surety Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 73 W. Va. 197, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 797, 80 S. E. 121.

[19] Rice v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 103 Fed. 427, 43 C. C. A. 270.

As to effect of cancelation by reinsurer, see subdv. (e) this section.

[20] Roth v. Massachusetts Bonding & Surety Co. 158 Wis. 469, 149 N. W. 143, 44 Ins. L. J. 706.

As to the effect of the death of a surety for the integrity of a person under the law governing principal and surety, see Balfour v. Grace (1902) 1 Ch. 733, 2 B. R. C. 929, and note 937. This reference is made, however, only for the purpose of comparison of the principles there stated with cases of the character here under consideration which relate to paid sureties, to whom the rule of strict construction does not apply.

whereby they are induced to execute a new bond, as in case of failure to disclose the fact that the employee has retained a bonded employee in service on condition that he pay a prior shortage and execute a new bond, operates to release a surety who is ignorant of the facts.[1] Under a statute allowing a surety company to be released from its liability on a bond in the nature of a fidelity insurance contract, on the same terms as an individual, such a company can release itself from liability only by getting off the bond.[2]

(dd) "Fraud or dishonesty" "amounting to embezzlement or larceny:" Remedy is ex contractu, upon a contract and not based upon tort to recover a penalty, not only so in form but also in its nature: pleading: affidavit of defense.—Although the following Federal decision goes to the form of remedy and matters of practice, its importance and general value rests upon the questions involved and determined not only as to the nature of contracts of this character, but also upon the fact that the point was in issue, discussed and determined as to the distinction between contract and tort, both under a statute and at common law when an action or suit is to recover the guaranteed reimbursement under a fidelity bond. The suit was brought in assumpsit. The bond stipulated that insurer would "make good and reimburse to the said employer such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of any or either of the employees named upon said schedule, or added thereto as hereinafter provided, in connection with his duties as specified on said schedule, amounting to embezzlement or larceny and which shall be committed during the continuance of said term" etc. It was alleged that said employee had defrauded the plaintiff, assured, of the several itemized sums claimed, by embezzling at specified times the money which he had received from the sale of certain automobiles or from the improper sales of such. The question involved went to the necessity and sufficiency of an affidavit of defense. It was contended that while the action was in form in assumpsit, it was in reality not ex contractu because based on a penal bond for the misfeasance, fraud and dishonesty of plaintiff's agent, and in its very nature ex delicto and therefore no affidavit was required. Accordingly the controlling feature of the case resolved itself into a question whether recovery was dependent solely upon the contract in suit, and it was held that the action was not in tort to recover a penalty, but was

[1] Connecticut General Life Ins. Co. v. Chase, 72 Vt. 176, 53 L.R.A. 510, 47 Atl. 825.

As to concealment, see §§ 1844, 2002a, subdiv. (b) herein.

As to misrepresentations and warranties: guaranty insurance: knowledge of assured, etc., see § 2002a, subdivs. (k)–(m) herein.

[2] Bank of Tarboro v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 128 N. Car. 366, 83 Am. St. Rep. 682, 38 S. E. 908.

within the Pennsylvania statute requiring that all demands previously recoverable in debt, assumpsit, or covenant, should be sued for and recovered in an action in assumpsit, and that defendant must file an affidavit of defense. But as above stated, the real point was whether recovery was dependent solely upon the contract in suit. The court, per Witmer, D. J., said: "That no recovery can be maintained without it will be conceded, and upon it alone; it is equally certain, rests the plaintiff's cause of action. It is not misappropriation or embezzlement of moneys by the defendant that gives rise to the suit, nor is it even hinted that the defendant has been guilty of wrongdoing, but because of the defendant's contract with plaintiff to make good and reimburse the latter for all such moneys as may be wrongfully retained by plaintiff's employee. We have here a definite promise to pay a sum of money to the employer, to be measured only by the amount of loss sustained through the conduct of the employee, up to the maximum provided in the bond, and this amount is specifically set forth in the plaintiff's statement and is as easy of liquidation as in an action for moneys had and received. . . . 'The form of the action under the common law before the Act of 1887, would have been covenant. . . . That the act of the principal in the bond, in not faithfully performing the duties of his office, amounts to a tort does not take the case out of the provisions of the Act of Assembly. . . . The action here, however, is clearly an action ex contractu, as it is upon the defendants undertaking to pay to the trust company a certain amount of money upon the failure of the principal in the bond to do or not to do certain things.' " It is noteworthy that the court holds as above stated notwithstanding it makes an exception of cases where the proof sounds in tort or crime rather than in contract.[3]

(ee) Defenses: general instances.[3a]—It constitutes no defense that a bonded employee had defaulted on prior occasions if the insured employer is ignorant thereof, where the bond is qualified by a condition that it is issued upon the express understanding that said "employee has not within the knowledge of the employer at any former time been a defaulter." [4]

[3] Edward F. Gerber Co. v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. (U. S. D. C.) 216 Fed. 980, 45 Ins. L. J. 102 (under Pract. Act Pa. May 25, 1887, sec. 1; P. L. 271), quoting from and adopting as the law governing this case Rathfon v. City Trust Co. 24 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 113.

[3a] As to defenses generally to actions on insurance contracts, see §§ 3731–3744 herein.

[4] Legler v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 88 Ohio St. 336, 103 N. E. 897. See § 2002a subdv. (1) herein.

Defenses: that validity of bond may depend upon signature of employee as condition precedent, see National Surety Co. v. Rieves, 112 Miss. 747, 73 So. 732; Oklahoma Sash & Door Co. v. American Bonding Co. — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1151; Prosser Power

So fraud of the principal in misleading a surety as to the character and extent of the obligation signed and assumed constitutes no defense against the payee or obligee where it does not appear that the latter had knowledge thereof or participated therein.[5] And a condition of a bond voiding it if assured makes any settlement with the principal for any loss thereunder, and another provision limiting recovery to such proportion of the loss as the full amount of security, valid or invalid, carried by assured sustains to the amount covered by the bond, are neither of them broken by acceptance by assured from his employee of a worthless deed, subsequently repudiated, and also a note to secure defalcations prior to execution of the bond in suit.[6] If, however, notes covering the defalcations are conditioned not to prosecute they are against public policy and void.[7]

As to recourse to another: In a Kentucky case it was part of the duty of an employee, whose fidelity was guaranteed, to make out checks payable to himself for his employee's weekly payrolls, have them signed, and obtain cash thereon at the bank. He fraudulently raised said checks, obtained the cash thereon and appropriated to himself the excess over the amounts for which they were actually issued. In an action against insurer upon the bond, it was contended that the bank which cashed said raised checks was the sole loser by the employee's fraud and must account to the employer, under the laws of banking, for the amount of defalcation consequent thereon and, therefore, there was no cause of action upon the bond for said amount, but this contention was not sustained, as under the facts of the case the knowledge of the bank

Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 73 Wash. 304, 132 Pac. 48 (waived). When bond valid though not signed by employee, see Adams Co. v. Nesbit, — S. Dak. —, 159 N. W. 869. When bond not invalid even though conditioned that employee's signature essential: obtained after its expiration, American Bonding & Trust Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 125 Ill. App. 33. See American Surety Co. of N. Y. v. Pangburn, 182 Ind. 116, 105 N. E. 769. That condition as to signature of employee may be waived, see General Railway Signal Co. v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. 203 N. Y. 407, 96 N. E. 734, 41 Ins. L. J. 600. When employee, not signing bond not liable under bond to indemnify surety company against loss on bond guarantying said employee's fidelity, see Hall v. Equitable Surety Co. — Ark. —, 191 S. W. 32. See § 178a, also § 54b herein.

[5] Lucas v. Owens, 113 Ind. 521, 16 N. E. 196 (principal and surety). Examine § 2002a, subdiv. (m) herein.

[6] Prosser Power Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 73 Wash. 304, 132 Pac. 48.

As to compromise and settlement: accord and satisfaction: release, see § 3465a herein.

[7] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Charles, 131 Ala. 658, 57 L.R.A. 212, 31 So. 558.

that it was the duty of said employee to fill out such checks, would preclude any suspicion on its part as to the amount being raised. It was also decided that even though the bank was liable to the employer for the amount the checks were raised, the fact would not exonerate insurer from liability, as it would restrict the law of insurance and suretyship to an absurd degree to hold that insurer cannot be held liable until after insured, having exhausted every other remedy or having prosecuted to insolvency any others who might be liable, is still not reimbursed.[8]

(ff) Action by surety to recover money paid: what constitutes "fraud" or "dishonesty."—In a Minnesota case the condition of the bond was: "make good and reimburse to the said employer, such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of any or either of the employees named . . . in connection with his duties as receiving agent or buyer . . . Provided . . . that the company shall be liable only for the acts of fraud or dishonesty on the part of the persons . . . who act as receiving agents, for shortages in their grain accounts as follows" etc., providing a mode of ascertaining shortages, but no liability was assumed for the said employee's errors, mistakes, or mere negligence. There was no evidence tending to impeach or cast suspicion upon the employee's honesty or integrity outside of the bare fact of an alleged shortage, and the employee testified positively that he had never admitted that there was any shortage and that he had never used or converted to his own use any particle of assured's grain. It was held in an action brought to recover money paid to defendant's employer on account of said alleged shortage of defendant upon a bond executed by plaintiff in favor of said employer that there was no shortage for which the plaintiff was liable to the employer on the bond, and a finding by the trial court in favor of defendant was affirmed.[9]

[8] Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding Co. 115 Ky. 863, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 239, 103 Am. St. Rep. 856, 75 S. W. 197, 32 Ins. L. J. 808. See also First National Bank of Crandon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Balt. 150 Wis. 601, 137 N. W. 742, 41 Ins. L. J. 1893, considered under subdiv. (z) this section.

[9] Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Crays, 76 Minn. 450, 79 N. W. 531. See Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 30 L.R.A. 586, 56 Am. St. Rep. 464, 65 N. W. 351, where the condition of the bond was the same and the employee's obligation was held coextensive with that of the plaintiff to assurer where the guaranty was executed at the employee's request. See also upon the point of obligation being coextensive only, Lion Bonding & Surety Co. v. Capital Fire Ins. Co. 96 Neb. 51, 146 N. W. 1051, 1054. Examine Hall v. Equitable Surety Co. — Ark. —, 191 S. W. 32, where bond to indemnify surety company from loss on its bond guaranteeing fidelity of employee was held an indemnity contract and no

(gg) Pleading and evidence: fraud, dishonesty, embezzlement, larceny, etc.—Although a complaint fails to set out in full the contract of suretyship, the failure is cured by pleadings of defendant making it a part of their answer; and where the complaint alleges the execution of the bond, its renewal, and sets out the substantial features thereof, the alleged fraudulent acts of the cashier and notice to defendant insurer, it is a sufficient averment of facts to entitle plaintiff upon proof of the same to recover if nothing else appears; if any breaches of contract by plaintiff are relied on to defeat recovery they must be specifically pleaded by defendant, and it sustains the burden of proof thereof, for where there are numerous conditions and stipulations in the bond, it would work an injustice to compel plaintiff to set out and prove affirmatively that he had performed each and every one of them and especially is this applicable where the conditions are complicated in their nature.[10] And where a bond stipulates for payment to insured of any loss sustained by him by reason of larceny or embezzlement committed by the employee, a petition sufficiently alleges the embezzlement which sets out in detail in what the defalcation consisted; part in depositing in bank a less amount than the cash book showed he should have deposited, and also alleges that the employee "raised pay roll checks" and sets out a number of instances in which he had done so and appropriated to himself the difference.[11] If a statute provides that a surety bond shall contain certain conditions and the bond sued on shows upon its face the defect or failure to meet statutory requirements, the complaint need not further suggest it.[12] And if insurer is to make good the loss within a certain specified time, such as thirty days, from the larceny or embezzlement of the employee, it constitutes error to sustain a demurrer to a petition which alleges that the default occurred at a time much more than thirty days before suit was brought. But if the employee has paid the amount of the defalcation it is held that the defense should be taken advantage of by a plea of payment.[13] one of surety or guaranty and that there was nothing to show that the obligee of bond had any remedy whatsoever against the employee whose fidelity was guaranteed and who did not sign the bond.

As to fidelity guaranty: right to subrogation, see § 3577 herein.

As to judicial bonds: joint or several liability: surety's right of subrogation, see § 3568c herein.

[10] Bank of Tarboro v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 126 N. Car. 320, 35 S. E. 588, 29 Ins. L. J. 447.

As to sufficiency of declaration, complaint or petition, see §§ 3665, 3666, 3681, 3685 herein.

[11] Oklahoma Sash & Door Co. v. American Bonding Co. — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1151.

[12] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Poetker, 180 Ind. 255, L.R.A.1917B, 984, 102 N. E. 372, 42 Ins. L. J. 1394; Burns's Ann. Stat. 1908, secs. 1278, 3331.

[13] Oklahoma Sash & Door Co. v. American Bonding Co. — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 1151.

Under an agency bond guaranteeing to reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss "by any act of fraud or dishonesty on the part of said employee," if the petition does not charge that the loss sued for was due to fraud or dishonesty of the agent or employee a demurrer thereto should be sustained.[14] When this case deciding as above came subsequently before the court upon an amended petition the above was held to be the law of the case and binding, and that the appellant was responsible for any loss due to the fraud or dishonesty of the employee.[15] And in a Maryland case the bond stipulated that insurer would make good and reimburse to plaintiff assured "such pecuniary loss, if any, as may be sustained by the employer by reason of any fraudulent or dishonest conduct of the employed in connection with the duties of said position, amounting to embezzlement or larceny," etc. The employee was cashier of a bank. The particular acts which it was claimed amounted to larceny through which the losses were sustained, were set out instead of charging in general terms the loss of the money through the fraudulent and dishonest acts of the cashier amounting to larceny, and it was held that while it did not appear necessary to set out in a separate count each breach of a bond of the kind sued on here, the assignment of each breach must be perfect in itself without reference to other breaches; but the counts were held defective in failing to show whether the cashier was guilty as principal or as accessory; other counts were also held bad on demurrer in failing to allege that certain moneys paid out on checks were paid out of the bank's funds.[16]

[14] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Merkley, — Ky. —, 65 S. W. 614 (bond stipulated that insurer would "make good and reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer, of money, security, or other personal property in the possession of the employee, or for the possession of which he is responsible by any act of fraud or dishonesty on the part of said employee. . . . It being the true intent and meaning of this bond that the company shall be responsible as aforesaid for moneys, securities, or property diverted from the employer, through fraud or dishonesty on the part of the employee within the period specified in the bond").

[15] Merkley & Son v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2306, 73 S. W. 1126.

[16] Canton National Bank v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 111 Md. 41, 18 Ann. Cas. 820, 73 Atl. 684. The syllabus to this case reads, as to this point as follows: (1) A bond executed for the faithful performance of the duties of a cashier of a bank, provided that the surety would make good to the bank such pecuniary loss as it might sustain by reason of any fraudulent or dishonest conduct of the cashier in connection with his duties amounting to embezzlement or larceny. In an action on the bond by the bank the declaration did not charge in general terms the loss of the plaintiff's money by the acts of the cashier amounting to larceny but set forth the particular acts alleged

Where the bond limits insurer's liability to losses occurring within a specified time a petition that does not allege that the loss sustained was discovered within the time fixed is bad on demurrer.[17] A complaint is also insufficient which fails to allege facts showing that the time specified, within which assurer agrees to reimburse assured for the loss sustained through the fraud or dishonesty of the employee, had elapsed before the action was brought, and although the code provided that in pleading the performance of conditions precedent it may be stated generally that the party performed all the conditions on its part, still in such case an allegation that plaintiff "duly kept and performed all the conditions of said bond on its part to be kept and performed" is not sufficient.[18] So a stipulation in a one year indemnity certificate that insurer shall not be liable for embezzlements of the collector of insured unless committed and discovered within a year and reported within a certain time thereafter is a condition precedent to a right of action on the certificate and therefore defendant need not plead its nonperformance as a defense.[19] Again, unless a fidelity guaranty bond covers past defaults, no cause of action is stated in a complaint which alleges that the defalcations in question took place during a period commencing a year before and ending at a date subsequent to have been larcenous. In some of the counts it was alleged that the cashier, without any authority to do so, and with the intention of feloniously taking and carrying away from the possession of the plaintiff, the several sums of money for which checks and notes were drawn, caused the teller of the bank to pay said checks and notes when there was not sufficient money to the credit of the drawers of the same to justify their payment. It was held that if these sums were paid out of the funds of the plaintiff under such circumstances, and the teller was innocent of any felonious intent, or if he participated in the felonious intent and the money was taken and paid in the presence of the cashier, then the cashier was guilty of larceny, but if the teller was guilty and the several sums of money charged to have been taken by him were not taken and paid in the presence of the cashier, then the cashier was only guilty as an accessory before the fact; and that these counts are defective in that they fail to show whether the cashier was guilty as principal or as accessory. (2) It was held, further, that other counts of the declaration are bad on demurrer, because they do not allege that the money paid out on the checks therein mentioned was paid out of the funds of the bank. (3) In an action on an indemnity bond, it is not necessary that the declaration should set out in a separate count each breach of the bond, but the assignment of each breach should be perfect in itself.

[17] Ballard County Bank's Assignee v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 150 Ky. 236, 150 S. W. 1.

[18] California Savings Bank v. American Surety Co. (U. S. C. C.) 82 Fed. 866, s. c. 87 Fed. 118, 38 Ins. L. J. 688.

As to averment of performance of conditions precedent, see §§ 3674–5 herein.

[19] Sullivan v. Fraternal Society Cooperative Union, 73 N. Y. Supp. 1094, 36 Misc. 578.

to that when the bond in suit became of force, for while under said allegations some or all the acts complained of may have occurred after the bond was executed, nevertheless all of said acts may have occurred prior thereto and said allegations might be literally true and still defendant not be liable.[20] And if a fidelity bond guarantees the faithful performance by a bank cashier of his duties as such during a specified term, and stipulates for liability for his fraudulent acts amounting to embezzlement or larceny "committed during said term and discovered" within said period or within a specified time "after the expiration thereof," a declaration is bad on demurrer which fails to allege when the claimed fraudulent acts of the cashier were discovered.[1] In a Mississippi case wherein it is held that each renewal bond even for the same term or duration and upon the same conditions is a separate and distinct and not one continuous contract, it is also decided in accordance therewith, that an allegation that a declaration or complaint is insufficient where it does not specifically allege that the acts in question were done during the continuance of said term or any renewal thereof and discovered during said continuance, or any renewal thereof, or within six months thereafter that is, the particular bond or renewal current at the time must be declared on setting forth also that the loss was discovered, etc.[2]

Evidence of the offense or crime of embezzlement or larceny need not, it is decided, be sufficient to convict the employee thereof in order to justify a recovery upon a bond indemnifying an employer against loss sustained through the acts of an employee "amounting to" larceny or embezzlement.[3] And in a Colorado case where insurer agreed to save insured harmless and indemnify it against loss occasioned by the larceny or embezzlement of an employee, it is said by the court, per Hill, J., that "we are further of the opinion that in a civil action of this kind an instruction which required the plaintiff to make out its case by a preponderance of the evidence as to the embezzlement or larceny of funds, is sufficient, and, considering the purpose for which such indemnity bonds are made, the terms 'larceny' and 'embezzlement' as used therein are intended to mean in their commercial sense, and that it was not error to refuse to give instructions, which in substance

[20] Adams v. Western Surety Co. 35 S. Dak. 194, 151 N. W. 890.

[1] Canton National Bank v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 111 Md. 41, 73 Atl. 684.

[2] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Williams, 96 Miss. 10, 49 So. 742.

[3] Champion Ice Manufacturing & Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 115 Ky. 863, 103 Am. St. Rep. 356, 75 S. W. 197. Examine subdvs. (f), (g) this section.

required the plaintiff to establish this fact beyond a reasonable doubt as in criminal cases, and that the proper construction of the language of the entire bond with the application and other transactions did not contemplate it would be necessary in order to recover in a civil action, that the evidence should be sufficient in all respects to warrant the conviction of the employee in a criminal case." [4] So conversion of money to his own use by the agent of an insurance company, who had management and control of its financial affairs, is not proven by evidence that he had bought school warrants with the company's funds, in the absence of evidence that the company's directors were ignorant of said purchase or had objected thereto.[5] And evidence that certain money was taken from the chest of a bank, where it also appears that it might have been taken by others who had equal access thereto as had the teller of the bank, and that over these others he had no supervision or control, does not prove personal dishonesty and culpable negligence of said teller whose integrity is insured under a bond to reimburse to the assured bank any loss sustained by reason thereof and which defines "culpable negligence" as meaning "failure to exercise that degree of care and caution which men of ordinary prudence and intelligence usually exercised in regard to their own affairs." [6]

[4] Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Colorado Ice & Storage Co. 45 Colo. 443, 449, 103 Pac. 383, 38 Ins. L. J. 1094, 1099.

[5] Lion Bonding & Surety Co. v. Capital Fire Ins. Co. 96 Neb. 51, 146 N. W. 1051.

[6] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines National Bank, 145 Fed. 273, 74 C. C. A. 553, 35 Ins. L. J. 880.

In Finch v. City of Ottawa, 190 Fed. 299, 303–4, 111 C. C. A. 199, Reed, Dist. J., said: "It is true that in United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines National Bank, 145 Fed. 273, 279, 74 C. C. A. 553, Mr. Justice Van Devanter then Circuit Judge speaking for this court, said, quoting from Asbach v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Ry. Co. 74 Iowa, 248, 37 N. W. 182.

"'A theory cannot be said to be established by circumstantial evidence, even in a civil action, unless the facts relied upon are of such a nature, and are so related to each other, that it is only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them. It is not sufficient that they be consistent merely with that theory for that may be true, and yet they may have no tendency to prove the theory.'

"In that case the question for determination was whether certain money taken from the chest of the bank and lost to it was lost because of the 'personal dishonesty or culpable neglect' of a bonded employee of the bank, within the meaning of the undertaking of a surety company which had guaranteed his fidelity, or was taken by others who had equal access to the chest where the money was kept that the bonded employee had, and over whom he had no supervision or control, the only evidence being that the money had disappeared from the chest in some manner not shown. Clearly the disappearance alone of the money would be equally as consistent with its

But it is relevant and material to show that on a certain date the cashier whose fidelity was guaranteed and who had an apparent balance to his credit in a large sum was in reality, partly by reason of various improper actions by him in his fiduciary capacity and also because of other false entries, a debtor to the employer bank to a large amount.[7] A prima facie case of embezzlement which justifies a recovery, in the absence of proof sufficient to overcome the same, is also shown by evidence that the employee collected a certain amount of money which he failed to pay to his employer and that he subsequently disappeared after demand made for the same and that diligent search had to be made for him before he was arrested.[8] And a prima facie case of embezzlement is made out where the evidence shows the volume of business done by a bonded agent of an insurance company, the amount of his principal's money which he had received and converted to his own use, and repeated demands that he pay over the money, and it also appears that said agent had, after the termination of the agency, but with-theft, or removal from the chest by some other employee who had access thereto, as that it was lost through the 'personal dishonesty or culpable neglect' of the bonded employee. As the burden was upon the bank to show that it was lost through such conduct of the bonded teller, the fact alone that the money was missing was not sufficient to warrant a finding that such was the fact.

"It is not easy to formulate a general rule that will determine in advance the effect, or the weight that shall be given to the infinite variety of circumstances that may be offered to establish a principal fact under judicial investigation; and plainly it was not intended to do so in that case, or in the case from which the quotation is made. Each case must rest upon its own facts, and under the facts there shown it is entirely plain that the circumstances were insufficient to warrant a finding that the pecuniary loss of the bank resulted from the 'personal dishonesty or culpable neglect' of the bonded teller. When different inferences or conclusions may fairly and reasonably be drawn by impartial minds from the proven facts, it is the province of the jury, under proper instructions from the court, to draw them; and only when the facts are such that but one conclusion or inference can reasonably be drawn therefrom may the court declare that conclusion. Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Danielson, 57 Fed. 915–920, 6 C. C. A. 636; Goldsmith v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 114 Fed. 914, 52 C. C. A. 534; and this is all that is held in United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines National Bank, supra." The case from which the above opinion is taken was an action for damages for personal injuries and negligence. So much of the above as begins with "a theory cannot be said," etc., is quoted in Richards v. United States, 175 Fed. 911, 939, in dissenting opinion of Phillips, D. J.

[7] American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644, s. c. 72 Fed. 484, 18 C. C. A. 657, aff'd 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. 552, 29 Ins. L. J. 3, s. c. 170 U. S. 160, 42 L. ed. 987, 18 Sup. Ct. 563.

[8] Marcus v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 145 N. Y. Supp. 49. See § 3793 herein.

in the time allowed him to remit collections, admitted the correctness of an account submitted to him and that he had collected and retained the entire balance shown by the account.[9] So a written

[9] United American Fire Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. 146 Wis. 573, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 661, 131 N. W. 994, 40 Ins. L. J. 1805. The court, per Barnes, J., upon this last point said: "It is conceded by both parties that any admission by the agent of the amount of money in his hands belonging to his principal made prior to his resignation would be competent evidence against the surety. Goldman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 125 Wis. 390, 396, 104 N. W. 80, and cases cited. It is contended by the defendant, however, that such admissions were made after the agency was terminated, and were therefore incompetent. There are many cases holding, generally, that declaration or admissions made by an agent when his employment has ceased are not competent in an action by the principal against the surety. . . . The question we have before us therefore is, Where an agent renders an account or O. K.'s an account submitted to him after his employment has ceased, but which it is his duty under his contract to render or to O. K. as the case may be, is that act a part of the res gestæ, and admissible in evidence as such, in an action against the surety? There is no question but that, if the statement had been O. K.'d while he was still actively engaged as agent for the plaintiff it would be receivable in evidence against the surety. Should that rule be extended beyond the term of employment? The case to which our attention has been called that bears most directly on the subject is Father Matthew Soc. v. Fitzwilliam, 12 Mo. App. 445, 449, which was affirmed in 84 Mo. 406. There the treasurer of the society had been removed for dishonesty. After his removal, he made a statement showing the amount of his defalcation, which was admitted in evidence in action against the surety. The latter claimed that the evidence was incompetent, but the court held that it was the duty of the treasurer to make up a statement of his account, and, such being the case, what he did in this regard was as much a part of the res gestæ as if the work had been done before he ceased to be treasurer. Some significance is given to the fact that the statement was made during the term of office for which the defaulting treasurer had been elected, but we fail to see how this fact can have very much weight in determining whether the evidence was admissible or not. He was not the treasurer when the statement was made. It has also been held that, where it is the duty of a public officer to render an account of the moneys in his hands as such officer, but he fails to do so before the expiration of his term a performance of such duty thereafter renders the admission made competent evidence against the surety. Townsend & Gordon v. Everett, 4 Ala. 607, approved in Lewis v. Lee County, 73 Ala. 148; Jenness v. Black Hawk, 2 Colo. 578; Wyche v. Myrick, 14 Ga. 584. These cases are quite analogous in principle to the one before us. Other authorities holding that the true test of admissibility is whether the admission is made in the course of official duty are Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 187; Douglass v. Howland, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 35, 59. See also, 2 Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 1077. We perceive no very good reason why, where an agent does an act which it is his duty under his contract to perform, evidence of that act, after his principal duty as agent has ceased, should not be admissible, as well as if made during the time he was actively performing his duties, and we think it would be the better rule to hold such testimony competent. We conclude, therefore, that a prima facie case of embezzlement was made; there being statement of loss, certified by the duly authorized officer or representative of the employer, who under the circumstances may be a receiver, and based upon the accounts of the employer, constitutes evidence prima facie sufficient to establish the loss, where it is so stipulated in the bond.[10] And where the evidence of a cashier of a bank is positive that a loan was made to an insurance company, solely upon its credit and not to the latter's agent, who had the management and control of its financial affairs, it is not, in the absence of other contradictory evidence, overcome by the fact alone that the note representing said loan was signed by said agent individually, where it also appears that although he applied for the loan to his company, and it was made, still it was placed to the credit of the company in its account to the bank.[11]

Again, in an action to recover on a bond to secure an employer against the embezzlement of an employee, evidence in proof of such offense is admissible against the surety, of entries, reports and statements made in the course of his duties by the employee in the guaranteed employment, and proof may be given of such statements no evidence offered by the defendant upon the question." Kerwin, J., dissented.

[10] American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 160, 42 L. ed. 987, 18 Sup. Ct. 563, s. c. 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. 552, 29 Ins. L. J. 3, aff'g 72 Fed. 484, 18 C. C. A. 657, 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644.

[11] Lion Bonding & Surety Co. v. Capital Fire Ins. Co. 96 Neb. 51, 146 N. W. 1051.

Upon the issue of fraud it is declared in Hawks, In re (U. S. D. C.) 204 Fed. 309, per Thieber, J., Id. 315, 316, that: "There are certain well-settled rules of law to guide the courts in the determination of such an issue. If the circumstances proven are just as consistent with honesty and good faith as with a fraudulent intent, the inference of fraud is unwarranted. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, 145 Fed. 273, 74 C. C. A. 553. To establish fraud, the proof must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing. Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 29 L. ed. 742, 6 Sup. Ct. 538; Thorwegan v. King, 111 U. S. 549, 28 L. ed. 514, 4 Sup. Ct. 529; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 34 L. ed. 246, 10 Sup. Ct. 771; Walker v. Collins, 59 Fed. 70, 8 C. C. A. 1; Foster v. McAlester, 114 Fed. 145, 52 C. C. A. 107; Schagun v. Scott Mfg. Co. 162 Fed. 209, 89 C. C. A. 189.

"Proofs which only create a suspicion are not sufficient to warrant a finding of fraud. United States v. Hancock, 133 U. S. 193, 33 L. ed. 601, 10 Sup. Ct. 264; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, supra. A mere preponderance of evidence, which at the same time is vague or ambiguous, is not sufficient to warrant a finding of fraud. Lalone v. United States, 164 U. S. 255, 41 L. ed. 425, 17 Sup. Ct. 74.

"But it is not essential that the fraud be established by direct evidence; for that is often impossible. The circumstances proved may raise a sufficient presumption to warrant a finding of fraud; but in such case the evidence must be of such a nature as to be convincing and inconsistent with the presumption of honesty. Bank of Little Rock v. Frank, 63 Ark. 16, 58 Am. St. Rep. 65, 37 S. W. 400."

and admissions from which, in connection with the amounts and records kept by plaintiff he is able to state the amount which the employee has appropriated to his own use. It may also be shown that defendants' agent upon their mutual investigation of such accounts and records concurred with the plaintiff as to the amount of the shortage.[12] So in a suit by a bank upon the bond of its cashier, resembling a fidelity insurance contract, a memorandum of the examination of the cashier before a committee of the board of directors of the bank, prior to the suit, made at the time of the examination, and read over to the cashier, who said it was correct, is admissible in evidence.[13] And where a judgment was obtained by an employer against his employee and the question was as to the admission of this judgment record in an action by an insured employer against the surety company to recover on its bond, the court, per Brown, J., said: "An examination of the question has convinced us that the decided trend of modern authority is to the effect that such a judgment against the principal prima facie only establishes the sum or amount of the liability against the sureties, although not parties to the action, but the sureties may impeach the judgment for fraud, collusion or mistake, as well as set up an independent defense." [14]

But a letter is held inadmissible in evidence which refers to another bond which the employer had given, where it does not appear that the other bond covered the period included in the one in suit.[15] And the actual shipment of money to a bank and the embezzlement of said money by a bank officer, who has absconded, cannot be established by letters announcing such shipments, as they are not competent evidence for that purpose.[16] Again, evidence of a subsequent offer by an agent under bond to account, may, it is decided, be excluded where it appears as evidence of the alleged breach that said agent had refused to account.[17]

It is held that even though an employee denies the justice of a claim against him, he is not aided where he, as employee of an [12] Goldman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 125 Wis. 390, 104 N. W. 80.

[13] Bank of Tarboro v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 128 N. Car. 366, 83 Am. St. Rep. 682, 38 S. E. 908. In the determination of this case the decision in the same case, 126 N. Car. 320, is considered final as far as it goes.

[14] Dixie Fire Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co. of Balt. 162 N. Car. 384, 392, 78 S. E. 430.

[15] Dr. Blair Medical Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. — Iowa, —, 89 N. W. 20.

[16] Title Guaranty & Trust Co. v. Bank of Fulton, 89 Ark. 471, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 676, 117 S. W. 537, 38 Ins. L. J. 722.

[17] Dr. Blair Medical Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. — Iowa, —, 89 N. W. 20.

express company, guaranteed as such, has agreed that any proper evidence that said insurer has paid his employer on his account, should be conclusive evidence against him, and in such case, where insurer has paid several claims to the employer the production of the vouchers justifies a judgment against said employee as defendant.[18] So where a contract of guaranty has been executed in the form requested by an employee whereby a guaranty insurance company insures his employer against said employee's acts of fraud or dishonesty, the employee's obligation to indemnify the company is coextensive with that of the company to reimburse the employer; and any provisions in the contract, as to proof of liability, binding on insurer in favor of the employer, are equally binding on the employee in an action by insurer against him to recover indemnity for what it has paid in his behalf.[19] And if assurer sues to recover money paid defendant's employer upon a bond by which plaintiff obligated itself to indemnify said employer against such loss as it might sustain by reason of the larceny or embezzlement of the employer's property by its manager or salesman, something more than a prima facie case by the voucher must be made out, as there can be no recovery where such prima facie showing is rebutted by evidence that there was no larceny or embezzlement for which assurer was liable on the bond to the employer.[20] And in order to prove embezzlement by a bonded cashier and the amount thereof the real condition, as between the insured bank's accounts as kept by said cashier, and the accounts of its correspondent banks, may be shown as may also the difference between said accounts, as appears by the monthly statements of the latter theretofore sent to insured, all being identified by a witness and theretofore examined by defendant's expert and reported to it by him, and referred to in [18] Guarantee Co. of North America v. Pitts, 78 Miss. 837, 30 So. 758.

[19] Fidelity, etc., Ins. Co. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 56 Am. St. Rep. 464, 30 L.R.A. 586, 65 N. W. 351.

[20] Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Nordmarken, 32 N. Dak. 19, 155 N. W. 669. (The action was brought by insurer, to recover money paid by it to the trustees in bankruptcy of assured's company. The condition of the guaranty to insurer was: "To reimburse the said fidelity company for all loss, costs, damages and expenses whatever resulting from any act, default or neglect of defendant, that said fidelity company might sustain by reason of executing the bond or any renewal thereof." The condition in the bond under which insurer paid the money sought to be recovered in this action, agreed to reimburse the employer assured "such pecuniary loss as may be sustained by the employer, of money, securities or other personal property belonging to the employer, as the employer shall have sustained by any act of larceny or embezzlement committed by the employee." As to the voucher above it was agreed in the application that it should be conclusive evidence of payment by the insurer and it was held that such agreement was void as against public policy.)

the depositions of the officers of said banks and returned as exhibits with the depositions.[1]

If an obligation reinsuring a surety on a bond of a foreign corporation, to enable it to transact business in the state is attached to and filed with the said bond in the insurance department, a copy of said obligation certified to by the Commissioner of Insurance & Banking when it is not a document of such a character as is required or permitted by the statute to be filed in a public office so as to constitute archives or records, copies of which certified under the authority of such office are admissible in evidence, it evidences only a common-law obligation, is only a private instrument, and the certified copy thereof does not constitute legal proof of the contract.[2]

(hh) Guaranty of fidelity of guardians, and persons holding similar or other fiduciary or trust relations in respect to money or property.—We have seen that a distinction exists as to the rules of construction between fidelity guaranty insurance contracts where paid sureties are parties and those wherein the surety is an individual or his suretyship is voluntary, and as coming within the former class we will briefly consider certain important decisions

[1] Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Nichols, 12 Ariz. 405, 100 Pac. 825. The court, per Doan, J., said: "For the purpose of proving the embezzlement and the amount thereof the appellee sought to show the condition of the accounts between the bank and correspondent banks" in other cities. "The real condition of said accounts was sought to be proved by monthly statements theretofore sent to the plaintiff's assignor of these several correspondent banks. The embezzlement was further sought to be proved by showing the difference between the accounts as shown by the books and accounts kept by the cashier of plaintiff's assignor and the amounts as shown by the statements of the three respective banks as aforesaid; great stress is laid by the counsel for the appellant upon the alleged error committed by the court in permitting the three witnesses above named to be interrogated relative to these monthly statements sent by the several banks to the plaintiff's assignor and to attach the same to their several depositions upon the ground that those statements had not been submitted to the appellant's attorney and not being part of the interrogatories it was impossible for the appellant's attorney to cross-examine the witness relative to them. The record discloses that these statements had all been identified by the witness McDowell as the ones that had theretofore been sent by these banks to the Union Bank & Trust Co. and the defendant's expert had theretofore examined and reported to the defendant upon these same statements and from the nature of the case the defendants would be aware that these would form the basis on which the amount alleged to have been embezzled by the cashier would be arrived at. The interrogatories referring to the papers submitted with the depositions to the deponent in each of these instances were such as would plainly indicate to the defendant, who had in his possession the report of his expert based upon these very statements, that they and none other were the 'papers' or 'statements' to which reference was made."

[2] Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 106 Tex. 46, 155 S. W.

including not only guardians, but also other cases of similar nature in so far as they cover fiduciary or trust relations and concern the guaranty of faithfulness or fidelity of persons entrusted with moneys, property, etc., and the accounting therefor, in the discharge of their fiduciary or trust relations.

Sureties on the general bond of a guardian are liable for his failure to pay over all funds that come into his hands in that capacity, including funds received from the sale of real estate; nor are such sureties relieved from liability in this respect by the fact that a special "sale bond" was required in the proceedings for the sale of the real estate.[3] And a verdict against a surety on a guardian's bond is sustained by evidence that such guardian had been removed from office by order of the court, the amount due from him to the ward ascertained and judgment entered ordering said amount to be paid over to the person entitled thereto; also showing that his successor had been duly appointed and qualified, and had demanded the amount so found due, and that payment of the same or of any part thereof had been refused.[4] In case a guardian's bond is executed after he has converted property of his ward to his own use the sureties thereon are liable for the defalcation if, after the 1176, 42 Ins. L. J. 1083 (bond filed under Act of March 20, 1909, Art. 4870-I; Acts 31st. Leg. c. 102) rev'g 152 S. W. 816. The court, per Phillips, J., said: "The proof made in the trial court of the contract of the plaintiff in error, above copied, in virtue of which it was sought to be charged the liability primarily resting upon the Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co., under the policy of insurance issued to the plaintiff, was by means of a copy of the instrument certified by the Commissioner of Insurance & Banking, to the admission of which exception was duly reserved. It is an established rule that it is only of such documents as are required or permitted by law to be filed in a public office, so as to constitute them archives or records, that copies certified under the authority of such office are admissible in evidence. If the document is not of such character, it cannot be regarded as other than a mere private instrument, and such a certificate gives the copy no legal authenticity. State v. Cardinas, 47 Tex. 250; Herndon v. Casiano, 7 Tex. 320: Hatchett v. Conner, 30 Tex. 110; Lott v. King, 79 Tex. 119; Lott v. King, 79 Tex. 292, 15 S. W. 231. . . . But under no law was it authorized to be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Insurance & Banking, and it therefore evidenced only a common law obligation . . . the statute makes no provision for the filing of such a contract in the insurance department; and otherwise the Commissioner is not its legal custodian.

"Furthermore, if the instrument can be regarded as creating the relation of a suretyship on the original bond, it is clear that the statute does not authorize the evidencing of that relation in any such manner or by any such instrument. The certified copy did not constitute legal proof of the contract." See this case also under subdiv. (e) this section.

[3] Southern Surety Co. v. Burney, 34 Okla. 552, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, and note, 126 Pac. 748.

[4] Southern Surety Co. v. Burney, 34 Okla. 552, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, 126 Pac. 748.

bond is executed, he continues solvent, so that he could have restored the funds to the trust, which he failed to do.[5] And sureties for a guardian on a bond substituted for a former general bond are liable for the failure to pay over the moneys adjudged due from such guardian, without regard to the time when the conversion or misappropriation by said guardian took place.[6] But a surety on an administrator's bond is not liable thereon for the latter's obligation to pay money illegally borrowed after decedent's death, or for money tortiously obtained by said administrator, although the money procured by him is used for the benefit of the estate.[7]

As to the right to cancel: upon an action in equity for the cancellation of a bond for the faithful administration of an estate, the surety company is entitled to a cancellation thereof where maladministration of the estate and fraudulent representations in inducing the bond to be issued are shown; and where there was a secret agreement as to the conduct of the business of the estate which was a fraud upon the surety, and the bond was secured from it to further the execution of such agreement, the bond is void as between the surety and all parties who took part in perpetrating the fraud.[8]

A paid guaranty company has the same arbitrary right as an individual or private party who has assumed the obligation gratuitously, to be relieved from its suretyship by following the prescribed statutory conditions in such cases, nor is such surety required to show cause as a condition precedent to the relief sought for the court is without discretion in the matter as its duty is ministerial; and for refusal of relief the remedy is mandamus and not a writ of error.[9] And under the New York code providing for the release and discharge of sureties or from bonds of trustees, guardians, etc., "as a matter of right" as provided therein, a surety company on a receiver's bond is entitled to discharge as a matter of right from future liability and the mere fact that said surety had received a year's premium and the year has not expired, is not a defense as the unearned premium could be recovered by the receiver.[10] But a surety company upon the bond of a trustee for the [5] Aetna Indemnity Co. v. State (Use of Gallaspy) 101 Miss. 703, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 961, and note, 57 So. 980.

[6] Southern Surety Co. v. Burney, 34 Okla. 552, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, and note, 126 Pac. 748.

[7] Bank of Newton County v. American Bonding Co. 141 Ga. 326, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1089, 80 S. E. 1003.

[8] Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Moshier (U. S. C. C.) 151 Fed. 806.

[9] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Peebles, 100 Va. 585, 42 S. E. 310, Code sec. 2887; Acts 1895–6, p. 284.

[10] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. In re, 98 N. Y. Supp. 217, 50 Misc. 147; Code Civ. Pro. sec. 812.

entire period of the trust agreement, after the death of one of the beneficiaries and the appointment of the other as administratrix of her estate, cannot, without proof that the trustee has been guilty of some default or dereliction of duty, compel the trustee to account or terminate its liability without his consent. A surety cannot, under such circumstances in the absence of statutory authority, be relieved from his contract of suretyship. This applies in the case of certain bonds held in trust during the lives of certain persons with provision for disposition at death of second beneficiary.[11] And statutory provisions as to discharge or release of sureties on bonds, must be complied with, and as to administrator's bonds said requirements cannot be waived by the court.[12] Under a Mississippi decision where the action was to recover the premium, the power to release sureties is statutory, and the statutory circumstances must be shown to have existed when the power is exercised; and the surety still remains such and is entitled to its premium despite the order of the chancery court when it has exceeded its power in discharging sureties.[13]

If an application by a surety for discharge from a guardian's bond alleges acts amounting to "misconduct of his principal in the discharge of his trust," but also sets forth facts showing that he was not a proper person to be entrusted with the management of his ward's estate, a demurrer thereto will not be sustained.[14] And it is also decided that a surety may by suit in equity compel his principal to discharge the debt for which both are liable and so relieve said surety from liability, even though he has not first paid it.[15]

In Pennsylvania a bond given by a guardian and approved by the court is deemed to be held in trust for all persons interested and the court has no authority without the consent of all parties in interest to release a bond of a bonding company as surety on a guardian's bond.[16]

(ii) Contract guaranty: nature of contract: construction.—As to contract guaranty bonds: although we have considered the question elsewhere,[17] it may be stated here that if they are issued by [11] Lawyers Surety Co. v. Ayrault, 150 N. Y. Supp. 800, 165 App. Div. 254 (N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 812, relates only to sureties upon bonds or undertakings given in an action or special proceeding).

[12] Clark v. American Surety Co. 171 Ill. 235, 49 N. E. 481, rev'g 66 Ill. App. 284. Rev. Stat. 1874, c. 3, secs. 33, 35.

[13] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Felder, 105 Miss. 283, 62 So. 236, Code 1906, secs. 121, 634 (bond for assignee receiver of bank).

[14] National Surety Co. of N. Y. v. Morris, 111 Ga. 307, 36 S. E. 690, under Civ. Code, sec. 2533.

[15] Dobie v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 95 Wis. 540, 60 Am. St. Rep. 135, 70 N. W. 482.

[16] Commonwealth v. American Bonding Co. 245 Pa. 535, 91 Atl. 938.

[17] See § 339d herein.

a corporation organized for the purpose of engaging for profit in the business of giving indemnity bonds the law does not place them on the same basis as it does the bonds of voluntary sureties; so where such bonds guarantee the contracts of third persons or they are given by these paid surety companies to indemnify the owner of property against loss from the failure of a contractor to perform the conditions of a building or other contract, they are essentially contracts of insurance although they may resemble in form contracts of suretyship, and said corporations being in effect insurers the rules peculiar to suretyship do not apply in determining their rights and liabilities;[18] the rule, therefore, of construction against insurer if an ambiguity exists, applies; an ambiguity cannot, however, be assumed and the plain intention of the parties nullified by construction; but the above rule has evidently been limited in Minnesota to cases where the legislature has not prescribed a standard policy.[19] Again, it is decided in New York that bonds of such sureties are not strictly construed when they are engaged in issuing bonds for profit.[20] It is also held in Maryland in this connection that a paid surety's business is that of insurer and its liabilty is greatly extended beyond that to which sureties formerly bound.[1] So in Oregon the rule strictissimi juris is also relaxed when applied to a paid surety so that a bonding company must show that its rights have been injuriously affected before it can defeat the contract.[2] But in a Wisconsin case the principle is applied to such a bond by a corporation that sureties are favorites of the law.[3] What is above stated must, however, be considered in connection with [18] State v. Blanchard Construction Co. (State v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co.) 91 Kan. 74, 136 Pac. 905; Chicago Lumber Co. v. Douglas Co. 89 Kan. 308, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 131 Pac. 563; George A. Hormel & Co. v. American Bonding Co. 112 Minn. 288, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513, 123 N. W. 12.

[19] George A. Hormel & Co. v. American Bonding Co. 112 Minn. 288, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513, 128 N. W. 12. See also State v. Blanchard Construction Co. (State v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co.) 91 Kan. 74, 136 Pac. 905. See §§ 206a–206c, 221b, 222a, 222e herein.

[20] American Bonding Co. of Balt. v. Kelly, 158 N. Y. Supp. 812, 172 App. Div. 437.

[1] American Fidelity Co. v. State, 128 Md. 50, 97 Atl. 12 (contractor's bond for faithful performance and prompt payment of all just debts for labor and material, etc., given under statute for construction of state road).

[2] Neilson v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. 81 Oreg. 422, 169 Pac. 1151 (bond to indemnify against loss from breach of contract to do certain work and labor under contract to clear and plow lots, etc.).

[3] Electric Appliance Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 110 Wis. 434, 53 L.R.A. 609, 85 N. W. 648.

such controlling statutes as determine the nature of surety corporations who enter into these contract indemnity bonds.[4]

As to contractors' guaranty bonds under the Federal statute; the United States Supreme court has also refused to extend the rule strictissimi juris to a corporation which has undertaken for profit to insure the obligee against a failure of performance on the part of the principal obligor, and holds that such a contract should be interpreted liberally in favor of a sub-contractor, although it is declared that such interpretation does not extend to cases of fraud or unfair dealing on the part of a sub-contractor or to cases not otherwise within the undertaking. The case so deciding presents also the factor that bonds containing the covenant there in question are not common in that said covenant was inserted for an entirely different purpose from that of securing to the government the performance of a contract for the construction of a building, but was made and executed solely for the benefit of sub-contractors, the bond also contained a distinct and separate obligation which was that the contractor should fulfil all the conditions and covenants of this contract, whatever changes in or additions to such contract might thereafter be made. Said bond was given in pursuance with a Federal statute for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works, and which required that persons contracting with the United States for the construction of any public building, etc., should be required to execute a penal bond with the additional obligation as to promptly making payments for labor and materials furnished, etc., and since neither the contractor nor his sub-contractor has the protection of a mechanic's lien upon the proposed government building the government requires for the sole protection of the latter, a covenant for the prompt payment of their claims and the same security that it requires for the performance of the principal contract. Said covenant guarantees nothing to the principal obligee, the government, but the latter permits an action upon the bond for the benefit of the sub-contractors.[5]

[4] See § 339d herein.

[5] United States, Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Golden Pressed & Fire Brick Co. (Guaranty Co. v. Pressed Brick Co.) 191 U. S. 416, 48 L. ed. 242, 24 Sup. Ct. 142 (under Act of Cong. Aug. 13, 1894, 28 Stat. 278, c. 280), cited in Hill v. American Surety Co. 200 U. S. 197, 50 L. ed. 440, 26 Sup. Ct. 168 (bond under same statute: materialman entitled to recover from surety company although materials furnished to sub-contractor and not directly to contractor); National Surety Co. v. United States, L.R.A.1917A, 336, 228 Fed. 577, 581, 143 C. C. A. 99 (but declaring that said case placed liberal construction upon ground that purpose of statute should be accomplished and not upon ground of paid suretyship), approved in Equitable Surety Co. v. McMillan, 234 U. S. 448, 455, 58 L. ed. 1394, 34 Sup. Ct. 803 (applied to Act Cong.

(ii–1) Contract guaranty: what is part of bond: construction.—Another important point is this, that where a surety bond recites that the building contract has been made, etc., and the contracts are made at the same time, the terms of the contract become a part of the bond and both constitute one transaction; accordingly in such case when a party enters into a contract to do certain work on certain terms and procures a surety to guarantee the faithful performance of the work, the surety necessarily contracts with reference to the contract as made, otherwise said surety could never know what obligation he was assuming.[6]

(ii–2) Contract guaranty: distinction between indemnity against liability and indemnity against loss.—In Pennsylvania a distinction is made between indemnity against liability and indemnity against loss so that where a surety company's contract is one of indemnity against actual pecuniary loss the mere incurring of liability does not constitute a ground of action; as where a subcontractor's bond is conditioned to secure a general contractor from pecuniary loss and the former defaulted thereby occasioning default by the latter and the owners made payments to materialmen for work to be performed acquiring thereby a right of action to guard against the general contractor, still there can be no recovery by the latter of such payments against the surety on said sub-contractor's bond unless it also appears that the general contractor had actually sustained pecuniary loss in consequence of the liability so incurred.[7]

(ii–3) Contract guaranty: assignment of bond or of interest in contract.—A bond executed by a bonding company in business for profit and which guarantees the performance of a construction company contract in existence is assignable where it contains no evidence that the right to have it performed shall not be assignable, but on the contrary shows that it was the intent of the parties that it could and would in all probability be assigned before the time for its completion should arrive; and it is assignable along with the principal contract.[8] But sureties are released from liability on Feb. 28, 1899, 30 Stat. 906, c. 218, modeled after above Act of Aug. 13, 1894), distinguished and held not applicable in Zeigler v. Hallahan, 131 Fed. 205, 209, 210, 66 C. C. A. 5.

[6] First National Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 145 Ala. 335, 344, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 418, 8 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 241, 117 Am. St. Rep. 45, 40 So. 415 (so declared in substance by the court, per Simpson, J., and so held); State v. Blanchard Construction Co. (State v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co.) 91 Kan. 74, 136 Pac. 905.

[7] Hoffman & Co. v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. 255 Pa. 112, 99 Atl. 414.

[8] American Bonding & Trust Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Ry. Co. 124 Fed. 866, 882, 60 C. C. A. 52, 68,—Cochran, Dist. J., certiorari denied 191 U. S. 575, 48 L. ed. 308, 24 Sup. Ct. 846.

the bond of a firm of building contractors, where without the former's consent one member of the firm is permitted to assign his interest to his copartner and release himself from liability on said contract.[9]

(ii–4) Contract guaranty: liability and nonliability of surety generally.—It may be generally stated that if a bonding company engaged in the business of furnishing surety for compensation, and to whom the rules of strict construction applicable to voluntary or acommodation sureties do not apply, and against whom in cases of ambiguity that construction most favôrable to insured will be adopted, guarantees the faithful performance of a contract on the part of a construction company, and the latter does not faithfully perform, said bonding company will become liable for the damages sustained by the breach in the absence of some element of waiver or estoppel.[10] So where a bond is given to secure payment of sub-contractors, laborers and materialmen, it cannot be successfully contended that the trustees charged with the construction of a state building have no power to take such a bond; nor can recovery be precluded for want of consideration where the execution of said bond was necessary to secure an award of the contract, nor defeated on the theory that said bond was not required by the contract, if it was executed with it at the same time and as part of the entire contract.[11] And if a bond given by a surety company obligates it to pay all indebtedness incurred for labor and material furnished and "used in and about that contract work, or which might become the basis of a lien" it covers as within the intent thereof lumber furnished for and used in the making of forms for a concrete structure in accordance with the contract and specifications, but which by reason of such use is largely consumed and rendered valueless.[12]

When assignee of account due subcontractor is entitled to benefit of contractor's bond under Act of Congress of Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, as am'd by Act Febry. 24, 1905, c. 778, 33 Stat. 811 (Comp. Stat. 1913, sec. 6923). See United States v. Brent, (U. S. D. C.) 236 Fed. 771.

As to effect of assignment to surety, see Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 14 Cal. App. 289, 111 Pac. 760.

[9] Friendly v. National Surety Co. 46 Wash. 71, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1160, and note, 89 Pac. 177 (surety's liability is limited by the terms and to the extent of the obligation to which it consented to be bound).

[10] State v. Blanchard Construction Co. (State v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co.) 91 Kan. 74, 136 Pac. 905.

As to reinsurance of surety on contractor's bond and liability of reinsurer to original insured, see United States v. Brent (U. S. D. C.) 236 Fed. 771, considered under subdv. (e) this section.

[11] National Surety Co. v. Hall-Miller Decorating Co. 104 Miss. 626, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 62 (and note as to first point above stated) 61 So. 700.

[12] Chicago Lumber Co. v. Douglas Co. 89 Kan. 308, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 131 Pac. 563.

But a claim for repairs upon a machine, leased by a contractor and used in his work, is not covered by a contractor's bond conditioned to pay the contractor's obligations for labor and material used in a street improvement.[13] And a surety is not bound to the faithful performance of a new contract between the owner and contractor under which the building was constructed, where said surety's obligation secured the performance of the original contract, which was made by reference a part thereof, and it differed only slightly from the terms of the new one.[14] Nor is a surety on a bond of a contractor for the transportation of mail liable for the loss by robbery of money belonging to the government which is placed in his mail without his knowledge or acquiescence, where although the contract provided that the contractor should account for and pay over all moneys of the government which might come into his possession, still he was only required to carry mail and not money as such, and only the safe delivery of money delivered to him for transportation with his knowledge was insured.[15]

(ii–5) Contract guaranty: alteration of contract: discharge or release of surety.—Where performance of a building contract is guaranteed by a surety any material and prejudicial variation of its terms will discharge the surety.[16] It is also declared that the courts generally hold that a paid surety can be relieved from its obligation of suretyship only where a departure from the contract is shown to be a material variance.[17] And to the extent that a building con-

[13] Standard Boiler Works v. National Security Co. 71 Wash. 78, 43 L.R.A(N.S.) 162 and note, 127 Pac. 573.

[14] Kracht v. Empire State Surety Co. 62 Wash. 339, 113 Pac. 773.

[15] American Surety Co. of N. Y. v. United States, 171 Fed. 408, 96 C. C. A. 364.

[16] Lloyd Investment Co. v. Illinois Surety Co. 164 Wis. 282, 160 N. W. 58. See also Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 14 Cal. App. 289, 111 Pac. 760.

[17] Justice v. Empire State Surety Co. (U. S. D. C.) 209 Fed. 105, 108, 43 Ins. L. J. 422 (paid surety; building contractor: judgment for defendants aff'd 218 Fed. 802, 134 C. C. A. 490),—Thompson, D. C., citing United States v. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (U. S. C. C.) 178 Fed. 721 (contractor's bond: public works: discharge: extension of time: rule of strict construction inapplicable to relieve paid surety except case of actual injury); Brown v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 232 Pa. 337, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 81 Atl. 410 (assumpsit against principal and surety on condemnation bond: case of contract of suretyship with landowner to secure payment to him of damages in case railroad did not under eminent domain: also rule that such company's insurers, etc.: distinction made between surety bond for profit and one which is not); Philadelphia v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 231 Pa. 208, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1085, 80 Atl. 62 (guaranty contract of insurance for sufficiency of work on public building: extension of time); Young v. American Bonding Co. 228 Pa. 373, 77 Atl. 623 (bond to secure building contract for completion of buildings, etc.: rule strictissimi juris not applicable where bond upon consideration: paid corporation organized to make such bonds).

tract becomes a part of the guaranty, the surety has a right to insist upon the terms of the contract as written, and he is released where the principal does something outside said terms, even though said surety is benefited thereby.[18] So a compensated surety for a building contractor is entitled to the same rights in the matter of consent to the alteration of the contract as is a voluntary surety, especially so where it is stipulated that changes must be agreed upon and indorsed upon the contract and if changes are made without compliance with said requirement the surety is released as said stipulation is as much for its benefit as for the owner.[19] But a guaranty company, which for a compensation, becomes surety upon the bond given by a building contractor for the faithful performance of his contract, cannot escape liability by reason of deviation from the exact terms of the contract, where such provisions were waived by the contractor and no damage is shown as resulting to the surety by reason thereof.[20]

Again, a compensated surety upon the bond of one who undertakes that his principal shall comply with the requirements of his contract, is not, without his consent, liable for his principal's refusal to perform during an extended term which the public authorities have attempted to impose upon him under the provisions of said contract, that they shall have the privilege of renewing the contract for a specified additional period at their option.[1] And in the case of an agency contract for sale of coal and said agent fails to report sales, render accounts, and pay over money as stipulated, and the employer relieves the agent from compliance with such a material provision of the contract, to the performance of which the surety bound himself, the courts will not force the surety to answer for such defaults of the agent. The question in such case is not one of mere neglect of the employer to comply with the terms of his contract, but there is a material alteration of the contract the performance of which was guaranteed by the surety.[2]

Principal case (209 Fed. 105) cited in Wells v. National Surety Co. 222 Fed. 8, 137 C. C. A. 546 (where surety on subcontractor's bond to contractor was held discharged by change in contract).

[18] First National Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 145 Ala. 335, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 418, 117 Am. St. Rep. 45, 8 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 241, 40 So. 415.

[19] Lonergan v. San Antonio Loan & Trust Co. 101 Tex. 63, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 364, 130 Am. St. Rep. 803, 104 S. W. 1061.

[20] Cowles v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 32 Wash. 120, 72 Pac. 1032.

[1] United States (Use of District of Columbia) v. Bayley, 39 App. D. C. 105, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 422, and note.

[2] Alabama Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. 190 Ala. 397, 67 So. 318 (rev'g judgment be-

But a surety company which has undertaken to insure a county for the faithful performance of an agreement to construct a bridge, is not released on the ground of material changes in the principal contract, where materials different from and inferior to those stipulated for are fraudulently substituted by the contractor.[3] And the giving of oral orders for changes in the work and extras, when the amount thereof is audited and allowed by the architect before payment does not operate to release the obligation imposed by a building contract insurance bond where there is a reserved right to have changes made and extra work done without limit on the written order of the owner or architect.[4]

(ii–6) Contract guaranty: payment, advance payments, overpayments: liability and release of surety.—Payment in full and acceptance of a plant by a city under a contract for its construction will release sureties on the contractor's bond under a condition that materials shall be paid for, where the contract provides that before payment is made the contractor shall present receipts in full for all materials furnished.[5] The surety is also released where payments are made before due by the terms of a building contract; and the owner is not permitted as against said surety to pay for materials before delivery thereof, although under a stipulation in the bond which recites the statute governing mechanics' liens, the owner may retain and pay such claims and credit them on the contract.[6] As low for plaintiff). See Pittsburg-Buffalo Co. v. American Fidelity Co. 219 Fed. 818, 135 C. C. A. 488.

[3] Van Buren County v. American Surety Co. 137 Iowa, 490, 126 Am. St. Rep. 290, 115 N .W. 24.

[4] George W. Hormel & Co. v. American Bonding Co. 112 Minn. 288, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513, 128 N. W. 12.

[5] Electric Appliance Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 110 Wis. 434, 53 L.R.A. 609, 85 N. W. 648 (but rule that sureties are favorites of the law was applied in this case).

[6] First National Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. 145 Ala. 335, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 418, and note, as to first point in text, 40 So. 415, 8 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 241, 117 Am. St. Rep. 45. The court, per Simpson, J., said: "It is a maxim of law that all parties, whether principal or surety, who reduce their contracts to writing, have a right to insist upon the terms of the contract as written, and it does not lie in the power of the courts to say that, although a party has contracted to do one thing, yet he has done something else, which is more beneficial to the other party, and is therefore entitled to the enforcement of the contract. . . . We hold that under the contract and bond in this case, which constitutes one transaction, if the plaintiff did not pay for the work and material in the manner provided by the contract, but instead thereof, by an arrangement made either at the time the contract was made, or afterwards, with the contractor, without the consent of the surety, permitted the contractor to overdraw his account, so that considerable amounts of money were paid to him before any certificates were issued by the architect, and the material was paid for without any estimate and before delivery, and pertinent hereto it is said in a Federal case, per Thompson, D. J., that: "After a somewhat careful examination of the cases, I have been unable to find any case in which the relaxation of the rule of strictissimi juris was extended as between the surety and the obligee in the bond to the extent of requiring proof of actual injury in case of breach of the terms of the bond by anticipation of payment by the obligee to the contractor. In such case for the reasons stated in Prairie State Bank v. United States,[7] and Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Agnew,[8] and upon the authorities there cited, anticipation of payments by the obligee is held as a matter of law to be a material variance of the contract." [9] But it is held that advance payments not provided for in the contract will not discharge the surety if it affirmatively appears that under the circumstances the departure from the agreement was immaterial and nonprejudicial.[10] And the rule that if an obligee in the bond, to secure the performance of a construction contract, pays instalments before they are earned, or in excess of the amount due, the surety is released, does not apply where a county, to whom a construction guaranty bond has been given, is induced to make overpayments by the contractor's fraud particapated in by the county's engineer.[11] So where no direction is given by the contractor as to the application at the time when made of payments of money received from the owner, the fact that it was paid to materialmen and applied by the latter in discharge of an earlier indebtedness of the contractor for material used on other buildings does not enable the surety company to escape liability upon a bond for material furnished to and used by the contractor on a building.[12]

Overpayments made by the obligee of a bond, either to the contractor or his servants, where they do not operate to the surety's prejudice and which are necessary to satisfy labor claims and save the property from liens, do not release from liability a paid surety on the contractor's bond; nor in such case is there such a taking without any regard to the retention of the percentage required, trusting to the certificates and estimates to be credited on said general account, then this was such a departure from the terms of the original contract as to release the obligation of the surety." Id. 346. Overruling in so far as it conflicts with this decision, Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Robertson, 136 Ala. 379, 34 So. 973.

[7] 164 U. S. 227, 41 L. ed. 412, 17 Sup. Ct. 142, per Mr. Justice White.

[8] 152 Fed. 955, 82 C. C. A. 103.

[9] Justice v. Empire State Surety Co. (U. S. D. C.) 209 Fed. 105, 43 Ins. L. J. 422, 425, judgment for defendant affirmed 218 Fed. 802, 134 C. C. A. 490.

[10] Lloyd Investment Co. v. Illinois Surety Co. 164 Wis. 282, 160 N. W. 58.

[11] Van Buren County v. American Surety Co. 137 Iowa, 490, 126 Am. St. Rep. 290, 115 N. W. 24.

[12] Chicago Lumber Co. v. Douglas Co. 89 Kan. 308, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 131 Pac. 563.

over of work by the owner from the contractor as to release the surety where the latter is notified of said payments and the necessity therefor and the contractor continues with the work. And if credit is given for extra work in excess of payments made during the earlier part of the work, no such material change or breach in the contract is thereby made as to release the surety.[13]

In a Federal case a bond was given in pursuance of a Federal statute conditioned not only upon the faithful performance of a contract to erect a government building and to permit any changes or additions made thereto, but there was also a covenant to promptly make payment to all persons supplying him with labor or material in the prosecution of the work, etc. In an action on the bond under this latter covenant it was held that the granting of an extension of the time of payment of a balance due on account of materials and the acceptance by a materialman of thirty and sixty day notes did not necessarily relieve the surety company under the rule that exonerates an ordinary guarantor in such cases of extension of time for the performance of the contract of his principal without his consent, where it did not appear that such extension was unreasonable or that the surety was prejudiced thereby.[14]

[13] Manhattan Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 77 Wash. 405, 137 Pac. 1003.

[14] United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Golden Pressed & Fire Brick Co. 191 U. S. 416, 48 L. ed. 242, 24 Sup. Ct. 144 (cited with approval in Equitable Surety Co. v. McMillan, 234 U. S. 448, 451, 58 L. ed. 1394, 34 Sup. Ct. 803; American Bonding Co. of Balt. v. United States, 233 Fed. 364, 369, 147 C. C. A. 300; City Trust Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 155, 160, 77 C. C. A. 402 [but upon evidence held that taking of notes did not extend time of payment]; Shelton v. American Surety Co. 131 Fed. 210, 211, 66 C. C. A. 95; Chaffee v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 128 Fed. 918, 920, 63 C. C. A. 646; Shelton v. American Surety Co. [U. S. C. C.] 127 Fed. 736, 738). In the first part of the opinion in the principal case (191 U. S. 416) the court, per Mr. Justice Brown, said that: "Counsel for the Brick Company argued with much persuasiveness that this rule of strictissimi juris, though universally accepted as applicable to the undertaking of an ordinary guarantor, who is usually moved to lend his signature by motives of friendship or expectation of reciprocity, and without pecuniary consideration, has no application to the guaranty companies recently created, which undertake, upon the payment of a stipulated consideration and as a strictly business enterprise, to indemnify or insure the obligee in the bond against any failure of the obligor to perform his contract. It is, at least open to doubt, however, whether any relaxation of the rule should be permitted as between the obligee and the guarantor, which may have signed the guaranty in reliance upon the rule of strictissimi juris, and with the understanding that it is entitled to the ordinary protection accorded in guarantors against extensions of the time of payment. The government wisely protects itself in these cases by providing in the bond that the obligation of the surety shall extend to all changes in or additions to the con-

Under an Iowa decision a surety on a contractor's bond obligating itself to a certain district of a city "and to all persons who may be injured by any breach of this bond," "for all claims for labor and materials furnished in and about said building" is released from its obligation to one claiming under said condition where he has accepted, as a creditor, a composition agreement with the principal debtor and a dividend from the latter's assignee in insolvency; and the mere fact that the surety company has paid voluntarily one or more of the participating creditors does not operate to bind it to pay other creditors. The court, per Weaver, J., said: "If some one of the creditors succeeded in inducing the surety company to make up the loss he had sustained, it does not amount to a fraud upon other creditors . . . nor serve in any manner to vitiate or avoid the composition agreement which had been performed and satisfied according to its terms. . . . We cannot find that plaintiff's ignorance of the existence of the bond, or the fact that plaintiff would not have released its claim had it known the truth in this respect, affects the legal sufficiency of the composition. The surety thereon could rightfully remain silent and allow the debtors to compromise their claims with their creditors if they could; and if the creditors, either by composition, agreement or othewise made a valid release of their claims, the debts being extinguished, right of recovery against the surety ceased with the discharge of the principals. It would be an anomaly in law to say the discharge of the principle debtor is valid and yet hold the debt still existent for the purpose of charging the surety thereon." [15]

In a Kansas case a compensated surety guaranteed by bond the faithful performance of a state building contract in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by a state architect and by reference the construction contract was made a part of the bond. Said contract provided that the state architect should make a certified estimate each month of the value of the labor and material used during that month, and that the state would pay to the contractor a specified per cent the balance to be withheld as a final payment, but that no payments should be made except upon his certificate of proper performance of the work for which the payment was due. The bond was to become null and void if payments were tract which may thereafter be made. . . . We do not, however, deem it necessary to express an opinion upon this subject, as we prefer to rest our opinion upon the peculiar character of the covenant upon which this action is brought." And upon this point the rule of strict construction was not extended, but the rule of liberal construction in favor of the subcontractor was applied.

[15] American Blower v. Lion Bonding & Surety Co. — Iowa, —, 160 N. W. 939.

not promptly made as stipulated. The construction company abandoned its contract and the state completed the work by another contractor. Several matters were alleged in defense to an action on the bond and it was held that; in the absence of fraud or mistake, which were not set up in the answer, the state was obligated to pay the percentage as stipulated; that the architect's certificate was binding upon the original parties and also upon the surety under the terms of the bond, and his judgment and decision having been agreed upon by the parties they were bound where no fraud or mistake was shown; that he acted as an individual in making the estimates so that the parties' rights were not affected by the fact that he was a state officer; that it was sufficient if in making said certificates he acted in good faith relying upon information from others; that certificates endorsed "O.K." by the architect, although prepared by others were sufficient as to form, the use of such abbreviation being in accordance with common usage; that the state was not estopped from maintaining its suit on the bond because it made payments upon the certified estimates of the architect without seeing that said estimates were true and correct, nor by the fact that labor and material were included therein when in fact the latter had not been used in construction, although it had been furnished when the estimates were made; that the value of material and labor, however, which had been diverted by the state to other uses than in the construction work under the contract, should be deducted from the amount of the judgment.[16] But an architect's certificate which is not intended by him to be final or permanent does not conclude the surety company in the bond as to the amount due where it is obtained by misrepresentations of the contractor and without the exercise by the architect of his personal judgment as to the matters covered by said certificate.[17]

Again, although a contractor, a foreign company, has no legal right to do business in the state, yet inasmuch as it would be estopped to assert the invalidity as against the city as the other party to the contract, a corporation who had entered into a bond guaranteeing payment of all claims for labor and material is liable on its bond upon failure of the contractor to pay for material.[18] And if a building contractor's bond provides that he shall pay for all materials supplied for the building, it is not necessary for material men to postpone a suit on the bond until the owner of the building has sustained pecuniary injury through the contractor's default.[19] So where the guaranty is that a construction company and its subcontractors would pay all indebtedness for labor and material furnished, this does not preclude materialmen who are not sub-contractors from claiming indemnity from the guaranty company.[20]

[16] State v. Blanchard Construction Co. (State v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co.) 91 Kan. 74, 136 Pac. 905.

[17] Ilse v. Aetna Indemnity Co. 55 Wash. 487, 104 Pac. 787.

[18] Kuennan v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 159 Mich. 122, 123 N. W. 799.

(ii–7) Contract guaranty: exception of liability of surety: strikes.—A bond stipulated not to cover loss resulting from "labor difficulties called strikes nor reconstruction or repair made necessary by reason" thereof, only exempts the surety company from liability for such strikes as are specified in the contract, which is made a part of the bond, as those for the consequences of which the contractor is not to be held liable.[21]

(ii–8) Contract guaranty: supplemental agreement abrogating conditions precedent: right of action.—In a suit in New Jersey on a surety bond, it appeared that one of the conditions precedent to recovery was that in case of default by the principal a written notice of a specified character should be sent to insurer within a limited time and that it should have the right within thirty days after the receipt of said statement to proceed, or to procure others to proceed, with the performance of said contract and "should be subrogated to all rights of the principal and any and all moneys or property that may at the time of such default be due, or that thereafter may become due to the principal under said contract, shall be credited upon the claim which the obligee may then or thereafter have against the surety, and the surplus if any applied as the surety may direct." It was also required that suit be brought upon the bond on or before a certain date. By a supplemental agreement the time of completion was extended as was also the time within which suit could be brought. It was decided that the earlier contract must yield to the latter to the extent of the repugnancy between the provision of the original and supplemental contract and therefore it was made impossible to comply with the clause as to thirty days' notice to enable defendant surety to decide whether to complete the work itself which must be regarded as superseded and abrogated, so that the failure of plaintiff to comply with it before bringing suit was not a valid defense.[22]

2767. Expenditures necessitated by the loss: marine risk.—There are certain expenditures which, although not expressly pro-

[19] Orinico Supply Co. v. Illinois Surety Co. 160 N. Car. 428, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 707, 76 S. E. 273.

[20] People (Use of Kuenzel) v. National Construction Co. 159 Mich. 133, 123 N. W. 801.

[21] Riviera Realty Co. v. Illinois Surety Co. 150 N. Y. Supp. 616, 165 App. Div. 114, one judge dissented and another dissented in part.

[22] Horwitz v. American Surety Co. 85 N. J. Law, 98, 89 Atl. 246.

vided for under the policy, are nevertheless recoverable because necessitated as a consequence of a peril covered by the insurance, and incurred for the benefit of the ship or the cargo; as expenses for repairs not consequent upon wear and tear, but by a peril insured against, necessitated in a port of distress, or in certain cases the wages or provisions for the crew or salvage, etc. This subject will, however, be more fully considered elsewhere. Charges and expenses incurred in handling and disposing of goods in case of a partial loss must be reasonable and proper, and for the purpose only of ascertaining the amount of loss in order to be estimated as a part of the loss. Charges for storage are not included, nor expenses for insurance paid by the consignee while in store at the place of delivery, although expenses for surveys, inspection, and sale at auction are properly a charge.[1]

§ 2768. Explosion defined.—It is said in a leading case that "the word 'explosion' is variously used in ordinary speech, and is not one that admits of exact definition. Its general characteristics may be described, but the exact facts which constitute what we call by that name are not susceptible of such statement as will always distinguish the occurrences. It must be conceded that every combustion of an explosive substance whereby other property is ignited and consumed would not be an explosion within the ordinary meaning of the term. It is not used as the synonym of combustion, and explosion may be described generally as a sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air and accompanied by a report. But the rapidity of the combustion, the violence of the expansion, and the vehemence of the report vary in intensity as often as the occurrences multiply. Hence, an explosion is an idea of degrees, and the true meaning of the word in each particular case must be settled not by any fixed standard or accurate measurement, but by the common experience and notions of men in matters of that sort," and it should be of sufficient force to result in damage to the insured property.[2] In the case above quoted from certain

[1] Lamar Ins. Co. v. McGlashen, 54 Ill. 513, 5 Am. Rep. 162. See Wilson Bros. Bobbin Co. v. Green, 86 L. J. K. B. 713, [1917] 1 K. B. 860, considered under § 2818 herein. See § 2717 herein.

As to expenses for survey of vessel, while in dry dock for repairs, to renew classification not then due and apportionment of dock charges and expenses, see Ruabon Steamship Co., Ltd. v. London Assurance, [1900] A. C. 6, 81 L. T. 585, 5 Com. Cas. 71, 9 Asp. M. C. 21, 69 L. J. Q. B. 86, [1898] 1 Q. B. 722, 78 L. T. 402, 67 L. J. Q. B. 548, 3 Com. Cas. 148, 8 Asp. M. C. 346, 369, [1897] 2 Q. B. 456, 77 L. T. 402, 66 L. J. Q. B. 841.

[2] United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735, per McIlvaine, J.

As to "explosion," excepted risks and losses. See §§ 2584, 2586 et seq. herein.

inflammable vapors evolved in the process of rectifying came in contact with flame, and "a sudden and violent combustion of the vapor accompanied by a noise, described by one witness as being like the crack of a gun, by another as if a bundle of iron had been thrown on the pavement, by another as a crash," was found to be an explosion.[3]

§ 2768a. "One explosion:" boilers in battery form: "explosion" defined in policy: Pabst Brewing Co. Case.—In an especially noteworthy Federal case an action was brought to recover damages caused by the explosion of three steam boilers forming part of a six-boiler battery, said boilers were not separate entities for the purpose of insurance, but were coupled to a common header for joinder of several or all in steam service and were insured against loss or damage, except by fire, caused by the explosion, collapse, or rupture of said boiler or boilers, or any of them, but there was a limitation of the liability of insurer in case of loss or damage "resulting from any one explosion" to a sum not exceeding a specified amount, and in case of more than one explosion the lia-

[3] See also Briggs v. North America Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446; Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Parker, 23 Ohio St. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 228; Everett v. London Assur. Co. 19 Com. B. (N. S.) 126; 34 L. J. Com. P. 299, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 546, 13 W. R. 862. Webster defines explosion as: "1. The act of exploding, bursting with a loud noise or detonation; a sudden inflaming with force and a loud report, as the explosion of gunpowder; 2. Steam engine: the shattering of a boiler by a sudden and immense pressure in distinction from rupture." "1. The act of exploding; a sudden expansion of a substance of gunpowder or an elastic fluid with force and usually a loud report; a sudden and loud discharge, as the explosion of powder; an explosion of fire-damp. 'Explosive mixtures of coal gas and air may be inflamed by sparks struck from metal or stone:' . . . Frankland's Experiments in Chemistry, p. 541; 2. A sudden bursting or breaking up or in pieces from an internal or other force; a blowing up or tearing apart, as the explosion of a steam boiler:" Century Dictionary, tit. "Explosion." "As the term is often rather loosely employed, 'explosion' may, for our purpose, be defined as the sudden or extremely rapid conversion of a solid or liquid body of small bulk into gas or vapor occupying very many times the volume of the original substance, and in addition highly expanded by the heat generated during the transformation. This sudden or very rapid expansion of volume is attended by an exhibition of force more or less violent, according to the construction of the original substance and the circumstances of explosion. Any substance capable of undergoing such a change upon the application of heat or other disturbing cause is called 'explosion:'" 8 Encyclopedia Britannica (9th ed.) 807, tit. "Explosives." "1. The act of exploding; a sudden, forcible expansion of a substance, as gunpowder, or an elastic fluid, usually accompanied by a loud sound; as an explosion of dynamite, an explosion of fire damp. 2. A sudden bursting or flying to pieces as a result of internal pressure; as the explosion of a boiler." Webster's Universal Dict. (1910) "Explosion."

bility of insurer was limited to a sum not in excess of the total amount of insurance which sum was three times that fixed for the limit of liability in case of one explosion. Three boilers of the battery were exploded in distinct succession and not concurrently and upon that premise: (1) It was held that the one was primary and the other two were secondary or incidental occurrences attributable thereto and that, inasmuch as this was a case of a battery of boilers, whereof the amount of damages could not be distinguished between the contributing cause, the loss was peculiarly within the definition that when concurring causes of the damage appear, the proximate cause to which the loss is to be attributed is the dominant, the efficient one, that sets the other causes in operation, and causes which are incidental are not proximate, though they may be nearer in time and place to the loss. (2) It was also determined that as to any defective condition of the second and third boilers it did not affect the question of proximate cause, for however much it may have contributed to the damage it was not an intermediate cause disconnected from the primary cause and self-operating which produced the injury. (3) It further appeared that one of the printed provisions of the policy was: "That by the term 'explosion, collapse, or rupture' as used in this policy, is to be understood a sudden, substantial tearing assunder of the boiler or any portion thereof, or the sudden crushing or forcing inward of the furnace or the flues or other parts of the boiler, caused by the pressure of steam; and 'boiler' is understood to include also the steam pipe, feed pipe and blow-off pipe up to and including the stop valve nearest the boiler in each of the same, the pipes of the water column, steam and water guages, and the safety valve." It was claimed, therefore, that this policy definition applied only to a "boiler as an individual thing" and as the plural number was not used it amounted to a definition of like restriction as used in the limitation clause above noted. As to this claim the court per Seaman, C. J., said: "We do not understand, however, that the definition cited tends in any degree to aid the contention that an explosion of one boiler which involves as well the explosion of others does not come within the meaning of this limitation of damages resulting from an explosion. It appears as one of the general provisions of the standard form of policy, and its obvious purpose is, as we believe, to prevent restricted application of the terms referred to, and so extend the meaning as to include all attachments of the boiler which were subject to pressure. Thus explosion of any of the numerous tubes and connections of the boiler in controversy is brought within the intendment of liability, including, as of course, resulting explosions and damages. Throughout the policy the term 'explosion' is used in a singular form, and we believe the limitation of liability for loss 'resulting from any one explosion' accurately and entirely names the cause or event insured against, both within the settled rule of efficient or proximate cause and in accord with common usage in reference to an occurrence which involves the explosion of more than one boiler. Whatever the extent of damages resulting from an explosion, the indemnity recoverable under the contract is alike, whether one or several of the boilers explode, either concurrently or in succession, and no mention of successive (incidental) explosions is needful or desirable in the limitation clause. The fact being established that the primary explosion in question occurred in one boiler, followed by explosion of two others plainly attributable to the first, we are satisfied that the above-mentioned doctrine of proximate cause becomes applicable to fix the one explosion as the cause of contract liability, and therefore strictly within the terms of the limitation." (4) Inasmuch as the issue of contract liability involved the interpretation of the clause limiting the recovery in case of "any one explosion" and in case of more than one explosion the entire liability was also limited, and in accordance with the conclusion as to proximate cause and there being one explosion, as above stated, the liability was held limited to recovery as for a single disaster in conformity with the statute of Wisconsin limiting the amount of loss for which an insurer in that state issuing a policy of boiler insurance could expose itself under any one accident. (5) Another point, although belonging to the question of evidence, is so intimately connected herewith that it will be noted here, and that is: as to the meaning of the word "Explosion," proof of common usage in the singular form, as applicable to the explosion of boilers in immediate succession, is held clearly admissible in order to ascertain the sense in which that term must have been understood between the parties. "This evidence embraced numerous reports in scientific and technical journals (American and English), official reports of disaster, and local publications—all showing like usage of the term 'explosion' where multiple boilers were exploded—and its rejection was erroneous under the view adopted by the trial court for its interpretation."[4] In a policy before the court in another Federal case, being an insurance covering steam boilers, "explosion" was thus defined: "By the term 'explosion' as used in this policy is to be understood a sudden and substantial rupture of the shell or flues of the boiler or boilers caused by the action of steam." [5]

[4] Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. v. Pabst Brewing Co. 201 Fed. 617, 130 C. C. A. 45, 42 Ins. L. J. 555, Ann. Cas. 1915A 637, cited as to meaning of proximate cause in Delaware & Hudson Co. v. Ketz, 233 Fed. 31, 35, 147 C. C. A. 101, (case of injuries to servant). As to parol evidence to explain phrases and words, see § 3807 herein.

§ 2769. Explosion under fire risks: steam boiler.—We have considered elsewhere the question of loss by explosion, as connected with excepted risks.[6] But we believe that it may be stated here generally that under a fire risk the insurer is not liable for a loss by explosion where it has not assumed such risk, unless fire is the proximate cause thereof. The contract under a fire risk is to indemnify for loss by fire; it is not sufficient that the explosion which produced the loss was capable of causing or might have caused a fire. Fire is the effect of combustion, and is equivalent to ignition or burning; this does not necessitate that the property insured should itself be consumed or the identical property be even ignited, but there must be an actual ignition, and the loss must be the effect of ignition. In other words, the fire must be the proximate cause of the loss, whether the identical property itself be ignited or consumed, or other material or property near by be burned or ignited, in consequence of which a loss to the insured property follows from fire as the proximate cause. If, however, explosion be insured against, and it is the proximate cause of the loss, a recovery may be had.[7] The policy may, however, be so worded as to cover a loss by [5] American Steam Boiler Ins. Co. v. Chicago Sugar Refining Co. 57 Fed. 294, 6 C. C. A. 336, 9 U. S. App. 186, 21 L.R.A. 572, s. c. 48 Fed. 198. Cited in German Savings & Loan Soc. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., Ltd., 187 Fed. 758, 763, 109 C. C. A. 506.

[6] See §§ 2584, 2586 et seq. herein.

[7] In such of the cases cited below as are not directly in point, the opinions of the court will be found to support the rule in the text.

United States.—Insurance Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 44, 19 L. ed. 65; Chicago Sugar Refining Co. v. American Steam Boiler Co. 48 Fed. 198, 21 Ins. L. J. 59, rev'd 57 Fed. 294, 6 C. C. A. 336, 9 U. S. App. 186, 21 L.R.A. 572; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69, 1 McLean (U. S. C. C.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 17,266.

Illinois.—Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 537 (see note to this case under § 2590 herein).

Kentucky.—Montgomery v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 427.

Louisiana.—Tanneret v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 249; Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550.

Massachusetts.—Dows v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384; Scripture v. Lowell Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J.

Missouri.—McAllister v. Tennessee Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 306.

New Hampshire.—Kenniston v. Merrimack Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193.

New York.—Briggs v. North American Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446, 447; Evans v. Columbian Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 146, 4 Am. Rep. 650; St. John v. American Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 516, 1 Duer (N. Y.)

explosion. Thus, a loss by explosion may come within the clause "all other perils," etc.,[8] and the words "fire originating from any cause" will cover loss arising from explosion.[9] The rule above stated is further subject to such qualifications and exceptions as are noted in the sections next following. Issuing a policy against damage from explosion of a boiler, with knowledge of a defect as to the setting thereof, obtained from a report of insurer's inspector, will estop insurer from urging such defect as a defense to a suit upon the policy, and does not preclude such insurance from being in force.[10]

§ 2770. Same subject: spontaneous combustion.—The above rule does not prevent recovery for spontaneous combustion causing fire, but includes such a loss.[11] In an ordinary marine policy the insurance against fire does not cover the case of spontaneous combustion caused by the inherent infirmity of the goods insured.[12]

§ 2771. Same subject: where combustion and explosion inseparably connected.—If the combustion and explosion are inseparably connected, if a combustible substance in the process of combustion produces explosion also and fire is the agent throughout, and there is a loss by both fire and explosion, it is held that the whole damage is covered by a policy insured against loss by fire.[13]

371; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258; Babcock v. Montgomery Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637, per Pratt, J.

Ohio.—Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Parker, 23 Ohio St. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 228; United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foot, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735; Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co. 11 Ohio, 147, 38 Am. Dec. 728.

England.—Taunton v. Royal Ins. Co. 2 He. & M. 135, 33 L. J. C. N. 406, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 291, 10 L. T. 156, 12 W. R. 549; Hobbs v. Northern Assur. Co. 8 Ont. 343 (one judge dissenting) rev'd, 12 Can. Super. Ct. 631; Everett v. London Assur. Co. 19 Com. B. (N. S.) 126, 34 L. J. Com. P. 299, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 546, 13 W. R. 862; Stanley v. Western Ins. Co. 3 L. R. Ex. 71, 37 L. J. Ex. 73, 17 L. T. 513, 16 W. R. 369; Austin v. Drewe, 6 Taunt. 436, 4 Camp. 360, 2 Marsh. 130, Holt, 126, 16 R. R. 647, per Gibbs, C. J.; Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123, per Lord Ellenborough. But see dissenting opinion of Hunt, J. See note, as to loss caused by explosion, 34 Am. Rep. 387–89.

[8] Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 9 Mo. 411; British American Ins. Co. v. Joseph, 9 L. C. 448; Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co. 11 Ohio, 147, 38 Am. Dec. 728.

[9] Renshaw v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 33 Mo. App. 394.

[10] Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection Co. v. Lasher Stocking Co. 66 Vt. 439, 44 Am. St. Rep. 859, 29 Atl. 629.

On liability of insurer for loss caused by explosion, see notes in 19 L.R.A. 594, and 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474.

[11] See British American Ins. Co. v. Joseph, 9 L. C. 448, and cases and opinions in note under last section.

[12] Providence-Washington Ins. Co. v. Adler, 65 Md. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 314, 4 Atl. 121. See also Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 17, pp. 349, 350.

[13] Scripture v. Lowell Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.)

§ 2772. Same subject: where fire precedes or causes the explosion.—If a fire precedes and causes the explosion, so that the fire becomes the proximate cause of the loss, this is covered by a policy against loss or damage by fire. The principal discussions, however, in cases of this character have been upon the point of proximate cause of loss; as in cases where the explosion is not followed by fire, or where the explosion is on other premises but is caused by fire, and the injury to the insured property is only from concussion, or where fire causes an explosion which in turn causes fire, and this is carried a long distance and is communicated to the insured property. The general principle, however, that the proximate cause of the loss must be reducible to a peril covered by the policy, and the loss must be not too remote a consequence of such peril, but a direct consequence thereof,[14] applies here, although it is also true that the rule is subject to modification.[15] It is difficult, nevertheless, to separate the different factors which necessarily enter into a discussion of this kind, as is illustrated by the case of an accidental communication of fire to gunpowder, or the ignition of some other substance which consumes with less rapidity; or in case where certain vapors evolved by certain processes in the business carried on upon the insured premises come in contact with fire, causing an explosion; or in case of explosion resulting from fire, owing to the peculiar character of the substance, such as flour-dust or starch-dust in manufactories. What constitutes a "fire," as 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111; Dows v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co. (Dows v. Traders & Mechanics Ins. Co.) 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384, per Gray, C. J. See Hobbs v. Guardian Fire Ins. Co. 12 Can. Supr. Ct. 631, rev'g 8 Ont. 343 (one judge dissented in court below). But see United Fire Life & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735, per McIlvaine, J. And see chapters on excepted risks and losses, fire and accident, and cases noted in next section. See also opinion of Neil, J., in Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St. Rep. 870, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. 507, 510.

[14] Taylor v. Dunbar, L. R. 4 Com. P. 206, 38 L. J. C. P. 178, 17 W. R. 382; Smith v. Universal Ins. Co. 6 Wheat. (19 U. S.) 176, 185, 5 L. ed. 235, per Story, J.; Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Comst. (N. Y.) 326, aff'g 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637. See also as to first statement in above text, opinion in Hall & Hawkins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 115 Tenn. 513, 112 Am. St. Rep. 870, 92 S. W. 402, 35 Ins. L. J. 507, 509; Torpedo Top Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. — Ill. App. —, 42 Nat. Corp. Rep. 593, per Neil, J.

As to the terms "unless fire ensues" and "explosion of any kind" and also as to fire preceding and causing explosion, see Wheeler v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 203 N. Y. 283, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474, n, 96 N. E. 452, 41 Ins. L. J. 247.—Haight, J.

As to "explosion" excepted risks and losses, see §§ 2586 et seq. herein.

[15] Peters v. Warren Ins. Co. 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 99, 110, 10 L. ed. 371; Waters v. Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 220, 9 L. ed. 69, per Story, J.

that word is used in the policy, has also been discussed, and in this connection a burning lamp, a lighted candle, or gas jet, or other flame, have been considered. In these and other cases the courts have exhaustively discussed the question of liability of insurers and of proximate and remote cause, as applied to the facts in each case, and it is difficult to formulate any rule other than the general one first stated under this section, which assumes as the basis that fire is the agent and proximate cause of the loss. If the facts give room for a discussion whether there is succession of causes, or whether fire is the proximate cause of loss, and the policy is against loss by fire, the question must first be determined whether the fire is the proximate cause of the loss, and be so found before the insurer can be held liable. And although it has been broadly stated that if the explosion is caused by fire the latter is the proximate cause of the loss,[16] yet this statement could never have been intended to be taken broadly, but only in connection with the facts of each particular case before the court, for if the fire is only one of a series of causes, a remote cause and not the proximate cause of the loss, there can be no recovery, even though it precedes and causes the explosion. Accordingly, where a gunpowder magazine, about a mile distant, exploded from some unknown cause, and the injury sustained by the insured property was only from concussion without fire, it was held that this was not a loss or damage by fire, even upon the assumption that it was occasioned by a concussion caused by fire, it being said that this necessitated a seeking the cause of causes to arrive at the origin of the loss.[17] To further illustrate: In a Federal case where a blaze originated in a starch kiln, and in attempting to extinguish it a cloud of starch-dust was stirred up [16] Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69, per Story, J.

[17] Everett v. London Assur. Co. 19 Com. B. (N. S.) 126, 34 L. J. Com. P. 299, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 546, 13 W. R. 862; Caballero v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 15 La. Ann. 217. See Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J. In cases of the character under consideration, the words of Erle, C. J., are important. "The relation of cause and effect is matter which cannot always be actually ascertained, but if in the ordinary course of events a certain result usually follows from a given cause, the immediate relation of one to the other may be considered as established," but events may be too distinctly connected with each other to stand in relation with cause and effect: Ionides v. Universal Marine Ins. Assoc. 14 Com. B. (N. S.) 259, 32 L. J. C. P. 170, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 18, 8 L. T. 705, 11 W. R. 858, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 271, per Erle, C. J. See Marsden v. City & County Assur. Co. L. R. 1 Com. P. 232, 240, 1 H. & R. 53, 35 L. J. C. P. 60, 12 Jur. (N. S.) 76, 13 L. T. 465, 14 W. R. 106, per Willes, J.; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69, per Story, J.; Bacon's Maxims, reg. 1; Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boone, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395.

which came in contact with the flame and exploded, this was held an "accident" under an insurance covering "explosion and accident," and a recovery was permitted for loss directly caused by explosion and a resulting fire. This decision was, however, subsequently reversed, on the ground that the explosion was merely an incident of the fire, and upon the further ground that the company had no power to insure against fire, and also because the policy expressly excepted loss or damage by fire resulting from any cause whatever.[18] Where the explosion on board a vessel was caused by fire, gunpowder being ignited, the fire was held the proximate cause of the loss.[19] It will be observed that in this case there was an explosion of gunpowder. In case of the explosion of a steam boiler, it is true that in one sense the explosion is the consequence of fire used to generate steam.[20] Under an unqualified policy against loss

[18] Chicago Sugar Refining Co. v. American Steam Boiler Co. 48 Fed. 198, 21 Ins. L. J. 59, rev'd 57 Fed. 294, 6 C. C. A. 336, 9 U. S. App. 186, 21 L.R.A. 572; Washburn v. Miami Valley Ins. Co. 2 Flip. (U. S. C. C.) 664, 2 Fed. 633, 9 Ins. L. J. 761 (similar case of flour-dust and explosion).

[19] Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 691, 1 McLean (C. C.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 17,266. Cited in:

United States.—The G. R. Booth, 171 U. S. 450, 453, 43 L. ed. 234, 237, 19 Sup. Ct. 9; Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 426, 34 L. ed. 399, 405, 10 Sup. Ct. 934; Washburn v. Western Ins. Co. 9 Ins. L. J. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 17,216; American Steam Boiler Ins. Co. v. Chicago Sugar Refining Co. 57 Fed. 294, 304 C. C. A. 336, 345, 9 U. S. App. 186, 21 L.R.A. 579.

Illinois.—Hewer v. Northwestern National Ins. Co. 144 Ill. 393, 402, 19 L.R.A. 594, 599, 33 N. E. 411; Case v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Ill. 676, 681; Heuer v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 44 Ill. App. 429, 436; Gibbons v. German Ins. Co. & Savings Inst. 30 Ill. App. 263, 265.

Indiana.—Indianapolis Ins. Co. v. Mason, 11 Ind. 171, 180.

Louisiana. — Valestracci v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 844, 846; Decuir v. Lejune, 15 La. Ann. 217; Millaudon v. New Orleans, 4 La. Ann. 15, 16, 50 Am. Dec. 550.

Massachusetts.—Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meridian Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 576, 20 L.R.A. 297, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540, 33 N. E. 690; Scripture v. Lowell, 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 362, 57 Am. Dec. 111.

Missouri. — Renshaw v. Missouri State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 103 Mo. 595, 609, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, 15 S. W. 945.

New York.—Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 634, 86 Am. Dec. 426; St. John v. American Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 516, 545; Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 921; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. 367, 369, 34 Am. Dec. 258; Briggs v. North British Marine Ins. Co. 66 Barb. 325, 328.

Ohio.—United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio State, 340, 351, 10 Am. Rep. 75.

[20] See § 2796 herein. See St. John v. American Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 516, per Denio, J.; Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, L. R. 12 App. C. 484, 56 L. J. Q. B. 626, 17 Q. B. D. 195, 57 L. T. 695, 36 W. R. 337, 6 Asp. M. C. 200, per Lord Halsbury, L. C. "Our opinion excludes, of course, all damage by mere explosion not involving ignition and combustion of

by fire, an explosion which is the result of an antecedent fire in the premises will not affect the liability of the insurer for the loss, though the principal damage resulted from the explosion, and not from the fire. It makes no difference whether an explosion was caused by accidental fire being communicated to coal, oil or gasolene, or whether it was caused by a gas-jet coming in contact with inflammable gas mixed with atmosphere which had escaped and filled the room.[1] Again, we have noted in a preceding section one case where combustion and explosion were held inseparably connected, gunpowder being accidentally exploded with contact with fire.[2] And where the loss is increased by explosion incident to the fire, and the fire is the proximate cause of the loss, the insured, it is held, may recover the entire loss.[3]

But it is held in an English case where an inflammable and explosive vapor emitted or evolved in the process of extracting oil from shoddy ignited, set fire to the premises, then exploded, and was followed by a further fire, that the insurers were liable for all damages caused by fire not the result of the explosion, but not for loss by the explosion, or for any of the consequences thereof. So far, however, as the loss by explosion was concerned, liability therefor was excepted by the terms of the policy. It was also dethe agent of explosion, such as the case of steam or any other substance acting by expansion without combustion. . . . Cases are conceivable, other than by the use of gunpowder, of explosion without any combustion, which nevertheless being the result of the action of fire are still, it would seem, within the range of the general principle. Various mineral substances exist of value in commerce and the trade which explode by the action of fire without either ignition or combustion. In general, any close vessel, of whatever material composed, when filled with an expansive fluid is liable to explode by the action of heat, though it may be that the vessel and its contents are alike incombustible. The same thing happens under certain conditions to some forms of wood, which, although combustible, may by the action of fire explode without ignition, or which, as in the present case of a house, by having compressed within it some burning substance which is explosive as well as combustible, like gunpowder, may suffer the double injury of combustion in part or of part explosion:" Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J.

[1] Renshaw v. Missouri State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 103 Mo. 595, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, 15 S. W. 945. See Stephens v. Fire Assoc. of Phila. 139 Mo. App. 369, 123 S. W. 63, 39 Ins. L. J. 232.

[2] But see Everett v. London Assur. Co. 19 Com. B. (N. S.) 126, 34 L. J. Com. P. 299, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 546, 13 W. R. 862; Cabalero v. Home Ins. Co. 15 La. Ann. 217; Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J.; Taunton v. Royal Ins. Co. 2 H. & M. 135, 33 L. J. Ch. 406, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 291, 10 L. T. 156, 12 W. R. 549.

[3] Transatlantic Ins. Co. v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70, 40 Am. Rep. 403.

clared in this case that insurers were liable for all damages occasioned by the use of water to extinguish the fire.[4] So where a fire is the moving cause of the explosion, as where a building is blown up to stay the progress of a conflagration in progress, here fire is the cause of the loss, even though the original fire was produced by explosion, and insurers are liable.[5] If a loss or any other combustion result from an explosion, where the explosion is caused by a destructive fire already in progress, it comes within the general risk of a policy against fire only, and is a doctrine based on reason and justice and sustained by authority.[6] And where a fire occurs upon the premises insured by which an explosion of gunpowder takes place, the insurer is responsible for the loss which is the direct consequence of the combustion.[7] But where the building was blown down by a storm, and the storm blew fire in contact with escaping gases and air and created an explosion, this was held not a loss by fire.[8]

It will be seen from an examination of the decisions cited under this and the three preceding sections that the cases are not in harmony upon, or as to the point when fire and when explosion, is the proximate cause of the loss. Necessarily, as already stated, each case must rest largely upon the particular facts before the court, as well as upon the terms of the policy in that case. We believe, however, that in so far as we have attempted to formulate any rules under these sections relating to explosion, they accord with the weight of authority and opinion.

§ 2772a. Boiler explosion "caused by unavoidable external violence:" marine risk.—If a clause in a marine policy insures against loss or damage to a vessel or any part thereof, with the exception of that occasioned by the bursting of boilers "unless the same be

[4] Stanley v. Western Ins. Co. 37 L. J. Ex. 73, 3 L. R. Ex. 71, 17 L. T. 513, 16 W. R. 369. See United Life Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735; Briggs v. North American Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 325, 330 (in this case it was declared that a burning lamp is not a fire within the policy); Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Parker, 23 Ohio St. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 228.

[5] Stanley v. Western Ins. Co. 37 L. J. Ex. 73, 3 L. R. Ex. 71, 17 L. T. 513, 16 W. R. 369; Greenwald v. Insurance Co. 3 Phila. (Pa.) 323; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258. See Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 44, 19 L. ed. 65, chapter "Excepted Risks and Losses —Fire."

[6] United Life Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735, per Mellvaine, J., citing Waters v. La Mar Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69; Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111; Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550.

[7] Caballero v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 15 La. Ann. 217.

[8] Transatlantic Ins. Co. v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70, 40 Am. Rep. 403.

caused by unavoidable external violence" such clause means only violence external to the boat, the subject of insurance, and, therefore, where the vessel's boilers exploded while she was lying at a landing and by reason thereof she sank and became a total loss and it does not appear that the explosion was other than one caused by the pressure of steam within the boiler, and there is no evidence on which to base an expert opinion that said explosion was due to unavoidable external violence, recovery is precluded.[9]

§ 2773. Fallen building: what constitutes.—A fallen building, within the meaning of a fire policy, is, as a general rule, one which has lost its distinctive character as the building insured before it is subjected to the operation of a peril within the policy.[10] If the building is standing complete or intact, the fact that its supports are weakened, that it is out of plumb, that it is greatly dilapidated, and not safely habitable, does not make it a fallen building.[11] In determining what constitutes a fallen building within a fire risk the character, construction, and relative situation to adjoining buildings are important.[12] If the building is so far demolished by a peril not within the policy as to become a mere mass or congeries of materials, it has undoubtedly lost its distinctive character as the building insured.[13]

[9] Quackenboss v. Insurance Co. of North America, 95 Miss. 872, 50 So. 444, 38 Ins. L. J. 1236.

As to exclusion of loss from bursting of boilers, etc., see §§ 2679, 2679a herein.

[10] California. — Breuner v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 51 Cal. 101.

Illinois.—Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Congregation Rodolph Sholen, 80 Ill. 558.

Massachusetts. — Huck v. Globe Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 306, 34 Am. Rep. 273; Dows v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384; Lewis v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 159.

Missouri.—Nave v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 430, 90 Am. Dec. 394.

Texas. — Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Ende, 65 Tex. 118.

Falling building; excepted risks and losses, see §§ 2582 et seq. herein.

[11] Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Congregation Rodolph Sholen, 80 Ill. 558, 8 Chic. Leg. News, 178.

[12] If a building consists of two parts or halves separated from each other by partition walls of brick, each of the two parts capable of standing or falling by itself, they are so far separate and distinctive buildings, even though there be connecting doors, that one part may be and the other part not be a fallen building. Thus, if substantially all the floors and roof of one part falls by a peril other than one insured against, leaving nothing standing but the outer walls, with the exception, perhaps, of a staircase or elevator, this part is a fallen building, but if the other half is not affected by such falling, but remains undisturbed, complete, and uninjured as to all its parts, it is not a fallen building: Walker v. Queen Ins. Co. Stowe v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. Huck v. Globe Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 306, 34 Am. Rep. 373. See Lewis v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 159.

[13] Nave v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 430, 90 Am. Dec. 394.

§ 2774. Falling walls, buildings and structures.—We have given consideration to this subject elsewhere in connection with excepted risks and losses under fire policies, but it may be stated here that in determining whether there has been a loss by fire, the walls of a building or structure having fallen, the court will consider whether the fire operated as a proximate cause of the loss upon the subject insured. That it could not so operate is clear if the building or structure insured has before the fire occurred ceased to exist as such, and has become a mere mass or congeries of materials, and has, although not entirely fallen, become so far demolished as to have lost its distinctive character as the particular building insured, owing to a cause not a peril insured against, such as inherent defects or weakness in the building itself, high winds, tornadoes, earthquakes, withdrawal of necessary supports, by digging away the underlying or adjacent soil, or some other cause not a peril within the policy.[14]

§ 2775. Fallen building, etc.: wall weakened by previous fire.—If an edifice, building, or structure insured against loss by fire is partially consumed, and the walls so weakened thereby that they fall during the progress of the fire, or so shortly thereafter that it may reasonably be held that fire is the efficient proximate cause of the loss, this is covered by a fire policy, and the same would be true where the walls of such partly consumed building fall upon and crush another structure. But the question may rest upon the factor of reasonable time, for the mere fact of the weakening of the walls by fire will not aid the assured where the weakened walls do not fall until some time thereafter, and then by some other cause, as by high wind, after several days.[15]

§ 2776. Fear of danger: blockade: apprehension of embargo, etc.: marine risk.—Whether the breaking up of a voyage from fear of capture, as where the port of destination is shut, is justified is an unsettled question in this country. In England it seems well estab-

[14] Dow v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384, per Gray, C. J.; Nave v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 430, 90 Am. Dec 394; Huck v. Globe Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 306, 34 Am. Rep. 273. See Pelican Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 430, 90 Am. Dec. 394; Co. 77 Tex. 225, 13 S. W. 980. But examine Lewis v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 159. See Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Jones, 16 Ga. App. 261, 85 S. E. 206.

On fall of building clause in fire insurance policies, see notes in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 604, and L.R.A.1917F, 1064.

Falling building: excepted risks and losses, see §§ 2582 et seq. herein.

[15] Gaskarth v. Law Union Fire Ins. Co. (Eng. Manchester Civ. Ct.) 6 Ins. L. J. 159; Johnston v. West of Scotland Ins. Co. 7 Ct. Sess. Cas. (S. & D. Rep. Scot.) 52.

lished that a mere denial of entry or interdiction of commerce at the port of destination, whether said port be in hostile occupation or there be a blockade or embargo whereby a loss is sustained, is not a peril embraced by the terms of the policy.[16]

§ 2777. Same subject: cases.—It is held in Louisiana that a restraint exists, even though there be no seizure, if the power of the blockading squadron is applied so effectually and directly as to break up the voyage, and if a vessel is prevented by a blockading squadron from entering her port of destination, and she is required to return to her port of departure, this entitles her owners to recover on a policy by which she is insured on a recovery against the "arrests, restraints, and detainments of kings, princes, people," etc.[17]

Under a Massachusetts decision the denial of entry or an interdiction of commerce is not a risk within the policy, nor the ground of a claim for total loss or abandonment, whether the vessel be prevented from entering or leaving port.[18]

In a Pennsylvania case the policy was on goods against unlawful restraints, etc., and a blockading squadron drove the vessel away from an intermediate port, and, the blockade being lawful, it was held not a loss covered by the policy.[19] In another case in the same state the warning not to proceed was indorsed on the register, and a distinction was made between the hailing and warning a vessel at sea and entering on board and indorsing the papers; that the writing on a sea letter and register carries with it its own [16] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *788; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 740; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 804 et seq. pp. 1008 et seq. citing Parkin v. Tunno, 11 East, 22, 2 Camp. 59, 10 R. R. 422; Hadkinson v. Robinson, 3 Bos. & P. 388, 7 R. R. 786; Forster v. Christie, 11 East, 205, 10 R. R. 470, and other cases. See also Rodocanachi v. Elliott, 28 L. T. N. S. 840, 845, L. R. 8 C. P. 649, L. R. 9 C. P. 918, 43 L. J. C. P. 255, 31 L. T. 239, 2 Asp. M. C. 399. See also 2 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1846) 628, who states the rule, but says: "Yet the language of the judges leaves us in doubt whether, if the ship enters the foreign port and the property is then seized and confiscated, the loss ought not to be attributed to a peril covered by the policy if when it was effected the existence of the risk was unknown to the assured." See Becker Gray & Co. v. London Assur. Co. 13 Mar. L. Cas. (Part IV. p. CXXX. O. S.) 318, 85 L. J. K. B. 1246, [1916] 2 K. B. 156, 114 L. T. 734, 21 Com. Cas. 258, 32 T. L. R. 511, [1915] 3 K. B. 418, 21 Com. Cas. 41, 31 T. L. R. 38, considered under § 2996a herein.

[17] Vigers v. Ocean Ins. Co. 12 La. Ann. 363, 32 Am. Dec. 118; citing Olivera v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 4 L. ed. 365.

[18] Amory v. Jones, 6 Mass. 318; Brewer v. Union Ins. Co. 12 Mass. *170; Cook v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 122; Tucker v. United Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 288; Richardson v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92; Lee v. Gray, 7 Mass. 349.

[19] Thompson v. Read, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 440.

evidence, to be seen by those who visit the ship thereafter, and that if she then attempts to proceed or return she is liable to be and uniformly is taken.[20]

In a New York decision it is declared that the fear of danger or misfortune is not the misfortune itself.[1] It is also held that where notice of the fact of a blockade was given the consignees received the goods at the nearest neutral port into which the vessel proceeded, and the claim of a total loss was sustained.[2] But it is also there held that assurers are not liable for a loss consequent upon proceeding upon the voyage in total disregard of a notice received and of the danger.[3] Again, it is decided that if there is no evidence that the port of destination is blockaded or trade interdicted, the mere apprehension of seizure or confiscation does not create a loss of the voyage, for the fear of loss is not the loss itself.[4]

Under a Federal Supreme Court decision it constitutes no loss within the policy for which insurers on freight are liable, where the vessel is abandoned by reason of false intelligence and the fear of danger occasioned thereby. In the case so holding, however, the vessel was warned, as in the Pennsylvania case above noted, not to proceed by indorsement on her papers.[5] But the master is not bound to regard an unauthorized threat of seizure by an individual claiming to exercise an authority not warranted; the master is not bound to abandon the voyage under such a threat or warning.[6] In another case in the same court the vessel was [20] Savage v. Pleasants, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 403, 6 Am. Dec. 424. See argument of Brakenridge, J. See as to warning indorsed on papers, King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 71, 3 L. ed. 155, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 300, Fed. Cas. No. 7,788, noted below; Ferguson v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 5 Binn. (Pa.) 544.

[1] In this case it was provided in the policy that if turned away the vessel might proceed to a port not blockaded, and, being warned not to proceed to certain ports, she proceeded to Gibraltar for advice, where she remained several days, and having received permission to proceed to Barcelona, she broke up her voyage on intelligence received, as she was getting under weigh, of the French and Spanish decrees: Craig v. United Ins. Co. 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 226, 5 Am. Dec. 222.

[2] Schmidt v. United Ins. Co. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 249, 3 Am. Dec. 319.

[3] Schmidt v. United Ins. Co. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 249, 3 Am. Dec. 319.

[4] Corp v. United Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 277. See also Wilson v. United Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 227. But see Saltus v. United Ins. Co. 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 523.

[5] King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 71, 3 L. ed. 155, aff'g 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 300, Fed. Cas. No. 7,788. See Savage v. Pleasants, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 403, 6 Am. Dec. 424, above noted.

[6] Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 419, 10 L. ed. 226, aff'g 3 Sum. (C. C.) 270, Fed. Cas. No. 17,738. Cited in Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, 2 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 238, Fed. Cas. No. 5,487; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 382, 44 Am. Dec. 592.

laden before the institution of the blockade, and, being ordered back by the blockading squadron, it was held an unlawful restraint, and the insurers liable.[7] It is, however, also decided that a temporary restraint and delay to avoid capture not being shown to have defeated the object of the voyage, and being removed before any loss took place, and the real cause of the breaking up of the voyage and loss being a fear of loss by seizure, it was not a restraint within the meaning of the policy.[8]

[7] Oliveria v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 4 L. ed. 365.

[8] Smith v. Universal Ins. Co. 6 Wheat. (19 U. S.) 176, 5 L. ed. 235, citing Lubbock v. Rowcroft, 5 Esp. 50, 8 R. R. 830; Hadkinson v. Robinson, 3 Bos. & P. 388, 7 R. R. 786. Examine Symonds v. Union Ins. Co. 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 417, 1 L. ed. 890, 1 Wash. (C. C.) 382, Fed. Cas. No. 12,875. See Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 6, 21, Fed. Cas. No. 374, per Story, J.

Opinions of Courts on the Above.—"The loss must be occasioned by some peril actually insured against; the peril must act directly, and not circuitously, upon the subject of the insurance. It must be an immediate peril, and the loss the proper consequence of it, and it is not sufficient that the voyage be abandoned for fear of the operation of the peril:" Smith v. Universal Ins. Co. 6 Wheat. (19 U. S.) 176, 5 L. ed. 235, per Story, J. "Where underwriters have assured against capture and restraint of princes, and the captain, learning that if he enters the port of his destination the vessel will be lost by confiscation, avoids that port, whereby the object of the voyage is defeated, such circumstances do not amount to a peril operating the total destruction of the thing insured. The doctrine (that assured might abandon in respect to a loss of the voyage) is only applicable to cases in which the loss is occasioned by a peril insured against, which, as it appears to me, must be a peril acting upon the subject insured immediately and not circuitously, as in the present case:" Hadkinson v. Robinson, 3 Bos. & P. 388, 7 R. R. 786, per Lord Alvanley, quoted in 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 786; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 740; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 805, 806, pp. 1009 et seq. The assured "should proceed upon his voyage until the danger of an actual loss is made manifest:" King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 300, Fed. Cas. No. 7,788, per Washington, J.

Opinions of Text-writers on the Above.—So far as Mr. Parsons expresses any opinion, he states in the text that the doctrine is unsettled, and in the note that the principle is generally correct that the fear of a peril insured against is not a good reason for an abandonment, but that the only question is, When is the principle to be applied? 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 585 et seq. In the third edition of Mr. Phillips' Work he says: "In case of the master justifiably turning off to another port of discharge or to his port of departure merely to avoid certain capture at that of the original destination, the risk continues on the ship, cargo, or freight until arrival;" and again: "Where after the risk has begun the voyage is inevitably defeated by blockade or interdiction at the port of departure or destination, or by a hostile fleet being in the way, rendering the proceeding upon it utterly impracticable, or capture or seizure so extremely certain that proceeding would be inexcusable, the risk continues till the vessel has arrived at another port of discharge adopted in-

"Trade in the war region:" apprehension of hostile operations. In the following case the owners insured the ship against war risks because of facts which appear below, and the only points which by analogy make the decision pertinent here are those concerning what constitutes a "war region" and the effect of an apprehension of hostile operations.[9] According to the facts in said case the premium for war risk insurance payable by the owners was to be refunded to them by the charterers if the steamer was ordered by the latter "to trade in the war region." Said stipulation was made by a supplemental agreement to a charter party. It also appeared that in certain North American waters, off Nantucket Island, in October 1916, and in an area about one hundred miles south of where the vessel was trading and was ordered to trade in the future, there had been a case of activity of a German submarine whereby six ships had been destroyed. The question therefore was directly in issue concerning what constituted a war area and whether the activity as above stated of a single submarine was sufficient to constitute said waters where the vessel was ordered to trade such a part of the war region as to entitle the owners, who had paid a highly increased war risk premium, to recover the amount thereof from the charterers under the said supplemental agreement; also whether the facts established that the ship was trading in the war region. Although it was declared by the court that "the mere apprehension that an area might be one in which hostile operations would be carried on was not enough," still it was held that the state of things at the time the insurance was effected, in October, and at the time the ship was trading, as well as the fact that the rate of insurance had greatly increased should be considered, therefore the vessel had been ordered to "trade in the war region." In other words the vessel had been ordered to trade in waters which the said acts of the submarine had then at that time made a war region, and accordingly the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed in an action to recover from the charterers the premiums paid.[10] stead of that originally intended, and also that an assured on the cargo has a right to abandon:" 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 647, 655, 657, sec. 1115. See also Id. p. 666, sec. 1127. Mr. Arnould's opinion is in accord with that expressed as the English rule in the beginning of this subject. "Although," he says, "whether if the question were res integra this decision could be upheld as a sound application of the principles of law is another question." Mr. Maclachlan, referring to these doubts, says, however, "that the position so established is in accordance with the principles of marine insurance law, as applied under other circumstances; also besides those that are here specially discussed:" 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 788; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 741. See Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 804 et seq. pp. 1008 et seq.

[9] See §§ 2139a, 2569a herein.

[10] Maskinonge Steamship Co. v.

§ 2778. Same subject: conclusion.—It is no doubt true that a mere fear of danger or a peril insured against is too remote to be considered a peril operating to effect a loss or to justify an abandonment; nor is a mere apprehension of loss which is not justified by the facts a sufficient ground for relinquishing the voyage. The restraint must be something more than a merely expected or contingent one, but if we pass beyond the point of fear, mere expectation, or unjustified apprehension to that where the danger becomes so imminent that it is almost a certainty that the vessel will if she proceeds sustain an actual loss, the question is at once suggested whether the fear of the danger has not become merged to such an extent in the danger itself that there is an actual operative restraint; as where the vessel is turned away by a blockading squadron at the port of destination.[11]

§ 2779. Fire.—The questions of what constitutes a loss by fire and what is fire have given rise in numerous cases to exhaustive discussions, especially in those decisions which relate to explosion, lightning, falling walls, etc., and necessitates the inquiry whether "fire," as that word is used in policies covering that risk, is the proximate cause of loss under the circumstances of each particular case. What is "fire" is a question not clearly settled so as to be applicable to all cases. Reference must, however, be had to the meaning of that term as used in the contract, and should not be confined to any technical and restricted meaning dependent upon a scientific analysis of its nature and properties, and while it should be construed in its ordinary signification, still it should not receive that general and extended meaning which is sometimes applied to the term. It should be given that construction which conforms to the popular ordinary sense in which it is used. It is rather an effect, than an elementary principle; it is the effect of combustion, and is equivalent to ignition or burning; yet heat is not "fire." Timber may be contracted from the heat of the sun, and a loss be thereby sustained, yet it is not a loss by "fire," although there may be a loss from heat, and "fire," nevertheless, be the proximate

Dominion Coal Co. 33 T. L. R. 340 (C. A.) rev'g 33 T. L. R. 132.—Bailhache, J.

[11] "A just fear of one of the perils insured against," says Chancellor Kent, "has been deemed equivalent to vis major when that has been applied directly and effectually; as in the case of a blockading squadron so as to break up the voyage. The danger was imminent, and might be present and palpable, as well as apparently remediless and morally certain. If therefore, the danger be so great as to amount to almost a certainty of capture, it becomes a restraint in contemplation of the policy, and this is the doctrine best supported by authority:" 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 293, 294.

cause of such loss.[1] So a burning lamp is not itself a "fire,"[2] nor is a burning gas jet itself a "fire" or a destructive force, against the immediate effects of which a policy is intended as a protection, even though a possible means of putting a destructive force in motion.[3] So the fire causing an explosion and which may constitute a ground of recovery under a clause excluding liability for loss by explosion must be something more than a mere blaze produced by lighting a match, gas jet, or lamp. An actual fire, in accordance with the commonly accepted meaning of that word, is what is intended.[4] These statements as to the lamp and gas jet should not be confused with the ignition or combustion which ensues by reason of the accidental contact with some part of the building of a gas jet or by the overturning of a lamp. Lightning per se is not "fire."[5] Fire, as noted elsewhere, when used for certain manufacturing and other special purposes, and while confined within the limits where it is usually kept for such purposes, is not "fire" within the terms of the policy.[6] Fire covers a loss by the breaking of machinery where the same is caused by the direct operation of fire upon electrical machinery.[7] Whatever may be held to be the meaning of the word "fire" in any particular case before the court, losses by fire will cover every loss, damage, or injury to the insured property of which "fire" is the proximate cause. It includes every loss necessarily following from the occurrence of a fire, if it arises directly

[1] Babcock v. Montgomery Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637, per Pratt, J.; Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J.

"Fire" defined, see Sun Insurance Office v. Western Woolen Mill Co. 72 Kan. 41, 82 Pac. 513.

[2] Briggs v. North America Mercantile Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446, 447, per Peckham, J.; Fitzgerald v. German-American Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. Supp. 824, 30 Misc. 72.

[3] United States Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735, per McIlvaine, J. But see Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Parker, 23 Ohio St. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 228.

[4] German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 42 Colo. 156, 94 Pac. 27, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 77; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Bergheim, 21 Colo. App. 527, 122 Pac. 812, 41 Ins. L. J. 1107, 1109.—Walling, J.; Mitchell v. Potomac Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 42, 46 L. ed. 74, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 Ins. L. J. 570, cited in Vorse v. Jersey Plate Glass Ins. Co. 119 Iowa, 555, 560, 60 L.R.A. 838, 840, 97 Am. St. Rep. 330, 93 N. W. 569. And citing Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70; United Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340; Briggs v. North American & Mercantile Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 446, 449.

[5] Babcock v. Montgomery Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637; Kenniston v. Merrimack Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193. See § 2790 herein.

[6] Austin v. Drewe, 4 Camp. 360, 2 Marsh. 130, 6 Taunt. 436, Holt, 126, 16 R. R. 647; Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550. See Jameson v. Royal Ins. Co. 7 Ir. C. L. 126. See §§ 2768–72, 2796 herein.

[7] See § 2761 herein, "Electrical Machinery and Fixtures," etc.

and immediately from the peril or necessarily from judicially admissible and surrounding circumstances, the operation and influence of which could not be avoided. It is not necessary that the identical property, or even any part of it, be consumed or burned or even ignited. If the loss be the direct effect of ignition or burning, or be the result of bona fide efforts justified by the circumstances to save property, as in the case of removal of goods, the destruction of buildings to prevent the spread of a conflagration, the use of water to extinguish the fire, it is a loss by fire. The fire may not extend to the particular articles insured; they may be shriveled, cracked, or discolored by intense heat, the effect of an actual fire, or damaged by smoke, or may be broken or stolen while being removed or while other efforts are made to save them from the impending peril. So a loss from falling cinders, falling walls weakened by fire, or the fall of burning buildings may be a loss by "fire." This rule is clearly deducible from and well settled by the cases, and the principles involved run through the opinions of the courts and a long line of decisions.[8]

A policy against loss or damage by fire without qualification is broad enough to include all fires of whatever origin and all damages therefrom of whatever character.[9] So a risk covering all loss or damage by fire includes loss occasioned to goods in the building caused by the accidental ignition of soot in the chimney or the smoke arising therefrom.[10] If the identity of a building

[8] United States.—Magoun v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 157, Fed. Cas. No. 8,961.

Connecticut. — Norwich & New York Transportation Co. v. Western Ins. Co. 34 Conn. 561.

Louisiana. — Balestracci v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 844; Geisek v. Crescent Mutual Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 297; McCargo v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 202, 43 Am. Dec. 180.

Maine.—White v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. 57 Me. 91, 2 Am. Rep. 22, per Dickenson, J.; Witherell v. Maine Ins. Co. 49 Me. 200.

Massachusetts.—New York & Boston Despatch Express Co. v. Traders & Mechanics Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 377, 42 Am. Rep. 440, per Endicott, J.; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. R. Co. 109 Mass. 277; Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J.; Lewis v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 159.

Michigan.—Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 11 Mich. 425.

New York.—City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258; Patrick v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 14, and cases throughout this chapter; Babcock v. Montgomery Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 636; Austin v. Drew, 2 Marsh. 130, 6 Taunt. 436, 4 Camp. 360, 16 R. R. 647, Holt, N. P. 126, 127, per Gibbs, C. J.

[9] Renshaw v. Missouri State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 103 Mo. 595, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, 15 S. W. 945.

[10] Way v. Abington Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 166 Mass. 67, 55 Am. St. Rep. 379, 32 L.R.A. 608, 43 N. E. 1032. Examine § 2796 herein.

is not destroyed by its being blown from its foundation just before a fire, and there are no exceptions in the policy relative to the cause of fire, a recovery is not precluded thereby for a loss by fire originating from a stove or from lightning.[11] But where a lamp accidentally flames up and damage is sustained by reason of the smoke and soot therefrom, this is not a loss by fire.[12] And under a policy against all direct loss or damage by fire, the insurer is not liable for damage arising from smoke and soot escaping from a defective stovepipe and resulting from a fire intentionally built in a stove and kept confined therein, nor for damage caused by water used in cooling a portion of the building heated by such stovepipe, when the use of such water is not necessary to prevent ignition.[13] Nor is damage occasioned by escaping steam from a steam heat-pipe, although the furniture and books of a library are charred and injured thereby, a loss by fire.[14] And damage to goods by an explosion of gas is not a loss by fire within the meaning of a policy, where the goods were not burned, but damaged by the falling of a floor caused by the explosion, although the explosion was produced by the lighting of a match.[15] If the policy excludes explosion unless fire ensues, the policy insures against loss by fire, and even if a rider may suffice to annul such exemption clause and leave the policy as one of insurance against direct loss or damage by fire, it does not avail to interpolate the word "explosion," and the difficulty is not met by the suggestion that the striking of a match involves fire, and that the explosion was an incident of the fire where the fire does no damage except by reason of the explosion, as a loss of that kind is a loss by explosion and not by fire upon the principle that it is the proximate and not the remote cause that controls.[16] But whether explosion of certain substances is a loss by "fire" has, however, been noted elsewhere.[17]

[11] Farrell v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 66 Mo. App. 153, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1297.

[12] Samuels v. Continental Ins. Co. (Pa. C. P.) 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 397. See § 2796 herein.

[13] Cannon v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 110 Ga. 563, 78 Am. St. Rep. 124, 35 S. E. 775, 29 Ins. L. J. 1023.

On loss caused by excessive heat, smoke, or soot from heating apparatus without actual ignition, see note in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 501.

But as to "direct loss or damage by fire," compare Drumbolus v. Home Ins. Co. 37 Ont. L. Rep. 465, considered under § 2837 herein.

[14] Gibbons v. German Ins. & Savings Inst. 30 Ill. App. 263.

[15] Heuer v. Northwestern National Ins. Co. 144 Ill. 393, 19 L.R.A. 954, 33 N. E. 411. See Stephens v. Fire Assoc. of Phila. 139 Mo. App. 369, 123 S. W. 63, 39 Ins. L. J. 232.

[16] Ross v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 88 N. J. L. 340, 84 Atl. 1050, 42 Ins. L. J. 94.

On explosion clause in fire insurance policy, see note in 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 607.

[17] See §§ 2768–72 herein.

§ 2780. Fire: marine risk.—The common form of a marine policy covers the risk of fire at sea in a steamer.[18] But the fact that a memorandum of insurance against fire on an unfinished vessel lying at a wharf is entered in the marine docket of an insurance company does not determine the nature of the contract and make it one of marine insurance.[19] If the ship be justified in putting into dry dock for repairs, and is there burned, she is covered by a marine policy insuring against fire.[20] Under an open policy, however, on provisions until landed the insurers are not liable for their destruction by fire after being landed.[1] In marine insurances, as stated elsewhere, the ordinary policy against fire does not cover spontaneous combustion caused by inherent infirmities of the insured cargo.[2] In an English case, however, insurance was effected upon freight valued at a specified amount on the voyage. The policies were in the ordinary form covering perils of "the seas, fire, jettisons, and of all other perils, losses and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said subject matter of insurance or any part thereof." The vessel was chartered to carry coal from Newcastle to Valparaiso at a certain freight per ton payable on delivery. The coal was shipped in January, the vessel sailed the following month, and the next day it was discovered that a part of the cargo was hot and that the heat was rapidly increasing and for the general safety of ship, cargo and freight the [18] Pattison v. Mills, 1 Dow. & C. (N. S.) 342, 2 Bligh (N. S.) 519.

Policy on steamer on Great Lakes insuring "against the risk of fire only, including general average and salvage charges arising therefrom" is a fire policy under Assurance Companies Act 1909, United London & Scottish Ins. Co., In re (Newport Navigation Cos' Claim) [1915] 2 Ch. 12, 84 L. J. Ch. 544, 20 Com. Cas. 300, 113 L. T. 400, 59 S. J. 529, 31 T. L. R. 424, aff'g 31 T. L. R. 261.

Contract insuring moored vessel against fire loss is not maritime: hospital ship, City of Detroit v. Grummond, 121 Fed. 963, 58 C. C. A. 101.

As to statutory exemption of shipowners from liability for fire: loss of cargo by fire during deviation, see The Indrapura (U. S. D. C.) 171 Fed. 929, 38 Ins. L. J. 1163.

[19] Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 36 Pa. St. 256, 94 Am. Dec. 65.

[20] Ellery v. New England Ins. Co. 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 14, 20, per Putnam, J. See also Pelly v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 1 Burr. 341, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 30; Brough v. Whitmore, 4 Term Rep. 206, 2 R. R. 361. Examine Harrison v. Ellis, 7 El. & B. 465, 26 L. J. Q. B. 239, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 908, 5 W. R. 494; Martin v. Salem Ins. Co. 2 Mass. 420.

[1] Mansur v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 520. See Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Merchants & Miners Transportation Co. 66 Md. 339, 59 Am. Rep. 162, 7 Atl. 905, and cases in last note.

[2] Providence-Washington Ins. Co. v. Adler, 65 Md. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 314. Examine Boyd v. Dubois, 3 Camp. 133; Taylor v. Dunbar, L. R. 4 Com. P. 206, 38 L. J. C. P. 178, 17 W. R. 382; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 17, pp. 349, 350. See c. xii. sec. 9, pp. 311 et seq.

master put into Sydney. As a result of surveys a greater part of the cargo was discharged and sold upon the recommendations of the surveyors. The vessel finally sailed from said port and delivered the remaining cargo of coal at Valparaiso. That portion of the freight which would have been earned under the charter party was lost, as no freight was paid or payable, as to the coal sold at Sydney. Neither unseaworthiness nor the proper condition of cargo was relied on as a defense, as the coal loaded at Sydney was necessarily and properly sold there as it could not have been reloaded and carried with safety to Valparaiso. It was held that even though the fire did not actually break out it was so reasonably certain that it would have broken out, and that if nothing were done, spontaneous combustion and fire would have followed, that something more than a mere fear of fire existed and the condition of things was such that there was an actual existing state of peril by fire so that the loss, if not one by fire, was nevertheless a loss ejusdem generis and covered by the general words "all other losses or misfortunes," etc.; therefore the defendants were directly liable for the loss of freight as a partial loss. The point, however, was not raised as to the right of defendants to deduct in settling the loss the amount which plaintiff and his co-owners as owners of the ship were liable to contribute in general average towards the loss of freight.[2a] And the ordinary policy covers damage by fire caused by lightning or by the fire of enemies,[3] and the destruction of a ship to prevent a capture.[4] Where a collision occurred by which a steamer, which was insured against fire only, was stove in and the fire in the furnaces was forced out from the boilers and set fire to the steamer, causing the vessel to sink, the jury found that the vessel would have floated [2a] The Knight of St. Michael [1898] P. 30, 67 L. J. P. 19, 78 L. T. 90, 46 W. R. 396, 8 Asp. M. C. 360, 3 Com. Cas. 62, relying upon Stanley v. Western Ins. Co. 37 L. J. Ex. 73, L. R. 3 Ex. 71; Butler v. Wildman, 1 Camp. 123, 3 B. & Ald. 398, 22 R. R. 435; McGibbon v. Queen Ins. Co. 10 Low. Can. Jur. 227; Nobels Explosives Co., Ltd. v. Jenkins, 1 Com. Cas. 436; Porter's Ins. Law, p. 123.

[3] See § 2790 herein, and notes.

[4] Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123, 10 R. R. 656. Same principle in Kohn v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 12 La. (O. S.) 348. And examine Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 17, pp. 350–52, who says: "But when it is impossible to resist the enemy and to avoid being taken, it is commendable in them to set fire to the vessel and take refuge on shore with the crew. The insurers are liable for the loss happening under such circumstances." In a note thereto by Meredith, at page 351, it is said: "Emerigon, Valin, and Pothier agree that the wilful destruction of the ship under such circumstances is lawful, provided the crew make their escape. In England, the case of Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123, 10 R. R. 656, accords with the text, except that it affixes no such humane condition."

had not the fire burned away the light upper woodwork of the steamer. It was held that the insurers were liable for the damages caused by the fire and sinking of the vessel, but not for damages caused by the collision.[5] And where the insurer of a vessel assumes by express covenant all risk of damages thereto by fires, with the one exception of those caused by explosion of boilers, a subsequent clause in the policy in which the assured warrants in general terms that the insurer shall be free from any claims for loss or damage occasioned inter alia "by the collapsing of flues" will not relieve the insurer from liability for loss by fire occasioned by the collapsing of a flue.[6] Again, the meaning of the general word "at" after the enumeration of specific perils may, it is held, be extended by the introduction of the word "fire" into a specification of perils.[7] But if goods are shipped in a damaged condition and ignition or combustion ensues in consequence, the insurer is not liable, except as to such goods on board as in no way contributed thereto.[8] If, however, insured warrants that his yacht shall be laid up during a certain period within the life of the policy, said policy continues in force during that time, and in case a fire should occur upon the dock to which the vessel is fastened, and it is communicated to the yacht, causing its destruction, it is a loss by fire rendering assurer liable.[9]

§ 2781. Freight.[10]—If by reason of the perils insured against the ship sustains such loss that she is prevented from transporting the [5] Norwich & New York Transportation Co. v. Western Ins. Co. 34 Conn. 561.

[6] Louisville Underwriters v. Durland, 123 Ind. 544, 7 L.R.A. 399, 24 N. E. 221.

[7] West India & Panama Telegraph Co. v. Home & Colonial Marine Ins. Co. 6 Q. B. D. 51, 50 L. J. Q. B. 41, 43 L. T. 420, 29 W. R. 92, 4 Asp. M. C. 341. But see Thames & Mersey Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, L. R. 12 App. C. 484, 56 L. J. Q. B. 626, 17 Q. B. D. 195, 57 L. T. 695, 36 W. R. 337, 6 Asp. M. C. 200.

[8] Boyd v. Dubois, 3 Camp. 133. See Montoya v. London Assur. Co. 6 Exch. 451, 20 L. J. Ex. 254, 17 L. T. (O. S.) 82, 86 R. R. 364; Koebel v. Saunders, 33 L. J. Com. P. 310, 17 C. B. (N. S.) 71, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 920, 10 L. T. 695, 12 W. R. 1106. Emerigon mentions a case where the ship was refused entry, and was set fire to from fear of the plague, and states that the insurers paid the loss without any difficulty. He also notes another instance where the authorities of the port directed the vessel to be burnt for the same cause, and the insurers being proceeded against were first held liable, but this sentence was reversed. In this latter case the defense was rested upon the fault of the captain: Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 17, pp. 348, 349.

[9] So declared by Haight, J., in Robinson v. Insurance Co. of North America, 198 N. Y. 523, 91 N. E. 373, 39 Ins. L. J. 791, rev'g 113 N. Y. Supp. 105, 129 App. Div. 1. The decision was, however, one principally of waiver of the warranty, as the assured caused the yacht to be removed. See Manheim Ins. Co. v. Tyner, 142 Ky. 22, 133 S. W. 1000.

[10] See § 2732 herein.

As to attachment and duration of goods, or if the goods are lost so that freight may not be earned, there is a loss of freight.[11] The contract contemplates that the goods shall arrive at the port of delivery notwithstanding the perils specified.[12] But the owner of a cargo who has paid freight in advance to the owners cannot recover under a policy insuring prepaid freight, the money being advanced for freight of a cargo owned by assured, and not an absolute payment of freight, and the assured not having any interest in the earnings of the vessel either by way of pledge or lien, and it appearing by the bill of lading that the cargo must be carried to its destination or no freight would be earned, and that a recovery back of the sum advanced could be had for nonfulfillment of the contract to deliver by carrier.[13] In a New York case the advances were made to the master under the terms of the charter-party not in excess of one-third the freight and in part payment of freight, and it was held that such advance was freight earned, and the insurers were not liable therefor as for freight lost, even though it had been restored to the charterers by the master upon claim made therefor by them.[14] And if a cargo is waiting at a port, but a vessel on a voyage there is lost, the contract of the owner of the vessel to transship said cargo entitles him to freight which would have become due, he being in such a situation, with respect to the vessel and cargo, that nothing but a peril insured against prevents his earning freight.[15] risk on freight, see §§ 1606 et seq. herein.

As to abandonment and total loss; freight, see §§ 2893, 2901, 2906 et seq., 2915 et seq. herein.

As to law of freight in prize proceedings (neutral vessels) see Article "Prize Cases in the English Courts Arising Out of the Present War," by Russell T. Mount, 17 Columbian L. Rev. pp. 185–207.

If the subject of insurance under certificates is freight the insurance is not invalid because two of the running policies under which certificates were issued were upon cargo, Tweedie Trading Co. v. Western Assurance Co. 179 Fed. 103, 102 C. C. A. 397, 39 Ins. L. J. 1342, aff'g 168 Fed. 962.

[11] Whitney v. New York Fireman's Ins. Co. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; De Longeumere v. New York Fire Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 201, 202; De Wolf v. State Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Duer (N. Y.) 191; Stevens v. Columbian Ins. Co. 3 Caines (N. Y.) 43, 2 Am. Dec. 247; Meech v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 3 Whart. (Pa.) 473; Davidson v. Willasdy, 1 Maule & S. 313, 14 R. R. 438; Barclay v. Sterling, 5 Maule & S. 6, 17 R. R. 245; Montgomery v. Egginton, 3 Term Rep. 362, 1 R. R. 718. See case under note 2a above.

[12] De Wolf v. State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 6 Duer (N. Y.) 191. See also opinion of Thompson, D. J., near end of this section.

[13] Minturn v. Warren Ins. Co. 2 Allen (84 Mass.) 86.

[14] Kinsman v. New York Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 460.

[15] Adams v. Warren Ins. Co. 22 Pick. (39 Mass.) 143; Hart v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 346, Fed. Cas. No. 6,150; McGaw v. Ocean Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (40 Mass.) 405, 409, per Shaw, C. J.; Robinson v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 1 Met. (4 Mass.) 146, per Shaw, C. J.; Davy v.

If a cargo of cotton is so greatly damaged and injured by a sea peril that it is sold by the consent of the master and shippers at the port of departure, where the vessel has put back because of injuries sustained, and the vessel takes another cargo and proceeds on a different voyage, the insurers on freight are not liable.[16] Again, a vessel under a policy of freight insurance while on her voyage was disabled, unloaded her cargo, and was laid up for repairs, but winter set in and she was unable to proceed on account of the ice, whereupon the master voluntarily surrendered the cargo free of freight to the underwriters of the shippers. It was held that the free surrender was premature, and that no recovery of freight money could be had on the cargo thus surrendered.[17] In another case the vessel was not in seaworthy condition for the voyage when she sailed. She never arrived at her port of destination, but after encountering violent storms and leaking badly, she put into port and was there allowed to fill while lying in the harbor, and part of her cargo was discharged to enable surveyors to examine her hull. Her leaky condition was not the result of the strain of the voyage, and although upon a survey certain damage was found due to sea perils, as to which damage she could have been repaired, still it was also found that the greater part of the damage was due to wear, tear, rot, or other natural defects. She was condemned, but the condemnation was based upon the fact that the master reported to the surveyors that he was without funds and that the owners refused to give any money to pay the expense, and that he could not discharge any more cargo or effect any repairs. It was held that insurer was not liable for the failure of the vessel to earn freight. It was also decided that such a condemnation would not warrant a finding that the voyage was broken up by reason of the perils insured against and that such sale, and condemnation were without weight as evidence on which to hold insurer liable. The court, per Thompson, D. J., quotes from a Federal Supreme Court decision[18] as follows: " 'The contract of insurance upon freight is that the goods shall arrive at the port of delivery notwithstanding the perils insured against; and that, if they fail thus to arrive, and the owner is thereby unable to earn his freight, the underwriter will make it good. It does not undertake that the goods shall be delivered in a sound or merchantable state, or that Hallett, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 16, 19, 2 Am. Dec. 241. See chapters on Insurable Interest herein.

[16] Jordan v. Warren Ins. Co. 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 342, Fed. Cas. No. 7,524.

[17] Allen v. Mercantile Mutual Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 437, 4 Am. Rep. 700.

[18] Hugg v. Augusta Insurance & Banking Co. 7 How. (48 U. S.) 595, 12 L. ed. 834.

the vessel in which they are shipped shall be safe against the dangers of the sea, but that it shall be in the power of the insured to earn his freight; that is, that the perils insured against shall not prevent the ship from earning full freight for the assured in that voyage. If the ship and cargo remain, notwithstanding the disasters, in a condition to continue the voyage, it is in his power to earn freight, and he is bound to proceed; but if damage happens to either, and the voyage is broken up, so that no freight can be earned, the owner is entitled to recover, as for a total or partial loss, according as he may or may not have earned freight pro rata itineris. If the damage happens to the vessel, and that can be repaired at the port of distress in a reasonable time, and a reasonable expense, it is the duty of the owner to make the repairs, and to continue the voyage and earn his freight. . . . In every case, before he can recover of the underwriter, he must show that he was prevented by one of the perils insured against from completing the voyage and, for that reason, had failed to entitle himself to freight from the shippers.' "[19] This subject as to loss of freight is further considered elsewhere.[20]

§ 2782. Hail.—Insurances are effected upon crops against hail. As stated substantially in the first edition of this work, the question of what constitutes a loss by hail within the meaning of that term and peculiar thereto, had not been before the courts so far as we could ascertain. Questions have, however, arisen as to the extent of loss by hail, evidence in relation thereto, and the amount or measure of recovery or of damages where crops have been injured thereby, but the consideration thereof comes within the discussion of those subjects herein. Although the following authorities may be considered here.

In an Iowa case there was question as to insured's duty in case of a partial loss to care for the remaining portion of the crop, to the best of his ability, or as he and the insurer's representatives should agree and exempting insurer in case of such neglect and also requiring when such damaged crop should be harvested a true account of the grain, etc., grown upon the land covered by the insurance, and that the same should be kept and delivered to insurer certified by disinterested witnesses; and this requirement was held sufficiently complied with when delay in taking care of the crop was forced by the condition of the weather so that a part thereof was not gathered until late and a statement was made nearly a year thereafter of the amount of yield of said part which was arrived at by averaging acreage and the unharvested part with that gathered.[1]

[19] Stetson v. Insurance Co. of North America (U. S. D. C.) 215 Fed. 186, 44 Ins. L. J. 554.

[20] See total loss, etc., proximate and remote cause, insurable interest, valuation, etc.

Where an application was made for a policy of hail insurance on wheat, but before it was issued the wheat was destroyed, it was declared that there was nothing to insure at the time the policy was issued, so that insurer could incur no liability by reason of having issued it, and insured could derive no benefit therefrom. While this is applied in a decision holding on said grounds that a note given for the premium in such a case was wholly without consideration and void, nevertheless the converse of the proposition would be equally true so that recovery on the policy under such circumstances would be precluded.[2] But a recovery may be had for damages suffered to a growing crop of corn by reason of the destruction thereof by hail, even though no liability arises from any contract of insurance, as when said injury or loss to the plaintiff is occasioned solely on account of the negligent failure of insured's agent to forward within a reasonable time an application for insurance on said crop; and a hail insurance company which issued the policy the day after destruction of said crop, is liable to the extent of such damages as might have been recovered had the policy been issued and in force before such loss occurred.[2a] And if assurer's liability, under a policy in a mutual insurance company, indemnifying insured against loss of crops by hail, is to terminate on a certain date, a recovery cannot be had for such a loss after noon of that date, where this last time limit is fixed by amendment of the by-laws under a reserved power in the contract and by-laws to amend.[2b] Again, where there is a statutory "condition precedent to establish any claim or liability" on the part of a policy holder who sustains a loss by hail, such requirement must be complied with before in-

[1] Barry v. Farmers' Mutual Hail Assoc. 110 Iowa, 433, 81 N. W. 690, 29 Ins. L. J. 261 (The questions of evidence as to the yield of like crops etc., and the measure of recovery or damages were in issue in this case). As to same storm and action against same defendant see Barry v. Farmers' Mutual Hail Assoc. 114 Iowa, 186, 86 N. W. 290; McIlrath v. Farmers' Mutual Hail Assoc. 114 Iowa, 244, 86 N. W. 310, 30 Ins. L. J. 728 (also covering amount or measure of recovery or damages and evidence). See also Condon v. Des Moines Mutual Hail Ins. Assoc. 120 Iowa, 80, 94 N. W. 477 (as to evidence upon the point of damages and yield of other crops): Mutual Hail Ins. Co. v. Wilde, 8 Neb. 427, 1 N. W. 384 (as to appraisement and mode of determining damage).

[2] Van Arsdale-Osbourne Brokerage Co. v. Patterson (1916) — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 1131.

[2a] Boyer v. State Farmers' Mutual Hail Ins. Co. 86 Kan. 442, 121 Pac. 329, 41 Ins. L. J. 786.

[2b] Flakne v. Minnesota Farmers' Mutual Hail Ins. Co. 105 Minn. 479, 117 N. W. 785. As to right of mutual hail association to amend by-laws, see Elliott v. Home Mutual Hail Assoc. 160 Iowa, 105, 140 N. W. 431. See also §§ 377 et seq. herein.

sured under such statute is entitled to have "his claim for such amount as the company is liable for, set off against any note of . . . which the company may hold." [2c]

§ 2783. Hire: chartered freight: delay: derangement of machinery or engines: want of repairs: "free from any claim consequent on loss of time."—If the terms of a charter-party provide that in case the voyage is delayed more than twenty-four working or running hours by reason of the breaking down of engines or machinery, or for want of repairs preventing the vessel working, then the payment of hire shall cease until the vessel is again in an efficient state to prosecute her voyage, and a policy is on freight chartered against loss by the perils of the sea, fire, etc., the insurer is liable for a loss of hire immediately caused by a peril insured against, whereby the vessel is delayed beyond the time specified. So the clause of the charter-party is put in operation by the perils of the sea, so as to render the insurers liable, where there is such a derangement or breaking down of the machinery or engines through perils of the sea that it becomes necessary to tow her into port, and she is delayed beyond the time specified. In the cases from which the above statement is deduced one was where the vessel was damaged by fire, a peril insured against, whereby the delay was necessitated; the other was where a peril of the sea caused the breaking of machinery, whereby the delay was rendered unavoidable, yet in both cases the efficient cause of the loss was a peril insured against, and by such peril the clause in the charter-party was put in operation.[3]

Where there was a special clause providing that chartered freight and freights are "warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise" and the subject matter was described as "upon freight of frozen meat," Mathew, J., said: "It was not disputed that the words 'or otherwise,' meant other perils insured against. . . . Frozen meat must be shipped at the time specified in the contracts with the shippers and the shipments cannot be delayed. Where the vessel is disabled from fulfilling her engagements, frozen meat, in the ordinary course, would be forwarded in another vessel. A delay involving no great length of time, due to damage by perils insured against, either to ship or machinery, would prevent the vessel from earning freight contracted for." The action was brought to recover total loss on freight on such a cargo. Shortly after arrival at the port of discharge, the vessel discharged her outward cargo and the vessels refrigerating machinery was so damaged by a fire which occurred on board that she was disabled from carrying a cargo of frozen meat. Materials for repairs of said machinery could not be procured at that port and must have been brought from England, and it was determined by the owners to send the vessel there for repairs with such ordinary cargo as she could procure. It was decided that the ship was damaged by a peril insured against and her capacity to carry frozen meat was suspended until her machinery had been repaired, and the earning of freight was therefore rendered commercially impossible, and the loss was "consequent on loss of time" within the words of the warranty. It was also said: "An attempt was made to distinguish the present case from the decision in Bensaude v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co.,[4] on the ground that this was not chartered freight; but the warranty applies not only to chartered freight, but to all freights, and the several contracts of affreightment made with shippers would seem to have the same operation as if they were grouped in a charter-party. In each case the result of the peril insured against would have been the same—namely to disable the ship from fulfilling her engagements in proper time. It seems to me no such distinction can be reasonably made." [5]

[2c] Union Mutual Ins. Co. v. Huntsberry, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 327; Rev. L. 1910 Ann. sec. 3552.

[3] The Bedouin, 63 L. J. Adm. 30 [1894] P. 1, 6 R. 693, 69 L. T. 782, 42 W. R. 292, 7 Asp. M. C. 391; The Alps, 62 L. J. Adm. 59, [1893] P. 109, 68 L. T. 624, 41 W. R. 527, 7 Asp. M. C. 337.

§ 2784. "Hull and machinery" does not cover "disbursements."—"Hull and machinery" of a steamship does not cover those things included by "disbursement" policies, such as coals, stores, and expenses.[6]

§ 2784a. Hull and machinery: "latent defects:" peril of "trial trips."—In an English case the insurance was upon the hull and machinery of a torpedo boat destroyer, then being built, and the perils which were insured against under a time policy were: "Fire in shops and on board, on stocks, trials, and all marine risks to completion and acceptance by the admiralty" and also perils of the seas, "and all other perils, losses, or misfortunes," and the policy further provided by a clause attached thereto: "This insurance also specially covers loss of or damage to hull or machinery through the negligence of master, mariners, engineers or pilots, or through explosions, bursting of boilers, breakage of shafts, or through any latent defect in the machinery, boilers, or hull, . . . with leave to go on trial

[4] 66 L. J. Q. B. 666 (1897) A. C. 609, 77 L. T. 282, 46 W. R. 78, 8 Asp. M. C. 315, 2 Com. Cas. 33, 238 (1897) 1 Q. B. 29 (same clause).

[5] Turnbull, Martin & Co. v. Hull Underwriters Assoc. 69 L. J. Q. B. 588 [1900] 2 Q. B. 402, 82 L. T. 818, 5 Com. Cas. 248, 9 Asp. M. C. 93.

[6] Roddick v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 L. R. Q. B. D. 380, 384, 385, 64 L. J. Q. B. 733, 1 Q. B. 836, 14 R. 516, 72 L. T. 860, 44 W. R. 27, 8 Asp. M. C. 24, per Lord Esher, M. R., and Kay, L. J.

trips." While she was on trial, the connecting rod of the starboard high pressure engine broke. The jaws of the connecting rod split and broke causing great damage. It was held that weakness of design was the cause of the fracture and that such weakness of design was not covered by "latent defect in the machinery;" that "breakage of shafts" did not cover breakage of connecting rods, but that peril of "trials" was a peril insured against and the damage to the machinery occurring during said trial was covered.[7]

§ 2785. Improper navigation of ship.—In case of an agreement of members of a shipping association to indemnify one another inter alia for "loss or damage of or to any goods or merchandise caused by the improper navigation of the ship," a neglect of the shipowner to efficiently close a loading port before the completion of the loading, whereby the goods are damaged by sea water leaking in during the voyage, is damage by "improper navigation" under the agreement, although the ship is not endangered or her navigation impeded by the leakage.[8]

§ 2786. Insolvency of purchasers of goods: annual returns from trade: credit insurance.—Insurers may become liable for the loss by insolvency or bankruptcy of purchasers of goods, or for the loss of gross annual returns from trade within a limited time or subject to certain conditions, where it is permitted to effect such contracts. The liability will, however, as in other cases, depend upon the observance of the stipulations of the contract, and the insurers will become released by nonobservance.[9]

(a) Construction generally: riders.—In so far as these contracts are those of insurance under the rules of construction generally applied in this country, care should be taken in applying the English decisions covering such credit guaranty bond or insurance con-

[7] Jackson v. Mumford, 51 Wkly. Rep. 91, 8 Com. Cas. 61, 9 Com. Cas. 114, 52 W. R. 342, 20 Times L. R. 172. See Hutchins Bros. v. Royal Exchange Assur. Corp. [1911] 2 K. B. 398, 105 L. T. 6, 80 L. J. K. B. 1169, 12 Asp. M. C. 21, 27 T. L. R. 482, 16 Com. Cas. 242. See §§ 2169a, 2736 ("Inchmaree" clause: latent defects) herein.

As to damage to hull and machinery through negligence of master or through latent defects: breakage of propeller blades, see New York & Porto Rico Steamship Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 204 Fed. 255, 122 C. C. A. 523, Aff'g 192 Fed. 212.

[8] Carmichael v. Liverpool Sailing Ship Owners Mutual Indemnity Assoc. 56 L. J. Q. B. 428, 19 Q. B. D. 242, 57 L. T. 550, 35 W. R. 793, 6 Asp. Mar. C. 184. See also as to the words "improper navigation," Canada Shipping Co. v. British Shipowners' Mutual Protective Assoc. 6 Asp. Mar. C. 422, 58 L. J. Q. B. 462, 23 Q. B. D. 342, 61 L. T. 312, 38 W. R. 87.

[9] Solvency Mutual Guarantee Ins. Co. v. Freeman, 7 Hurl. & N. 17; Solvency Mutual Guarantee Co. v. Froane, 7 Hurl. & N. 5; Solvency Mutual Guarantee Co. v. York, 3 Hurl. & N. *588.

As to validity of credit guaranty insurance, see §§ 12, 2516 herein.

tracts for the reason that even in insurance law in England the rule of strict construction finds greater favor with the courts than does our rule of construction against insurer.[10]

Generally stated if a rider is attached to the policy and provides that "it shall in all respects have the same effect as if its provisions had been incorporated in the body of" a certain section of the policy as to rating of the debtor, both the policy and the rider constitute only one contract and the terms of the latter enter into the construction of the former in determining the limit of liability as to both rated and unrated accounts, the calculation of losses, the amount from which the initial loss must be deducted and what, if any, amount is recoverable by assured.[11] The effect of a rider may, however, be merely such as to antedate the policy for a certain period where it is made so as to relate back to cover all outstanding accounts which had been created during the regular course of business in said certain period preceding the policy date.[12]

(b) "Initial loss:" construction generally.—This distinction should be observed that credit guaranty insurance differs from other kinds of insurance in this, that the insured or indemnified carries what is designated as an initial loss which must be first borne by the latter before assurer, or the indemnifier, becomes liable.[13] So that under the terms of the policy the assured's, or indemnified's percentage of the loss may be much larger than that assumed by assurer, as in a New York case where under the terms of the contract the initial loss assumed by assured was about seventy two per cent of the total loss while the loss sustained by assurer was only about twenty five per cent of the total loss.[14] Again, although these

[10] That construction in favor of assured, etc., in case of ambiguity, see Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Fechheimer, 220 Fed. 401, 136 C. C. A. 25; Paskusz v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 206 N. Y. 22, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 652, 106 N. E. 749. See also § 221b, herein.

That it rests primarily upon court to construe such bond, see American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. 228 Fed. 654, 143 C. C. A. 176, aff'd Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 239 Fed. 689, 152 C. C. A. 523.

[11] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Jung, 195 Fed. 177, 115 C. C. A. 129, 41 Ins. L. J. 1236, rev'g Jung v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 180 Fed. 510, 39 Ins. L. J. 1649. See further as to effect of riders, subdiv. (h) this section.

When application, bond, and schedule referred to are one contract, see Lexington Grocery Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 157 N. Car. 116, 72 S. E. 870, 41 Ins. L. J. 168. See 191a herein.

[12] Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Cannon & Byers Millinery Co. 133 Ky. 745, 118 S. W. 1004.

[13] While this distinction is apparent in the cases it is noted, per Pardee, C. J., in American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Jung, 195 Fed. 177, 115 C. C. A. 129, 41 Ins. L. J. 1236, 1240.

[14] Pringle Brothers v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 218 N. Y. 1, 112 N. E.

contracts are those of insurance and of indemnity,[15] still the indemnity contemplated, as set forth in the contract under the initial loss stipulation, may not have any inception for the reason that the loss may never reach the limit fixed as that to be first borne by assured before assurer's liability commences. The effect of this stipulation relates more particularly to adjustment and recovery and is therefore more fully considered elsewhere herein.[16] It may be stated here, however, that if by the construction of a subsequent and obscure clause, difficult to understand or requiring expert knowledge for its comprehension, the preceding clauses plainly and unequivocally expressed, by which the initial loss of the indemnified is fixed, are nullified, the subsequent clause must be ignored.[17] So where the amount of the initial loss is clearly fixed by the policy at a certain amount it will not be increased by another condition so obscurely worded that it can hardly be understood.[18]

(c) "First bill" construed.—The term "first bill," used in a policy issued to cover loss sustained through nonpayment of the first bill of goods sold to new customers not to be in excess of a specified sum, covers the particular articles contracted for at one time irrespective of the time within which payment shall be made of the bill therefor, and it does not include all goods, not exceeding said limited amount, which were sold and delivered between the first sale and the maturity of the bill for the same.[19]

(d) Rating in commercial agency.—If the policy is not against loss sustained by reason of the insolvency of persons of every class but expressly covers loss only from credit sales to persons rated as to capital and credit in Bradstreet, this does not include loss by the failure of persons, such as corporations, whose capital is not there rated. This is so held in a New Jersey case.[20] But where a bond is 465, rev'g 130 N. Y. Supp. 330, 153 App. Div. 180, 42 Ins. L. J. 328, and overruling Steinwender v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 126 N. Y. Supp. 271, 141 App. Div. 432, 40 Ins. L. J. 128, aff'd 131 N. Y. Supp. 1145, 146 App. Div. 951.

[15] See §§ 271, 339h herein.

Mercantile reporting company amending certificate to provide damages in case financial reports are inaccurate is not carrying on insurance business within section 170 subdiv. 2 of the New York Insurance Law. People (ex rel. Daily Credit Service Corp.) v. May, 147 N. Y. Supp. 487. 162 App. Div. 215, aff'd 212 N. Y. 561, 106 N. E. 1039.

[16] See § 3454b herein.

[17] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Wood, 73 Fed. 81, 19 C. C. A. 264.

[18] Jaeckel v. American Indemnity Co. of N. Y. 54 N. Y. Supp. 505, 34 App. Div. 565, aff'd 164 N. Y. 598, 59 N. E. 1124, citing and relying upon American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Wood, 73 Fed. 88, 19 C. C. A. 379.

[19] Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Cannon & Byers Millinery Co. 133 Ky. 745, 118 S. W. 1004.

[20] Robertson v. United States Credit System Co. 57 N. J. L. 12, 29 Atl. 421, 17 N. J. L. Jour. 209.

conditioned that no credit shall be covered unless the debtor has a certain rating in a specified mercantile agency book and one of the debtors to whom goods were sold had establishments in B and other cities and the required rating was given under the heading B and the headings to other cities contained the entries "see" B said cross references were repetitions of the B rating.[1] In a New York case a credit policy stipulated that the class of customers within its protection and the limit of credit to which each would be entitled was that described in an annexed schedule which distinguished between old customers, or those to whom insured had shipped goods within eighteen months before the shipment of the first item included in the account upon which the loss had been incurred, and new customers, or those to whom no goods had ever been sold, or to whom none had been shipped within eighteen months, and all customers, old or new possessing one of the capital or credit ratings in the schedule were covered by the policy. It appeared from a key, which was no part of the policy, that the symbols consisted of a letter and figure as "G-3" the letter indicating a capital rating and the figure a credit rating. As to old customers, however, "possessing a capital and credit rating other than as specified in the above schedule, or who are rated entirely blank both as to capital and credit, or whose names are not printed in the designated mercantile agency book, shall be covered for goods shipped during the term of the" bond. Sales were made during the term of the policy to old customers, whose rating was designated by a figure only, the letter or capital column being blank as "—4." The sales resulted in a loss. It was held that a customer may have, in such case, a "capital and credit rating other than as specified in the above schedule" though one element of said rating is a blank, accordingly the loss was recoverable.[2] Again, an agreement may cover the same period as the policy to which it is attached so as to operate as an acceptance of customers rated by a mercantile agency not recognized by said policy; so where upon objection raised that assured should be permitted to use another mercantile agency at the time of delivery of the policy, than that specified and required by the policy, a memorandum was made thereon extending liability to persons rated in said other agency, such liability of insurer will not be limited to business trans-

[1] Strouse & Bros. v. American Credit-Indemnity Co. 91 Md. 244, 46 Atl. 328, 1063.

[2] Paskusz v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 213 N. Y. 22, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 652, 106 N. E. 749, rev'g 131 N. Y. Supp. 421, 140 App. Div. 763, 41 Ins. L. J. 181.

As to detrimental change of rating see Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 239 Fed. 689, 152 C. C. A. 523, aff'g American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. 228 Fed. 654, 143 C. C. A. 176, considered under subdiv. (h) this section.

acted after the aforesaid date of delivery, but covers both classes of customers and all business transacted with them after the term of insurance commences; and in case the system requires a rating both as to capital and credit, the customer may be included who is rated by the agency designated by the policy only as to credit, and also by the other agency, both as to capital and credit.[3]

(e) "Experience" as basis of credit: "highest previous indebtedness."—In a Kentucky case the "experience" of assured in dealing with its customers was made the basis of credit instead of a rating in a commercial agency; and for the purpose of determining whether credit should again be given, the policy further provided that the "highest previous indebtedness" should be the test, and it was decided that "experience" meant a satisfactory experience, and referred to a business transaction which was closed by payment for the goods purchased, for until then the creditor would not be justified in further extending credit to the debtor; also that an indebtedness which had not been paid would be a present and not a "previous" indebtedness. It was further decided that a creditor would not be justified in again extending credit to an old customer until payment of a note given for goods sold on credit, for until said payment the transaction was not closed so as to constitute it an "experience;" nor in such case would "experience" warrant extending further credit to a customer who had returned, because of inability to pay therefor goods sent C. O. D. If, however, the character of the goods sent was not that contracted for, or they were not of the kind bought, and were returned for that reason, credit might be extended to such customer and the transaction ignored the same as though it had never taken place.[4] In a North Carolina case the

[3] Shakman v. United States Credit System Co. 92 Wis. 366, 32 L.R.A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920, 66 N. W. 528.

[4] Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Canon & Byers Millinery Co. 133 Ky. 745, 118 S. W. 1004. The court, per Lassing, J., said: "The introduction of credit insurance in commercial life is of practically recent date, not only in Kentucky but in the United States as well, and this court has not heretofore been called upon to construe any contract of this character; nor are we familiar with the decision of any court construing a contract of insurance similar to that presented in this case, most all insurance of this character is based upon credit ratings as given by recognized commercial agencies, such as Dun or Bradstreet; but this contract is based upon 'experience,' and the 'experience' of the insured, in dealing with its customers, is made the basis of credit. Some confusion has arisen in the practical application of this term. Appellee contends that it means 'business transactions,' while appellant's interpretation of it is 'a business transaction which is closed' that is, the sale of a bill of goods for which the purchaser has paid. This latter is evidently the meaning that should be given the term as used in the policy, for, in fixing the basis of credit, the policy further provides that the highest previous indebtedness shall be court, per Allen, J., says: "The contract before us is based on experience, not on rating, and this means 'the plaintiff's experience with the several customers. In other words, the defendant was willing to insure the credit of each of plaintiff's customers to an amount that plaintiff's experience with such customers indicated would be a reasonably safe credit' " and said definition is evidently adopted.[5] The following is also pertinent. "The experience of wholesale and retail dealers has doubtless shown that it is reasonably safe to sell to men who are not solvent but who have good character and good habits, and who are accustomed to pay." [6]

In diametrical opposition to the Kentucky decision, above noted, it is now finally determined in New York, that the words "highest previous indebtedness" mean that the liability of insurer and the indemnity to assured is to be determined in an amount not exceeding the highest previous indebtedness of the debtor for goods shipped, within the time stated, not exceeding the amount specified and does not mean the highest indebtedness which any debtor had paid before the execution of the bond. This is the construction placed by the New York Court of Appeals upon a clause in a credit indemnity bond providing that assured "shall be covered for an amount not exceeding the highest previous indebtedness for goods shipped by the indemnified to the debtor within twelve months prior to shipping the first item of goods included in the account upon which the loss occurred, not exceeding, however, five thousand dollars. But the loss on any such customer shall not be covered unless the preliminary notice thereof has attached to it a copy of the account, showing the prior experience with such debtor." As to the meaning of "experience" it would therefore not be dependent upon that derived from a knowledge of the financial responsibility of the customers proven by the amount of indebtedness that they had shown themselves able to meet and pay. As to the meaning of "prior experience" it is not limited to isolated transactions but taken as an 'experience' which will justify the indemnified in again extending credit to an old customer. Now an indebtedness which has not been paid could not be called a 'previous' indebtedness, for it would be a present indebtedness. An experience which would justify a creditor in again extending credit to a debtor must be a satisfactory experience, and no experience could be said to be satisfactory unless the goods sold were paid for."

[5] Lexington Grocery Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 157 N. Car. 116, 72 S. E. 870, 41 Ins. L. J. 168, 172. The above quotation is taken from the opinion of the court in the Steinwender Case (126 N. Y. Supp. 271) considered below, citing also the Ky. case (133 Ky. 745, 748) considered above.

[6] Lexington Grocery Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 157 N. Car. 168, 72 S. E. 870, 41 Ins. L. J. 168, per Allen, J., asserted as a reason why experience and not solvency had been adopted.

extends to that gained by assured by observation or trial with customers with whom they had dealings, coupled with careful investigation and such experience would be of greater value than that based upon the theory that experience is dependent upon or derived from a knowledge of the financial responsibility of the customers proven by the amount of a previous indebtedness which they had paid, and in this connection the court in holding as above considers the requirement of the notice of loss incumbent upon assured to furnish under the above clause.[7]

[7] Pringle Brothers v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 218 N. Y. 1, 112 N. E. 465 (rev'g 130 N. Y. Supp. 330, 153 App. Div. 180, 42 Ins. L. J. 328, and overruling Steinwender v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 126 N. Y. Supp. 271, 141 App. Div. 432, 40 Ins. L. J. 128, which is aff'd 131 N. Y. Supp. 1145, 146 App. Div. 951). The court, per Hogan, J., quotes from the opinion of Scott, J., in the Steinwender Case as to "experience," and continuing says: "The contract of indemnity in question in complete form, as I have stated, is voluminous and covers a class of insurance so recently in operation that few decisions of the courts have been made relating to the same. . . . Insurance contracts should be free from ambiguity and couched in language which clearly defines the liability of the indemnitor and the rights of the indemnified. Had the defendant in the contract in question intended to limit its liability to the 'highest previous indebtedness' which had been paid by a debtor, it would have been a simple matter to use language which would clearly express such limitations, and at the same time enable the indemnified to understand the liability of the indemnitor to him.

I do not concur in the reasoning or determination of the appellate division. As I read the clause of the contract, the liability of the defendant and the indemnity to plaintiffs under Schedule A (D. D.) was to be determined in an amount not exceeding the highest previous indebtedness of the debtor for goods shipped, within the time stated, not exceeding $5,000, and not, as determined in this case and the Steinwender case, 'the highest indebtedness which any debtor had paid before the execution of the bond.' The latter construction not only interpolates the word 'paid' in the contract but extends the highest previous indebtedness beyond the time specified in the contract. The construction I have given to the clause under consideration of necessity compels me to dissent from the reasoning upon which the same is based. In clause DD is found the following: 'But the loss on any such customer shall not be covered unless the preliminary notice has attached to it a copy of the account showing the prior experience with such debtor.' The decision below proceeds upon the theory that 'experience' as used in the clause in question would be 'that derived from a knowledge of the financial responsibility of the customers proven by the amount of indebtedness that they had shown themselves able to meet and pay.' The 'preliminary notice' mentioned may be termed a notice of loss. It was a printed blank furnished by and required to be obtained from the defendant. It was in substance a notice of claim against an insolvent debtor and required the insured to state name and residence of the debtor, rating, if any, reasons why loss is covered other than on debtor's rating, with papers and information to substantiate such reason, the date and amount of each shipment, by what line goods were shipped, what security or collateral held, whether or not any offer of compromise had been made, what if any effort to compromise had been made, and if so, what steps had been taken to secure the claim and statement of grounds of conclusion that the claim is a loss, and statement of terms of sale and discount.

(f) "Experience" not "solvency" as basis of credit.—If the bond expressly makes experience the basis of credit as applied by reference

"The 'copy of the account showing prior experience with such debtor' required plaintiffs to furnish with the notice of loss an account showing the dealing between plaintiffs and the debtor for goods shipped, date of shipments, credits extended, extent and value of goods sold, payments made and balance due, or substantially a complete copy of the account from the plaintiffs' books. A failure to attach a copy of the account showing the prior experience with such debtor under the language used would exclude it from participation in the policy. This statement was not to be furnished until after the loss had been sustained.

"Plaintiffs were engaged in the mercantile business, and necessarily had extensive dealings with numerous customers preceding an issuance of the policy in suit. They could not conduct business with any degree of safety unless they were acquainted with the financial responsibility and standing of the customers to whom they sold goods. Such information might be obtained through commercial agencies if the prospective customer was rated, by reference deemed by plaintiffs reliable or by personal investigation. It is reasonable to assume that plaintiffs before making sales to customers secured information from some source which enabled them to determine the amount of credit they could conservatively extend in each case. The amount of such credit may have been limited in the first instance and later on extended by reason of a knowledge of customers acquired by dealings with them; such knowledge founded upon actual experience would be a basis from which they could determine the risk they were ready to assume. Their business relations with a customer may have been satisfactory. Extended credit may have been granted for numerous reasons, such as the habits and industry of a customer, increased business conducted by him at small expense, promptness in payment of bills, and other traits which may have been considered sufficient experience to extend further credit. At the time the policy in question was issued plaintiffs were within the definition of 'experience' as stated by Justice Scott, for their knowledge of customers with whom they had dealings was gained by observation or trial, and in all probability by careful investigation. Such experience would be of greater value than an experience dependent alone upon the amount of previous indebtedness paid. Their 'prior experience' was not limited to an isolated transaction but clearly extended to that experience they had gained by observation or trial with customers with whom they had dealings. Neither should we overlook the fact that under the policy the plaintiffs assumed a larger percentage of the loss than was assumed by the defendant. The facts in this case disclose the total sales made by the plaintiffs for the year aggregating $689,542.16. The total losses sustained by them according to the referee's figures was $9,556.99. Under the terms of the contract the initial loss assumed by the plaintiffs was $6,895.42, or about seventy-two per cent, of the total loss. The loss sustained by the defendant was $2,661.57; approximately twenty-eight per cent of the total loss. In addition, plaintiffs were required to pay an annual premium of five per to a certain schedule which specified the class of debtors as old customers, new ones, and those who are solvent, owing outstandings, but said schedule in defining old and new customers does not mention insolvency at the time of the execution of the bond and does stipulate, with reference to outstandings, that insurance covers only those debtors who were solvent when the bond was executed, the intent of said bond will be held to insure the debts of old and new customers created after the execution of the bond, even though insolvent, conditioned that the credit extended was based on experience; to decide otherwise and hold that solvency instead of experience constitutes the basis of credit in such case would be to determine that claims against debtors who were insolvent at the time of the execution of the bond, although based on experience were not protected under the bond, experience, therefore, will be held the basis of credit even though the policy in another section makes solvency a requisite for credit to old and new customers, for such clause being inconsistent is ineffective within the rule of construction against insurer in case of ambiguity.[8] cent or upward on a maximum liability of ten thousand dollars.

"The construction I have placed upon this contract is the more reasonable interpretation of the language employed, and this conclusion results in the reversal of the order and judgment of appellate division."

In the above cited, overruled Steinwender case, it was declared in substance and effect, per Scott, J., that instead of the arbitrary and certain liability based upon a customer's rating with the commercial agencies the parties may by agreement substitute in place thereof as a test of liability for any customer, a stipulation that "experience shall be the basis of credit;" and when "experience" is so substituted as the test of liability it means the assured's knowledge of the financial responsibility of his customers, gained by actual observation and trial, and proven, not by the amount of indebtedness which they had incurred without paying nor by the extent of a debtor's willingness to incur debts, but by the amount which the debtors had been allowed to incur with a reasonable assurance that they would pay, based upon the fact that they had shown themselves able to meet and pay their indebtedness, so that they would constitute a reasonably safe credit. "Experience," therefore, is not founded on supposition, but upon knowledge gained through actual, satisfactory financial dealings and tested financial responsibility. And when these words "experience" etc., are used in connection with, or by reference to the words, "an amount not exceeding the highest previous indebtedness" said phrases must be read together and the words "highest previous indebtedness" do not mean the largest amount for which the customer was ever indebted prior to taking out the bond, whether that indebtedness was ever paid or not, but does mean the highest indebtedness which any debtor paid before the execution of the bond; and an indebtedness unpaid and existing at the time the bond was issued would not be intended as it would be a "present" and not a "previous" indebtedness.

[8] Lexington Grocery Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 157 N. Car. 116, 72 S. E. 870, 41 Ins. L. J. 168.

(g) Distinction between and meaning of terms "subsequent bond;" "expiration" of bond, and "termination:" "successive" bond.—Another important factor peculiar to these credit guarantee insurance or indemnity contracts is, that a distinction is expressly made between the terms "subsequent bond," "expiration of this bond," and "termination." A "new bond" is a "subsequent bond" issued when the term of the old bond comes normally to an end, and in describing losses to be covered under a new bond on sales of merchandise shipped within a certain number of months next prior to the "expiration of this bond" said phrase is used instead of "termination," the latter word being intended to indicate the ending of the bond by other events. Again, bonds may not be "successive" but one may be intended as a substitute for another and so affect the application of clauses of the contract, as where a bond is surrendered and canceled in order to obtain a new bond; or provisions as to a subsequent bond may have reference only to expiration of the original bond by lapse of time instead of which said original is surrendered and a substitute bond obtained.[9]

(h) Losses under renewal or new subsequent, etc., bonds on prior sales or shipments: losses after "expiration" of prior bond.—A credit guaranty bond which constitutes a renewal of the original or prior bond will cover losses occurring during the term of said renewal on goods shipped during the term of said original bond prior to the date of the new bond, where the first bond expressly so stipulates, even though the second bond provides that losses on goods shipped on or after the date thereof, should be only included thereon and not under the first bond, but does not otherwise refer to said stipulation; and such losses are not limited to that class thereof covered by the second bond, but are those losses within the classes covered by the first bond, even though not of a class insured against under the renewal. It was also decided that it was intended by the parties that the renewal bond should cover losses on goods shipped after the date of the execution of the renewal bond, and it was effective from said date, and even though there was a reference to the "date of the execution" it was merely a printed clause designed to apply if the bond had taken effect after the date of its execution instead of, as here, prior thereto.[10] And where the certificate of

[9] Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 239 Fed. 689, 152 C. C. A. 523. aff'g American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. 228 Fed. 654, 143 C. C. A. 176.

[10] Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Fechheimer, 220 Fed. 401, 136 C. C. A. 25. In this case the first bond was No. 1318 renewed by bond No. 2071. The first bond provided: "Outstandings covered under renewal bond: seventh. If this bond is renewed on or before the date of termination thereof by the issuance of a new bond, the losses occurring durguaranty is supplementary to the bond of indemnity and only sales and shipments of merchandise and advances to manufacturers made ing the term of the renewal on goods shipped during the term of this bond shall be included in the calculation of losses under said renewal, the same as if the goods had been shipped." Before the date of termination of this above bond another bond was issued which provided: "In consideration of issuing the attached bond, it is agreed and understood that losses occurring on goods shipped on and after October 1, 1903, shall not be included under bond 1318, but under the attached bond, subject to the conditions thereof." This was the only reference to the previous bond by which it differed in several of its provisions. The first bond by its terms indemnified against loss of accounts due insured from customers for goods shipped between January 1, 1903, and December 31, 1903, and the second bond No. 2071, furnishing such indemnity on shipments between October 1, 1903 and September 30, 1904. Certain losses of plaintiff occurred during the term of the second bond on shipments made prior to the commencement of such term and during the term of the first bond. The question was whether bond 1318 was renewed by bond 2071 within the meaning of clause quoted, so that losses occurring during the term of the latter bond on shipments made during the term of the former bond can be included in the calculation of losses under said latter bond. The court, per Tuttle, Dist. J., said: "It is urged that because it is not recited in the latter bond that it is a renewal of the earlier one, and because there is no direct evidence that the parties agreed that it should be so considered, therefore it is not such a renewal within the meaning of the first bond, and the losses last mentioned are not protected by it. We are unable to agree with such contention. We think that by the clause quoted the parties intended to, and did, agree that if, on or before the expiration of the first bond, defendant should issue to plaintiff a new bond, such clause should become operative. It is unnecessary to determine whether the second bond is itself technically a renewal bond, because it is clear that the parties themselves have stipulated that such renewal should be effected 'by the issuance of a new bond.' It is obvious that those parties were not interested in, if they understood, the technical legal meaning of the term 'renewal.' What they were interested in, and unquestionably understood, was the protection to be extended to losses occurring after, on shipments made before, the termination of the old bond, 'by the issuance of a new bond,' on or before such termination. And when such new bond was so issued the 'outstandings' referred to were thereby 'covered.'

"2. Are the losses occurring during the term of the renewal bond, on shipments made during the term of the original bond, the losses contemplated defined by the original bond?

"The kind of losses on shipments made during the period of the second bond recoverable thereunder differed materially from the kind of losses recoverable under the conditions of the first bond. Thus the only losses against which plaintiffs were indemnified by the second bond were those 'sustained on claims against debtors by or against whom, between the dates of the execution and termination of the bond, judicial proceedings of any kind have been taken, establishing such debtors insolvency' while the first bond gave indemnity against losses arising on claims against the following debtors.

" 'A debtor for an amount not exceeding $250, where the preliminary notice of loss has attached to it a report from the designated mercantile agency, or from some collection during the year beginning the term of the certificate, such sales, etc., during the year preceding that of the beginning of the bond term may, by force of the renewal clause be included within the scope of the bond.[11] In another case the action was brought upon two bonds of indemnity against loss by insolvent debtors. The first bond contained the condition, that in case it should be renewed, losses on agency or attorney practising in the place where the debtor did business, that the claim against such debtor is uncollectable through legal proceedings; . . . a debtor who has effected a compromise with his creditors; . . . a debtor by or against whom a petition to be declared a bankrupt or insolvent has been filed under the Federal bankruptcy law or under some insolvency or assignment law of any of the United States or any territory thereof; . . . a debtor against whom an execution in favor of the indemnified or some other creditor has been returned unsatisfied;' and losses arising under certain circumstances mentioned in said bond.

"It is contended by defendant that, if the first bond be considered as renewed by the second, so that losses on shipments during the term of the former, occurring during the term of the latter bond, may be included in the calculation of the losses under said latter bond, only such losses can be so included as are within the class of losses specifically covered by such bond when occurring on shipments made during its term.

"We think that to so hold would require a forced and unnatural construction of the clause in question. It will be observed that by this clause it was agreed that 'the losses occurring' during the term of the renewal, on shipments made during the term of the original policy, should be included in the calculation of losses under such renewal. In the absence of any express definition of the word, we think it evident that by 'the losses' was meant the losses against which plaintiffs were then being insured. And the basis for calculating these losses was then being fixed, in the language of the policy already quoted. If the parties had desired to make the provability of such losses subject to the terms and conditions of the renewal policy such an intention could easily have been expressed in appropriate language, as was done by the insertion in the second bond of the following provision, above referred to:

"'In consideration of issuing the attached bond, it is agreed and understood that losses occurring on goods shipped on and after October 1, 1903, shall not be included under bond No. 1318, but under the attached bond, subject to the terms and conditions thereof.'

"Even if the language of clause 7 alone is not sufficient to require the payment under the renewal policy of the 'losses' as defined in 1318, incurred during its term upon goods shipped before October 1, 1903, we think also that the language just quoted is a clear recognition by the parties that, except as expressly provided thereby, the losses mentioned in clause 7 are those 'included under bond No. 1318,' and not 'under the attached bond, subject to the terms and conditions thereof.' . . . We think that the losses on goods shipped during the period of the first bond and before October 1, 1903, but occurring during the period of the second bond, which may be included in the calculation of losses under the second bond, are not limited to the class of losses covered by said bond, but are the losses coming within the classes covered by the first bond."

[11] Talcott v. Gray, 59 N. J. Eq. 595, 42 Atl. 603.

sales covered according to the terms, conditions, and limitations thereof, resulting after its expiration upon shipments made during the term thereof might be proven under and subject also to the terms and conditions of such renewal; and in case the bond was a renewal it covered losses occurring during the term thereof on shipments made during the term of the preceding bond and might be proven thereunder, subject also to the terms, conditions and limitations of the preceding bond. This condition was subject to the provision that the premium had been paid on such renewal at or before the expiration of the preceding bond. The second bond was in effect for one year after expiration of the first which it renewed, and both bonds contained the precise condition above stated and differed only as to the initial loss to be borne by insured and in the limitation of liability by a loss by a single debtor. It was held that the clear purpose and intent was to carry forward and indemnify insured against losses which might result from sales and shipments during the period of the first bond, but which would not be provable under the prescribed terms of the bond within the period of its duration; that the renewal constituted an extension of the protection afforded by the existing bond in case of losses arising from sales covered according to the "terms, conditions, and limitations" of the bond current when the sales were made and the losses occurring during the term of this "the renewal bond" on shipments made during the term of the preceding bond may be proven hereunder subject also to the terms, conditions and limitations of the preceding bond; that is, such losses were provable under and against the renewal bond, subject to the terms, conditions, and limitations of said preceding bond; that the words "may be proven hereunder" referred to the penalty of the bond, and not to its terms, conditions and limitations, and the preceding bond is to be looked to, for the terms, conditions and limitations of claims originating during the currency thereof in order to prevent an irreconcilable conflict which would arise if both bonds were held to govern as to "terms, conditions, and limitations."[12] Where the loss insured against is the insolvency of debtors owing insured for merchandise sold and delivered between certain dates on the later one of which the policy was to expire and it was also stipulated that should the policy be renewed on or before its expiration losses occurring thereafter on sales made during the existence of said bond should be provable in the same manner as though occurring under the new policy, it was decided that under this stipulation there could be a recovery for losses suffered after the said date of expiration of the term on sales made during the said term although the bond was not renewed, provided, however, that final proofs of loss were made as required under a condition that notice and final proofs be given, the first within a specified time after receiving notice of a debtors insolvency and the latter within a certain number of days after expiration of the policy, although the above-stated condition as to losses on sales, etc., constituted by the terms of the bond an exception to the requirement as to notice of insolvency and final proofs of loss.[13] In a recent case, the bond in controversy was issued April 6, 1912, in place of a bond which covered a term from March 18, 1912, to March 17, 1913, both days inclusive, the first bond being surrendered and canceled at request of insured in order to obtain a new bond that would increase the amount at risk. The original bond indemnified assured against loss on sales of merchandise upon credit to persons, firms, etc., with a certain rating by a named mercantile agency, said merchandise to be shipped during the term of this bond, in the usual course of business, but losses "occurring prior to April 4, 1912, the date of the payment of the premium, although the bond may have been delivered" were not covered. A rider was attached covering "losses and indemnities occurring during the term of this bond, but after April 4th" on goods sold, shipped and delivered by the indemnified during a period between December 18, 1911, and March 17, 1912 "both days inclusive," "if otherwise coming within the provisions of this bond." This rider still contained the limitations as to losses occurring prior to April 4th. At the time the application was made notes had been given for the premium which bore interest from that date, and another rider provided that the indemnified's two notes aggregating the amount of premium of this bond, receipt of which was acknowledged, in payment of said premium, should be the same in effect, provided they were paid at or before maturity as if the entire amount of premium had been paid by check, but if said notes were not paid at or before maturity then losses occurring prior to payment thereof should not be recoverable or provable under said bond "all other terms and provisions of the said bond to remain in full force and effect." The amount of accruing or accrued interest evidently did not operate to effect any change in the bond. Said notes were paid at maturity thereby making it certain that the bond was in force according to its terms which fixed that date as of April 4th regardless of the actual date of maturity of said notes. It was also stipulated that no loss on goods should be covered if the debtor to whom the shipments had been made between said dates of December 18, and March 17, should suffer a detrimental change of rating of the debtor between the first shipment and April 4th the arbitrary date of payment. A loss occurred during the term of the bond and was sustained after April 4th, and it was held that it would therefore be covered by the bond unless the credit rating of the bankrupt debtor had been detrimentally changed, but it was held that such detrimental change had been made. It was also decided that provisions as to losses being covered when occurring during the terms of a new bond on sales and merchandise shipped and delivered under the old bond, did not apply as the bonds were not "successive," one being intended as a substitute for the other, and also that said provision contemplated a new bond issued when the term of the old bond came nominally to an end or expired by lapse of time; also that the conditions and limitations of the new bond were controlling where they were inconsistent with the conditions and limitations of the old.[14]

[12] American Indemnity Co. v. Champion Coated Paper Co. 103 Fed. 609, 43 C. C. A. 340.

[13] Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co. 112 Mich. 258, 70 N. W. 886.

Under a New York decision where the original bond covers only losses during its term and applies only to goods shipped after the date of its execution or its issuance but a rider provides that "outstandings on the books of the indemnified" on said date, shipped during a period commencing four months prior thereto "shall be covered upon the same conditions and shall be included in the same manner as if the goods had been shipped since" the date of the bond, said rider clause has the effect of extending backward the liability on said bond so as to cover shipments made during the preceding four months as specified and it has the same effect upon other liability, or limitation of liability clauses dependent upon the date of said bond and losses arising from shipments thereunder.[15]

[14] Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 239 Fed. 689, 152 C. C. A. 523, aff'g American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Henry A. Hitner's Sons Co. 228 Fed. 654, 143 C. C. A. 176. The following clause was in controversy "Advantages of Subsequent Bond—In case this company issues to the indemnified a new bond, and the premium therefor is paid prior to the expiration of this bond, losses occurring during the term of the new bond on sales of merchandise shipped and delivered within the twelve months next prior to the expiration of this bond, shall be covered and may be proven under the new bond, subject to its provisions and limitations, the same as though the goods had been shipped during its term, and the governing rating of the debtor under this bond at the date of each shipment shall apply. From the net losses so covered and proven, in conjunction with all others covered and proven under the new bond, there shall be deducted the initial loss provided for by the new bond before any liability on the part of this company shall accrue; but the amount of the shipments made during the said prior twelve months shall not be taken into the calculation of sales in computing the amount of the initial loss under the new bond."

[15] Steinwender v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 126 N. Y. Supp. 271,

By construction of a renewal and preceding bond, both containing the same condition as to said matter, the protection of the preceding bond was extended to losses sustained by sales and shipments made thereunder and covered according to the terms, conditions, and limitations of the bond current when the sales were made, but said claims were not provable under the terms of the previous bond during its life. In connection with this point there was a controversy upon the question whether the "initial loss" and "single debtor liability limit" of the first or renewal policy were applicable when the losses proven are upon sales and shipments made during the period of the original bond, but which do not result in losses within the meaning of the policy until after its expiration and during the term of its renewal, for while said policies contained the same condition with respect to the first point above stated they differed as to initial loss and single debtor limitation. It appeared that the guaranty against loss not in excess of a specified sum resulting from the insolvency of debtors was "over and above the loss" of a certain amount "agreed first to be borne by the said indemnified on total gross sales and amounting to . . . or less." It was further provided that "no amount against any one such insolvent debtor shall be covered for more than" a sum equal to one-half that fixed in the policy as the indemnity or the limitation of insurer's liability. It was held that by this single debtor limitation no claim as to such debtor in excess of that fixed as above stated was "covered" by the bond; that in order to recover the full indemnity fixed by the policy there must be proof of covered losses equal to the sum of the indemnity and the loss to be first borne by assured, that is, the guaranty in such case was against loss not exceeding the sum specified as indemnity over and above the initial loss or sum agreed to be first borne by assured and that claims provable under the bond include only said amount to be first borne by the indemnified and the amount of the bond; this also means that in order to recover the full indemnity fixed by the policy there must be proof of covered losses equal to the sum of the indemnity and the loss to be borne by insured.[16]

141 App. Div. 432, 40 Ins. L. J. 128, aff'd (mem.) 131 N. Y. Supp. 1145, 146 App. Div. 951, overruled on another point (although the above point is affected in so far as it is dependent upon the point on which the case is overruled) in Pringle Brothers v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 218 N. Y. 1, 112 N. E. 465, rev'g 130 N. Y. Supp. 330, 153 App. Div. 180, 42 Ins. L. J. 328.

[16] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Champion Coated Paper Co. 103 Fed. 609, 43 C. C. A. 340. "By the single debtor limitation is meant that condition of the policy which excludes from the protection of the bond any amount of a claim against

A renewal bond will also cover losses accruing during its term on goods sold and delivered during the term of the preceding bond where the preceding bond so stipulates and before the expiration of the first bond assurer's agent sought for a renewal thereof from assured and the latter agreed to accept the same provided it covered back sales under the old bond and a note for the premium was taken and both it and the policy were antedated and this was so held even though several days elapsed between the date of expiration of the old bond and the date when said agreement for renewal was made, it appearing that insurer neither repudiated the agreement nor the note given for the premium.[17]

In a Massachusetts case there was a bond of indemnity within certain limits against loss from insolvency of debtors as defined therein on their total gross sales amounting to a certain sum, or less, to be made between specified dates, both "inclusive" and the bond was to expire on the last of said dates. A rider provided that losses were covered "on sales and shipments," made during a period of about two and a half months ending on a date the same as that specified as the beginning of the risk under said bond, and that the same might be proven thereunder. The insolvency causing the losses in question occurred after the date specified as that on which the bond was to expire. A demurrer on the ground that the bond did not cover insolvency occurring after the date of expiration of the bond was sustained.[18]

But under a Pennsylvania decision, when the bond of a credit indemnity company provides that, "in case this company issues to the indemnified a new bond prior to the expiration of this one, losses occurring during the term of the new bond on sales of merchandise shipped within the twelve months immediately prior to the expiration of this bond, shall be covered and may be proven under this new bond, subject to the provisions and limitations, the same as though the goods had been shipped during its term" and a new bond is so issued, there can be no recovery for losses occurring during the pendency of the second bond on goods sold during the pena single debtor in excess of an agreed sum or proportion." Id. 612. "The agreed loss to be first borne by the assured called the initial loss must be deducted from the gross amount of provable or 'covered' losses." Id. 614.

[17] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Hecht & Co. 137 Ky. 261, 125 S. W. 697, 129 S. W. 340, 39 Ins. L. J. 800. The point was urged in defense in connection with the above, that the policy provided that no agent of the company should have power to waive or alter any of its provisions, but the claim was not sustained, Id. See upon this point, § 439 herein.

[18] Hogg v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 172 Mass. 127, 51 N. E. 517. Bond defines "Insolvency." Id. 128 note.

dency of the first to a class of customers included in the old bond, but excluded by the provisions of the new.[19] Again, a provision in a bond that in case it is renewed, loss on sales covered, "resulting after said date of expiration upon shipments made during the term of this bond, may be proven under and subject also to the terms and conditions of such renewal." There was a similar provision in case the bond in suit was a renewal. It was held that renewals were thereby encouraged as the means by which bondholders could get the benefit of continuous insurance and it was necessary to resort to such means or there would be no protection for losses "resulting after date of expiration upon shipments made during the term of this bond." There was a demurrer to the declaration which was sustained on the ground that the bond did not cover losses from [19] National Airline Chemical Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 228 Pa. 588, 77 Atl. 920. The court, per Potter, J., said: "Very similar provisions under somewhat corresponding provisions in bonds issued by this same defendant company have arisen in two cases in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the sixth Circuit; American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Athens Woolen Mills, 92 Fed. 581, 34 C. C. A. 161, and American Credit Indemnity v. Champion Coated Paper Co. 103 Fed. 609, 43 C. C. A. 340. The decisions in those cases were based on a construction of a clause numbered 8, of the bonds there in question, which was the corresponding clause to number 7 in the present case. The clauses were so construed as to extend the benefit of the old bond to cover sales in goods made under that bond, in accordance with its terms and conditions, though the losses did not accrue during the life of the first bond. After these decisions were made, the defendant company apparently changed the language of its bonds, in order to protect itself against the construction placed upon clause 8, and substituted the present clause 7, in the bonds involved in the case at bar, for clause 8, in the bonds which were before the court in the cases above cited. . . . Clause 8, as construed in the opinion of the Federal court, provided that losses occurring after the expiration of the original bond 'may be proven under such renewal bond in accordance with the terms and conditions of such renewal:' Clause 7 of the present bond goes further and is much more explicit, in that it provides that such losses 'shall be covered and may be proven under the new bond, subject to its provisions and limitations, the same as though the goods had been shipped during its term.' The difference between the two provisions is apparent. Under the former clause it was held that the losses intended to be protected by the renewal were those covered by the terms of the bond current when the sales were made. As the clause now stands in the contract, we think it constitutes a clear stipulation that in extending the term of protection of the first bond into the period covered by the second bond, the loss, if any, is to be adjusted as though it had occurred upon goods sold and shipped during the term of the second bond. The change seems to have been made by the defendant company for the express purpose of meeting the adverse construction of the clause by the court as above referred to; and it seems to us to be sufficiently clear and definite to accomplish the purpose intended."

insolvency during the term of the bond.[20] A credit guarantee policy insuring against loss sustained by the insolvency of debtors owing insured for merchandise sold and delivered during the term of the policy and also covering losses suffered after the expiration of said term on sales made during the life thereof, does not cover a claim consisting wholly of attorneys' fees, expenses, interest, and protest fees.[1]

(i) Same subject: recovery of such losses dependent upon payment of premium or guaranty fee.—Whether a renewal bond covers losses on goods shipped under a prior bond, may depend upon whether the premium or guarantee fee has been paid as stipulated. This is instanced by a New Jersey case, where it was conceded that a renewal certificate succeeded a prior certificate and it was claimed in defense that the premium or guarantee fee for which said renewals was made, had not been paid before the expiration of the original or prior certificate, and therefore there was not a compliance with the condition that, "if this certificate has been paid for on or before the date of the expiration of the certificate held by the above-named party last prior to this one, then, in that case, losses occurring during the life of this certificate, on goods shipped during the term of the last prior one, shall be included in the calculation of losses under this certificate, in the same manner as if the goods had been shipped and the losses had occurred during the life of this certificate." The original policy contained a provision against loss of credits for goods shipped and losses occurring during the term thereof, and also provided, in case of renewal, for recovery of losses thereunder on goods shipped during the life of the original.[2] Losses occurred under the original policy terms and conditions which were adjusted and allowed, but were retained and not paid by insurer. Subsequent to the expiration of the policy, it was agreed that upon cancelation thereof said losses should operate as payment of a renewal premium. It was decided that the defense of nonpayment of the premium or guarantee fee was not sustained, as such agreement constituted such payment "on or before the date of the expiration"

[20] Hogg v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 172 Mass. 127, 51 N. E. 517. Bond defines "Insolvency," see note Id. 128.

[1] Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co. 112 Mich. 258, 70 N. W. 886.

[2] Provision was, "If this certificate is renewed by the said above named party on or before the date of its expiration, at the regular terms of the company, in force at the time of such renewal, then, in that case, losses occurring after the expiration of this certificate, on goods shipped between the commencement and the expiration thereof, shall be provable under the renewal, in the same manner as if losses occurred on goods shipped after the commencement of the renewal."

of the original policy, although the adjustment of said losses under the prior certificate and the cancelation thereof and the execution and delivery of the renewal did not take place until after the expiration of the original certificate. It was immaterial under the circumstances that the execution and delivery of the renewal were postponed as aforesaid; and the points of the agreement and the acts done thereunder being established the payment related back to the life of the prior policy and was of the time during which such losses occurred, so that the mere delay consequent upon negotiations, entering into the formal written agreement and embodying it into the form of a certificate of renewal did not alter or extinguish the obligation, for equity in such a case will impute an intention to fulfil the obligation, and will assume it to have been fulfilled if necessary to protect and enforce the just rights of the parties by applying the principle or maxim that equity looks upon that as done which ought to be done.[3] And if a renewal policy is taken out at the suggestion of insurer's agent, for the purpose of securing protection against impending losses upon sales made during the period of the first bond, and in conformity with a further suggestion by said agent a short note is given and accepted as payment of the premium, and insurer cashes a check given to its order to satisfy said note and the renewal policy acknowledges receipt of the premium, it cannot be successfully contended that a condition requiring payment of the premium on a renewal on or before the expiration of the bond has not been complied with so as to prevent proof of any claims originating under the preceding bond.[4]

(j) Losses on claims under extension at time of payment of premium or guaranty fee.—Where losses on claims under extension at the time of payment of the guaranty fee were, under both bond and certificate, not to be included in the calculation of losses, it was held that the requirement that debtors give promissory notes as evidence of their indebtedness on open accounts, which notes were made payable at a later date than the open accounts would have become due, does not constitute an extension contrary to any provision of the policy or contract.[5]

(k) "Irreconcilable" losses: when agreement to await result of bankruptcy proceedings abrogates or waives contractual limitation of time of suing.—A one year's contractual limitation in a credit guaranty policy as to the time of bringing suit may be abrogated by

[3] Lauer v. Gray, 55 N. J. L. 554, 37 Atl. 53.

[4] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Champion Coated Paper Co. 103 Fed. 609, 43 C. C. A. 340.

[5] Strouse & Bros. v. American Credit-Indemnity Co. 91 Md. 244, 46 Atl. 328, 1063, 29 Ins. L. J. 980. "Extension" defined. Id.

agreement, for inasmuch as such a provision is intended for the protection of insurer it may be waived, and is waived, or abrogated and not merely suspended, where an action is brought to recover under said credit indemnity bond for losses on merchandise accounts of a bankrupt, and the policy stipulates for liability for "irreconcilable" losses only, and it is agreed to await the result of the bankruptcy proceedings to determine whether there is a loss on said claim; that is, the adjustment of the loss was not to be taken up until the final liquidation in bankruptcy. This also applies even though there are various other proposals, including one to submit the matter to arbitration, where the only result of said proposals is the agreement to allow said bankruptcy proceedings to take their course as aforesaid.[6]

(l) Same subject: when statute of limitation commences to run.—If it is agreed that the adjustment of loss is not to be taken up until the final liquidation of a bankrupt debtor's estate in bankruptcy, and this agreement abrogates a one-year contractual limitation of the time of suing under a credit guaranty bond, the statute of limitations does not begin to run so as to bar suit brought within six years after making said substituted agreement of abrogation; nor will a contention be sustained in such case that the cause of action accrued within a certain number of days after filing proofs of loss under the bond of stipulations, especially so where the bond provides that adjustment be made by taking into calculation the "actual irrevocable loss," for the agreement abrogating, or waiving the one-year period of limitation is inconsistent with said contention.[7]

(m) Effect of assurer's insolvency or assignment upon its liability, also upon time limitation for suing: effect of adjustment and settlement.—An assignment by a credit insurance company breaches the contract and insured is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit without furnishing final proofs of the year's losses, within the time limit required after the expiration of said year.[8] And inasmuch as assurer by its assignment or insolvency breaches the contract and renders it inoperative, claims for unearned premiums are not claims or liabilities under the insurance contract, therefore an action upon the policy need not be brought within the time limit fixed in the policy for bringing suit.[9] So where insurer

[6] Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Thatcher, 236 Fed. 869, 150 C. C. A. 131, 49 Ins. L. J. 239.

[7] Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Thatcher, 236 Fed. 869, 150 C. C. A. 131, 49 Ins. L. J. 239.

[8] Smith v. National Credit Ins. Co. 65 Minn. 283, 33 L.R.A. 511, 68 N. W. 28. See §§ 3591, 3595, 3598b herein.

[9] McCallum v. National Credit Ins. Co. 84 Minn. 134, 86 N. W. 892. See becomes insolvent before losses are sustained, by a policy holder, whether on sales made by him before or after the date, recovery thereon is precluded and claim can be sustained only for the unearned premium, there being no reserved value in the policy nor any method of reinsuring. Depue, J. said: "The order in the insolvency proceedings put an end to the business of the company and terminated its contracts, leaving the holders of policies to be indemnified as indemnity might be awarded." [10] Again, if upon insurer's insolvency and general assignment for the benefit of creditors, it settles and adjusts a loss and agrees to pay the amount found due, a new and independent contract is thereby created which changes the liability from that under the insurance contract to one under the settlement, and the period within which action is required to be instituted under the policy terms does not apply to an action brought upon said settlement.[11]

(n) Copartnership as "indemnified" or as debtor.—Persons who compose a firm when the bond is made are the "indemnified" thereunder, and if they were the persons who owned and sold the goods during the period covered by the bond and were carrying on the same business, the style of the copartnership is unimportant.[12] Where goods are bought by one member of a firm and charged to him, and said firm carried on business in several places in one of which there was another partner, and the houses for which the goods were bought were designated on plaintiff's ledger, it was decided that it was a question for the jury whether the said firms were identical or independent.[13]

(o) Evidence of sales: jury.—Where it is a condition that liability is limited to actual sales of goods owned, sold, and delivered by assured, evidence to prove such sales, etc., is sufficient to go to the jury where there is proof by the salesman who took the orders therefor, that they were forwarded and also proof by the shipping clerk that they were packed and delivered to common carriers and bills

Smith v. National Credit Ins. Co. 65 Minn. 283, 33 L.R.A. 511, 68 N. W. 28. See § 1408d herein.

As to effect of limitation, as to time for suing, on action to recover back premiums, see § 3197 herein.

[10] Gray v. Reynolds, 55 N. J. Eq. 501, 37 Atl. 461. One judge dissented as to sales made prior to insurer's insolvency.

[11] McCallum v. National Credit Ins. Co. 84 Minn. 134, 86 N. W. 892, distinguishing Willoughby v. St. Paul German Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 373, 33 L.R.A. 511, 71 N. W. 272.

As to effect of negotiations for adjustment, or adjustment where policy requires suit to be brought within certain time, see §§ 3207 et seq., 3220 herein.

[12] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Wood, 73 Fed. 81, 19 C. C. A. 264.

[13] Strouse & Bros. v. American Credit-Indemnity Co. 91 Md. 244, 46 Atl. 328, 1063, 29 Ins. L. J. 980.

of lading and invoices mailed to the purchasers and that the same were never returned.[14]

§ 2787. Insolvency of debtors: meaning of "loss: credit insurance."—If a policy stipulates for insurance to an amount not exceeding a specified sum against "loss sustained by reason of the insolvency of debtors owing the insured for merchandise," the word "loss" means the actual loss sustained by reason of such insolvency; that is, not the amount of indebtedness due from the insolvent debtor at the time of his suspension, but the balance remaining due after deducting from the entire indebtedness payments made by the debtor.[15]

(a) What constitutes insolvency within intent of credit guaranty insurance bonds.—Under a New York decision if a credit guaranty bond insures against loss on sales sustained by the insolvency of debtors, who have made a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors, under a policy prepared for use, not in any particular state or locality but throughout the country generally, said provision is to be construed with reference to the effect which such a transaction has upon the debtor in the business community and this depends upon the character of the instrument, of the purpose and nature of the transaction and the completeness of the transfer rather than upon the name or form of the transaction, for the language used will be construed to mean what the words import in the commercial world, outside of any technical construction. If the purpose and effect of the transfer is to dispose of all the debtor's assets and so prevent the payment of his debts, or there is any transfer by a person of all his stock and business which covers substantially all his property, whether for the benefit of a single creditor or for all, whether the assignment be in the form prescribed by state statutes or under the common law, or be in any form calculated to effect the above results it will constitute a loss within the intent of the policy; so written transfers by which debtors convey substantially all their property to pay or secure debts, the property being at once delivered and the debtors thereupon ceasing at once to do business constitute general assignments for creditors within the meaning of policy terms first above mentioned.[16] If the return unsatisfied, of an

[14] Strouse & Bros. v. American Credit-Indemnity Co. 91 Md. 244, 46 Atl. 328, 1063, 29 Ins. L. J. 980.

[15] Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co. v. Wood, 68 Fed. 529, 15 C. C. A. 563.

As to the meaning of the word "loss," or "losses" in an application for credit guaranty or indemnity insurance, in connection with representations or warranties, see L. Black & Co. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. Ltd. 216 N. Y. 560, 111 N. E. 241, rev'g 144 N. Y. Supp. 424, 159 App. Div. 186, 43 Ins. L. J. 301, considered under § 2002a, subd. (e) herein.

[16] People v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co. 166 N. Y. 416, 60 N. E. 24, rev'g 67 N. Y. Supp. 447, 55 execution in favor of assured is among the definitions of insolvency in the policy, but the requirement therein as to notice of a debtor's insolvency does not mention it but does require answers as to a debtor's failure, the date, nature, etc., the meaning of said word depends upon its commercial sense and there is such a "failure" where the business of the debtor is suspended by reason of confessions of judgment and seizure of his stock by the sheriff.[17] Where, however, upon trial, proof of claims where goods were sold during the period covered by bond, but on which no judgment was returned unsatisfied until after expiration of bond, is properly excluded.[18] And although liability is limited to a case where an execution has been returned unsatisfied on a judgment obtained for merchandise sold to the debtor during the period covered by the policy, insurer is not relieved from liability upon a claim based upon such a policy provision merely because of failure to return an execution until three days after the expiration of the policy, where it appears that there has been a compliance with the other requirements and the only applicable requirement as to returning said execution is that it shall be before the time fixed for presenting verified proofs of loss and this is done.[19] In a Kentucky case it was claimed that the proof on trial did not show that the losses were from insolvency

App. Div. 594. The court, per O'Brien, J., said: "When the defendant indemnified against the insolvency of debtors who had made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, the contract is not to be interpreted technically, but the language must be held to mean what the words import to the commercial world. Hence the character of the instrument or the nature of the transaction must be determined by the effect it has upon the debtor in the business community and not by the name which the parties see fit to give to it. It may be a statutory assignment, a mortgage, a confession of judgment or some other contrivance, the purpose and effect of which is to dispose of all the debtor's assets and disable him from paying his debts. In such cases the loss is fairly within the scope of the indemnity secured to the insured by this policy. It is the completeness of the transfer and its effect upon the debtor in business, and not the name or form of the instrument or transaction that gives it character. Any transfer by a trader or merchant of all his stock and business, when it covers substantially all his property, may be an assignment within the meaning of the policy in spite of the form or name given to it." Id. 420, 421.

What is not a "general assignment;" common law presumed to exist in another state; return of execution unsatisfied; loss construed as to payments made or security held and deductions therefor. See Goodman v. Mercantile Credit Co. 45 N. Y. Supp. 508, 17 App. Div. 474.

[17] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. 95 Fed. 111, 36 C. C. A. 671.

[18] Talcott v. National Credit Ins. Co. 41 N. Y. Supp. 281, 9 App. Div. 433, aff'd 163 N. Y. 577, 57 N. E. 1125.

[19] People v. Mercantile Credit Guaranty Co. 166 N. Y. 416, 60 N. E. 24, rev'g 67 N. Y. Supp. 447, 55 App. Div. 594.

within the meaning of the definition of that word in the policy which provided that the debtor should be deemed insolvent when a petition in bankruptcy was filed by him under the laws of the United States, or when he made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors. It was further claimed that such a petition or assignment was not shown by the exhibit filed with the petition, but this gave a list of debtors who had failed, their residence, rating, nature of insolvency, etc., under the head of nature of insolvency, specifying "bankruptcy" in some cases and "assignment" in others. It also appeared from the proof that upon the failure of each debtor insurer was promptly given notice thereof as required by the terms of the policy, and finally proofs of loss were filed as required, whereupon insurer denied liability upon the ground first above stated. The evidence was not negatived by assurer who offered no proof on the trial, and no complaint was made as to the sufficiency of the proofs of loss. It was decided that the claim came too late; also that it was the duty of the court at any stage of the proceeding to disregard errors not affecting the substantial rights of the parties complaining, and that it was "satisfied the ends of justice did not warrant a reversal for the matter complained of in regard to the proofs of the claim," accordingly judgment for plaintiff was affirmed.[20]

Again, inasmuch as bonds of this character concern contracts relating to the business affairs of merchants and their "insolvency" the indemnity against insolvency must, in the absence of some clearly evidenced intent to the contrary appearing in the contract itself, be such as that word imports as understood by merchants and as defined by bankrupt and insolvent laws relating to merchants and mercantile transactions; and the insolvency intended must mean the usual legally defined insolvency which is an inability of the debtor to pay his debts as they fall due in the ordinary course of business, irrespective of any formal adjudication or an actual insufficiency of assets to meet liabilities; therefore provisions in a bond defining and limiting the term insolvency while affording evidence of a status or condition of insolvency nevertheless they do not create that status or condition, so that proof of insolvency may be given in other ways than that specified in the bond. As where such clauses provide that "general assignments of, or attachments against insolvent debtors, the absconding of the debtors, or executions returned nulla bona, shall constitute insolvency" also that "the appointment of a receiver or a 'sell-out,' or the death of a debtor does not establish insolvency, but the indemnified may prove such claim during the term of this bond or renewal thereof, provided legal proof shall be given establishing the insolvency of the debtor." [21]

[20] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Hecht & Co. 137 Ky. 261, 125 S. W. 297, 129 S. W. 340, 39 Ins. L. J. 800.

Where the purpose of the contract is to make experience and not solvency the basis of credit with reference to claims specified in a certain referred to schedule as those insured, a clause of a subsection which is obscure and difficult to interpret in that it enumerates certain evidences of liability, or specifies the only claims on which losses occur for which liability exists, will not be applied to all the claims covered by the bond so as to make solvency the test of credit and therefore it refers wholly to the remedy and does not conflict with other parts of the policy so as to except losses because of insolvency of customers. This applies where said subsection provides as to small claims not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars and none of the facts in said preceding enumeration exist, but a designated mercantile agency, a collection agency, etc., has reported that the debtor has absconded, leaving no assets, and that such claim is uncollectable and the issue of execution would be useless, and that any claim which is more than three months overdue shall not be covered by said clause but shall be, so far as the same is covered by the bond be included in the calculation of losses, provided the insolvency and one of the facts enumerated in the preceding part of said subsection occurs between the date of the execution and termination of said bond.[22]

[21] Strouse & Brothers v. American Credit-Indemnity Co. 91 Md. 244, 46 Atl. 328, 1063, 29 Ins. L. J. 980. McSherry, C. J., said: "A thing which in its very nature cannot constitute insolvency, though it may constitute evidence of insolvency, cannot, by being called insolvency, be other than it intrinsically is; namely, a means of proving the existence of insolvency. This must be so unless the thing to be proved is identical with the thing that proves it—unless insolvency as a fact, and the evidence which proves that it is a fact, are one and the same thing. But the two are manifestly different. In American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Carrollton Furniture Manufacturing Co. 95 Fed. 111, 114, 36 C. C. A. 671, there was a suit against the same defendant on a bond issued by it after 1893, clause 11A was materially modified. Insolvency was limited and defined by the modified clause thus indicating that the defendant did not itself consider that the precise clause now before us imposed a limitation as it stood prior to the change."

[22] Lexington Grocery Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 157 N. Car. 116, 72 S. E. 870, 41 Ins. L. J. 168. The schedule referred to covered three classes of debtors, old customers, new ones and those who were solvent, owing outstandings. Under the decision experience and not solvency was the basis of credit even though another section made solvency a requisite of extension of credit to old and new customers. Subsections "a" and "b" were provisos and read: "(a) That such losses shall have been sustained on claims against debtors, each of whom is covered by Schedule A attached hereto, signed by the president and secretary and countersigned by the actuary and one of the registrars of the company, and which is made a part hereof: Provided further, that when a mercantile agency is designated in the application as a basis for some or all of the credits to be covered by this bond, that the last book printed by such agency prior to the shipment of the goods shall be the basis for covering such shipments from and including the first of the month appearing on such book.

If the insolvency insured against occurs and is proven under the terms of the second or renewal bond, the meaning of, or what con-

"(b) That only claims on which losses occur, which exist (1) against a debtor who has effected a general compromise with his creditors; (2) against a debtor by or against whom a petition to be declared a bankrupt or insolvent has been filed under the Federal bankruptcy law, or under some insolvency or assignment law of any of the United States or any territory thereof; (3) against a debtor against whom an execution in favor of the indemnified or some other creditor has been returned unsatisfied; (4) against a debtor whose stock in trade has been sold in judicial proceedings; (5) against a debtor against whom, upon the ground of insolvency, a writ of attachment or replevin of other process has been issued; (6) against a debtor who, upon the ground of insolvency, has transferred his stock in trade to a trustee or assignee under some assignment law for the benefit of his creditors; (7) against a debtor who has died, leaving his estate insufficient to pay his debts in full, and such fact is certified to by the executor or administrator or any court having jurisdiction thereof, and such certificate or a copy thereof is attached to the preliminary notice of loss; (8) against a debtor who being a corporation, firm or individual for whom a receiver has been appointed upon the ground of insolvency; (9) against a debtor where the legal proceedings show that, to defraud his creditors or avoid the payments of his debts, he has sold out or transferred his stock in trade; (10) against a debtor who has given a chattel mortgage for the benefit of his creditors; (11) against a debtor who has been found to be insolvent through judicial proceedings; (12) where a claim does not exceed $150 and none of the above state of facts have arisen, but the designated mercantile agency, a collection agency, or a practising attorney in or near the place where the debtor did business reports, in writing, as to each of such claims, and such report is attached to the preliminary notice of loss, that the debtor has absconded, leaving no assets applicable to the payment of his debts, or that such claim is uncollectable and the issue of an execution would be useless, and that during a period of at least thirty days prior to the making of such report diligent efforts have been made to collect such claim or claims, and any claim which is more than three months overdue prior to commencement of said bond, and any claim that has been placed in the hands of such mercantile agency, collection agency, or attorney prior to the execution of said bond shall not be covered by this (12th) clause, but shall, so far as the same are covered by this bond and riders attached hereto, be included in the calculation of losses, provided the insolvency and one of the foregoing facts as enumerated in this subsection 'b' occurs between the date of the execution and the termination of this bond."

The court, per Allen, J., said: "(4) Subsections 'a' and 'b' are provisos to the first stipulation or agreement in the bond; and subsection 'a' provides that the debtors included in the bond are those covered by Schedule A, while subsection 'b' enumerates the evidences of liability by the defendant.

"Clause 12 of subsection 'b' is obscure, and it is difficult to ascertain its meaning. Some word is evidently omitted before the word 'shall,' and stitutes insolvency will not be governed by that bond but by the terms of the first one, having in view the language of both bonds, the test of insolvency is to be applied to some claim. It cannot be applied to the claims of $150 first mentioned in the clause, because it says that, in addition to insolvency, one of the foregoing facts enumerated in subsection 'b' must exist; and it is provided as to the claims first mentioned that it is not necessary for any of the foregoing facts to exist, and it cannot be applied to all the claims covered by the bond, because that would give it an effect which would withdraw claims covered by Schedule A, and would make solvency the test.

"If we bear in mind the purpose of the contract, and that experience is the basis of credit, that the claims to be insured are those covered by Schedule A, and that subsection 'b' is intended to furnish the evidences of liability, and read clause 12 in the light of these facts, we think the purpose of the clause was to provide evidences of liability that would be satisfactory for small claims that did not exceed $150, and that these small claims are divided into three classes, and that the proviso applies only to those three months overdue, or such as had been placed in the hands of a mercantile agency prior to the execution of the bond. As thus construed the clause reads as follows:

"'(12) Where a claim does not exceed $150, and none of the above state of facts have arisen, but the designated mercantile agency, a collection agency, or a practising attorney, in or near the place where the debtor did business, reports in writing as to each of said claims, and such report is attached to the preliminary proof of loss, that the debtor has absconded, leaving no assets applicable to the payment of his debts, or that such claim is uncollectable, and the issue of an execution would be useless, and that during a period of at least thirty days prior to the making of such report diligent efforts have been made to collect such claim or claims, they shall, so far as they are covered by this bond and riders attached hereto, be included in the calculation of loss and also any such claim which is more than three months overdue prior to the commencement of this bond, or that has been placed in the hands of such mercantile agency, collection agency, or attorney prior to the execution of this bond, shall be included, provided the insolvency and one of the foregoing facts from 1 to 11 inclusive, as enumerated in this subsection "b," occurs between the date of the execution and the termination of this bond.'"

In this connection it is declared by the court per Tuttle, Dist. J., in a Federal case that: "Among the losses insured by the first policy were losses, 'against a debtor for an amount not exceeding $250, where the preliminary notice of loss has attached to it a report from the designated mercantile agency, or from some collection agency or attorney practising in the place where the debtor did business, that the claim against such debtor is uncollectable by legal proceedings.' . . . It is unnecessary to construe this provision, because a reference to the findings and to certain exhibits mentioned therein discloses the fact that a petition in bankruptcy had been filed against the firm in question, and defendant had duly filed a proof of claim thereon, this loss was therefore insured, in any event, under the clause covering such losses 'against a debtor by or against whom a petition to be declared a bankrupt or insolvent has been filed under the Federal bankruptcy law, or under some insolvency or assignment law of the United States or any Territory thereof.'" Philadelphia Casas where the insurance is against loss by the insolvency of debtors and the bond provides that no loss shall be proven after its expiration, provided, however, that in case said bond is renewed and the premium on such renewal is paid at or before the expiration of the bond, loss resulting after such date of expiration, on shipments made during the term of such bond may be proven during the term of the renewal bond next immediately succeeding. These bonds were similar in nearly all respects.[23]

(b) Bankruptcy of debtor after assured discontinues business and policy terminates.—A loss by bankruptcy of a debtor occurring after assured have discontinued their business, even though the goods are sold and the debtor is adjudged a bankrupt during the policy term, is not recoverable where the bond is conditioned that a ualty Co. v. Fechheimer, 220 Fed. 401, 136 C. C. A. 25.

[23] American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Athens Woolen Mills, 92 Fed. 581, 34 C. C. A. 161. It was provided: "The term 'insolvency of debtors' whenever used in this bond is defined," etc., although the court, per Taft, Cir. J., said: "It is doubtful whether we ought to consider the foregoing clause as before us in reaching a conclusion in this case." The old bond was No. 1,540, clause 8, provided as to recovery of "loss resulting after such date of expiration on shipments made during the term of this bond," etc., clause 11 defined insolvency. Clause 8 of bond No. 244, the renewal bond, was: "In case this bond as renewed, and the premiums on such renewal is paid, at or before the expiration of the bond, loss resulting after said date of expiration upon shipments made during the term of the bond, may be proven under such renewal bond in accordance with the terms and conditions of such renewal. In case this bond is a renewal, and the premium has been paid at or before the expiration of the preceding bond, losses occurring during the term of this bond, on shipments made during the term of said preceding bond may be proven hereunder." Taft, Cir. J., also declared: "The material words of the clause are: 'In case this bond is a renewal, . . . losses occurring during the term of this bond on shipments made during the term of the preceding bond may be proven hereunder.' Does proof under the renewal bond require that the insolvency shall be established according to the definition of that bond? Standing alone it may be conceded that this would be the natural meaning of the words; but we are to construe this clause with clauses 8 and 11 of bond No. 1,540. We are to consider that, by that clause, it is clearly intended to extend the benefit of the old bond to cover sales of goods made under that bond, though losses unforeseen did not occur during its life; and we ought not to defeat that intention and just expectation of the assured, unless the words of the renewal bond necessarily require it. Do they require it? We think not. In the light of the circumstances and the necessity for reconciling the clauses of the two bonds, the words of clause 8, of bond No. 2,443, may be reasonably construed to mean merely that the formal proof of loss is to be made under the renewal bond during its life, while clauses No. 8 and 11 of bond No. 1,540, shall be given effect by holding that the fact of the loss is to be settled by the terms of the old bond."

discontinuance of business by assured shall terminate the policy except in case of a temporary interruption of business consequent upon a fire, strike, death, or withdrawal, or admission of a member of a firm; and there is such a discontinuance of business and termination of the risk within the intent of the stipulation where it appears that after assured's plant had been destroyed by fire they endeavored to obtain other quarters but concluded to locate an office and did so by taking desk room with two of their former employees, who had opened up the same line of business, but they did no business for over a year, except to collect old accounts and subsequently this business of said company was purchased by assured and one member of said concern was taken in as a partner.[24]

§ 2788. Land dangers: marine risks.—As noted elsewhere, the underwriter under marine insurances is not answerable for loss or damage sustained prior or subsequently to the attachment and termination of the risk, and therefore it is a general rule that damages or losses sustained to goods on land are not within the policy, although there are exceptions to this rule in certain cases where during the continuance of the risk the goods are temporarily landed.[1]

§ 2789. Leakage and breakage: marine risks.—Losses happening to certain liquids and merchandises through leakage and breakage rest upon the principle that, owing to the peculiar character or intrinsic nature of the commodity, the diminution or damage proceeds from the proper vice of the thing and the insurers are not chargeable, for such ordinary and inevitable loss may happen, however safe the voyage may be. This is the doctrine of all the law-writers, and a distinction is also made between ordinary and extraordinary leakage.[2] So if by the pitching and rolling of heavy seas, the stowage not being faulty, there is extraordinary leakage, as where the contents of casks have been broken out or been wholly or partly emptied, it is a question whether such loss was occasioned by a peril insured against, and if so and no percentage is fixed limiting the insurer's liability, he would be bound for such extraordinary leak-

[24] Cohen v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 119 N. Y. Supp. 700.

[1] See Pelly v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 1 Burr. 341, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 30; Brough v. Whitmore, 4 Term Rep. 206, 2 R. R. 361.

[2] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 9, pp. 311, 312; c. x. sec. 2, p. 242, citing Valin, Pothier, The Guidon, and The Ordonnance, Louis XIV.; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 759 et seq.; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 722 et seq.; 2 Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 779, 780, pp. 973–4; 2 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 619, sec. 1090.

As to exception as to leakage, breakage, dampness, etc., see § 2719 herein.

age;[3] provided there is no stipulation otherwise. The insurer may in some contracts limit the percentage beyond which he is only liable, and in other policies these losses are expressly excepted, but the insurer may also without doubt, by special agreement, assume such losses. Whether a leakage is natural or ordinary may depend upon whether the voyage is long or short, and also upon the nature of the article taken in connection with the length and character of the voyage.[4] Mr. Arnould says that in England there is no fixed rule as to what shall be considered ordinary leakage and breakage on given articles on a given voyage, and that the forms of policy used in France and other foreign countries generally stipulate the percentage or average amount of liability.[5]

§ 2789a. Ordinary leakage and "extraordinary leakage" distinguished.—Although the printed part of the policy excludes liability for leakage of liquids, etc., unless occasioned by stranding or collision with other vessels, yet if the memorandum clause provides that in consideration of an additional premium the insurance shall cover leakage of certain oils one-half of one per cent of the quantity laden, to be first deducted as ordinary leakage and the excess of such one-half of one per cent to be considered as extraordinary leakage, said loss to be paid if amounting to three per cent on the amount insured, such clause draws a distinction between ordinary and extraordinary leakage not between sea perils and perils not of the sea, and constitutes an agreement to pay such extraordinary loss above three per cent and the account cannot be barred by parol evidence of any understanding between the parties to the contrary.[6]

§ 2790. Lightning.—Damage by lightning without any combustion is not within the terms of a policy providing against losses by fire;[7] for it is declared that it is not sufficient to show, where the building is not consumed or set on fire, that fire is one of the constituent elements of electricity, but that assured must show that

[3] See Crofts v. Marshall, 7 Car. & P. 597, 48 R. R. 828, per Lord Denman; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 9, p. 312.

[4] See Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 9, p. 311.

[5] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *760 et seq.; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 723 et sec. See 2 Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 779, p. 974.

[6] Indemnity Mutual Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. of London v. United Oil Co. (U. S. D. C.) 88 Fed. 315.

[7] Kenniston v. Merrimac County Mutual Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193; Scripture v. Lowell Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111.

Loss of live stock by lightning, see § 2791 herein.

On loss by lightning, see note in 26 L.R.A. 267.

electricity is fire, and that the rendering and destruction of the building insured is the result of that particular principle, and that as this cannot be done, damage by lightning is neither ignition nor combustion; it is not a loss by fire.[8] Damage caused purely by lightning is not covered by insurance of the property damaged against losses "by fire" or "by reason of fire or by means of fire,"[9] and the rending and destruction of the building by lightning, without ignition or combustion, is not a loss "by fire by lightning" within the meaning of such a clause in the policy.[10] So recovery for loss of a barn by being wrecked by lightning, but not burned cannot be had under a policy in a mutual company insuring against loss by fire, although the custom has been to pay such losses and to levy assessments therefor on the policy holders, since such payments were merely misappropriations of funds by the company.[11]

Again, if the contract provides for liabilities for "losses on property burned or damaged by lightning," the fact that the building is merely struck by lightning and shattered and damaged does not make the insurers liable.[12] Although if the policy be against "all direct loss or damage caused by lightning," the insured may recover his whole damage where lightning is the proximate cause of the loss; otherwise he may recover only such damages as are directly caused by lightning.[13]

But a specific provision for liability for any loss or damage caused by lightning renders the insurers liable for all known effects of lightning, and not merely for losses thereby when ignition or combustion follows, even though the policy also provides against all loss or damage "by fire."[14] And if the insurance is against loss by fire or lightning between specific dates, agreeing to make good [8] Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637, per Pratt, J. (a learned and exhaustive discussion on electricity).

As to injuries caused by atmospheric electricity, and as to an electric light company not being an insurer, see Joyce on Electric Law (2d ed.) sec. 445f.

[9] Kenniston v. Merrimac County Mutual Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193.

[10] Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Const. (N. Y.) 326, aff'g 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637.

[11] Sleet v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. — Ky. —, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421n, 113 S. W. 515.

On custom to pay certain class of losses as affecting liability of insurer for such loss not covered by the policy, see note in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421.

[12] Andrews v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 37 Me. 256.

[13] Beakes v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. St. Rep. 290, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 613, 24 N. Y. Supp. 544.

[14] Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894. See Russell v. German Fire Ins. Co. 100 Minn. 528, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 326, 111 N. W. 400, 36 Ins. L. J. 481, 486, per Lewis, J.

all loss so sustained to assured, his executors, administrators, and assigns, and assured assigns all loss or damage not exceeding his interest in the property, the company cannot, in the absence of some provision therefor, avoid payment on the ground that assured died before the loss occurred.[15] If the lightning is followed by combustion and consequent loss, this is covered by an insurance under a "fire" policy.[16]

In some cases decisions relating to losses by lightning have been cited as applicable to cases of explosion by gunpowder, but the court in a Massachusetts decision says such cases bear upon the question of such explosion, if at all, only by a very distant analogy.[17] The destruction of a house by the explosion of a powder house across the street, which is struck by lightning, is not included in the risk covered by a policy which insures against damage caused by lightning, but exclude any loss by explosion.[18]

Where the wording of the policy or contract is sufficiently broad to cover all known effects of lightning, as where it provides for liability against "any loss or damage caused by lightning," this will include a loss by a tornado where the evidence shows a presence in the tornado of electrical disturbance, presenting the usual characteristics of lightning, and such lightning is the active agent in destroying the property, and it is error to grant a nonsuit under such facts.[19] Recovery, however, for a building shattered by lightning and the destruction of which is completed by a high wind, must be limited to the direct loss caused by lightning, excluding the additional damage by the wind, under a policy for damage by lightning, but expressly excluding damage by cyclone, tornado, or wind storms.[20] And injury to goods from water and debris into which they are propelled by the falling of a wall caused by lightning, is a direct and natural consequence of the lightning discharge if a clause is attached to a policy covering all direct loss or damage

[15] Richardson v. German Ins. Co. 89 Ky. 571, 13 S. W. 1, 12 Ry. Law R. 37, 8 L.R.A. 800.

[16] Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Comst. (N. Y.) 326, aff'g 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637; Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123, 10 R. R. 656, per Lord Ellenborough; Beaumont on Ins. 37; Ellis on Fire Ins. 25.

[17] Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J.; referring particularly to Kenniston v. Merrimac County Mutual Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193, and Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Comst. (N. Y.) 326, aff'g 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637.

[18] German Fire Ins. Co. v. Roost, 53 Ohio St. 581, 36 L.R.A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, 45 N. E. 1097.

[19] Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 54 Wis. 433, 1 N. W. 894 (two judges dissenting).

[20] Beakes v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 143 N. Y. 402, 26 L.R.A. 267, 38 N. E. 453. See Warmcastle v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 201 Pa. 302, 50 Atl. 941.

caused by lightning "meaning thereby the commonly accepted use of the term lightning." [1] But where a gristmill and sawmill annex are so located with relation to a dam that it is a question under the evidence whether a rise of water or lightning caused the loss, there can be no recovery for a loss by lightning, especially so, where there are no marks of fire on any of the wreckage although there was a heavy storm accompanied by a sharp flash of lightning and the fall of timbers leaving the mills a mass of ruins, which was splintered, it also appearing that said ruins were below the dam, and the bulkhead of the dam at one end of the sawmill was gone and the water was very high and had changed its channel running under the sawmill and through where the gristmill had stood.[2] Again, the jarring of an insured building caused by jarring of the ground consequent upon a discharge of lightning, is not covered by a policy against all direct loss by lightning, and even though the breaking and falling of plastering in insured's house instantly followed vivid flashes of lightning, and there was also other damage and the facts were such that the jury were justified in concluding that such loss and damage was caused by lightning, still where the jury were instructed that if they believed from the evidence that there was a discharge of lightning or electricity and that the shock caused by said electrical discharge struck and injured the walls of the plaintiff's building, he was entitled to recover, it was held that such instruction was erroneous, and a judgment below for insured was reversed.[3]

In marine policies, if the subject of insurance is burned by lightning, this is a loss by "fire." [4] Emerigon, referring to "accident from fire," says: "It may have been caused by lightning. . . . It is not to be doubted that if the accident had happened by lightning or by the fire of enemies it is at the charge of the insurers. . . . 'The insurers,' says Pothier, 'are bound for fire when it is from a peril (cas fortuit), such as lightning, or that the ship has taken fire in a combat.'" [5] Cushing, J., in Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Insurance Company,[6] says, referring to Emerigon, that "the question of loss by lightning is very summarily disposed

[1] Cummings v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. 153 Iowa, 579, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1169 (annotated on admissibility of insurance agent's memoranda or letters as to policies and risks), 134 N. W. 79, 41 Ins. L. J. 490.

[2] Clark v. Franklin Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 111 Wis. 65, 86 N. W. 549.

[3] Kattleman v. Fire Assoc. of Phila. 79 Mo. App. 447, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 750.

[4] Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123, 10 R. R. 656, per Lord Ellenborough.

[5] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 17, pp. 347, 348.

[6] 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Rep. 111.

of in the older authorities by treating electricity as fire from heaven;" but it would seem from the above quotation that Emerigon refers to the "accident from fire . . . caused by lightning." So also Pothier, and Meredith in his translation has in connection with the subject the side note "Fire happening through mere chance."

§ 2791. Live stock: same, slaves classed as animals.[7]—If live stock is insured during transit, and a part of the stock jumps off the inclined plane over which they are being driven from the cars to a boat, and sustain injuries from which they shortly thereafter die, the insurers are liable.[8] And if horses are insured against all risks, including death from any cause whatever, under a voyage policy, the insurers are liable for death caused by bruises brought about by the motion of the ship in heavy seas.[9]

Where the owner of a horse is insured against the death of the animal from accident or disease, the insurer is not liable where the horse, which is suffering from an incurable disease, is killed two hours before the expiration of the policy, the killing not being required by an act of mercy, and this is true though the act is authorized by the president and secretary of the company.[10] So recovery, under an insurance against loss by death of a horse may be had where insured acting upon advice of experts in such matters consents to its being killed in consequence of an incurable compound comminuted fracture of the leg.[11] And if death of a mare from foaling is insured against, a recovery can be had therefor, as the cause of death, where she is so greatly injured thereby that she can survive only a short time and she is in such a state of suffering that she is killed.[12]

Live stock or cattle are frequently covered by a policy upon them while "contained in" certain buildings, etc. This question is, however, considered elsewhere.[13]

[7] See § 2797 herein.

When liability attaches: statute, see Johnston v. Indiana & Ohio Live Stock Ins. Co. 94 Neb. 403, 143 N. W. 459; same, payment of premium as factor, see Cecil v. Kentucky Live Stock Ins. Co. 165 Ky. 211, 176 S. W. 986.

[8] Ætna Ins. Co. v. Stivers, 47 Ill. 86, 95 Am. Dec. 467.

[9] Coit v. Smith, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 16.

On animal insurance, see note in 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 569.

When recovery precluded on policy on horse against marine risk and mortality: statement of pedigree of horse, see Yorkshire Ins. Co. v. Campbell, (1917) A. C. 218, 86 L. J. P. C. 85, 115 L. T. 644, 33 T. L. R. 18; under Australian marine insurance act 1909, sec. 39, which is same as marine insurance act of England, sec. 33 (see Appendix C. herein).

[10] Tripp v. Northwestern Livestock Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 278, 59 N. W. 1.

[11] Live Stock Ins. Assoc. v. Edgar, 56 Ind. App. 489, 105 N. E. 641.

[12] National Life Stock Ins. Co. v. Elliott, 60 Ind. App. 112, 108 N. E. 784.

[13] See § 1747 herein.

An injury to mules by the escape of steam without fault of the officers of the steamboat is a loss by the peril of the river.[14]

Insurance of live stock against loss by lightning includes their loss through the burning of a building immediately caused by lightning.[15] In many cases, however, the question whether or not there can be a recovery of loss of live stock by lightning turns especially upon points purely of the effect of marks upon the body in conjunction with the fact whether or not there was a discharge of lightning so immediately prior to the loss as to have been the cause thereof. The determination, therefore, of questions of this kind must rest upon the particular circumstances of each case, and decisions covering the same must be largely illustrative. So where a brood mare was found dead in a pasture and there was a sharp conflict in evidence upon the point whether or not there was any lightning in the vicinity at the time of the accident, and also as to marks of lightning, the issues were held to be for the jury, and as the evidence indicated death by lightning the court refused to disturb its verdict.[16] But although during the night a storm had occurred, accompanied by lightning, it was held that the fact that a mule colt had been found dead thereafter, was not proof of death by lightning in the absence of any marks, abrasion of the skin, burning or otherwise, showing that death was so caused.[17]

A recovery may be had for the loss of live stock insured against loss due to tornadoes, cyclones, and windstorms, where the loss would not have happened but for a windstorm, and it is the primary and efficient cause of such loss.[18]

While slaves were a subject of commerce, and were capable of being bought and sold, they were considered a legitimate subject of insurance, as goods or merchandise. This traffic being no longer permitted, the cases thereon which are cited below are chiefly valuable because of the principles involved. The early writers class negro slaves and animals under the same head, holding that death of slaves and animals through material causes was owing to the in-

[14] Union Ins. Co. v. Groom, 4 Bush (Ky.) 289.

[15] Hapeman v. Citizens Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 126 Mich. 191, 86 Am. St. Rep. 535, 85 N. W. 454.

[16] Cottrell v. Munterville Mutual Fire & Lightning Ins. Assoc. 145 Iowa, 651, 124 N. W. 619, 39 Ins. L. J. 508. See Heaton v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 89 Kan. 840, 132 Pac. 1007.

[17] Warren v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 130 Mo. App. 226, 109 S. W. 88.

[18] Jordan v. Iowa Mutual Tornado Ins. Co. 151 Iowa, 73, 130 N. W. 177, 40 Ins. L. J. 1065. See also Oklahoma Farmers' Mutual Indemnity Assoc. v. Smith, 25 Okla. 495, 106 Pac. 861.

On causes of loss covered by cyclone, hurricane, tornado, or windstorm insurance, see note in L.R.A 1915B, 1094.

herent vice of the thing, and not a loss for which insurers were liable except by express agreement, but otherwise if they were drowned in a tempest, killed by the enemy or by jettison, or by any other accident which is a peril within the policy.[19]

§ 2792. Loss after termination of risk consequent upon injury during life of policy.—There has been some discussion upon the point whether the insurer is liable for a loss resulting after the termination of the risk from an injury sustained from a peril insured against during the life of the contract. This question involves to some extent the point considered elsewhere concerning whether the ship has been moored in "good safety" under a marine risk.[20] If it be assumed that the ship cannot be in good safety at any time after the happening of the accident which is the proximate cause of the loss, one factor in the question ceases to exist, for the risk in such case does not terminate. Accordingly, where the ship received her death wound during the insured voyage, but was kept afloat by artificial means more than twenty-four hours and foundered in port, sustaining a total loss, it was held that she was not in safety at any time after the accident, and that the underwriters were liable.[1] But in case of an insurance on a ship under a time policy, and three days prior to the expiration of the time she received her death wound, although she was kept afloat by pumping until three days after the time, it was held that the loss had not happened until after the risk ended, and the insurers were not liable.[2] Again, considering the question under marine insurances, the point presented differs from that where the cause of the diminished value of the vessel existed before the ship's arrival, and the actual loss occurred from a totally different cause arising after the termination of the risk; as where a vessel under a time policy was damaged and kept afloat until moored safely, although it was necessary to keep the pumps going while her cargo was being discharged, and she was subsequently taken to dry dock for surveys and repairs, where, after the time limit of the risk had ended, she was destroyed by fire, and it was held that there could be a recovery for the diminished value of the vessel arising from the sea damage, and that the expenses for repairs could be considered in ascertaining the sum.[3]

[19] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. secs. 9, 10, pp. 313–16, citing Valin and Pothier; Summers v. United States Ins. & Trust Co. 13 La. Ann. 504; Moore v. Perpetual Ins. Co. 16 Mo. 98; Gregson v. Gibbert, 3 Doug. 232; Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 Term Rep. 656.

[20] See §§ 1537–46 herein.

[1] Shaw v. Felton, 2 East, 113, 6 R. R. 394, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 631.

[2] Meretony v. Dunlop, cited in Lockyer v. Offley, 1 Term Rep. 260, 1 R. R. 194. See comment on this case in Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 649, 19 L. J. Q. B. 509, 14 Jur. 1114, 81 R. R. 725, per Lord Campbell, C. J.

[3] Lidgett v. Secretan, 40 L. J. Com.

It is also held that if an injury is occasioned within the time covered by the policy, which results in a total loss after the expiration of the policy, the insurer is liable for the actual injury arising within the time of the policy.[4] In a New York case, under a policy insuring horses against all risks, including death from any cause whatever, it was held that insured was entitled to recover the value of a horse that was injured on the voyage by reason of heavy seas, so that he died three days after landing, the court declaring that the question was, How much damage might have been ascertained at the time he was landed?[5] If the extent of the damage sustained during the continuance of the risk cannot be ascertained until after the risk ends, there seems no reasonable ground on which the insurer can avoid responsibility for the loss according to the fact, whether it be partial or total.[6] And where the damage so sustained and ascertained depreciated the vessel's value one-half, it was held that the insurers were liable as for a total loss.[7] So where the proximate cause of the loss was the stranding of the vessel during the term covered, and the vessel was got off, carried into the harbor, examined, and sold, there being no abandonment, this was held a partial loss recoverable from the underwriters.[8]

In case of an insurance upon a man's life for a specified time, it is undoubtedly true that if some short time before the term expires he receives a mortal wound, of which he dies after the term, the insurer is not liable.[9] Although an insurance of this character has been compared with and declared to rest upon the same principles as those governing a time policy on a ship,[10] nevertheless the two

P. 257, 6 L. R. Com. P. 616, rev'g in part 39 L. J. Com. P. 196, 5 L. R. Com. P. 190, 40 L. J. C. P. 257, 6 C. P. 616, 24 L. T. 942, 19 W. R. 1088, 1 Asp. M. C. 95.

[4] Howell v. Cincinnati Ins. Co. 7 Ohio, 276, 284, pt. 1.

[5] Coit v. Smith, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 16.

[6] Lidgett v. Secretan, 40 L. J. Com. P. 257, 6 L. R. Com. P. 616; rev'g in part 39 L. J. Com. P. 196, 5 L. R. Com. P. 190, 24 L. T. 942, 19 W. R. 1088, 1 Asp. M. C. 95; Furneaux v. Bradley, reported in 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 584; Park on Ins. 166.

[7] Peters v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 25.

[8] The court in this case said substantially that under a time policy, if the damages be sustained by a peril insured against during the life of the risk, and the amount of loss be not ascertained until after the term, and the vessel is kept afloat till then by proper measures, by giving notice of abandonment or by obtaining evidence of the sum required for repairs, there exists no valid reason why there should not be a recovery for a total or partial loss according to the facts: Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 649, 19 L. J. Q. B. 509, 14 Jur. 1114, 81 R. R. 725.

[9] Examine Howell v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 232.

[10] 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *264, adopting the words of Willes, J., in Lockyer v. Offley, 1 Term Rep. 260, 1 R. R. 194.

cases do not rest upon the same principle, so far as the question here under consideration is concerned, for in the case of the ship the injury received is from a peril insured against, and the insurance is against loss or damage from certain perils, while in case of the life risk the insurance is against loss from the death itself, not against death when resulting from or caused by certain perils or diseases, injuries, or accidents. In accident policies it is generally provided that the insurer is only liable where the death occurs within a specified time, as ninety days after or from the time the accident happens.[11]

In a fire risk, if it is impossible to remove the goods or articles insured or to save them from loss or damage, it is immaterial whether or not the fire was actually communicated thereto within the life of the policy, where the fire began in the building containing said property before the policy term expired.[12]

§ 2793. Same subject: conclusion.—In cases therefore, where the insurance is against loss arising from or occasioned by certain perils, the question might reasonably be held to depend largely upon the factor of proximate and remote cause; for if the ship be clearly injured within the life of the policy by a peril insured against, and the injury is of such a character that the loss resulting or rather consummating after the end of the risk is an inevitable consequence of such prior injury, such resulting loss will form an element in ascertaining the amount of damages, for it is an evidential fact as to the condition of the subject insured at the end of the risk and in the premises, and is of conclusive force.[13] Under a fire risk the loss

[11] See Perry v. Provident Life Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 242, s. c. 99 Mass. 162; Northrup v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 43 N. Y. 516, 518, 3 Am. Rep. 724.

[12] Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. 120 Ky. 752, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 364, 87 S. W. 1115, 89 S. W. 3.

As to removal of goods in case of threatened fire; damages and expenses incurred; duty of assured; how far assured must exert himself to save property, see §§ 2811 et seq. herein.

[13] "If certain consequences will inevitably result after the expiration of the period of the policy from the operations of the perils insured against during the period, they are surely proper subjects of indemnity;" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 684–86, sec. 1148. Mr. Parsons is of opinion that the insurers are liable in case of such injury during the period of the risk from a peril insured against, and a loss after the end of the risk, "where the ultimate loss was not only the effect of the injury so sustained, but an effect so direct, immediate, and inevitable that the injury must be deemed to be the proximate and only cause of the loss, . . . if insured property be injured by a peril insured against, the insurers are liable for the direct and immediate consequences whenever or wherever these may occur;" but he qualifies this by the words, "Possibly a distinction might be made in this respect between policies on time and those on a voyage:" 2 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 65, 66. See Arnould on Mais said to occur at the time of the fire, though the point involved here is not discussed.[14]

§ 2794. Mortgage: unmarketableness by reason of liens, defects of title, etc.—If a policy is issued on a mortgage against loss from its unmarketability, by reason of the possibility of mechanics' or municipal liens, excluding actual losses by reason of such liens, the loss only covers liens then existing and inchoate at the date of the policy.[15]

§ 2794a. Mortgage clause: distinctions, validity and construction: generally.—The mortgage clauses under consideration here have been variously denominated as the "mortgage clause" the "mortgagee clause," the "standard clause," the "standard mortgage clause," the "standard mortgagee clause," the "union clause" the "union mortgage clause," the "loss payable clause," and the "open mortgage clause."[16] And in a Kansas case a distinction is made, or at least qualifiedly made, between the "standard clause" and the "union clause," or "union mortgage clause."[17]

The taking out of a policy by the mortgagor or owner containing the mortgagee clause protecting the mortgagee against any act of neglect of said mortgagor or owner, is not against public policy and the mortgagee may enforce the contract as to his interest.[18]

A clause in a fire policy declaring that no act or neglect of the mortgagor shall defeat the insurance as to the interest of the mortgagee refers to acts or neglect in connection with the property, while the risk is subsisting, and which under the terms of the policy would invalidate the insurance, such as conduct increasing the hazard, and not the omission, after the fire has occurred, to comply with provisions designed to secure evidence as to the nature rine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *754; 1 Arnould on Marine Insurance, *411, *451; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 372.

[14] Johnson v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 91 Ill. 92, 33 Am. Rep. 47.

[15] Wheeler v. Real Estate Title Ins. & Trust Co. 160 Pa. St. 408, 23 Ins. L. J. 475, 28 Atl. 849. See § 2822 herein.

[16] Gilman v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. of N. Y. 112 Me. 528, L.R.A. 1915C, 758, 92 Atl. 721, 45 Ins. L. J. 340, 342.—Haley, J.; Collinsville Savings Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co. 77 Conn. 676, 69 L.R.A. 924, 60 Atl. 647, 34 Ins. L. J. 1031, 1035.—Prentice, J.; Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Porter, 44 Fla. 568, 33 So. 473, 32 Ins. L. J. 577; and cases throughout this and the next following sections.

[17] Stamey v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 96 Kan. 99, 150 Pac. 227, 46 Ins. L. J. 442 (considered more fully under § 2795 herein). See also Brecht v. Law, Union & Crown Ins. Co. 160 Fed. 399, 87 C. C. A. 35, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197n, 37 Ins. L. J. 621; Collinsville Savings Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co. 77 Conn. 676, 69 L.R.A. 924, 60 Atl. 647, 34 Ins. L. J. 1031 (both cases are considered under sections next following).

[18] Kelsey v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 78 N. J. Eq. 437, 79 Atl. 539, 40 Ins. L. J. 1230.

and extent of the loss.[19] And under the standard or union mortgage clause, which expressly agrees that as to the interest of the mortgagee the insurance effected in his favor shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the owner or mortgagor of the insured property, the words "Acts or neglects of the mortgagor or owner" mean any act of omission or commission on his part, occurring subsequently to the execution of said clause, which would operate to forfeit his rights under the policy as said owner or mortgagor. Another point of importance which is asserted is this: that insurer's indemnity for such apparent unconditional guaranty to the mortgagee is its right of subrogation to said mortgagee's rights in the mortgage security, given by said mortgage clause.[20] So the consideration which supports the policy supports also a contract between insurer and the mortgagee under the mortgagee clause attached to it at the time of its execution, where the loss is payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear and notice of any delinquency of assured is agreed to be given to the mortgagee within a specified time before any suspension or cancelation of the policy affecting his interests is made, as "delinquency" is interpreted as referring to the same kind of "act or default" as is referred to in the "union clause." And a recovery may be had by the mortgagee under said clause, where he has complied with its conditions, even though the mortgagor could not have enforced the policy because of his default.[1] And where it is agreed that the mortgagee shall notify assurer of any change of ownership or increase of hazard which should come to his knowledge, and pay for every such increase not permitted by the mortgagor's policy, and that insurer shall have the right to cancel the policy, there is a valid and binding consideration for an agreement that the interest of the mortgagee shall not be effected by any act or neglect of the mortgagor.[2]

[19] Southern Home Building & Loan Assoc. v. Home Ins. Co. 94 Ga. 168, 27 L.R.A. 844, 47 Am. St. Rep. 147, 21 S. E. 375.

On effect of mortgagor's failure to give notice or proof of loss on mortgagee's right to recover, see note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459.

[20] Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Porter, 44 Fla. 568, 33 So. 473, 32 Ins. L. J. 577.

On right of insurer upon paying mortgagee under mortgage clause in policy issued to owner of equity of redemption to be subrogated to rights of mortgagee, see note in L.R.A. 1916A, 559.

[1] People's Savings Bank v. Retail Merchants' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 146 Iowa, 536, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455, 123 N. W. 198, 39 Ins. L. J. 76.

On effect of breach of policy of insurance by mortgagor on rights of mortgagee, see notes in 18 L.R.A (N.S.) 197; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226; and L.R.A.1915C, 758.

[2] Planters' Mutual Ins. Assoc. v. Southern Savings Fund & Loan Soc. 68 Ark. 8, 56 S. W. 443, 29 Ins. L. J. 611.

Under the Massachusetts mortgagee clause a reinsurer stands in the place of the original insurer in so far as the parties' rights under the contract in this respect are concerned.[3]

§ 2794b. Mortgagor's and mortgagee's rights: generally.—If the mortgage requires the mortgagor to insure for the mortgagee's benefit and the policy makes the loss payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, he is entitled to recover thereon in his own name to the extent of his interest.[4] and where the loss is so payable to the mortgagee he may, in case of loss, recover the whole amount thereof, in his own name, if the mortgage debt exceeds the loss.[5] And where the policy is payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, and that interest is reduced upon foreclosure and sale of the insured premises, by the transfer of two thirds of his interest by the mortgagee, who bids in the property for less than his debt, but the deed is not formally delivered before the loss occurs, the mortgagee may recover for the remaining one-third of the actual damage caused to his interest by the fire.[6] So a mortgagee corporation can also avail himself of an insurance contract made for its benefit, where the mortgage covenants that the mortgagor shall keep the property insured for the mortgagee's benefit and the policy makes the loss payable to said mortgagee as his interest may appear, and this applies even though the latter had no knowledge of the existence of the policy until after the fire, and it is immaterial which of the parties protected thereby is in possession of the policy, and an action thereunder cannot in such case be defeated by insurer by offering, several months after suit is brought, to pay the mortgage amount if the mortgagee will assign it to assurer where no offer to pay interest and costs of suit is made.[7]

Again, if the mortgagor agrees to keep the premises insured for the benefit of the mortgagee, but the policy is taken out by the mortgagor in his own name, an equitable lien attaches in favor of the mortgagee to the policy proceeds, where the policy is not assigned to the mortgagee, nor made payable to him. Nor in such case are said proceeds exempt on the ground that the property in-

[3] Flint v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 207 Mass. 337, 92 N. E. 646, 40 Ins. L. J. 506.

[4] Palmer Savings Bank v. Insurance Co. of North America, 166 Mass. 189, 32 L.R.A. 615, 44 N. E. 211.

[5] Peck v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 16 Utah, 121, 67 Am. St. Rep. 600, 51 Pac. 255, 27 Ins. L. J. 265. See also Stamey v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 96 Kan. 99, 150 Pac. 227, 46 Ins. L. J. 242 (standard mortgagee clause considered under § 2795 herein.

[6] Uhlfelder v. Palatine Ins. Co. 97 N. Y. Supp. 499, 111 App. Div. 57.

[7] Union Institution for Savings v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 196 Mass. 230, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459, 81 N. E. 994, 37 Ins. L. J. 43.

sured constitutes a homestead.[8] But if a donee of mortgaged personalty has procured insurance for his own benefit, the mortgagee is not entitled to the benefit thereof, merely because said donee has knowledge that the mortgagor had failed to keep his agreement to insure for the mortgagee's benefit.[9]

Under a Kansas decision where the mortgagee acquires the legal title to the real estate upon which he holds a mortgage, in view of numerous instances where merger would be unobjectionable to some parties and injurious to others, the general rule is, that, whether or not a merger results depends upon the intention of the mortgagee, actual or presumed. If no intention appears it will be presumed to be such as will best conserve his interests. If it appears wholly indifferent a merger will be presumed. "It has also been held that this intention need not be manifested or exercised at any particular time. The time when the merger takes place if at all, is unimportant unless it affects some intervening rights injuriously. The intent of the party interested need not be declared, or exist when the titles become united, but may be formed or declared when it best suits the interest of the owner thereof if no injury results to others thereby." Accordingly where the mortgagee was secured in part by an insurance policy and accepted a deed to the property in order to avoid foreclosure, and the two interests are kept separate, there is no merger of the mortgage in the legal title and the liability of insurer is in no wise affected thereby.[10]

If a policy is made payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear and his interest is only to the extent of his lien secured by notes it constitutes an appropriation in advance of the policy proceeds to the satisfaction of said notes and neither party can without the consent of the other disregard such application of payment even though one of the notes was not due at the time the payment was made.[11]

A violation of the ordinary stipulation in a mortgage clause in a policy, that the mortgagee will notify the insurer of a change of title to the property, is held not a ground for forfeiture of the policy, but is merely a breach of contract for which an action for damages will lie if the insurer is injured.[12] And if a mortgagee fails to com-

[8] Chipman v. Carroll, 53 Kan. 163, 25 L.R.A. 305, 35 Pac. 1100.

On right of mortgagee to benefit of insurance taken in the name of mortgagor, see note in 25 L.R.A. 305.

[9] Shadgett v. Phillips & Crew Co. 131 Ala. 478, 56 L.R.A. 461, 31 So. 20.

[10] Fort Scott Building & Loan Assoc. v. Palatine Ins. Co. Ltd. 74 Kan. 272, 86 Pac. 142, 35 Ins. L. J. 919.

As to conveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee, see § 2263a herein.

[11] Bonham v. Johnson, 98 Ark. 459, 136 S. W. 191, 40 Ins. L. J. 1216.

[12] Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 17

ply with a policy requirement to give notice to insurer of a conveyance of the property his right to the insurance is not defeated in the absence of a stipulation voiding the policy for such failure.[13] A mortgagee to whom a policy is payable does not lose the right to collect the insurance by a transfer of the mortgage with a guaranty of its payment without assigning the policy, although the assignee of the mortgage may be a proper party plaintiff.[14]

If a policy is by indorsement made payable in case of loss to the "first mortgagee, as his interest may appear under present or any future mortgages on the insured property. Balance, if any" to the "second mortgagee as his interest may appear," and said indorsement is assented to by insurer's agent and the second mortgage was arranged for and made on the same day, although it did not take effect by delivery until a few days thereafter and both mortgages and the indorsement bore the same date in the absence of fraud or concealment the first and second mortgagees are intended by the indorsement and recovery and satisfaction will be had in the order of precedence, the second mortgagee being entitled to such balance as remains out of the insurance money in case of loss and payment of the amount due the first mortgagee.[15]

A mortgagor's rights are not aided by the "union mortgage clause" to the extent of enabling him to obtain the policy benefits in case of a forfeiture as to him.[16] But if a trustee of a deed of trust pending the redemption period after foreclosure sale, collects the proceeds of insurance on the property, he cannot refuse to turn it over to the mortgagor on the ground that his interest in the property has ceased.[17] If mortgaged property insured by the administrator is injured by fire, and, before payment of the insurance amount,

Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231. See Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5, 31 Ins. L. J. 805.

When consent to mortgage of live stock is given it is immaterial that not indorsed on policy, see National Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Jackson, 160 Ky. 228, 169 S. W. 695.

Mortgage; alienation, change of interest or title, see §§ 2260 et seq. herein.

[13] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & Trust Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L.R.A. 679, 60 N. W. 133. See note in 25 L.R.A. 681, on rights given by attachment of mortgage slip to insurance policy.

[14] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & Trust Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L.R.A. 679, 60 N. W. 133. See §§ 2314 et seq. herein.

[15] Amory v. Reliance Ins. Co. 208 Mass. 398, 94 N. E. 677, 40 Ins. L. J. 1224.

[16] Badger v. Platts, 68 N. H. 222, 73 Am. St. Rep. 572, 44 Atl. 296.

[17] Rawson v. Bethesda Baptist Church, 221 Ill. 216, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 448, 77 N. E. 560.

On right to proceeds of insurance where loss occurs after foreclosure sale but during the period of redemption, see note in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 448.

he performs the covenant to repair contained in the deed of trust and restores the property out of money on which the mortgagees, to whom the policy is payable as their interest may appear, have no lien, said administrator is entitled to recover and not the mortgagees, for the reason that his security is fully restored by such repairs.[18]

§ 2795. When mortgagee's interest not affected by mortgagor's acts.—The mortgage clause making the mortgagee payee, and stipulating that the insurance should not be invalidated by the mortgagor's acts or neglect, constitutes an independent contract between said mortgagee and insurer, and in such case the subject matter of the insurance is the mortgagee's insurable interest, and not the real estate, and the risk will not be avoided by any acts of the mortgagor, whether done prior or subsequently to or at the time of the issue of the policy.[19]

So in New Jersey the standard mortgagee clause creates an independent contract of insurance for the mortgagee's separate benefit, ingrafted upon the main contract of insurance contained in the policy itself, which is rendered certain and understood by reference to the policy which makes it certain and complete.[20] So a mortgage [18] Huey v. Ewell, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 638, 55 S. W. 606, 29 Ins. L. J. 377.

[19] Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 48 Neb. 743, 58 Am. St. Rep. 719, 67 N. W. 774. See also Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & Trust Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L.R.A. 679n, 60 N. W. 133; Peoples' Savings' Bank v. Retail Merchants' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 146 Iowa, 536, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455, 123 N. W. 198, 39 Ins. L. J. 76; Gilman v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. of N. Y. 112 Me. 528, L.R.A.1915C, 758n, 92 Atl. 721; Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 200, 55 Atl. 715, 32 Ins. L. J. 1000; Laurenzi v. Atlas Ins. Co. 131 Tenn. 644, 176 S. W. 1022; Firemans Ins. Co. v. Boland, 30 Ohio Civ. Ct. Rep. 811. Examine Brown City Savings Bk. v. Windsor, 198 Fed. 28, 117 C. C. A. 136, 41 Ins. L. J. 1869. See notes 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204, 135 Am. St. Rep. 749, 58 Am. St. Rep. 672.

On effect of breach of policy of insurance by mortgagor on rights of mortgagee, see notes in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 197; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226; and L.R.A.1915C, 758.

[20] Reed v. Firemens Ins. Co. 81 N. J. L. 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343, 80 Atl. 462, 40 Ins. L. J. 1711. The court, per Voorhees, J., said: "The insistence of the defendant is that the mortgagee clause is not an independent contract, in the sense that none of the terms of the policy applies to the mortgagee, because it would then be unenforceable, because lacking certainty and completeness, because contrary to the intent manifested by the statute (P. L. 1892, p. 366; P. L. 1902, p. 407), providing for 'agreements or additions as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto and form a part of such contract or policy,' and because to construe this clause as a complete independent contract, without resort to the policy, is contrary to the words of the clause which refer to the policy and would do violence to them. It must be admitted that the mortgagee clause is not an independent contract in the sense that none of the terms of the policy applies to it. It is not in itself complete, but becomes so by reading the policy in connection with it, and the reading clause declaring that the mortgagee's interest shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor, or by any change in title or possession without the mortgagee's notice, makes a new contract between the insurer and mortgagee which is unaffected by the false statements of the mortgagor as to his title or ownership of the property of which the mortgagee is ignorant, whereby the insurance never became valid as to the mortgagor.[1] So where it is stipulated that no act or default of any person other than the mortgagee or his agents, or those claiming under him, shall affect the mortgagee's right to recover in case of loss, an independent insurance is created in favor of the mortgagee, who is not simply a conditional appointee as he would be under the "open mortgage clause," loss if any payable as interest may appear.[2] And where it is agreed by indorsement on the policy that the interest of the mortgagee shall not be affected by any act or neglect of the mortgagor, and the insurer has the right to cancel the policy, and the premium note has not ma-

of the two together does not clash with the notion that the mortgagee clause creates an independent contract between the company and the mortgagee. The policy furnishes the terms of the contract between the owner and the insurer. The mortgagee clause is the contract between the insurer and the mortgagee, quite separate from the policy, yet ingrafted upon it, and to be understood by reference to the policy which renders it certain and complete. The policy, therefore, may be looked at for the purpose of showing what the mortgagee contract refers to and establishes, which is quite different, however, from examining the policy for the purpose of defeating the ingrafted contract. The Court of Appeals of New York in Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. 143 N. Y. 311, 38 N. E. 397, 25 L.R.A. 686, referring to the mortgagee clause, says: 'The controlling idea was a separate insurance of the mortgagee, freed from the conditions attached to the insurance of the owner, and not to be impaired or weakened by any act or neglect of such owner. . . . By taking the insurance in the manner the mortgagee herein did, instead of taking out a separate policy, all the provisions in the policy which from their nature would properly apply to the case of an insurance of the mortgagee's interest would be regarded as forming part of the contract with him, while those provisions which antagonize or impair the force of the particular and specific provisions contained in the clause providing for the insurance of the mortgagee must be regarded as ineffective and inapplicable to the case of the mortgagee.' See also Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 55 Atl. 715, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882. The law which applied to the old form 'loss if any payable, etc., to the mortgagee,' inserted in the policy (Sun Ins. Co. v. Greenville Building & Loan Assoc. 58 N. J. L. 367, 33 Atl. 962; Milliken v. Woodward, 64 N. J. L. 444, 45 Atl. 796), is inapplicable to the standard mortgagee rider, and, although in the body of the present policy we find, as above noted, the former, yet it there refers in words to the attached mortgagee clause for the terms of the contract."

[1] Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 Fed. 165, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 U. S. App. 564, 27 L.R.A. 614.

[2] Magoun v. Firemens Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5, 31 Ins. L. J. 805 (standard form).

tured at the time of the assignment, its nonpayment will not affect the mortgagee's rights.[3]

But under a Florida decision the following distinction is made: that while the standard or union mortgage clause does not create in the mortgagee's favor a contract wholly independent, separate, and distinct from that created by such a policy in favor of the mortgagor or owner, still it does give to the mortgagee such a separate and independent contractual status toward insurer as to enable him to recover the policy amount under circumstances and conditions which would preclude a recovery by the owner or mortgagor.[4]

The Maine standard form enacted in 1895, protects the mortgagee against the mortgagor's policy forfeiting or invalidating acts which would otherwise void the insurance as to the mortgagee by providing that: "If this policy shall be made payable to a mortgagee of the insured real estate, no act or default of any person other than such mortgagee or his agents, or those claiming under him, shall affect such mortgagee's right to recover in case of loss on such real estate; provided, that the mortgagee shall, on demand, pay according to the established scale of rates for any increase of risk not paid for by the insured; and whenever this company shall be liable to the mortgagee for any sum for loss under this policy, for which no liability exists as to the mortgagor, or owner, and this company shall elect by itself or with others to pay the mortgagee the full amount secured by such mortgage, then the mortgagee shall assign and transfer to the companies interested upon such payment. the said mortgage together with the note and debt thereby secured." And this applies where the loss is made payable to the mortgagee as his interest shall appear so that his right to recover is not affected by the cancelation of the policy by insurer at the mortgagor's request, but without notice to the mortgagee.[5] So under a like provision in the Massachusetts standard form of policy, the mortgagee's right to recover is not precluded by a sale of the property without insurer's consent, although such sale avoids the insurance except as to the mortgagee's interest;[6] nor is the mortgagee's recovery precluded by a subsequent conveyance of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor;[7] nor because of any conveyance or other act of the [3] Planters' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Southern Savings' Fund & Loan Soc. 68 Ark. 8, 56 S. W. 443, 29 Ins. L. J. 611.

[4] Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Porter, 44 Fla. 568, 33 So. 473, 32 Ins. L. J. 577.

[5] Gilman v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 112 Me. 528, L.R.A.1915C, 758n, 92 Atl. 721, 45 Ins. L. J. 340; Rev. Stat. c. 49, sec. 4.

[6] Flint v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 207 Mass. 337, 93 N. E. 646, 40 Ins. L. J. 508.

[7] Union Institution for Savings v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 196 Mass. 230, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459, 81 N. E. 994, 37

mortgagor made or done after the policy issued,[8] nor does a transfer by a part owner of the property affect the right to recover of either the mortgagee or his assignee.[9] So under a like provision in the South Dakota policy the mortgagee's rights are not affected by a sale of the premises by the owner.[10]

If a fire policy provides: "If, with consent of this company, an interest under this policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the insured as described therein, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such conditions and provisions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended thereto," such provision has the effect of preventing the conditions previously mentioned from applying to such interest, unless they are again written upon, attached or appended to the policy, as applicable to that interest, and the interest of a mortgagee is free from all such conditions not thus attached, so that a conveyance by the owner, without the consent of the insurer, does not affect the rights of the mortgagee.[11] So in Nebraska when a policy, to which is attached a clause making the loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear, provides, in the body thereof, that "if an interest shall exist in favor of a mortgagee, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached or appended hereto," and there is neither in the "loss payable clause," nor in any writing upon, attached to, or appended to the policy, any provision or condition carrying the conditions of the policy into such clause, or rendering them in any manner applicable, the mortgagee is, in case of loss, entitled to recover to the extent of his interest without regard to acts or omissions of the owner which might, as between the insurer and such owner, defeat a recovery, because, in order to render the general conditions of the policy applicable to the inter-

Ins. L. J. 43 (standard policy clause Rev. L. c. 116, sec. 60).

[8] Palmer Savings Bank v. Insurance Co. of North America, 166 Mass. 189, 32 L.R.A. 615, 55 Am. St. Rep. 387, 44 N. E. 211.

[9] Whiting v. Burkhardt, 178 Mass. 535, 52 L.R.A. 788, 60 N. E. 1, 30 Ins. L. J. 666.

Mortgage; alienation, change of interest or title, see §§ 2260 et seq. herein.

[10] Edge v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 20 S. Dak. 190, 105 N. W. 281.

[11] Welch v. British-American Assur. Co. 148 Cal. 223, 113 Am. St. Rep. 223, 82 Pac. 964, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 396. See also Edge v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 20 S. Dak. 190, 105 N. W. 281. See Queen Ins. Co. v. Dearborn Savings Loan & Building Assoc. 175 Ill. 115, 51 N. E. 717, aff'g 75 Ill. App. 371 (New York standard clause).

est of a mortgagee there must be written upon, attached, or appended to the policy, relating to the interest of the mortgagee, some provisions or conditions expressing in what manner the conditions of the policy shall be so applicable.[12] So in Washington when the loss is made payable to the mortgagee by a policy on mortgaged property which provides that "the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended thereto," and no such provisions or conditions are written upon, attached, or appended, the insurance will not be invalidated by a violation of provisions applicable to the mortgagor.[13] And the unpaid balance of the mortgage lien on the property may be recovered from insurer, even though the vendee and mortgagor burned the property, where the value of mortgaged personalty exceeds the amount remaining unpaid upon the mortgage, where the policy is payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, and the policy also contains the standard mortgagee clause. In the case so deciding a distinction is made, or at least qualifiedly made by the court, between said standard clause and a clause which provides that the insurance shall not be avoided by any act or neglect of the owner which constitutes what is known as the "union clause." [14] And policies with the loss pay-

[12] Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 47 Neb. 717, 36 L.R.A. 673, 58 Am. St. Rep. 663, 66 N. W. 646.

[13] Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 25 Wash. 447, 56 L.R.A. 165, 65 Pac. 785.

[14] Stamey v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 96 Kan. 99, 150 Pac. 227, 46 Ins. L. J. 442. The court said: "Attached to and made a part of the policy was the following clause:—

"'It is understood that the two hacks insured under the first item are being sold to the assured under a contract issued by the United States Carriage Company, and loss, if any, is first payable to the United States Carriage Company as their interest may appear.'

"It is insisted that this is merely the standard clause under which the mortgagee became a mere appointee to receive the loss, which would otherwise have been payable to the assured. Counsel is correct in his contention that Dodge v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 4 Kan. App. 415, 46 Pac. 25, was based upon the union, and not upon the standard clause, and that the case of Bank of Concordia v. German Ins. Co. 6 Kan. App. 219, 49 Pac. 688, was based upon the standard clause, and was decided in accordance with counsel's theory, and also that Insurance Co. v. Coverdale, 48 Kan. 446, 29 Pac. 682, and Insurance Co. v. Boardman, 58 Kan. 339, 49 Pac. 92, involved the union, and not the standard, clause.

"It is variously agreed that, as found by the trial court, no conditions were attached to the mortgage clause in this case, that the entire policy was attached thereto, and that by the language used the clause became a part of the policy itself, all of which should be considered in connection with such clause. From the abstract it appears that the policy contained this provision:—

"'If, with the consent of this com-able to the mortgagee as his interest may appear and which contain clauses of this character are to be construed so as to effectuate the parties' interest, and so constitute two separate contracts of indemnity which relate to the same subject matter but cover distinct interests therein, they effect a new and independent insurance, which protects the mortgagee as stipulated, and cannot be destroyed or impaired by the mortgagor's acts or by those of any person other than the mortgagee or some one authorized to act for him and in his behalf.[15]

Again, where a policy is payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, under a mortgage clause providing for notice to the mortgagee of any delinquency of assured before suspension or canpany, an interest under this policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee, or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the assured as described herein, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended hereto.'

"It seems clear that an interest under the policy existed in favor of the mortgagee with the consent of the company, and also that the mortgagee had an interest in the subject of insurance other than that of Stamey, who was the insured named in the policy. The clause respecting this company was the standard clause, and according to many authorities of itself merely made the company the appointee to receive the loss on its property otherwise payable to Stamey, and which, of course, could not be claimed by the company unless Stamey could otherwise claim it. But, not content with leaving this mortgage clause to govern, the insurance company inserted in its policy the provision that 'the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended hereto,' and no 'provisions or conditions of insurance relating to such interest' were ever written upon, attached, or appended to the policy, except the mere mortgage clause itself, which was by its terms made a part of the policy. Hence there were no conditions so far as the carriage company was concerned, for the insurer contracted without conditions to pay the loss to such company. Had the policy omitted all reference to the mortgage clause, and simply attached it to the policy, then the position of counsel that a mere appointment and not a contract existed would be correct. But mortgagees seldom procure or have opportunity to examine policies issued to the owners, and as contracts of insurance prepared and solicited by the insurer are to be construed strongly against such insurer, it must be held that, in view of the terms of the policy, the mortgage clause, and the reference thereto in the policy, the carriage company had an independent contract of insurance and is entitled to recover, and so far as that company is concerned the destruction of the property by the insured did not relieve the insurer from liability."

[15] Queen Ins. Co. v. Dearborn Savings, Loan & Bldg. Assoc. 75 Ill. App. 371, aff'd 175 Ill. 115, 51 N. E. 717 (New York Standard clause); Is independent contract, see Edge v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 20 S. Dak. 190, 105 N. W. 281.

celation of the policy affecting his interests, the word "delinquency" refers to the same kind of "act or default" as is referred to in the "union clause," so that any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner does not invalidate the insurance as to the mortgagee's interest; and this applies to preclude assured from urging as a defense against the mortgagee any breach of condition or misrepresentation contemporaneous with or subsequent to the issue of the policy which it might have urged against the mortgagor, no knowledge of such breach being had by said mortgagee.[16]

§ 2795a. Same subject: instances.—Invalid insurance taken by the owner of property in violation of a policy cannot be reckoned in determining the recovery of a mortgagee, where the policy provides that his interest shall not be invalidated by any act of the owner, although it provides generally that the insurer shall be liable only for its proportion of the loss according to the whole amount of insurance on the property, whether valid or not.[17] So under a policy on mortgaged property which provides that loss, if any, is payable to the mortgagee, and which is delivered by the insurer to the mortgagee, he is the party insured, so that the question of forfeiture will not be determined by provisions relating to acts of the mortgagor.[18] So the enforcement of a mortgage clause attached to an insurance policy, under a statute providing that the insurance of the mortgage interest shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the owner of the property will not be prevented by the fact that the policy was invalid because the interest of the owner was not correctly described.[19] And a fire policy in the standard form, which is void as to the insured owner, because of his breach of the warranty that his interest is not other than unconditional and sole ownership, may nevertheless be valid as to a mortgagee, when the mortgagee clause in the usual form is attached to the policy.[20] And the fact that mortgagors who secured by misrepresenting their title a policy of insurance which contained a mortgage clause were made parties to a suit to recover on the policy when the contract was invalid so far as they were concerned does

[16] Peoples Savings Bank v. Retail Merchants Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 146 Iowa, 536, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455, 123 N. W. 198, 39 Ins. L. J. 76. Examine Christensen v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 117 Iowa, 77, 94 Am. St. Rep. 286, 90 N. W. 495.

[17] Eddy v. London Assurance Corp. 143 N. Y. 311, 25 L.R.A. 686, 38 N. E. 307. See Laurenzi v. Atlas Ins. Co. 131 Tenn. 644, 176 S. W. 1022.

[18] Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 25 Wash. 447, 55 L.R.A. 165, 65 Pac. 785.

[19] Bacot v. Phenix Ins. Co. 96 Miss. 223, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226, 50 So. 729.

[20] Reed v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 81 N. J. Law, 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343, 80 Atl. 462.

not prevent a recovery in favor of the mortgagees, since they can be eliminated from the case.[1] Again, an appropriation by the owner of insured property, which is destroyed, of the proceeds of the sale of the debris, after total loss, to his own use, would be an act of the owner, but such act would not invalidate the insurance of the mortgagee, or cast upon the mortgagee the burden of proving the amount realized from such sale.[2] Nor can the rights of a mortgagee in a policy payable to him "as his mortgage interest may appear" be defeated by an accord and satisfaction between the insurer and the owner of the premises, who procured the policy in his own name.[3] And a mortgagee, in whose favor a loss is made payable as his interest may appear, is not affected by additional insurance procured upon the property without his knowledge or consent, though there is a rider attached to the policy to the effect that, if other insurance shall exist on the property, the company shall be liable only for such proportion of the loss sustained as the amount insured shall bear to the whole insurance on the property insured, whether the other insurance applies in the same manner or not. The provisions respecting the other insurance affect the interest of the insured only, and not that of the mortgagee, unless additional insurance is obtained for his benefit and with his knowledge.[4] If the policy is payable to the mortgagee his acts, in effecting a new insurance and attempting, without authority or notice to the mortgagor, to cancel the policy, do not affect the mortgagor's right to recover.[5]

§ 2795b. When mortgagee's interest affected by mortgagor's acts: when mortgagee not insured party, but appointee.—In Maine the form of the standard policy was prescribed by the legislature in 1895 and it materially affected the rights or interests of the mortgagee, inasmuch as prior thereto where the policy was by indorsement thereon made payable to the mortgagee as his interest might appear, then neither his interest was insured nor was the policy thereby assigned to him, but said indorsement was merely a contingent order or a stipulation assented to by insurer for payment of

[1] Bacot v. Phenix Ins. Co. 96 Miss. 223, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226, 50 So. 729.

[2] Reed v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 81 N. J. Law, 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343, 80 Atl. 462.

[3] Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 134 N. Y. 409, 17 L.R.A. 514, 32 N. E. 40.

On effect of settlement between insurer and mortgagor upon rights of mortgagee to whom loss is made payable as his interest may appear, see note in 19 L.R.A. 321.

[4] Hardy v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 166 Mass. 210, 33 L.R.A. 241, 55 Am. St. Rep. 395, 44 N. E. 209.

On procuring of insurance by mortgagee as violation of provision in policy of mortgagor against other or additional insurance, see note in L.R.A.1917A, 607.

[5] Morrow v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 26 Ont. App. 173.

the loss to the mortgagee to the extent of his interest, but the interest of the mortgagor and not of the mortgagee was insured, and the mortgagee was not protected against acts of the mortgagor forfeiting or invalidating the policy under its terms.[6] This rule or principle has been applied and held to govern in other cases, where the loss is payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear and also in cases under the standard mortgage clause, deciding that the mortgagee is merely an appointee under such contingent order to receive said policy proceeds, and that he is unprotected, as above stated, against the mortgagor's policy invalidating or forfeiting acts.[7] So the fact that a loss is payable to the mortgagee of insured premises does not increase, lessen, or otherwise change the burden assumed by the insurance company. The same defenses may be made against the mortgagee, who brings an action on the policy, as could have been made against the insured.[8] And if insurance is payable to a mortgagee, as his interest may appear, he is not entitled to recover if the assured is not, so that recovery for his benefit is precluded if the premises are burned by insured for the purpose of realizing upon the insurance.[9] So where the cause of action has been lost to the insurer through forfeiture of the [6] Gilman v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. of N. Y. 112 Me. 528, L.R.A.1915C, 758n, 92 Atl. 721, 45 Ins. L. J. 340, Rev. Stat. c. 49, sec. 4; Biddleford Savings Bank v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 81 Me. 566, 570, 18 Atl. 298; Brunswick Savings Institution v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 28 Am. Rep. 56.

[7] United States.—Brecht v. Law, Union & Crown Ins. Co. 160 Fed. 399, 87 C. C. A. 35, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197n, 37 Ins. L. J. 621 (change of interest, title or possession; condition was, however, standard mortgage clause) approving and following Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 120 Fed. 916, 57 C. C. A. 188, 61 L.R.A. 137.

Georgia.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Liddell Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 168, 124 Am. St. Rep. 157, 60 S. E. 104 (payable to mortgagee as his interest may appear, held not an assent to subsequent incumbrance).

Illinois.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Halman, 92 Ill. 145, 34 Am. Rep. 122.

Maryland.—Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 30 L.R.A. 633, 61 Am. St. Rep. 457, 33 Atl. 429 (policy indorsed payable to mortgagees as their interest may appear).

Massachusetts.—Young v. Eagle Fire Ins. Co. 14 Gray (80 Mass.) 150, 74 Am. Dec. 673; Hale v. Mechanics Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 169, 66 Am. Dec. 470n.

New York.—Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 214, 19 Am. Rep. 272.

Tennessee.—Hocking v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 99 Tenn. 729, 39 L.R.A. 148, 63 Am. St. Rep. 862, 42 S. W. 451 (as his interest may appear; no recovery by mortgagee where mortgagor burned property). Compare Laurenzi v. Atlas Ins. Co. 131 Tenn. 644, 176 S. W. 1022.

Wisconsin.—Meiswinkel v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 147, 6 L.R.A. 200, 43 N. W. 669 (policy indorsed loss payable to mortgagees); Gillett v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 73 Wis. 203, 9 Am. St. Rep. 784, 41 N. W. 78.

[8] German Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 21 Colo. 127, 52 Am. St. Rep. 206, 40 Pac. 453.

[9] Hocking v. Virginia Fire & Mapolicy, a mortgagee, for whose benefit the insurance was procured, has no greater right than the insured.[10]

If a policy is void, and insurer, without knowledge thereof, attaches a mortgage clause to the policy, without consideration at the instance of the mortgagee, who is also ignorant of the fact that the policy is void, and who because of the mortgagee clause neglects to get other insurance, the company is not thereby estopped to deny the validity of the policy.[11] Again, sending a policy to the assured on his promise to remit the premium does not estop the insurer from denying its validity for nonpayment of premium, as against a mortgagee to whom "loss, if any, is payable," although he received the policy from the assured without notice that the premium was unpaid.[12]

Under an Ohio decision a mortgage clause attached to an insurance policy is not a new and separate contract between the insured and the mortgagee. Its purpose is to designate or appoint a payee of the amount of the loss according to the interest of the mortgagee in the insurance which he may make appear, and it modifies the principal contract only to the extent that a modification or qualification is therein expressed.[13]

And where the code provides that insurance effected by the mortgagor on his own name, loss payable to the mortgagee, the insurance is deemed to be upon the mortgagor's interest, the stipulation for payment to the mortgagee operates only as a provisional assignment of the contingent proceeds of the contract and does not substitute the mortgagee for the mortgagor as the insured party. So that the mortgagee's interest under the policy only extends to a security for his debt and such interest ceases when the debt is extinguished. Accordingly a foreclosure of the mortgaged premises and the purchase thereof by the mortgagee fully extinguishes the debt and dissolves the relation of debtor and creditor, or of mortgagor and mortgagee; and in such case where the insured building burns before the period of redemption expires, the fact that loss has been paid to a mortgagor during the period of redemption, does not render the insurance company liable to the rine Ins. Co. 99 Tenn. 729, 39 L.R.A. 148, 63 Am. St. Rep. 862, 42 S. W. 451.

[10] Woodard v. German American Ins. Co. 128 Wis. 1, 116 Am. St. Rep. 17, 106 N. W. 681.

[11] Baldwin v. German Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 314, 86 Am. St. Rep. 375, 85 N. W. 26.

[12] Union Building Assoc. v. Rockford Ins. Co. 83 Iowa, 647, 14 L.R.A. 248, 49 N. W. 1032.

[13] Erie Brewing Co. v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 81 Ohio, 1, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 740n, 135 Am. St. Rep. 735, 85 N. E. 1065.

mortgagee, where his interest in the policy has ceased with the extinguishment of the mortgage indebtedness.[14]

Under a Federal decision it is held that the clause, that "the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached or appended hereto," did not protect the mortgagee as there was no special agreement modifying or waiving the conditions of the policy, and insurer had thereby simply consented to the appointment of a third person to receive payment of any loss sustained by the person to whom the policy was issued, and all its conditions applied, and that if insurer had intended to protect the mortgagee's interest regardless of breaches of conditions by the mortgagor, it could have done so by "the use of the 'union mortgage clause' " and therefore such appointee was subject to the risk of all acts and omissions of the person to whom the policy was issued.[15] Under a Connecticut

[14] Reynolds v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. 128 Cal. 16, 79 Am. St. Rep. 17, 60 Pac. 467, 29 Ins. L. J. 330; Cal. Civ. Code, sec. 2541.

[15] Brecht v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co. 160 Fed. 399, 87 C. C. A. 35, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197n, 37 Ins. L. J. 621 (change of interest, title, or possession). The court, however, per De Haven, D. J., says: "The contention of the plaintiff in error, broadly stated, is that, by the terms of this provision, the conditions contained in the policy against alienation and change of possession do not affect his right to recover, because there was not written upon or attached to the policies any statement or writing showing the manner or extent to which such conditions should apply to the interest which he had in the policies as the person to whom the loss thereunder is made payable. This contention is sustained by a number of decided cases, among which are the following: Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 47 Neb. 717, 36 L.R.A. 673, 66 N. W. 646; Queen's Ins. Co. v. Dearborn Savings, Loan & Building Assoc. 175 Ill. 115, 51 N. E. 717; Christensen v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 117 Iowa, 77, 90 N. W. 495; Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 25 Wash. 447, 453, 55 L.R.A. 165, 65 Pac. 785; Edge v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 20 S. Dak. 190, 105 N. W. 281; Welch v. British & American Assurance Co. 148 Cal. 223, 82 Pac. 964. These cases all hold that a stipulation in a policy like that above quoted is to be construed as an agreement upon the part of the insurance company issuing it that the conditions of the policy to which the stipulation refers shall not apply to the interest vested in a mortgagee by a memorandum clause, making the loss, if any, payable to him as his interest may appear, unless the manner in which such conditions are to be applied are expressly stated in some writing indorsed upon or attached to the policy. The contrary was however held by the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit in Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 120 Fed. 916, 57 C. C. A. 188, 61 L.R.A. 137; and by Judge Wolverton in Vancouver National Bank v. Law, Union & Crown Ins. Co. (C. C.) 153 Fed. 440. We think the cases last cited announce the better rule in relation to the construction of insurance policies having provision like those sued on in this action. The contract of insurance here was between the St. Johns Lumber Company, as owner of the property insured, and the defendant insurance decision wherein an exactly like clause was before the court it was decided that the mortgagor or owner had full power in the matter of adjustment, whether by way of agreement or arbitration, and that the mortgagee, to whom the policy was payable as his interest company, and the legal effect of the slips attached to the policies, making the loss thereunder payable to the plaintiff in error, was to constitute him the appointee of the St. Johns Lumber Company, to receive payment of whatever sums might become due, under the policies, on account of losses sustained by that company by reason of the destruction of its property by fire. . It may be conceded, as claimed by the plaintiff in error, that the slips were attached for his benefit as mortgagee of the insured property, still it is well settled that, under such form of memorandum clause, the person named as payee therein is only entitled to recover as the appointee of the insured, and, when the policy has become void as to the person effecting the insurance, it cannot be enforced by his appointee. This was so held in Brunswick Savings' Institution v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 28 Am. Rep. 56, the court saying:

"'This clause in the policy "payable, in case of loss, to the Brunswick Savings' Institution to the amount of the mortgage held by them" is not an insurance of the plaintiff's interest in the property, nor an assignment of the policy to the plaintiffs. It is merely a contingent order or stipulation, assented to by the defendant, for the payment of the loss of the assured, if any, to the plaintiffs. It gives the plaintiffs the same right to recover that the assured would have if no such clause had been inserted in the policy. Any violation of the conditions and stipulations of the policy which would defeat the right of the assured to recover upon it will defeat the right of the plaintiffs.'

"The rule thus stated is fully sustained by the following cases: Fogg v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 337; Martin v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 38 N. J. Law, 140, 20 Am. Rep. 372; Keith v. Royal Ins. Co. 117 Wis. 531, 94 N. W. 295; Wunderlich v. Palatine Ins. Co. 104 Wis. 382, 395, 80 N. W. 467; Grosvenor v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391; Loring v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 28; Bates v. Equitable Ins. Co. 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 33, 19 L. ed. 882; Bidwell v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 19 N. Y. 179, 180. . . .

"When the policies sued on were issued, it was not unusual for insurance companies to insure the interest of mortgagees by attaching to their policies slips containing what is known as the 'Union Mortgage Clause,' whereby the insurance company agreed to pay to the mortgagee the amount to become due under the policy as his interest might appear, regardless of subsequent breaches of certain conditions of the policy by the mortgagor. The following cases arose under policies containing such a clause: Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5; National Bank v. Union Ins. Co. 88 Cal. 497, 22 Am. St. Rep. 324, 26 Pac. 509; Hastings v. Westchester Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141, 144; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 Fed. 165, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 L.R.A. 614. Now, if it had been the intention of the defendant to insure the plaintiff in error absolutely and without reference to any breach of the conditions of the policies by the St. Johns Lumber Company, such insurance could have been effected by the use of the 'Union Mortgage Clause' in defining the rights of the plaintiff in error under the policies; but, instead of doing this, the parties adopted a form merely designating him as the person to whom the loss, if any, might appear, was not entitled to be a party thereto and had no standing to attack its acceptance in the absence of bad faith.[16] should be payable, a form which under well-settled rules subjects the appointee to the risk of all acts and omissions of the person to whom the policy was issued."

[16] Collinsville Savings' Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co. 77 Conn. 676, 69 L.R.A. 924, 60 Atl. 647, 34 Ins. L. J. 1031. The court, per Prentice, J., said: "The indorsement above recited, designating the payee of any loss, which, for the purposes of distinction, has been called the 'open mortgage clause,' did not bring the plaintiff and defendant into contractual relations with each other, either directly or through an assignment of the policy; neither did the plaintiff thereby become a person or corporation whose property or property interests were insured under the policy. The contract for indemnity remained one exclusively between the defendant and the property owner. The plaintiff was only a conditional appointee of the latter. As such appointee, it was entitled to receive so much of any sum that might become due under the policy as did not exceed its interest as mortgagee, and nothing more. Such is the accepted rule in this state, and, with few possible exceptions, elsewhere: Woodbury Savings Bank & Building Assoc. v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 374; Meriden Savings Bank v. Home Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 396; Franklin Savings Inst. v. Central Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 240; Baldwin v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164; Biddeford Savings Bank v. Home Ins. Co. 81 Me. 566, 18 Atl. 298; Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 51; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439; Williamson v. Michigan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 393, 39 Am. St. Rep. 906, 57 N. W. 46; Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co. 28 Mich. 398; Martin v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 38 N. J. Law. 140, 146, 20 Am. Rep. 372; Grosvenor v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 Fed. 165, 12 C. C. A. 531. It is universally held that a policy so indorsed may become forfeited, and the mortgagee deprived of all protection thereunder, by any act or default of the property owner before loss: Moore v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. 219, 36 N. E. 191; Baldwin v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164.

"There is another stipulation appearing in or appended to policies issued to property owners, and designed to protect the interest of mortgagees, which it is important to notice. This has been variously denominated the 'mortgagee clause' and the 'union mortgage clause.' It is embodied in the standard policies in some states, and is frequently used as a rider upon policies in other states. It embraces the provision, in substance, that no act or default of any person other than such mortgagee or his agent, or those claiming under him, shall affect the mortgagee's right of recovery. It has frequently been held that the effect of this clause, whenever it is made a part of or indorsed upon a policy, is to bring the insurer and mortgagee into relations of privity, to convert the mortgagee into a party to the contract of insurance, to give to the mortgagee separate and distinct protection to his interest, to create in him an interest under the policy distinct from that of the property owner, and to, in fact, make him an assured: Hastings v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141; Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439; Phœnix Fire Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & Trust Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L.R.A. 679n, 60 N. W. 133; Ormsby v. Phenix Ins. Co. 5 S. Dak. 72, 58 N. W. 301; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 Fed.

§ 2796. Overheating without combustion.—If fire is used for culinary and heating purposes, or for the purpose of generating power, the fire being confined within the limits of certain agencies for producing heat, or if it is used by chemists, artisans, and manufacturers as a chemical agent or as an instrument of art or fabrication, or for any of the other numerous purposes of like character, 165, 12 C. C. A. 531; Clement on Ins. 33; Elliott on Ins. sec. 341. This court has never gone to the full length of these decisions, nor need we do so now. . . .

"It is quite clear that the plain and explicit provision of the 'union mortgage clause,' to the effect that the mortgagee's right of recovery under the policy, as the payee thereof, shall not be affected by the act or neglect of any person other than the mortgagee, his agent, or those claiming under him, must suffice to establish for a mortgagee under such conditions a status with respect to the insurance which is not only independent of, but also superior to, that of the property owner. The former's rights are thus expressly set free from the operation of those acts and neglects of the latter which would destroy the latter's insurance or limit the extent of his recovery. The rights of the mortgagee become not merely those of a substitute for the owner. He acquires rights of his own which are subject to no man's control, and which gives him independent and distinct protection.

"It requires no argument to demonstrate that under such circumstances the, mortgagee's protection extends, as we have above assumed it to do, to the consequences of all the acts and neglects of the property owner both before and after loss, and that it therefore precludes a submission to appraisers which should be binding upon the mortgagee without his concurrence or ratification. . . .

"It is easy to understand how a mortgagee, having acquired the status which the 'union mortgage clause' gives one, whatever that status, technically regarded, may be, might be fairly entitled to be comprehended within the descriptive term 'the insured,' and, if not, that the express language of that clause so defines his rights and limits the rights and capacity of the property owner that the right to participate in any adjustment of the loss is impliedly accorded him. On the other hand, it is not easy to discover upon what theory it can be reasonably claimed that a person who has not come into contractual relations with the insurer, who has obtained no insurance protection, and who is only an appointee of the owner as respects whatever may become due under the contract of insurance, to which he is a stranger, acquires the right, even by indirection, to assume the title of 'the insured.' If we look for other provisions which may serve, by way of implication or otherwise, to give him a standing in the adjustment of a loss, we find only that the word 'insured,' whenever used in the policy, should be construed to include the legal representatives of the insured, and nothing more. It appears, therefore, that the right to participate in an adjustment of a loss under this policy and indorsement has by the parties to the contract been limited to the insurer, the property owner, and his legal representatives." The court also reviews the following cases and states that "most of them have no pertinence whatever to the proposition in support of which they are so often cited, and the balance are not of such a character as to strongly commend them as authorities in this jurisdiction at least." Considering Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 134 N. Y. 409, 17 L.R.A. 514, 32 N. E. 40;

and if in such cases it is used or applied by design, and a loss occurs in consequence of overheating or by unskillfulness or negligence of the operator, and his mismanagement of heat as an agent or instrument of manufacture or other useful purpose, this is not a loss within a fire policy. To this extent the rule is law.[17]

Whether this rule may be extended beyond this point is a question. There is authority for the proposition that a fire policy does not cover damage without combustion by overheating; that there must in such case be an actual ignition or burning; that the fire must operate upon the subject insured, as distinguished from a loss occasioned by the action of heat within the limits of some one or more of the usual and proper agencies for producing heat. This extension of the rule would certainly be reasonable and in accord with the authorities. The qualification, or rather explanation, is added that the identical property insured need not be ignited or consumed, for if there is ignition of part of the insured property or of other nearby property, or of the building or some part thereof, and an injury, of which fire is clearly the proximate cause, is sustained by the remainder of the identical property insured, or by the whole or some part thereof, this would certainly be a loss by fire, even though there is no actual ignition of the property so damaged, and we believe that with such qualification the above rule is the true one.[18] So in case of a policy against fire on a steam ves-

Wilson v. Hakes, 36 Ill. App. 539, 547; Harrington v. Fitchburg Ins. Co. 124 Mass. 126; Hall v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 405, 13 Atl. 648; Brown v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 394, 398; Bergman v. Commercial Assur. Co. 92 Ky. 494, 15 L.R.A. 270, 18 S. W. 122.

[17] Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111, per Cushing, J., an exhaustive discussion of Austin v. Drewe, 4 Camp. 361, Holt 126, 6 Taunt. 436, 2 Marsh. 130, 16 R. R. 647; St. John v. American Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 516, per Denio, J.; Beaumont on Ins. 37.

If fire is employed as an agent, either for the ordinary purposes of heating the insured building for the purposes of manufacture, or as an instrument of art, the insurer is not liable for the consequences thereof, so long as the fire itself is confined within the limits of the agencies employed as from the effects of smoke or heat evolved thereby, or escaping therefrom from any cause, whether intentional or accidental. Cannon v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 110 Ga. 563, 78 Am. St. Rep. 124, 35 S. E. 775, 29 Ins. L. J. 1023.

[18] United States.—Waters v. Louisville Ins. Co. 1 McLean (U. S. C. C.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 17,266.

Louisiana.—Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550.

Massachusetts.—Sohier v. Norwich Fire Ins. Co. 11 Allen (93 Mass.) 336.

New York.—Brown v. Kings County Fire Ins. Co. 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 508; Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 637, per Pratt, J.

England.—See Everett v. London Assur. Co. 19 C. B. N. S. 126, per Byles, J.; Austin v. Drewe, 6 Taunt. 436, 2 Marsh. 130, 4 Camp. 360, sel, her hull, machinery, etc., the court says: "Of necessity fire was to be maintained in the furnace, and in contact with the boiler as means to generate motive power by which the vessel could be propelled. The burning or warping of the bars of the grate in the furnace, though produced by the action of fire, could hardly be supposed to be within the scope of the risk insured against, however, general the terms of the policy. And if that be true of the furnace, it is difficult to perceive why it is not equally true of such parts of the boiler as are brought in contact with the fire in the furnace or the heat evolved therefrom. The fire, while in the furnace, was in its proper place and where it was intended to be, and it was placed there to act upon the boiler, which in course of time would be burned out or warped, as the grate in the furnace would be, by the continued action of the fire therein, and if such results of the action of fire upon these materials while in ordinary use are not within the risk, it would be difficult to say upon what degree of heat or under what conditions the liability under the policy would attach for injury caused by the action of fire while confined to the furnace and producing no external ignition. If a person has his house insured against all loss or damage by fire, and he should make a fire in his grate or fireplace of such intense heat as to crack his chimney or to warp or crack his mantelpieces, it could hardly be contended that he could hold the insurance company liable for such damage, though the damage was unintentionally allowed to be produced by the action of fire. In such case the fire would not have extended beyond the proper limits within which it was intended to burn, but the heat emitted therefrom would have produced effects not intended by the insured. No doubt there are many instances where the insurer has been held liable for injury done to buildings and furniture by heat or smoke without actual ignition, where the heat or smoke has proceeded from fire outside of and beyond the limits of the place where it was intended by the contract of insurance to burn. But that is a different question." In this case it was sought to recover damage to the interior of the boiler occasioned by the overheating of the boiler from the furnace fires, owing to absence of water in the boiler, and not as the result of fire outside the furnace.[19]

Holt, 126, 16 R. R. 647, per Gibbs, C. J.

"Fire" defined; spontaneous combustion. See Sun Insurance Office v. Western Woolen Mill Co. 72 Kan. 41, 82 Pac. 513; Ellis on Fire Ins. 273; Steph. N. P. 1079; 11 Petersd. Abr. 18.

On loss caused by excessive heat, smoke or soot from heating apparatus without actual ignition, see note in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 501.

[19] American Towing Co. v. German Fire Ins. Co. 74 Md. 25, 21 Atl. 353, per Alvry, J.

Insurance, however, against all direct loss and damage by fire includes loss by smoke, soot, and excessive heat due to a fire kindled with unusually inflammable materials in the furnace designed to heat the building, although the fire does not escape from the furnace, and is not communicated to the property injured.[20]

The rule above given does not confine the loss to actual burning or consuming, but all losses are covered which are proximately or immediately caused by the fire or combustion; as in case of loss by water to extinguish the fire.[1] But a loss by lightning unaccompanied by combustion is not a loss by fire.[2] And where a boiler exploded from excessive heat, this was held not a loss within the policy.[3] And where wool was insured against all direct loss or [20] O'Connor v. Queen Ins. Co. 140 Wis. 388, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 501, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1081, 122 N. W. 1038.

[1] Geisek v. Crescent Mutual Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 297; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258; Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637.

[2] Kenniston v. Merrimac County Mutual Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193. See Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637.

[3] Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550; Scripture v. Lowell Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 356, for an exhaustive discussion of Austin v. Drewe, 4 Camp. 360, Holt, N. P. 126, 6 Taunt. 436, 2 Marsh. 130, 16 R. R. 647.

Opinions of Text-Writers in the Above.—Mr. Wood says: "Where fire is employed as an agent either for the ordinary purposes of heating the building, for the purposes of manufacture, or as an instrument of art, the insurer is not liable for the consequences thereof so long as the fire itself is confined within the limits of the agencies employed; as from the effects of smoke or heat evolved thereby or escaping therefrom from any cause, whether intentional or accidental. In order to bring such consequences within the risk there must be actual ignition outside of the agencies employed, not purposely caused by assured, and these as a consequence of such ignition dehors the agencies:" 1 Wood on Fire Ins. (2d ed. 236) sec. 103, citing:

Louisiana.—Geisek v. Crescent Mutual Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 297; Millaudon v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 4 La. Ann. 15, 50 Am. Dec. 550.

New Hampshire.—Kenniston v. Merrimac County Mutual Ins. Co. 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 193.

Ohio.—Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co. 11 Ohio, 147, 38 Am. Dec. 728.

New York.—Grim v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 451; Babcock v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637.

England.—Austin v. Drew, 4 Camp. 360, 361, Holt, N. P. 126, 6 Taunt. 436, 2 Marsh. 130, 16 R. R. 647; Jameson v. Royal Ins. Co. 7 Ir. L. R. 126. The case of Austin v. Drewe, 4 Camp. 637, 2 Marsh. 130, 6 Taunt. 436, Holt, N. P. 126, 16 R. R. 647, is mainly relied on by Mr. Wood, but Mr. May does not give such a construction to that case; in fact, he does not deduce therefrom any rule which would extend beyond that noted at the beginning of this section: 2 May on Ins. (3d ed.) sec. 402; and he cites the case of Austin v. Drewe as reported in 6 Taunt. 436, and note thereto; 1 Benn. F. I. Cas. 104; Case v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Ill. 676, per Trumbull, J.; Balestracci v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 844; Sohier v. Norwich Fire Ins. Co. 11 Allen (93 Mass.) 336; damage by fire, and a flood submerged the wool for over a week and it became very much heated and the fiber of the wool was destroyed, but it did not appear from the evidence that at any time the heat produced a flame or glow, it was held not to be a "fire" within the meaning of that word.[4]

§ 2797. Perils of the seas and rivers: dangers of navigation.—Perils of the sea include accident or misfortunes of which sea damage is the proximate or efficient cause; that is, those losses occasioned by extraordinary circumstances such as stress of weather, winds, tempests, storm and waves, rocks, sands, shoals, foundering or sinking at sea, striking against a sunken rock, stranding, shipwreck, etc., but does not cover loss arising from ordinary circumstances of the voyage or from sea damage, or from wear and tear which without any extraordinary circumstances is to be expected. It is not confined to damage caused only by the sea, but covers damage of a character to which a marine adventure is subject, or perils which sustain to such adventures a special or peculiar relation.[5] "Perils of the sea are from storms and waves, rocks, shoals, and rapids, other obstacles though of human origin, changes of climate, the confinement necessary at sea, animals peculiar to the sea, and all other dangers peculiar to the sea."[6] So it is declared that perils of the sea are all perils, losses, and misfortunes of a marine character, or of a character incident to a ship

Brown v. Kings County Fire Ins. Co. 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 508. Mr. Ostrander has merely adopted Mr. Wood's rule: Ostrander on Fire Ins. (ed. 1892) 367, sec. 165. Mr. Phillips says: "If fire is the efficient cause, and if the loss is its direct effect, the underwriters are liable:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 624, 625, sec. 1097. And Mr. Marshall's opinion is that there must be actual ignition: 2 Marshall on Ins. (3d ed.) 790, noted more fully in next section.

[4] Western Woolen Mills Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 139 Fed. 697, 72 C. C. A. 1, certiorari denied (mem.) 199 U. S. 608, 50 L. ed. 331, 26 Sup. Ct. 750.

[5] Coles v. Marine Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 159, Fed. Cas. No. 2,988; Bullard v. Roger Williams Ins. Co. 1 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 148, Fed. Cas. No. 2,122, per Curtis, J.; Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 218, Fed. Cas. No. 6,282, rev'd 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043; The Gulnare, 42 Fed. 861; The Mangalore, 23 Fed. 462, 9 Saw. (U. S. C. C.) 17; The Schooner Reeside, 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 567, 571, Fed. Cas. No. 11,657; Potter v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 197, Fed. Cas. No. 11,339; Miller v. California Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 145, 9 Am. St. Rep. 184, 18 Pac. 155; Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 12 App. C. 484, 56 L. J. Q. B. 626, 17 Q. B. D. 195, 57 L. T. 695, 36 W. R. 337, 6 Asp. M. C. 200; Fletcher v. Inglis, 2 Barn. & Ald. 315, 20 R. R. 448; Rohl v. Parr, 1 Esp. 445, 5 R. R. 741. But see §§ 2816, 2817, on stranding.

[6] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2197; Abbott on Shipping (6th ed.) 384n; Miller v. California Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 145, 9 Am. St. Rep. 184, 18 Pac. 155. See note 41 Am. Dec. 287–90, as to what is included in perils of the seas.

as such.[7] It is also asserted that "perils of the sea," are extraordinary occurrences only, a loss by ordinary occurrences not being insured against.[8] The marine insurance act 1906, of England, provides: "The term 'perils of the seas' refers only to fortuitous accidents or casualties of the seas. It does not include ordinary actions of the wind and waves."[9] And when a peril of the sea is the direct and proximate cause of the loss, the underwriter is liable, although the servants of the assured did not use due care to avoid the peril.[10]

[7] Miller v. California Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 145, 9 Am. St. Rep. 184, 18 Pac. 155.

[8] Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043, cited in The Miletus, 5 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 335, 336, Fed. Cas. No. 9,545; Franklin Ins. Co. v. Humphrey, 65 Ind. 549, 557, 32 Am. Rep. 78; Starbuck v. Phenix Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. Supp. 995, 19 App. Div. 139, 142; Washington Mutual Ins. Co. v. Reed, 20 Ohio, 200, 210.

[9] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I. r. 7 (rules for construction); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) pp. 425–427; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) pp. 907, 908.

[10] General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S. 351, 14 L. ed. 452, cited in:

United States.—Liverpool & Great Western Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 438, 32 L. ed. 788, 791, 9 Sup. Ct. 469; Orient Mutual Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67, 73, 31 L. ed. 63, 66, 8 Sup. Ct. 68, 44 Leg. Int. 504; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie & Western Transportation Co. 117 U. S. 312, 323, 29 L. ed. 873, 879, 6 Sup. Ct. 1176; The Potomac (The Potomac v. Cannon) 105 U. S. 630, 636, 26 L. ed. 1194, 1196; Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Norwich & New York Transportation Co. 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 194, 199, 20 L. ed. 378, 379; The Portsmouth (The Portsmouth v. Salt Co.) 9 Wall. (76 U. S.) 682, 684, 19 L. ed. 754, 755; Lawrence v. Minturn, 17 How. (58 U. S.) 100, 111, 15 L. ed. 58, 63; Morgan v. United States, 5 Ct. Cl. 191; The America, 16 Month. L. Rep. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 288; Nome Beach Lighterage & Transportation Co. v. Munich Assur. Co. 123 Fed. 20, 826; Pennsylvania Ry. Co. v. Manheim Ins. Co. 56 Fed. 303; Earnmoor Steamship Co. v. Union Ins. Co. 44 Fed. 374, 376; Northwestern Transportation Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 41 Fed. 793, 797; The Ontario, 37 Fed. 220, 225; The Titania, 19 Fed. 101, 104; The Hadji, 16 Fed. 861, 865; Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. 394, 434, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966.

Kentucky.—Louisville Ins. Co. v. Monarch, 99 Ky. 578, 593, 36 S. W. 563.

Maine.—Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 363, 371, 19 Atl. 832; Dyer v. Piscataqua Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 53 Me. 118, 121.

Massachusetts.—Lyon Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 576, 20 L.R.A. 297, 304, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540, 33 N. E. 690.

Mississippi.—Crescent Ins. Co. v. Vicksburg, Y. & S. River Packet Co. 69 Miss. 208, 210, 30 Am. St. Rep. 537, 13 So. 254.

New Hampshire.—Gove v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 48 N. H. 41, 43, 2 Am. Rep. 168, 97 Am. Dec. 572.

Ohio.—Daniels v. Ballantine, 23 Ohio St. 532, 539, 13 Am. Rep. 264.

The seasons of the year with probability of storms, the character of the goods, storage, and weather likely to be encountered, are all to be considered. The Erskine M. Phelps (U.

In all marine policies a distinction should be observed between those injuries, losses, and damages which arise from or are occasioned by mere wear and tear which is to be expected, and those which arise from some extraordinary cause. A loss which may not be covered by the policy in the former case may, even though of the same character, render the insurers liable in the latter case. It is certainly true that no liability rests upon the insurer for any deterioration in the ship, her rigging, furniture, and apparel, arising from what is to be reasonably expected from the service in which she is employed.[11] The general rule under the authorities is that above stated, and it may also be generally stated, to make the insurer liable, the injury must have been occasioned by a disaster or injury that would injure a seaworthy vessel.[12] Dangers

S. D. C.) 231 Fed. 767 (case, however, of action for damage to goods).

[11] "The loss of an anchor," says Valin, "by the fretting of a cable against the rocks, which have broken and cut it, is not a damage arrived by a peril of the sea. It is a natural consequence of the service of things destined to the use of the vessel. In the same way no demand can be made on the insurers for what the vessel has lost of value by additional service, or for rigging or sails worn; so the ship being at anchor, if the cables are worn, parted, or are cut by the effect only of currents or the vessel's swinging. It would be different if the violence of the winds or waves obliged them to cut the cables or caused them to part; and so if the wind carried away a sail, or a yard, or a spar:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 9, pp. 312, 313. This rule is, however, not considered quite satisfactory by Marshall, who makes the test that of the ordinary employment of the ship under the rule governing average contributions: 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *492, *493. Mr. Arnould states substantially the same rule as Emerigon, but he also distinguishes between ordinary and extraordinary causes of damage, or those occasioned by the direct and violent operations of one of the perils insured against, and says that "whenever the loss can, upon a fair review of all the circumstances, be imputed to the ordinary wear and tear of the voyage, the underwriter is exempt from liability:" 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *756 et seq. *758; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 720 et seq.; citing Benecke on the Principles of Indemnities, 451, 456; Stevens on Average (8th ed.) 160, 166, 168; Covington v. Roberts, 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 378, 9 R. R. 669; Fawcus v. Sarsfield, 6 El. & B. 192, 199, 25 L. J. K. B. 249, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 665, as cited by Blackburn, J., in Dugeon v. Pembroke, L. R. 9 Q. B. 581, 1 Q. B. D. 96, 2 App. Cas. 284, 43 L. J. Q. B. 220, 46 L. J. Q. B. 409, 31 L. T. 31, 36 L. T. 382, 22 W. R. 919, 25 W. R. 499, 3 Asp. M. C. 393. See also 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 775 et seq. pp. 968 et seq.

Perils of the seas covers only losses really caused by sea damage or the violence of the elements, etc. The words do not embrace all losses happening on the seas under the general words "all other perils" etc. Murray v. Novia Scotia Marine Ins. Co. 1 R. & C. (Nov. Sc.) 24.

[12] Flemming v. Marine Ins. Co. 4 Whart. (Pa.) 59, 33 Am. Dec. 33n; Pandorf v. Hamilton, 16 Q. B. D. 629, 17 Q. B. D. 674, 55 L. J. Q. B. 546, 55 L. T. 499, 35 W. R. 70, 6 Asp. M. C. 44, per Lopes, L. J.

of navigation mean those perils that are incident to it in a lawful course of it, but not those that arise from pursuing an unlawful course therein.[13] The mere fact, shown by the assured, that the goods after arrival were found damaged by sea water is not evidence of a loss by perils of the sea.[14] If goods shipped in good order and condition are damaged by sea water, it is for the ship to show that the damage was occasioned by a "peril of the sea." [15] So where a cargo of kainit is put on board a ship in good order and is put off damaged, the ship must show the loss to have resulted from "a peril of the sea" if she would escape liability.[16]

Where the owner has protected itself by insurance against perils of the seas, barratry, and all other perils, losses, etc., it may lawfully stipulate in the charter party that the charterer shall not be liable for any loss by anything not included in and covered by the insurance policies in force, and it may also provide that if the vessel is lost through any cause that will permit the underwriters to make a successful defense against paying the face of the policies, the party to whom the vessel is chartered shall be responsible, and where the vessel was lost through a peril of the sea there is a loss irrespective of the question of negligence of the master and crew, against which the owner was insured, and there is a loss by the peril of the sea where the chartered vessel is wrecked by striking and stranding upon the bank of a creek in tidal waters.[17]

§ 2798. Same subject: what losses are covered.—A loss to cargo may be attributed to a peril of the sea if there are no circumstances from which to infer an improper stowage, and the voyage is a very stormy one.[18] Damage to goods in the hold, caused by sea water, shipped during extraordinary stress of weather is loss by perils of the sea.[19] A jettison occasioned by peril of the sea is a loss by peril of the sea.[20] Injury to a cargo of a flatboat by her springing a leak, caused by a heavy swell raised by the boats passing each other, is a loss by a peril of the sea, even though the steamboat was one of ordinary size and the swell only an ordinary one [13] Atwood v. Reliance Transportation Co. 9 Watts (Pa.) 87, 34 Am. Dec. 503.

[14] Flemming v. Marine Ins. Co. 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 144, 38 Am. Dec. 747.

[15] The Lydian Monarch, 23 Fed. 298.

[16] Tygert Co. v. The Charles I. Sinnickson, 24 Fed. 304.

[17] American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. v. Bennett & Goodall, 207 Fed. 510, 125 C. C. A. 172, 42 Ins. L. J. 1783, relying upon Liverpool & Great Western Steamship Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 428, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. 46, as to a policy against perils of the sea covering loss by stranding, etc.

[18] The Fern Holme, 24 Fed. 502.

[19] Baker v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 603.

[20] Lawrence v. Minturn, 17 How. (58 U. S.) 100, 15 L. ed. 58.

for such steamboats.[1] If mules prudently stationed on board are injured by an escape of steam without fault of the officers of a steamboat, it is a peril of the river.[2] So where cattle are put upon a lighter to be landed according to the usual way, owing to an insufficiency of water on the bar, and are secured as customary in such cases, but becoming violent they break away and a number are thrown overboard and drowned, it is held a loss by a peril of the sea.[3] And if the charter-party provides that in case of the breaking down of machinery, whereby the ship is delayed over twenty-four running hours, the hire shall cease until she is again able to prosecute the voyage, and the policy was on freight chartered against loss by perils of the sea, etc., and within the term of the risk the thrust shaft parted, whereby the vessel was delayed for twenty-eight days, the perils of the seas are the immediate cause whereby the clause in the charter-party is put in operation, and insurers are liable.[4] So where by the breaking of a mast-coat in a storm the hold is flooded, this is a peril of the sea, although the exercise of proper skill and diligence should lead to the discovery of rust on a cargo of iron, and secure repairs within a reasonable time.[5] And where a cargo is damaged by a peril of the sea, and not by neglect of the ship, the libel was dismissed.[6]

If the navigation is partly by fresh and partly by salt water, and it is necessary to transship the goods, that being contemplated, it is a loss by the perils of navigation if damage of any kind by water is sustained, even wetting caused by rains, the goods being on the wharf in course of transshipment. In such case damage from water in consequence of improper storage, unless such improper storage is occasioned or acquiesced in by the insured or his agent, is damage from the perils of navigation.[7] And where a vessel is insured against perils of the lake excepting certain excluded causes, if it is lost, from perils not arising from one of the excluded causes, the company is liable.[8]

[1] Washington Mutual Ins. Co. v. Reed, 20 Ohio, 200.

[2] Union Ins. Co. v. Groom, 4 Bush (67 Ky.) 289. See next section.

[3] Anthony v. Ætna Ins. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S. C. C.) 343, Fed. Cas. No. 486, citing The Reeside, 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 567, Fed. Cas. No. 11,657; Garrison v. Memphis Ins. Co. 19 How. (60 U. S.) 312, 15 L. ed. 656; Potter v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 197, Fed. Cas. No. 11,339; Garrigues v. Coxe, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 592, 2 Am. Dec. 493.

[4] The Bedouin, 1 L. R. Q. B. D. 1, 63 L. J. Adm. 30 (1894) P. 1, 6 R. 693, 69 L. T. 782, 42 W. R. 292, 7 Asp. M. C. 391; The Alps, 1 L. R. Q. B. D. 109, 62 L. J. Adm. 59, (1893) P. 109, 68 L. T. 624, 41 W. R. 527, 7 Asp. M. C. 337.

[5] The Ninth, 36 Fed. 86, 13 Sawy. 368.

[6] Fowler v. The Bertram L. Townsend, 35 Fed. 797.

[7] Underwriters' Agency v. Sutherlin, 55 Ga. 266.

[8] Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U.

If a vessel arrives in bad condition, having open seams and butts in her deck and top sides, and an opening in her bow port, and she was seaworthy and in good condition when leaving port for her voyage, and was subject on the voyage to a severe storm of several days by which she was greatly impeded, making only twelve miles a day, all of which appears by a preponderance of evidence, the damage to her cargo will be held to have been caused by the weather, even though several inspectors testify upon examination after arrival that she must have been in bad condition when she sailed.[9] Injury to cotton which is wet by being thrown from the deck into the river by the sudden careening of a steamboat is a peril of the sea within the meaning of a policy of marine insurance, notwithstanding the careening of the boat may have resulted from the negligence or unskillfulness of those engaged in unloading her. To relieve from liability because of acts of the master and crew there must be want of good faith and honesty of purpose.[10] The injury that vessels lying in the harbors may sustain by lying badly on the ground, taking the ground by the ebbing of the tide, is not attributable to any inherent weakness or defects, or mere wear and tear, but to some extraordinary cause; as by striking their bottoms against some hard substance, or malposition or overlaying the dock.[11]

A loss by shipwreck, whether the vessel has become a mere mass of floating material without form as a ship, or has become so far shattered as to be irreparably damaged and no longer capable of navigation, except at a cost in excess of her worth when repaired, or has become greatly injured and shattered, but may be repaired at a sum less than the value, is also a peril of the sea.[12] And a loss

S. 405, 31 L. ed. 497, 8 Sup. Ct. 534.

[9] The Piskataqua, 35 Fed. 622.

[10] Crescent Ins. Co. v. Vicksburg, Yazoo & Southern R. Packet Co. 69 Miss. 208, 30 Am. St. Rep. 537, 13 So. 254.

[11] Potter v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 197, Fed. Cas. No. 11,-339; Hagar v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 59 Me. 460; Petre v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 132 N. Y. 137, 30 N. E. 380, 43 N. Y. St. Rep. 479, 45 Alb. L. J. 419, 21 Ins. L. J. 551; Kingsford v. Marshall, 8 Bing. 458, 1 M. & Scott. 657, 1 L. J. C. P. 135, 34 R. R. 756.

[12] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (ed. 1850) *795, sec. 296; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 747; 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *488; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 815, p. 1021. See chapter on total and constructive total loss and abandonment herein. Emerigon says that there are two sorts of shipwreck (naufrage): 1. When the vessel is totally submerged; 2. When being stranded on shore the sea fills up her interior but she does not absolutely disappear. He also says the Ordonnance distinguishes between shipwreck (naufrage) and bris; that bris is absolute or partial —the first, when the vessel strikes a rock or other object the vessel is broken up and ceases to exist as such; the second, "when the vessel lets in water by being violently thrown by collision or stranding, or by the unexpected striking and stranding of a vessel in tidal waters, as in case of a lighter being towed in such waters is a loss by a peril of the sea.[13] So gulf waters where the tide ebbs and flows are within the meaning of the word "seas" or "sea." And insurance will not be strictly confined to inland waters under a policy on a tug covering inland coast waters of the United States, but will include a wreck on a shoal off Charleston harbor.[14] Again, if a river steamboat runs upon a bar, and being taken off she is leaking badly, her seams having opened, and she is breached upon another bar to prevent her sinking, and is there destroyed by the river rising, this is a loss by a peril of the river.[15] In an Indiana case the defendant issued a policy to plaintiff "against loss or damage by fire . . . on his wharf-boat, tackle, and apparel lying at the wharf at the city of Evansville, Indiana, . . . and to receive, discharge, and store freight hazardous, extra-hazardous, and especially hazardous," providing "that the loss, if any, shall be adjudged according to the conditions herein contained and those hereto attached." The conditions were as follows: "Touching the adventures and perils which the said insurance company is contended to bear and take upon itself in this voyage, they are of the seas, lakes, rivers, canals, fires, jettisons, rovers and assailing thieves." It was held that the company was liable for the destruction of the boat by floating ice.[16] So where a lost kedge so fouled the anchor as to wrap it around the chain and cause the anchor to lose its hold, and the ship having been anchored a number of days suddenly in the night begins dragging, this is an accident due to sea peril.[17] And where in the absence of evidence of latent defects in a new propeller of an ocean steamship against a foreign body. If this opening to the water occasions neither shipwreck nor stranding, it is simple average; but if this partial bris is accompanied by shipwreck or stranding, it is then a total loss (sinistre majeur)." Meredith, however, says the Ordonnance does not explain the distinction between bris and shipwreck, and that the text (Emerigon's) makes it no clearer; that "bris, literally rendered, is a breaking. 'Se brisco' is to be broken, in being thrown violently against any object. This term has no correlative in English law or custom, unless it be when it is said a vessel has struck:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 12, pp. 317, 318 and note.

[13] American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. v. Bennett & Goodale Co. 207 Fed. 510, 125 C. C. A. 172, 42 Ins. L. J. 1783.

[13a] Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Clarke & Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 157 S. W. 291, 42 Ins. L. J. 1177.

[14] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Knickerbocker Steam Engine Co. 93 Fed. 93, 35 C. C. A. 226.

[15] The Natchez, 42 Fed. 169.

[16] Franklin Ins. Co. of Indianapolis v. Humphrey, 65 Ind. 549, 32 Am. Rep. 78.

[17] The Carl Frederick, 33 Fed. 589.

said propeller blades are broken on a voyage it constitutes a loss by a peril of the sea.[18]

§ 2799. Same subject: what losses are not covered.—The fact that the goods insured were damaged by sea water when delivered is not of itself evidence of loss by perils of the sea.[19] Where the vessel encounters storms of only ordinary severity, the vessel not appearing to have been strained or injured, it is not proof that a loss of the cargo was caused by a peril of the sea.[20] And the encountering of heavy seas and rolling heavily is not a peril of the sea.[1] So damage to insured goods by sea water is not a "peril of the sea" if occasioned by bad stowage, want of pumping, or defectiveness of the vessel;[2] nor is a loss by embezzlement of specie.[3] And in order to recover under a marine policy covering partial loss if it amounts to fifty per cent of the property covered, such loss must be shown to have resulted from a peril of the sea, and cannot be created by a forced sale;[4] nor by the sale of cargo at a port of necessity or distress to obtain money for the vessel, the sale being necessitated by the damaged condition of the goods,[5] and this is true even though the damage to the ship is caused by a sea peril, the repairs being such as the ship-owner, a common carrier, is bound to make;[6] nor loss by the ship's springing a leak owing to her being eaten or damaged by worms, which in certain waters ordinarily assail and enter the bottom of vessels, and which is not an extraordinary occurrence or peril;[7] nor a loss by rats, where the ship is detained in a port at which she touches by sick-

[18] New York & P. R. Steamship Co. v. Ætna Ins. Co. 204 Fed. 255, 122 C. C. A. 523, Aff'g 192 Fed. 212.

[19] Flemming v. Marine Ins. Co. 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 144, 38 Am. Dec. 747.

[20] The Mangalore, 23 Fed. 462, 9 Saw. (U. S. C. C.) 17.

[1] The Gulnare, 42 Fed. 861.

[2] Flemming v. Marine Ins. Co. 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 144, 38 Am. Dec. 747.

[3] Hicks v. Fitzsimmons, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 279, Fed. Cas. No. 6,-460.

[4] Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transportation Co. 133 Fed. 636, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1095.

[5] General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 351, 14 L. ed. 452; Dyer v. Piscataqua Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 53 Me. 118; Ruckman v. Louisville Underwriters' Ins. Co. 5 Duer (N. Y.) 342; Sarquy v. Hobson, 2 Barn. & C. 7, 4 Bing. 131, 12 Moore, 474, 3 Dowl. & R. 192, 1 Y. & J. 347, 1 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 222, 26 R. R. 251; Powell v. Gudgeon, 5 Maule & S. 431, 17 R. R. 385; Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 Term Rep. 783, 2 R. R. 519.

[6] Dyer v. Piscataqua Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 53 Me. 118, and see cases in last note.

[7] Rohl v. Parr, 1 Esp. 445, 5 R. R. 741; Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043 (cited in The Giles Loring, 48 Fed. 460); 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 218, Fed. Cas. No. 6,282; Martin v. Salem Marine Ins. Co. 2 Mass. 420.

ness of the crew,[8] losses by rats and worms not being generally considered as within ordinary wear and tear; nor ordinary wear and tear which is expected where the sole cause of the damage is the insufficiency of the ship to bear the ordinary stress of the voyage;[9] nor under the California code,[10] nor is explosion of dynamite on another vessel lying at a pier, where the damage is entirely caused by shock or concussion and not by any waves or swell of the water nor by any falling debris a "peril of the harbor;[11] nor, under the law of marine insurance generally, is a loss caused by the explosion of a boiler and the vessel's becoming thereby unmanageable and sinking a peril of the sea;[12] nor bursting of a boiler, either as understood in the law of marine insurance, or as defined by the Civil Code of California;[13] nor bilging and other damage where the vessel was hove down on the beach within the tideway to be repaired.[14] And damages to a cargo of lime, caused by a shrinking of barrel staves and slacking up of the cooperage, allowing the contents to sift out, and leaving the barrels so tender that they could not easily be hoisted without danger of falling to pieces, is not caused by peril of the sea, if the protracted length of the voyage, due to rough weather, was the proximate cause of the condition of the cargo.[15]

Where opium was placed in a wooden hulk moored in a river and used as a store, and said opium was insured under a time policy against marine risks and shortly after the insurance was effected the hulk sprang a leak and the opium was damaged by percolating water, the rotten condition of the hulk being the cause of the leak, it was held that recovery was precluded as the damage was not due to a sea peril either proximately or remotely

[8] Aymar v. Astor, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 266; Hunter v. Potts, 4 Camp. 203, 16 R. R. 776. See Laverony v. Drury, 8 Exch. 166, 22 L. J. Ex. 2, 16 Jur. 1024, 1 W. R. 55, 91 R. R. 415.

[9] Coles v. Marine Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 159; Fed. Cas. No. 2,988; Magnus v. Buttemer, 11 Com. B. 876, 21 L. J. Com. P. 119, 16 Jur. 480, 87 R. R. 785; Taylor v. Curtis, 6 Taunt. 608, 2 Marsh. 309, Holt, 192, 4 Camp. 337, 16 R. R. 686, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 363; Stevens on Average (8th ed.) 161, 167, 168; Benecke on the Principles of Indemnities, 456.

[10] See § 2797 (at note 6 herein.)

[11] Listers Agricultural Chemical Works v. Home Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 202 Fed. 1011, 42 Ins. L. J. 862.

[12] Miller v. California Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 145, 9 Am. St. Rep. 184, 18 Pac. 155; Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, L. R. 12 App. C. 484, 12 L. J. Q. B. 626, 57 L. T. 695, 36 W. R. 337, 6 Asp. M. C. 200. See West India Co. v. Home & Colonial Ins. Co. 6 Q. B. D. 51. But see preceding chapter.

[13] Miller v. California Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 145, 9 Am. St. Rep. 184, 18 Pac. 155.

[14] Thompson v. Whitmore, 3 Taunt. 227, 12 R. R. 642.

[15] Perry v. Cobb, 88 Me. 435, 49 L.R.A. 389, 34 Atl. 278.

even though sea water damaged the goods and was the proximate cause of the loss. Lord Mersey said: "There is ample authority for so holding but it is sufficient to cite the judgment of Lord Herschell,[16] where he says: 'I think it is clear that the term "perils of the sea" does not cover every accident or casualty which may happen to the subject-matter of the insurance on the sea. It must be a peril "of" the sea. Again, it is well settled that it is not every loss or damage of which the sea is the immediate cause that is covered by these words. They do not protect, for example, against that natural and inevitable action of the winds and waves which results in what may be described as wear and tear.' "[17]

§ 2800. Personal injuries to employees: against liability or for losses paid.—(a) Preliminary statement.—In the consideration of the questions involved and decided under employers' liability insurance or indemnity contracts, there are certain general principles which govern in cases where the indemnity for loss or damage consequent upon injuries fatal or nonfatal suffered by employees and also in cases where they are suffered by persons other than employees, and where these principles are so applicable to both classes of policies they have been discussed under this section wherever necessary to avoid repetition by a separate consideration of the same points under the section covering injuries to persons other than employees.[18]

(b) General propositions.—Employees' liability policies are held to be contracts of indemnity only; and also those of insurance.[19] But the indemnity contemplated is for the benefit of insured only and does not extend to any third person not a party to the contract who may suffer bodily injuries through negligence of assured, especially so where it is stipulated that no action shall lie against insurer unless it shall be brought by assured and then only for loss and/or expense actually sustained and paid in money by assured after actual trial of the issue.[20]

These contracts are not void as against public policy for the employer's means of meeting its liability is increased and not lessened thereby.[1] And a policy is held not invalid as against public [16] Wilson, Sons & Co. v. Xantha (cargo owners), 56 L. J. P. at p. 119, 12 App. Cas. at p. 510.

[17] Sassoon & Co. v. Western Assur. Co. 81 L. J. P. C. 231, [1912] A. C. 561, 106 L. T. 929, 12 Asp. M. C. 206, 17 Com. Cas. 274.

[18] See § 2803 herein.

[19] See §§ 27a et seq., 206c, 337e herein.

[20] Van Reen v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 209 Fed. 691, 43 Ins. L. J. 525. See § 3658b herein.

[1] Breeden v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 220 Mo. 327, 119 S. W. 576.

policy which indemnifies a taxicab company against loss consequent upon the violation by its employees of a city ordinance.[2]

Parties have also a right to insert provisions in these policies which define and make clear the limitations upon their liability and the obligations of each party thereto,[3] in case of ambiguity the rule of construction against assured will govern these indemnity or insurance contracts as the law does not favor forfeitures.[4] Such construction should also be given as to render effective all the various provisions of the contract.[5] Again, the various provisions of such policies, such as limitation of the amount recoverable for each person injured and in gross in case several persons sustain injury; the duty of assured as to notice of claims; the right of insurer to defend such claims or to pay or settle; the duty of assured with relation to settlements, its right to supply surgical or medical aid, its obligation to render all reasonable aid and assistance with reference to settlements, etc., are all stipulations intended to apportion responsibility between insurer and assured, instead of relieving the latter from all responsibility, and should operate also as a measure of limitation of the liability of the former.[6] The rules of construction have, however, been applied to policies of this character with reference to those matters of substance upon which liability depends and which operate upon persons prior to the loss, and those matters or formal requisites whereby it is intended to make available previously vested rights, so that provisions in the former case should be fairly construed and in the latter a liberal construction should be given.[7]

A contract and an attached agreement will also be construed

[2] Taxicab Motor Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 73 Wash. 631, 132 Pac. 393.

[3] Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395.

[4] Indiana.—Evansville Ice & Storage Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 61 Ind. App. 194, 111 N. E. 812.

Kentucky.—Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Bowling Green Gas Light Co. 150 Ky. 732, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1128, 150 S. W. 994.

Missouri.—Century Realty Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 179 Mo. App. 123, 145, 161 S. W. 624, 631, 43 Ins. L. J. 287.

New York.—Press Publishing Co. v. General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corp. 148 N. Y. Supp. 711; Cary Brick Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 147 N. Y. Supp. 414, 162 App. Div. 873.

North Carolina.—Henderson Lighting & Power Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 153 N. Car. 275, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1105, 69 S. E. 234, 40 Ins. L. J. 127.

Oregon.—Schuerman v. Mathison, 74 Oreg. 40, 144 Pac. 1177.

See also §§ 206c, 220b, 222b herein.

[5] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Bowling Green Gas Light Co. 150 Ky. 732, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1128, 150 S. W. 994.

[6] Rumford Falls Paper Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 92 Me. 574, 43 Atl. 503.

[7] Employers' Liability Ins. Corp. Ltd. v. Light, Heat & Power Co. 28 Ind. App. 437, 63 N. E. 54.

together, where the terms thereof so require, so as to indemnify a contractor not only against loss for damages for accidental injuries to employees but also as covering injuries to the public caused by assured and its employees in the performance of its work. The indemnity agreed to be paid may also cover a loss under like condition in case of a subcontractor, where judgment has been rendered against the contractor for injury sustained by a pedestrian and said contractor has recovered judgment over against the subcontractor, but a judgment against the contractor is not one against the subcontractor; and in such case the latter's cause of action arises when judgment is rendered against him regardless of the question of notice to defend the action against the contractor. The office of such a notice, however, is to make the judgment evidence against the subcontractor in so far as the issues involved are concerned.[8]

(c) Liability or loss: generally.—Generally stated, insurer's liability for the loss does not extend beyond the amount of indemnity limited in the policy having in view also the right of assurer to defend the action against assured and to litigate the same.[9] And living expenses incurred during an injured employee's sickness do not come within a liability for medical services.[10]

(d) Injuries, risks or losses covered: nature of employment: operation of assured's business: premises of assured.—If an employer is compelled to pay damages because of typhoid fever contracted by its employees from drinking water which the former had furnished them, such loss constitutes bodily injuries accidentally inflicted within the meaning of a policy against liability for such loss; for the injuries so sustained will be held to have happened unexpectedly and unintentionally and therefore to have been accidental according to the construction given that word.[11] And when the policy insures against loss from liability imposed by law upon assured for damages on account of bodily injuries suffered by any employee, insurer is liable where an employee became infected with glanders from horses while caring for them, which work he had been negligently directed to do.[12]

A person employed by a contractor who is paid a certain price

[8] Creem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 126 N. Y. Supp. 555, 141 App. Div. 493, 40 Ins. L. J. 600, s. c. 116 N. Y. Supp. 1042, 132 App. Div. 241, s. c. 206 N. Y. 733, 100 N. E. 754.

[9] Little Cahaba Coal Co. v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 192 Ala. 42, 68 So. 317, 46 Ins. L. J. 101. See § 3454a herein.

[10] Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. Ltd. v. Light, Heat & Power Co. 28 Ind. App. 437, 63 N. E. 54.

[11] Ætna Life Ins Co. v. Portland Gas & Coke Co. 229 Fed. 552, 144 C. C. A. 12, L.R.A.1916D, 1027.

[12] H. P. Hood & Sons v. Maryland Casualty Co. 206 Mass. 223, 138 Am. St. Rep. 379, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1192 and note, 92 N. E. 329.

per ton by a mining company for getting out coal is an employee of said company within a liability policy where it reserves the right to see that the work is done according to its rules, carries said employees on its pay rolls, pays them and charges the amount to the contractor and exercises the right to discharge them either directly or through the contractor, even though it is not stipulated that it shall have that right.[13] So where by construction of clauses in the application and the policy, it was manifest that it was intended to cover injuries to an employee of a subcontractor, it will be so held, notwithstanding it is claimed that an exception of liability applies as to losses from liability or injuries dependent upon the inclusion of certain classes with the relation to wages paid.[14]

Where an employer insured itself against liability for claims for personal injuries to his employees while engaged in "operations connected with the business of iron and steel works," it was held that in such a case the policy would cover injuries received by an employee by reason of the construction of a building by the employer for the use of his business.[15] The policy inclusion of the work of making ordinary repairs for the preservation of machinery or buildings and the renewal of existing mechanical equipment covers an employee who is engaged in work intended to protect a plant from flood, as where he is employed in loading dirt to be used in filling up an excavation inside and around the foundation of a new building and in the filling up of the grounds of said plant: and such employment is not excluded by a stipulation that the employers covered by the policy do not make additions to, alterations in, construct or demolish buildings, structures or plants.[16] Again, in case the description of the kind of work in which an employee of assured is permitted by the policy stipulation to be engaged is general, without any attempt to define any specific steps to be taken in the operation of assured's business, or the different processes to be used, or the equipment of assured in its business, and operations "in and about the plant" and also men engaged in making ordinary repairs upon the plant and its facilities are covered, injuries to an employee will be held to be within the policy when suffered by him while assisting in doing work in the nature of ordinary repairs upon a canal located entirely within [13] Employers Indemnity Co. v. Kelly Coal Co. 156 Ky. 74, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 850, 160 S. W. 914. But compare Employers Indemnity Co. v. Kelly Coal Co. 149 Ky. 712, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 963 and note, 141 S. W. 992. See also Travelers Ins. Co. v. Bright, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 441.

[14] Dives v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 206 Pa. 199, 56 Atl. 950.

[15] Hoven v. Employer's Liability Assur. Corp. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L.R.A. 388, 67 N. W. 46.

[16] Charles Wolff Packing Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 94 Kan. 630, 146 Pac. 1175.

assured's plant, where such work is customarily done by its regular employees and said repairs were one of its necessary facilities and a necessary part of maintaining the plant and the canal being repaired was used constantly as a chief means of transporting and receiving material and other supplies and for delivering manufactured products. In addition, the fact that such canal is an unusual convenience in connection with the operation of insured's business does not make it any the less a part of the ordinary plant, especially so when said plant is near navigable water and it had been located where it was for many years and was continuously used in connection with the business of the plant during all the time the insurance had been in force.[17] And insurer is liable where the insurance is against loss for liability imposed by law upon assured for damages, if the injury is suffered by an employee while on duty within the premises of assured in the operation of his trade or business.[18] So a nonsuit was set aside where a mill employee met his death by a cave-in while he was digging sand on assured's premises in order to furnish an independent contractor with material, as per agreement, for the erection of a brick chimney in place of two iron stacks; and in such case and to the extent aforesaid, the employee was engaged in making an alteration which was necessary for insured's plant and its proper maintenance within the protection of a policy condition, which included the "making of repairs and such ordinary alterations as are necessary to the care of the premises and plant and their maintenance in good condition;" at least whether such work of substitution of chimneys was an addition to or "a structural alteration" in "any building or plant," which was an excluded risk, or an "ordinary alteration or repair" which the policy covered, was held to be a mixed question of law and fact which should have been submitted with instructions to the jury.[19] Under another decision insurer's liability was [17] Cary Brick Co. v. Fidelity Guarantee Co. of N. Y. 147 N. Y. Supp. 414, 162 App. Div. 873, 44 Ins. L. J. 94 (repair work here consisted in dredging a canal).

As to alterations and repairs, see §§ 1708, 2191 et seq. herein.

[18] H. P. Hood & Sons v. Maryland Casualty Co. 206 Mass. 223, 138 Am. St. Rep. 879, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1192, 92 N. E. 329.

[19] Kinston Cotton Mills v. Liability Assurance Corp. 161 N. Car. 562, 77 S. E. 682, 42 Ins. L. J. 892 (the policy insured against damages on account of bodily injuries including death resulting therefrom, accidentally suffered by an employee of assured while within or upon the premises or ways adjacent thereto, by reason of the operation of the trade or business of assured including the making of repairs or such ordinary alterations as are necessary to the care of the premises and plant and their maintenance in good condition, and excluded liability for injury or death caused to any person in connection with the making of additions to, or structural alterations in, or the limited to cases where the injured person was on duty at the time of the accident, in an occupation described, and the policy excepted as risks the making of additions to or alterations in any building. The described business was that of manufacturing cottonseed oil, including refining and cotton ginning. The policy indemnified against liability for damages on account of bodily injuries suffered by an employee while on duty within the factory, shop or yards specified. It was held that a carpenter was an employee necessary in the operation of the plant, where he had been employed in its erection and after its completion was continued in assured's employ as assistant to the superintendent in regulating the machinery and in making any changes or repairs that were necessary during the operation, and he had also been placed on assured's operating list and his wages were included in the estimated wages set forth in the policy, a few days before his death, which was suffered while he was removing some scaffolding, and it also appeared that a carpenter was required in the operation of said plant.[20] So injury to a workman in iron and steel works, caused by the fall of a girder, which was being raised by an independent crew, building an addition to the works, is within a policy of indemnity against claims for compensation for injuries in "all operations connected with the business of iron and steel works." [1]

It is not necessary that an employee be at the time of injury actually in the service of the employer, where the latter represents in a circular sent the former that they will be insured against accident and protected while at work "or otherwise engaged" and the premium for such insurance is deducted from their wages; and in such case an exemption from liability in case of wilful and wanton exposure to unnecessary danger cannot be imposed upon said employees where the policy insuring them against accident contains no such condition.[2]

The fact that an injury occurs after the expiration of the policy construction of, any building or plant). See § 2632a herein.

[20] Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Lone Oak Cotton Oil & Gin Co. 35 Tex. Civ. App. 260, 80 S. W. 541 (the policy indemnified "against loss from common law or statutory liability, on account of bodily injuries, fatal or nonfatal, accidentally suffered within the period of this policy, by any employee or employees of the said assured while on duty within the factory, shop or yards mentioned in the schedule hereinafter given, or upon the ways immediately adjacent thereto, provided for the use of such employees or the public in and during the operation of the trade or business described in such schedule.") does not preclude recovery of the consequent loss where the policy was extended beyond the time said injury was suffered.[3]

[1] Hoven v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L.R.A. 388, 87 N. W. 46.

[2] McKenzie v. Garth (Can.) 9 Rap. Jud. Queb. B. R. 224.

(e) Injuries, risks or losses not covered: nature of employment: operation of assured's business: premises of assured.—It may be set up in defense to an action against insurer by insured that the injury to the employee was not a liability covered by the policy in that it was suffered or caused by a minor employed contrary to law and suffered by a minor while performing work contrary to law which was a risk excepted from the policy.[4] If the employee suffers an injury while running machinery which is not of such a kind or character as to bring it within the risk described insurer is not liable to indemnify assured where the policy is against common law and statutory liability for bodily injuries to employees caused by its negligence.[5]

An insurer contracting for indemnity to assured for losses paid employees for injuries sustained while engaged in operations of a designated character, connected with a specified business at a particular named place, is not liable for losses paid by assured to employees while engaged in work of a character other than that specified, even though it is customary for parties in such business to do such work.[6] And although a business described as a "sawmill, planing mill, mill yards, kilns, sheds, woodsmen and teamsters" presupposes the use of water and the necessity of obtaining it, the policy does not cover the risk incurred in the employment of mill hands in boring an artesian well for the obtention of water where said business is insured by a company as trustee and the policy is against bodily injuries sustained by the employees, through external, violent, and accidental means, while actually engaged in operations such as are usual to the kind of trade or business described. It was declared that since the business presupposes the use of fuel to convert the water into steam, it would hardly be argued that the risk of mining for coal or boring for fuel oil was covered.[7] So a policy indemnifying assured against losses arising from claims for damages on account of bodily injuries accidentally suffered by employees consequent upon negligence in assured's logging operations does not cover damages recovered by an employee for negligence in the maintenance of [3] London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Mississippi Central Ry. Co. 97 Miss. 165, 52 So. 787.

[4] Oxford Coal Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 248 Pa. 311, 93 Atl. 1072. See § 2632b herein.

[5] Wollman v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 87 Mo. App. 697.

[6] People's Ice Co. v. Employees' Liability Assur. Corp. of London (Lim.) 161 Mass. 122, 36 N. E. 754.

[7] Rust Lumber Co. v. General Accident Fire & Life Assur. Corp. Ltd. 134 La. 309, 64 So. 122.

a hospital and the malpractice of the assured company's surgeon, although in accordance with the usual custom a hospital fee is deducted from the pay of the employees in consideration of surgical, medical and hospital treatment furnished.[8] If assurer's liability is limited to loss from liability imposed by law upon assured for bodily injuries or death suffered through its negligence by any employee while within certain limits such as the factory, shop or yard, or upon the sidewalk, or other ways immediately surrounding the same and provided for use of the employees or the public in and during the operation of the described trade or business, it does not cover an injury sustained by a general employee or common laborer in and about the plant while helping unload a metal coil intended to be used in an addition to the plant then being constructed, especially so where liability for loss in connection with making additions or repairs to or alteration in any building, structure, or plant is expressly excepted.[9] In a New York case a settlement was made with an injured employee under stipulation, and it was also agreed that the amount paid should be considered as if paid in satisfaction of a judgment and that if assured was entitled to recover anything it was entitled to a specified amount and judgment was rendered for defendant upon the ground that the injuries sustained by said employee

[8] May Creek Logging Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 82 Wash. 301, L.R.A.1915C, 155, 144 Pac. 67, 45 Ins. L. J. 99 (Fullerton, J., said: "The respondent's liability of course depends upon the conditions of its policy. If it has thereby undertaken to answer for losses arising from claims of damages on account of the negligent failure of the appellant to perform a special contract wherein it undertook to furnish an employee with hospital, medical, and surgical services, then it is liable to answer to the suit of the appellant, otherwise not. We cannot think the policy bears this interpretation. It purports to cover only losses arising from claims of damages by the appellant's employees on account of accidental injuries suffered by the employees while in the prosecution of the appellant's logging business, and the departments dependent upon and the operations connected therewith. Hospital, medical, and surgical services are no part of the logging operations, and the injured employee while in the hospital was performing no service connected with the appellant's logging business. And while the appellant alleges that it is the custom of logging companies to deduct a hospital fee from the wages of each of its several employees, and use the fee in payment of services to be rendered such employees as become sick or injured and that the respondent knew of this custom, we cannot think the facts in any way alter or modify the terms of the insurance. Aside from the fact that the recovery was had upon a specific contract, and not upon the custom, the insurance is only against losses arising from negligence in the logging operations, not from losses arising from negligence in the maintenance of the hospital").

[9] Evansville Ice & Storage Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 61 Ind. App. 194, 111 N. E. 812.

while doing work in connection with the replacing after a fire of a roof of large dimensions, did not constitute the "making of ordinary repairs for the preservation of machinery and/or buildings" within the policy terms, but that it came within a specific exception of liability from injuries covered by an employee's liability policy in making additions to or in the construction, etc., of any building unless a written permit was obtained, and it was conceded that no permit was procured as the policy required.[10]

An employee is not within the terms of a policy which stipulates that it shall apply only to such injuries as are sustained while within the factories, shop or yards of a packing house, or upon the premises or ways immediately adjoining, and the injury is sustained by said employee while he is working in a city park across a street running between the packing house yards and said park.[11]

(f) Risks assumed by second insurer: reinsurance.—If insurer's risks under its employers' liability policies and all its outstanding liabilities are agreed to be assumed and paid by another insurer, said contract inures to the benefit of a policy holder of the transferring insurer and the second insurer becomes liable to said original insured, for the contract is not merely one of reinsurance.[12]

(g) When liability attaches or right of action against assurer accrues.[12a]—In determining when liability attaches or a right of action accrues in this class of indemnity or insurance contracts, the nature of the stipulated indemnity under the contract or policy terms and such distinction as arises by construction thereof necessarily governs; that is, it is requisite to first ascertain for what the indemnity is promised, what distinction, if any, exists in the terms upon which this promise of assurer to pay is based, and the rights of assurer and assured in this respect under the conditions of the contract or policy. These different points appear under the decisions considered herein. Generally stated, however, liability does not attach until assured has suffered some loss;[13]

[10] Syracuse Malleable Iron Works v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 157 N. Y. Supp. 572, 94 Misc. 411. See § 2632a herein.

As to alterations and repairs, see §§ 1708, 2191 et seq. herein.

[11] Charles Wolff Packing Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 94 Kan. 630, 146 Pac. 1175.

[12] Southern States Fire Ins. Co. v. Hand-Jordan Co. 112 Miss. 565, 73 So. 578.

As to extent of reinsurer's liability and rights of original insured, see §§ 131 et seq. herein.

[12a] See subdiv. (a) herein.

[13] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. 150 Ky. 732, 43

or until it sustains a loss by the payment of a liability;[14] or unless it has actually paid the amount of judgment;[15] and the right of action does not accrue until after judgment recovered against insured by the injured employee.[16] The rule may also be stated as follows: Under a policy clause which provides that no action shall lie against assurer unless for "loss actually sustained and paid in money after actual trial of the issue" insured's claim does not accrue until after payment of the judgment against it, and in case of appeal then not until after affirmance of the appeal. If, however, the policy only indemnifies against loss by reason of liability because of an accident to an employee, the obligation to save harmless or to pay would arise when judgment determining liability was entered against assured.[17]

As to injuries suffered by other than employees, it is held that where the liability is for damages for bodily injuries sustained by the operation of a street railroad, such liability accrues as soon as assured's liability is determined, and this does not happen as long as the action against assured is pending on appeal.[18] And assured must have actually paid a judgment rendered against him in an action by the injured person before a right of action accrues against insurer, where the policy contract is not merely against liability, but one of indemnity against loss, as where it indemnifies against loss for damages for injuries to persons while on assured's premises.[19]

(h) Stipulation that insurer defend accident or injury actions or suits against insured: valid, not champertous.—A condition is not invalid as champertous and against public policy which obli-

L.R.A.(N.S.) 1128, 150 S. W. 994 (liability for loss limited with agreement to pay expenses).

[14] Carter v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 76 Kan. 275, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155, 91 Pac. 178 (condition was against loss from liability and for loss actually sustained and paid, etc.).

[15] Cushman v. Carbondale Fuel Co. 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509 (condition was that no action should lie against insurer unless brought by the "assured himself to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue").

[16] Texas Short Line Ry. Co. v. Waymire, — Tex. Civ. App.—, 89 S. W. 452.

[17] Saratoga Trap Rock Co. v. Standard Accident Ins. Co. 128 N. Y. Supp. 822, 143 App. Div. 852, 40 Ins. L. J. 1310—Houghton, J., citing on last point, Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 135 Mich. 189, 97 N. W. 686. See also as to first point in text, White v. Maryland Casualty Co. 123 N. Y. Supp. 840, 139 App. Div. 179, 39 Ins. L. J. 1357.

As to payment of judgment as prerequisite to bringing suit, see subdivs. (n) et seq. this section.

[18] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420, 27 Ins. L. J. 232.

[19] Puget Sound Imp. Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 52 Wash. 124, 100 Pac. 190.

gates insurer at its cost to defend in insured's name and behalf suits which may be brought against the latter by an injured employee, and to pay the costs and expenses of litigation; and even though such an agreement was champertous in fact as between the parties, the point of invalidity is not open to question by a stranger to the contract.[20]

(i) Right of insurer to defend such actions or suits.[1]—The questions of assurer's right, duty or obligation to defend accident or injury actions brought against insured, and the effect of its assuming such defense under the policy stipulations, or of its abandonment thereof, or withdrawal therefrom after having undertaken the same, or of its refusal or neglect to defend, and points of waiver or estoppel in connection therewith, all go not only to loss or liability, but they are also involved with questions relating to parties to the action. While the right of assurer to defend in these cases is closely related to that of its right to be a party to such a suit, still beyond this point the cases leave largely to inference or deduction the application of what is decided therein to either of said points of loss or liability, or parties to the action. What is above stated should, therefore, be considered in applying not only the decisions discussed here, but also those which are relied on under those sections herein which relate to parties to actions.[2]

If insurer is satisfied that under the law no indemnity is recoverable, it has the right to defend by all lawful means actions for damages for injuries, under a policy insuring employers against loss occasioned by accidents to employees.[3] And if a policy, insuring against liability for damages for bodily injuries suffered by persons traveling on insured's street railroad, stipulates that insurer shall have absolute control of defending the case, but that it shall not be bound to defend if it pays assured the full amount insured, it is obligated either to defend or pay as stipulated.[4]

(j) Effect of defense by insurer of such actions or suits: waiver: estoppel.—Generally stated and subject to such exceptions or [20] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Week, 163 Ky. 37, 173 S. W. 317.

[1] See subdiv. (a) this section.

[2] See §§ 3658a et seq. herein.

[3] Montreal Steam Laundry Co. v. Demers, Rap. Jud. Queb. 5 B. R. 191.

[4] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420, 27 Ins. L. J. 233. ("If any legal proceedings were instituted against the railway company to enforce it," a claim against insured for damages, "the insurance company bound itself to take absolute care and control of defending against the same in the name and behalf of the assured. In only one way could it have absolved itself from this obligation, and that was by paying or offering to pay assured the full amount for which it was liable in such cases by its policy."—Battle, J.).

qualifications as hereinafter appear, if assurer exercises its option and defends it becomes liable;[5] that is, a defense by insurer in an action on the policy that a certain claimed liability is not within the policy terms, may be and is waived where it assumes the defense and control of the injured employee's or claimant's action with full information or knowledge of the character thereof or nature of the claim without denying its liability or reserving its right to do so when it undertakes said defense, or without any notice to assured that it does not intend to waive its rights as to any matters of defense or nonliability; and an estoppel will also be created to the extent that assured is prejudiced by such acts of assurer.[6] And if insurer takes exclusive charge of the defense with assured's consent it thereby waives any defense of nonliability by reason of failure of assured to observe any statute affecting the safety of persons, which failure constitutes under the policy terms an exemption of liability for loss from injury consequent thereon.[7] Assurer is also estopped to avail itself in the action against it by assured of a defense of nonobservance by the latter of statutory requirements for the safety of employees, where said assurer upon notice assumes and retains, without denying liability, full control until judgment rendered of the action against insured by the injured employee.[8] So assurer by defending a

[5] Coast Lumber Co. v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 22 Idaho, 264, 125 Pac. 185; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. 150 Ky. 732, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1128, 150 S. W. 994.

[6] Royle Mining Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 161 Mo. App. 185, 142 S. W. 438, 41 Ins. L. J. 571 (citing Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. v. Chicago & Big Muddy Coal & Coke Co. 141 Fed. 962, 73 C. C. A. 278; Tozer v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corp. 99 Minn. 290, 109 N. W. 410, s. c. 94 Minn. 478, 103 N. W. 509; Fairbanks Canning Co. v. London Guaranty & Accident Co. 154 Mo. App. 327, 133 S. W. 664; Royle Mining Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 126 Mo. App. 104, 103 S. W. 1098; Myton v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 117 Mo. App. 442, 92 S. W. 1149; Glens Falls Portland Cement Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 42 N. Y. Supp. 285, 11 App. Div. 411, aff'd 162 N. Y. 399, 56 N. E. 897, 29 Ins. L. J. 748; Globe Navigation Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 39 Wash. 299, 81 Pac. 826). See also Wilson v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 77 N. H. 344, 91 Atl. 913, 44 Ins. L. J. 606; Brassil v. Maryland Casualty Co. 210 N. Y. 235, L.R.A. 1915A, 629, 104 N. E. 622, 43 Ins. L. J. 672, aff'g 133 N. Y. Supp. 187, 147 App. Div. 815, 41 Ins. L. J. 792; Rosenbloom v. Maryland Casualty Co. 137 N. Y. Supp. 1064, 153 App. Div. 23, 42 Ins. L. J. 180. See Century Realty Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 179 Mo. App. 123, 145, 161 S. W. 624, 631.

[7] Empire State Surety Co. v. Pacific National Lumber Co. 200 Fed. 224, 118 C. C. A. 410.

[8] Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. of London v. Chicago & Big Muddy Coal & Coke Co. 141 Fed. 962, 73 C. C. A. 278, 31 Natl. Corp. Rep. 482.

suit for damages brought for death of a person against insured is estopped to set up in action against it by assured that the death did not result from the injuries negligently inflicted but from malpractice by a physician.[9]

If, however, insured has based his claim against insurer on various grounds covered by the policy and also upon one not within the terms thereof, insurer has an election to refuse to defend the action of the employee against insured, taking the chance that the ground of liability established will be the one for which it is not liable, or it can proceed with the defense of said action under a reservation of its rights or with an understanding with or notice to insured, express or implied, that it will defend against all allegations of fault, and in case the only allegation sustained is the one for which it claims nonliability its rights should be preserved and it should not be liable. "Of course there was no method by which it could compel the insured to make an explicit agreement of the kind above suggested covering this subject. All it could or was bound to do was to fairly and reasonably assert its rights under the policy in such a manner as would be notice to the insured that it did not intend to waive those rights by proceeding with the defense of the action. This it did." [10] And to the same effect, it is also held that if assurer elects to defend an employee's action against assured with a reservation of its rights under the policy to assert its nonliability, a judgment against assured in said suit as a liability not covered by the indemnity or insurance contract or which is a risk excepted therefrom is conclusive against said assured in its suit against assurer.[11] So, under another

[9] Taxicab Motor Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 73 Wash. 631, 132 Pac. 393.

[10] Mason-Henry Press v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 211 N. Y. 489, 105 N. E. 826, 44 Ins. L. J. 316.—Hiscock, J., aff'g 139 N. Y. Supp. 1133, 155 App. Div. 876, s. c. 130 N. Y. Supp. 961, 146 App. Div. 181, 40 Ins. L. J. 2046. See Holland Laundry v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 152 N. Y. Supp. 92, 166 App. Div. 621, 45 Ins. L. J. 638; United Waste Manufacturing Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 148 N. Y. Supp. 852, 44 Ins. L. J. 497; Buffalo Steel Co. v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 156 App. Div. 453 (Aff'g 136 N. Y. Supp. 977, 41 Ins. L. J. 1653) Aff'd 215 N. Y. 638, 109 N. E. 1067; Wachs & Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. — Pa. —, 93 Atl. 1007, 46 Ins. L. J. 87.

[11] Buffalo Steel Co. v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 136 N. Y. Supp. 977, 41 Ins. L. J. 653, aff'd 141 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 156 App. Div. 453, aff'd 215 N. Y. 638, 109 N. E. 1067 (a case where insurer defended the action against it on the ground that the insured employee was employed in violation of law, and that the policy expressly excepted such risk from its operation; Labor Laws 1897, c. 415, sec. 81, as am'd by L. 1899, c. 192, sec. 1. The judgment referred to was in Tetter v. Buffalo Steel Co. 117 N. Y. Supp. 1148, 132 App. Div. 946, and it was paid by assured. See § 2632b herein).

decision, where the defense is assumed with a reservation of assurer's rights under the policy and without assuming any liability for any judgment that might be recovered in the employee's action such reservation means that it only assumes the defense for such liability as the policy imposes upon it, if any.[12] Again, in case the insured employer fails to furnish assurer with information vitally essential as to an excepted risk, which was that of the employment of a minor without a permit and therefore illegal, and assurer without knowledge of said fact assumes the defense and continues in control of the litigation, it is not thereby estopped to deny liability in an action against it to recover on the policy, especially so where in the action against insured there were other grounds of negligence upon which the claimant therein relied and had he prevailed upon any of them it would have been within the risks insured against; nor in such case is assurer, in view of its possible or probable liability on the other grounds above stated, put to its election and required to change its attitude as to continuing in the defense, even though it might be urged that it was put upon inquiry as to said illegal employment by certain evidence given in that action.[13] And if insured is sued by an employee and [12] Hartigan v. Casualty Co. of America, 161 N. Y. Supp. 145, 97 Misc. 464.

[13] Stearns Lumber Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 159 Wis. 627, 150 N. W. 991, 45 Ins. L. J. 553. The court, per Marshall, J., said: "In each of the adjudications cited to us, which deal with the particular matter, the element of estoppel was very prominent and upon that, instead of waiver, in the technical sense, the defense of illegal employment was held inefficient. Tozer v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. 94 Minn. 478, 103 N. W. 509; Humes Construction Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 32 R. I. 246, 79 Atl. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 906; Royle Mining Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 126 Mo. App. 104, 103 S. W. 1098; Employers' Liability Ins. Corp. v. Chicago & Big Muddy Coal & Coke Co. 141 Fed. 962, 73 C. C. A. 278; Fairbanks Can. Co. v. London Accident Co. 154 Mo. App. 327, 133 S. W. 664; Globe Navigation Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 39 Wash. 299, 81 Pac. 826; Glens Falls Portland Cement Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 162 N. Y. 399, 56 N. E. 897.

"In the first of those cases the insurance company, from first to last, knew all the facts, yet insisted upon carrying on the litigation and neglected to notify the insured of an opportunity, which was presented, of making an advantageous settlement.

"In the next case, the facts were all known to the insurance company, but it, through mistake of law, supposed itself liable and handled the litigation to the practical exclusion of the employer.

"In the next, with full knowledge of all the facts, the insurance company conceded its liability until the doors were fully closed for the assured to do anything for protection in its own behalf.

"In the last case, the insurance company took charge of the litigation . . . and continued it down to the trial, and then abandoned it under such circumstances as to leave defendant unable to make a defense and so the case went, practically, by by amendment liability is placed upon the ground of employing a minor contrary to law, which ground of liability is not covered by the policy, and insurer continues to participate in the defense after notice that it disclaims liability, if recovery is had on said ground set forth in the amendment, it is not thereby estopped to deny liability in an action by assured to recover from it.[14] The rule is also deducible under a Minnesota decision, that if insurer undertakes the defense of the action against assured, but expressly disclaims liability if judgment is awarded against assured upon a liability which it notifies assured is a risk specifically excepted by the policy, and assured participates in the defense and the recovery against the latter proves to be within the exceptions so specified, assurer is not liable on the policy. A distinction is made between a case of this character and those wherein assurer assumes the defense as stipulated in the policy without denying liability, or where it has conducted the defense down to trial and then withdrew. The rule was also applied in such case that there may be an estoppel against an alleged estoppel which sets the matter at large so that assured will be relegated to the provisions of the policy and precluded from recovering, as where a policy is issued to assured as copartners and their conduct is such as to prevent them from asserting that assurer had waived its right to defend on the ground that the loss was not within the policy and the dissolution of the partnership does not affect the result.[15] But default. Thus it will be seen that prejudicial features which operated efficiently, in the many cases cited, were entirely absent here."

That insurer not liable to reimburse insured for damages recovered for covered for injuries sustained through latter's negligence by child employed contrary to law, see Goodwillie v. London Guarantee Accident Co. 108 Wis. 207, 84 N. W. 164.

[14] Sargent Manufacturing Co. v. Travelers Ins. Co. 165 Mich. 87, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 491 and note, 130 N. W. 211; Pub. Acts 1901, No. 113, sec. 3, prohibiting employment of infants.

See § 2632b herein.

[15] Mann v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. 123 Minn. 305, 143 N. W. 794, 43 Ins. L. J. 150. The court, per Brown, J., said: "We must start with the proposition that there was no express contractual liability on defendant's part to pay plaintiffs any sum under the policy because of the judgment obtained against them. Consequently the burden rested on plaintiffs to establish a state of facts from which a liability might be implied by law. There are numerous cases holding that where an insurance company takes up the defense of an action, knowing the facts bring it within a risk exception, and, under the general agreements of the policy authorizing it to control litigation, conducts the case to the end, and nothing further appears, it will be deemed precluded, by the way of either estoppel or waiver, from taking a position inconsistent with the one previously assumed and denying liability. Empire State Surety Co. v. Pacific National Lumber Co. 200 Fed. 224, 118 C. C. A. 410; Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. v. Chicago Big notwithstanding the preceding decisions it is held, that by assuming defense of the action against assured, insurer is not concluded by the judgment in that case and that it may nevertheless in the suit against it, set up any defense it may have.[16]

(k) Assurer's refusal or neglect to defend such actions or suits.[17] —Under a Federal decision a judgment against insured precludes or estops insurer where it has expressly stipulated that it will defend or settle or otherwise satisfy assured, and it receives notice but refuses to defend and disclaims all liability.[18] It is also decided in Massachusetts that insurer may refuse to defend on the ground that the alleged accident was not an accident, and so not covered by the policy, and if it is not within the policy terms for that or for other reasons, assured will not be held liable.[19] And in a Missouri case it is held that although insurer acts at its peril in refusing to defend the suit for damages, nevertheless so long as any peril exists its act in defending or negotiating for a settlement does not operate as a waiver.[20] So under a Minnesota decision if assurer denies liability and refuses to defend after notice it thereby breaches its contract and waives the condition making a judgment after trial of the issue a condition precedent to recovery by insured. The latter is also thereby released from its agreement not to settle without insurer's consent, so that if Muddy Coal & Coke Co. 141 Fed. 962, 73 C. C. A. 278; Royle Mining Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 126 Mo. App. 104, 103 S. W. 1008. So, also, under like circumstances, the company has been held estopped where it conducted the defense down to the trial and then withdrew, leaving assured no reasonable opportunity to prepare his own defense. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 162 N. Y. 399, 56 N. E. 897. And our decisions are in line with the general holding. Tozer v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. 94 Minn. 478, 103 N. W. 509; Id. 99 Minn. 290, 109 N. W. 410. If, however, the trial court's conclusion upon defendant's contentions is sustainable in point of fact, which we will consider later, the cases cited are clearly distinguishable from the present one; for plaintiff's assent to the status assumed by defendant with regard to the litigation by the notice of nonliability referred to and thereafter, when measured by the same legal standard of responsibility for acts indicated by the grounds of the decisions cited and which they seek to apply as against defendant would equally estop them from doing the identical thing which they deny defendant's right to do, namely, repudiation of the effect of conduct. The doctrine of equitable estoppel prevents this."

[16] Gutfreund v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 98 N. Y. Supp. 699.

[17] See subdiv. (a) this section.

[18] B. Roth Tool Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 161 Fed. 709, 88 C. C. A. 569.

[19] Graustein & Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. Ltd. of L. 214 Mass. 421, 101 N. E. 1073.

[20] Compton Heights Laundry v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp. Ltd. 195 Mo. App. 313, 190 S. W. 382).

insured in such case defends said action against it to recover for injuries sustained and effects a settlement, the amount paid therein is recoverable from insurer unless it appears that there was no liability for which insured could be held or that the amount so paid was excessive. The settlement, however, affords presumptive evidence of a pre-existing liability and of the amount thereof.[1] And in a Tennessee case it is decided that assurer obligates itself to defend the suit against assured at its own cost; or to settle the same; or to pay assured the stipulated indemnity and by the refusal, upon notice, to defend or to do any of said things it breaches the insurance contract and is liable for the consequences; and in such case there is no limitation of liability to include only meritorious claims whereby assurer is justified in determining in advance that the employees suit is groundless.[2] In Texas where assurer refuses to defend such damage suits it is held liable upon a policy indemnifying against liability as distinguished from loss.[3] Assurer is also liable where it refuses to defend the employee's suit, claiming that it was not liable for the particular accident suffered.[4] But a denial by assurer of liability does not waive a provision requiring the recovery of judgment by the injured employee against the assured before action would lie on the policy.[5]

In New York assurer has the right to refuse to defend an action against insured for damages, on account of injuries sustained by persons not employees, where its liability does not attach until after payment of judgment.[6] And when assured,

[1] Butter Bros. v. American Fidelity Co. 120 Minn. 157, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 609, 139 N. W. 355 (it was also held that there was no failure of assured to observe a statute affecting the safety of persons, see upon this last point of precautions against loss, Despatch Laundry Co. v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. Ltd. 105 Minn. 384, 117 N. W. 506, 118 N. W. 152; Compton Heights Laundry Co. v. General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corp. 195 Mo. App. 313, 190 S. W. 382).

[2] South Knoxville Brick Co. v. Empire State Surety Co. 126 Tenn. 402, 150 S. W. 92, 42 Ins. L. J. 192.

[3] Royal Indemnity Co. v. Schwartz, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 581 (case of recovery of expenses, etc., incurred by assured in defending suit of person injured by assured's auto, although the loss itself was within an excepted risk).

[4] Southwestern Surety Co. v. Thompson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 180 S. W. 947 (liable for expenses, etc., in employer's suit).

[5] Texas Short Line Ry. Co. v. Waymire, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 89 S. W. 452.

[6] White v. Maryland Casualty Co. 123 N. Y. Supp. 840, 139 App. Div. 179, 39 Ins. L. J. 1357 (condition was that no action shall lie against insurer "as respects any loss under this policy unless it shall be brought by the assured himself to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment," etc.).

who held a public contract with a city, was insured under a policy for indemnity against liability suffered to its employees and others arising out of personal injury caused by assured or its workmen, and judgment against the city was recovered by a person who had suffered injury while the work was being done in pursuance of the contract, for the payment of which judgment assured was liable under its city contract, it was held that assurer by its refusal upon notice from assured, to defend such action, was not estopped from setting up the defense, in a suit by assured against it, that the injury on which said judgment was recovered was not a liability or risk covered by the policy.[7] In another New York case the policy covered loss from liability to employees of assured and also the liability of insured to persons other than employees who might accidentally sustain bodily injuries directly occasioned by the business operations of insured as described, and which should impose upon assured a common law or statutory liability to such persons therefor. The contract also stipulated that if legal proceedings should be commenced to enforce such claims against insured that it, assurer, should pay insured, etc., or that "it shall defend said proceedings on behalf of the insured and shall have control of such defense." Only claims for liability to persons other than employees were involved. The court referred the stipulation as to defending suits back to a preceding provision that insurer should have the sole right and it should be its duty to "negotiate settlements and adjustments of all claims made against the insured covered by this policy;" and held that the obligation to defend was limited and controlled thereby, so that when assurer received notice of suits against insured it had the right to determine for itself whether the injuries had in fact occurred under such circumstances as to impose a liability upon the latter therefor, and to act accordingly, either by defending the suits or entirely ignoring them, taking its chances on an adverse result. The court also in its opinion clearly makes the case turn upon the result of said suits since it appeared that they were based upon a state of facts which imposed no liability upon assured. The gist of this decision is, that if insurer refuses to defend it takes its chances, or in other words, so refuses at its peril, that is, it takes its chances, resting its liability upon the result of the damage suit against insured.[8] But it is also decided that where

[7] Tolmie v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 84 N. Y. Supp. 1020, 41 Misc. 451, aff'd 88 N. Y. Supp. 717, 95 App. Div. 352, aff'd 183 N. Y. 581, 76 N. E. 1110.

[8] Cornell v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 175 N. Y. 239, 67 N. E. 578, 32 Ins. L. J. 769, rev'g 73 N. Y. Supp. 341, 66 App. Div. 559 (the above determination was the basis for preclusion of a assured has become obligated to pay judgment after notice to insurer of actions on the claims of employees, the latter is liable under the policy where it has failed to defend.[9]

(1) Where assurer undertakes such defense and surrenders or abandons it or withdraws therefrom.—Insurer may surrender the defense of an action against assured for negligently causing an employee's death where it has undertaken the same under a misapprehension of its obligations and learns from testimony during the trial that it is not liable.[10]

But insurer cannot undertake the defense of the accident suit against insured and then withdraw on the eve of trial leaving assured no reasonable opportunity to prepare its defense, and if insurer so improperly abandons the same and judgment is suffered by assured by default it will be estopped to defend the action on the policy by setting up a matter of nonliability which it might have shown upon the trial of the action against insured and thereby have successfully defended that action; and it is also precluded from claiming that that adjudication precluded assured from insisting upon the stipulated policy indemnity.[11] So where the policy permits assurer to determine which of certain courses it will adopt, as where it has the right to defend in the name and on behalf of assured against proceedings brought against him to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident or bodily injury suffered by an employee or to settle the claim at its own cost; or pay the stipulated amount of indemnity, leaving assured to defend itself against the claim as best he may, the adoption of either of these courses necessarily implies the rejection of the others, and the election to assume the defense precludes the abandonment thereof to assurer's advantage and the assertion of a recovery from assurer of assured's expenses incurred in defending said suits which the latter had successfully defended; but this part of the decision rested upon other provisions of the policy. This question of expenses is, however, fully considered elsewhere. See § 3454a herein). See Henderson Lighting & Power Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 153 N. Car. 275, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1105, 69 S. E. 234, 40 Ins. L. J. 127.

[9] E. M. Upton Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 147 N. Y. Supp. 765, 162 App. Div. 842.

[10] London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. American Cereal Co. 159 Ill. App. 537, 41 Natl. Corp. Rep. 833, see London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. American Cereal Co. 251 Ill. 123, 95 N. E. 1064; American Cereal Co. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 211 Fed. 96, 138 C. C. A. 24, 43 Ins. L. J. 834.

[11] Glens Falls Portland Cement Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 162 N. Y. 399, 56 N. E. 897, 29 Ins. L. J. 748, aff'g 42 N. Y. Supp. 285, 11 App. Div. 411 (liability question in original injury suit and urged in defense in insurance action was negligence in not properly safe-guarding machinery, etc., as required by statute. Laws 1892, c. 673, sec. 8).

claim inconsistent with the course adopted, to the prejudice of assured's policy rights.[12]

If assurer assumes the defense with a reservation of its rights as to liability under the policy but, upon ascertaining that irrespective of assured's liability it would not be liable, it notifies assured that it will not continue in the defense after a certain date and requests the latter to come in and defend, the question of the reasonableness of such notice is one of law and not one for the jury.[13]

(m) Where assurer fails to exercise reasonable care in conducting such defense: negligence.—It is obligatory upon assurer to exercise reasonable care in defending the suit against assured where it, upon receiving notice, assumes such defense, and this applies whether or not the contract requires it to defend, and action lies by assured against assurer for breach of implied contract, or in tort for negligence, where the latter has so negligently and carelessly prepared for trial of the cause that a judgment is recovered against the employer assured much in excess of the stipulated policy indemnity.[14] And where a judgment is rendered against assured in the employee's suit and it pays the same in satisfaction thereof in order to prevent a sale of its property, insurer is liable for the amount so paid where it has defended the action and has taken an appeal from the adverse judgment but has failed to execute any stay bond.[15] But it is decided that if a judgment in excess of the insurance has been obtained against assured and assurer, who has a right under the policy to defend, agrees to perfect an appeal, it is not liable for negligently failing to perfect an appeal whereby judgment is affirmed, where it does not appear that said judgment was erroneous and that plaintiff could not have succeeded on a second trial.[16]

(n) Indemnity against loss or damages and indemnity against liability distinguished: effect as to payment of judgment or loss in suit or claim against insured.[17]—We have considered elsewhere the question of whether or to what extent this contract is one of [12] Brassil v. Maryland Casualty Co. 133 N. Y. Supp. 187, 147 App. Div. 815, 41 Ins. L. J. 792, aff'd 210 N. Y. 235, L.R.A.1915A, 629, 104 N. E. 622, 43 Ins. L. J. 672.

[13] United Waste Manufacturing Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 148 N. Y. Supp. 852, 85 Misc. 1539, 44 Ins. L. J. 497.

[14] Attleboro Manufacturing Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 171 Fed. 495.

[15] E. M. Upton Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Casualty Co. 147 N. Y. Supp. 765, 162 App. Div. 842.

[16] Getchell & Martin Lumber & Manufacturing Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. 117 Iowa, 180, 62 L.R.A. 617, 90 N. W. 616.

[17] See subdiv. (a) this section.

indemnity or of insurance;[18] and a distinction exists in this class of insurance or indemnity, between an indemnity against loss or damages and an indemnity against liability for damages and even though the object of both is to save insured from loss or damage the legal consequences differ, for in the former case payment is essential, while in the latter it is not.[19]

[18] See §§ 27a et seq. 337e herein.

[19] Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 135 Mich. 189, 97 N. W. 685, 33 Ins. L. J. 180, 183.

See also the following cases:

United States.—Georgia Casualty Co. v. Bowron, 233 Fed. 89, 147 C. C. A. 159, L.R.A.1916F, 876; Bowron v. Georgia Casualty Co. 223 Fed. 673 (where the distinction between insurance against loss and against liability is made and conceded); Van Reen v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 209 Fed. 691, 43 Ins. L. J. 525 ("Further, it" the contract "did not undertake to insure Brogan against mere liability to others for bodily injuries sustained through such negligent use, nor did it assume his liability or indebtedness in such cases, but only agreed to indemnify him against 'loss and/or expense arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages' on account of such injuries . . . and then only 'for loss and/or expense actually sustained and paid in money by him after actual trial of the issue.' " Id., per Bradford, D. J., a case where specific performance was sought by injured person to compel insurer to pay to him the amount of his judgment, etc., against insured).

Alabama.—Little Cahaba Coal Co. v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 192 Ala. 42, 68 So. 317, 46 Ins. L. J. 101 ("By the great weight of authority contracts of this character are contracts of indemnity against loss and not against liability merely, and the liability of the underwriter is deemed fixed only upon payment of the judgment by assured."—Sayre, J. Examine opinion of Somerville, J., in Goodman v. Georgia Life Ins. Co. 189 Ala. 130, 66 So. 649, 45 Ins. L. J. 239, repudiating the doctrine of Patterson v. Aden, 119 Minn. 308, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184, 138 N. W. 281; Sanders v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 72 N. H. 485, 101 Am. St. Rep. 688, 37 Atl. 655, and citing as opposed thereto by the weight of authority, Allen v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 145 Fed. 881, 76 C. C. A. 265, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958 and note; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395; Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Moses, 63 N. J. Eq. 260, 92 Am. St. Rep. 663, 49 Atl. 720).

Indiana.—Campbell v. Maryland Casualty Co. 52 Ind. App. 228, 97 N. E. 1026, 41 Ins. L. J. 1097. (If contract is to indemnify against loss, damage must be shown, if indemnity is against liability only the recovery may be had regardless of whether or not any actual loss or damage has been suffered.—Larry, J.; Adams, J., dissented as to point that insurance here was against loss).

Iowa.—West Riverside Coal Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 155 Iowa, 161, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 145 and note, 135 N. W. 414, 41 Ins. L. J. 1102 (contract against actual loss and not against liability only, so that proof of payment of actual loss necessary).

Kentucky.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Martin, 163 Ky. 12, 173 S. W. 307 (policy held to insure against loss and not liability only).

Maine.—Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 59 L.R.A. 444, 54 Atl. 395 (contract not one of insurance but only of indemnity to reimburse insured

(o) Same subject: payment of such judgment or loss as condition precedent or prerequisite to recovery.—The parties have a for loss actually sustained and paid by reason of his liability to injured employees).

Missouri.—Century Realty Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 179 Mo. App. 123, 161 S. W. 624, 43 Ins. L. J. 287 (agreement in this case was to indemnify assured "against loss arising from any legal liability for damages," etc. The court, per Reynolds, P. J., said: "not a suggestion can be drawn from any of this language" in the indemnity clause "that the payment is only to be made by the insurer in reimbursement of what the assured shall or may have paid. On the contrary, as we understand it, it is more in the nature of 'a policy which insures directly against liability, and one that insures against loss or damage by reason of liability.' . . . We conclude on this point then, that it was not within the expressed intention of this policy . . . that liability to make payment to the assured should fall in only after the assured had paid whatever damage may have been awarded to the injured party") s. c. 179 Mo. App. 145, 161 S. W. 631. This case was followed in its decision upon the points in issue in Century Realty Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 179 Mo. App. 144, 161 S. W. 630.

New York.—Appel v. Peoples' Surety Co. 132 N. Y. Supp. 200, 148 App. Div. 70, 41 Ins. L. J. 589 (point briefly discussed whether clause stipulating that policy should only cover losses sustained by and liability for any claims, indemnifies against liability as well as loss, but not determined, although court declared at outset that it was one of the important points involved and also distinguished and held inapplicable. O'Connell v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. Co. 187 Mass. 272, 72 N. E. 979; and St. Louis Dressed Beef Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 201 U. S. 173, 50 L. ed. 712, 26 Sup. Ct. 400, in that the former was against loss from common law or statutory liability, and the latter was a contract of indemnity against loss); Saratoga Trap Rock Co. v. Standard Accident Ins. Co. 128 N. Y. Supp. 822, 143 App. Div. 852, 40 Ins. L. J. 1310 (the clause prohibiting action for loss shall lie against insurer unless brought by assured for "loss actually sustained and paid in money after trial of the issue" has the "effect of changing the policy from one of indemnity when liability shall be established, to one for indemnity for money paid out on the occurrence of a particular event, to wit, payment of the judgment because of such liability."—Houghton, J.); Creem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 126 N. Y. Supp. 555, 141 App. Div. 493, 40 Ins. L. J. 600 ("liability and loss are not the same. The contract was to indemnify against loss from liability. The loss was not sustained until the liability was established by a judgment."—Miller, J. Condition was, "against loss from liability for damages on account of bodily injuries fatal or otherwise, accidentally suffered" by employees and to the public for personal injuries, etc.), s. c. 116 N. Y. Supp. 1042, 132 App. Div. 241.

North Carolina.—Lowe v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 170 N. Car. 445, 87 S. E. 250 (insured was not indemnified against liability but only against actual loss).

Oregon.—Fenton v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 36 Oreg. 283, 48 L.R.A. 770, 56 Pac. 1096 (policy indemnified not merely for actual damages but against liability for damages).

South Carolina.—Pickett v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 60 S. Car. 477, 38 S. E. 160, 629 (insurance not one of right to stipulate that assurer's undertaking shall, in actions against it by assured, be limited to a reimbursement of the latter for losses actually sustained and paid; that is, that this shall constitute the condition upon which indemnity shall rest.[20] And it is a condition precedent that assured shall have actually paid the loss where the stipulation is that insurer shall be liable only for losses actually sustained and paid by assured in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issues.[1] Nor is any loss sustained where the damage claim of assured's employee has not been paid, where the policy indemnifies against actual loss and not against liability.[2]

It is held in Minnesota that the condition that no action shall lie against insurer unless brought by insured for loss or expense actually sustained and paid in money by him after trial of the issue, applies only in case insurer denies liability and refuses to defend.[3] And a policy providing for reimbursement for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment after trial will be construed with an attached rider providing for indemnity only for losses sustained by and any liability for any claims against assured as a result of the risk, and in such case the contract is modified so as to cover not only losses sustained by assured but also liabilities for any claim against assured so that recovery may be had without any actual loss being shown, as it is sufficient to show that a liability has been legally fixed.[4] indemnity against loss but against liability).

Texas.—Royal Indemnity Co. v. Schwartz, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 581 (policy indemnified against liability as distinguished from loss).

Washington.—Ford v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 70 Wash. 129, 126 Pac. 69 (indemnity against loss actually sustained and paid and not against liability; policy against loss from claims for personal injury suffered by one not an employee, etc.); Puget Sound Imp. Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Co. 52 Wash. 124, 100 Pac. 190 (indemnity against loss and not liability; policy covered damages for injuries to third persons on assured's premises, etc.).

[20] Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395.

[1] Brassil v. Maryland Casualty Co. 133 N. Y. Supp. 187, 147 App. Div. 815, 41 Ins. L. J. 792, aff'd 210 N. Y. 235, 104 N. E. 622, 43 Ins. L. J. 672. See also Atlas Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Georgia Life Ins. Co 129 Tenn. 477, 167 S. W. 109.

[2] Lowe v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 170 N. Car. 445, 87 S. E. 250.

[3] Patterson v. Adan, 119 Minn. 308, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184, 138 N. W. 281 (liability policy against loss by reason of operation of assured's automobile and against loss by reason of the liability imposed by law upon assured for damages on account of bodily injuries, or death accidentally suffered by any person or persons by reason of the maintenance or use within certain territorial limits of assured's automobile). See also Taxicab Motor Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 73 Wash. 631, 132 Pac. 393. See subdiv. (k) herein.

[4] Campbell v. Maryland Casualty

Under a Michigan decision payment by assured of the loss is not essential to liability or recovery under contract of indemnity against liability for damages although it is essential when the indemnity is merely against damages.[5] And in South Carolina if the insurance does not indemnify against loss but against liability for damages for accidental injuries to employees, neither payment of the loss nor of any part thereof is a prerequisite to recovery.[6] Again, if the policy under its conditions is not merely one of indemnity but an agreement to assume and pay assured's liability, the payment of the judgment rendered against him in the employee's accident suit is not a prerequisite to an action against insurer, for it may be maintained after the rendition of said judgment.[7] So a contract insuring an employer from liability for claims for personal injuries to his employees is a contract of indemnity, and payment by the employer of a judgment obtained against him is not a condition precedent to the assurer's liability.[8] And payment of the amount found due against insured is not essential under a policy indemnifying against liability, damages for bodily injuries sustained by operation of a street rail-

Co. 52 Ind. App. 228, 97 N. E. 1026, 41 Ins. L. J. 1097, one judge dissenting.

[5] Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 135 Mich. 189, 97 N. W. 685, 33 Ins. L. J. 180 (in this case the condition was "against legal liability of the assured for injury to or death of persons, and all legal liability arising or accruing therefrom for loss of service, funeral expenses, and medical attendance, being the result of casualties occurring by reason of the operation of" etc.; also that "the indemnity hereby provided for shall not be payable until the loss or damage has been adjusted and settled by the company," etc. The action here, however, was to recover costs and interest on the costs on the judgment). In support of the text statement the court, per Grant, J., cites the following cases:

California.—McBeth v. McIntyre, 57 Cal. 49.

Minnesota.—Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 63 Minn. 286, 30 L.R.A. 689, 65 N. W. 353.

New York.—Gilbert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550.

Oregon.—Fenton v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 36 Ore. 283, 48 L.R.A. 770, 56 Pac. 1096.

South Carolina.—Pickett v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 60 S. Car. 477, 38 S. E. 160, 629.

Wisconsin.—Hoven v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L.R.A. 388, 67 N. W. 46.

[6] Pickett v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 60 S. Car. 477, 38 S. E. 160, 629.

[7] Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 63 Minn. 286, 30 L.R.A. 689, 65 N. W. 353 (policy here insured against liability for injuries to employees and provided that insurer might settle any loss and have control of any legal proceedings against assured for such injuries, that assured should not settle such claims without insurer's consent; also that no action should be brought on the policy after the period in which one might be brought by the employee against the employer, unless a suit was pending against the employer when that time expired).

[8] Hoven v. Employer's Liability Assurance Co. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L.R.A. 388, 67 N. W. 46.

road.[9] Nor is payment of a judgment by an injured teamster against insured, a condition precedent to an action by assured against assurer, where the policy indemnified assured against loss imposed upon him by law for injuries to third persons; and the claim that the liability of assured thereunder was limited to loss actually sustained and paid will not be sustained where the policy is not in evidence.[10]

(p) Same subject: payment with borrowed money.—A payment is sufficient although made with borrowed money furnished upon security and for which insured remains indebted, for in such case assured pays its own money and it is no concern of insurer that a third party creditor may eventually suffer; and this applies where the contract is to indemnify against actual loss and not against liability alone so that assured cannot recover except upon proof that it has suffered actual loss in the payment of the judgment against it.[11]

(q) Same subject: payment by note or check: notes of insolvent or receiver.—Payment and satisfaction of a judgment are made by the execution and delivery of promissory notes where the transaction is in good faith.[12]

Under a casualty insurance policy providing that no action shall lie against the company unless brought by the assured to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment recovered, payment and satisfaction of the judgment may be made by the assured by the execution and delivery of promissory notes, if executed in good faith and so accepted by the judgment creditor; and thereupon a cause of action accrues in favor of the assured and against the company.[13] And where the transaction is in good faith and the judgment against assured is extinguished, a payment in cash is unnecessary, but may be made by note, and this applies where, even though the policy stipulated that the loss be "paid in money," insured made its note in an amount sufficient to pay the judgment and costs and discounted

[9] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420, 27 Ins. L. J. 233.

[10] Lewintham v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 113 N. Y. Supp. 1031.

[11] West Riverside Coal Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 155 Iowa, 161, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 195n, 135 N. W. 414, 41 Ins. L. J. 1102. Citing Wilson v. Smith, 23 Iowa, 252; Lyon v. Northrup, 17 Iowa, 314; Kennedy v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 100 Minn. 1, 117 Am. St. Rep. 658, 10 Ann. Cas. 673, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478 and note, 110 N. W. 97; Seattle & San Francisco R. & Nav. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 50 Wash. 44, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, 96 Pac. 509.

[12] Seattle & San Francisco R. & Nav. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 50 Wash. 44, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, 96 Pac. 509.

[13] Kennedy v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 100 Minn. 1, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478n, 110 N. W. 97.

it at bank, paid the judgment, and said note constituted valid claims against insured, and under agreed facts there is no collusion which could affect any modification of its liability therein.[14] So an unsecured promissory note not proven to have been given in bad faith and which is accepted by deceased's administratrix with the consent of the court, constitutes payment of the judgment against insured.[15] And even though there is a possibility that insured may become insolvent, or that it may compromise or settle for a less amount than that specified in the policy as indemnity, nevertheless there is a satisfaction of judgment and a loss within the policy, where assured in good faith gives its note for the amount and in full satisfaction of the judgment against it for personal injuries and obtains a release thereof, under a policy providing for reimbursement for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment, etc.[16]

The execution, delivery, and acceptance of notes in compromise of the suit and the entry of satisfaction and release of judgment are sufficient to preclude a defense, in a suit against insurer, that the same was prematurely brought, in that such facts did not constitute payment; another point closely connected with the above was also urged in defense and that was based upon the facts that it appeared that notes given in satisfaction and release of the judgment were by order of court, obtained at request of the guardian of the heirs of the employee, compromised for a certain sum which was paid. The order authorized the guardian to compromise the judgment. It was held, on this point, that the reference to a judgment in the order instead of to the notes was clearly an inadvertence for the judgment had been settled and compromised long before said order of court was made, and therefore the claim that the giving of the notes in payment of the judgment was a mere subterfuge and that the transaction was not in good faith, was not sustained.[17]

The payment of a check and not the giving of the check itself

[14] Herbo-Phosa Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 34 R. I. 567, 84 Atl. 1093.

[15] Taxicab Motor Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 73 Wash. 631, 132 Pac. 393.

[16] Seattle & San Francisco Ry. & Navigation Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 50 Wash. 44, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, 96 Pac. 509.

[17] Hill v. Maryland Casualty Co. 28 Cal. App. 422, 152 Pac. 953, 47 Ins. L. J. 222, s. c. 12 Cal. App. 461, 107 Pac. 707. (Stipulation was: "No action shall lie against the company as respects any loss under this policy, unless it shall be brought by the assured himself to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue").

is held to be that payment of the loss which is intended by the policy stipulation as a condition precedent to bringing suit.[18]

But where the policy is solely one of reimbursement the mere giving of its notes by an insolvent assured to one who has recovered judgment against it for an injury, and their immediate return in consideration of an assignment of an indemnity insurance policy, are not such a satisfaction of the judgment, although it is in fact marked satisfied, as to make enforceable the liability on the policy.[19] So when the giving to the employee of his note, by a receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings to collect a judgment against an insolvent employer for injury to his employee, is a mere subterfuge resorted to in order to nominally comply with the policy terms; it is not a satisfaction of the claim within the indemnity contract, which makes payment of loss in satisfaction of a judgment a prerequisite to action against insurer, and in such case the receiver has no standing to enforce the policy.[20]

(r) Same subject: payment by vendee under bankrupt estate sale: trustee suffers loss.—In case of the sale of a bankrupt's estate, with a condition that the vendee shall pay the judgment recovered by an employee against the trustee for personal injuries, the trustee suffers a loss for which insurer is liable within the meaning of an insurance policy indemnifying him against loss actually sustained and paid in money by the assured in satisfaction of the judgment although said vendee paid the judgment, since it may be inferred that the amount realized by the estate was lessened by the amount of the claim.[1]

[18] Harbor & Suburban Building & Savings Assoc. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. Ltd. of L. Eng. 140 N. Y. Supp. 717, aff'd 143 N. Y. Supp. 1120, 159 App. Div. 900, aff'd 213 N. Y. 677, 107 N. E. 1078.

[19] Davies v. Maryland Casualty Co. 89 Wash. 571, L.R.A.1916D, 395, 154 Pac. 1116, 155 Pac. 1035.

[20] Stenbom v. Brown-Corliss Engine Co. 137 Wis. 564, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 956, 119 N. W. 308.

[1] Georgia Casualty Co. v. Bowron, 233 Fed. 89, 147 C. C. A. 159, L.R.A. 1916F, 876. Judgment for plaintiff in Bowron v. Georgia Casualty Co. 223 Fed. 673 aff'd ("The decree under which the bankrupt's property was sold expressly provided that the sale and conveyance of it should 'be subject to the condition that the court may retake and resell the property in case the purchaser or purchasers or assigns shall fail to pay any part of the purchase price remaining unpaid, or to comply with any order duly made by this court with respect to the making any payment which it is herein provided the purchaser or purchasers shall make, or to perform or discharge any contract or liability of the trustee which by the terms of this order the purchaser shall assume.' . . . The policy sued on inured to the benefit, not of James Bowron, the individual, but of the bankrupt estate which the court was administering and which was in his charge as the court's agent and trustee. It well may be

(s) Same subject: waiver or estoppel.[1a]—Although it is a condition precedent to recovery that payment be not made until after the trial of the issue, or that judgment be first rendered against insured and payment made, this condition may be waived.[2] And where the policy is solely one of reimbursement one who has undertaken to indemnify assured against loss because of judgments paid for accidents to employees estops itself from insisting on prepayment of judgment as a condition to its own liability by assuming the defense of the employee's action, so that the policy may be enforced when the judgment is entered against assured.[3] It is also held in Missouri that where through insurer's neglect to furnish an appeal bond insured is obligated to pay the judgment before final determination of the employee's suit by a court of last resort, insurer is estopped to insist on the policy terms requiring judgment to be affirmed by a court of last resort, also that it be paid as a condition precedent to bringing an action against insurer, and in such case where it is further stipulated that assured shall not voluntarily assume any liability nor, without insurer's written consent incur any expense except at its own cost, that the former need not furnish an appeal bond as it would by so doing incur a liability within the policy terms.[4] Again, if the policy insures against loss and not liability only, if neither insured nor his administrator has paid any part of the judgment obtained by the injured employee, insurer is not liable inferred that the net amount realized from that estate was lessened—in other words, that the estate was subjected to a loss—by selling it conditionally and subject to the charge against it of the amount to be recovered as damages for a personal injury that had been sustained before the sale was made, instead of selling it unconditionally and free from any encumbrance. But aside from that consideration, a vendor who brings about the payment of a demand of a third party against him by making it a charge upon the thing sold, which is worth greatly more than the amount of the demand so provided for, may well be regarded as in reality the payer of that demand, though the money used in making the payment is supplied by the conditional owner of the thing sold, who is practically coerced into making the payment for the vendor to save himself. In such case it is at least the vendor who supplies the means of bringing about the payment, a result of the orders of the court above referred to and what was done under them was to put the bankrupt estate, represented by the assured, its trustee, in the position of such a vendor."—Walker, Cir. J.).

[1a] See subdiv. (a), (k) herein.

[2] Dunham v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 179 Mo. App. 558, 162 S. W. 728; Century Realty Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 179 Mo. App. 145, 161 S. W. 624.

[3] Davies v. Maryland Casualty Co. 89 Wash. 571, L.R.A.1916D, 395, 154 Pac. 1116, 155 Pac. 1035.

[4] Rochester Mining Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 143 Mo. App. 555, 128 S. W. 204.

to said administrator even though insurer has, in conformity with the contract stipulations, defended the suit, for such act of defending does not operate as an estoppel; and in such case there is nothing which the judgment creditor can attach for there is no liability to insured's administrator.[5] In another case insurer unsuccessfully defended the employee's accident suit and then repudiated all liability under the policy on account of alleged breaches and consented to a substitution of attorneys in place of its attorneys should assured desire to continue the defense, whereupon assured without paying the judgment instituted an action against insurer under the policy. It was held that the repudiation of liability by insurer was not a waiver of a condition that no action shall be brought by assured unless for loss actually sustained and paid in money by assured in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue; also that the doctrine of waiver is not peculiar to insurance, to constitute a technical waiver there need be only an intention to waive either expressly or plainly to be inferred from the circumstances; furthermore that the doctrine of estoppel rested upon a different basis and had no application here, for there was no pretense that insured was misled by assurer's conduct, and a refusal to pay did not indicate an intention to waive a condition which only had to be complied with in case of such refusal.[6]

(t) Insolvency of assurer or assured.—So insolvency constitutes an involuntary breach of contract and operates as a waiver of such a condition as that above stated and relieves assured from complying therewith or with any other policy condition; and it follows that since on liquidation insurer repudiated its contract to defend suits, such provision cannot be set up to defeat claims and all such claimants are entitled to share in the distribution of assets whether said claims against insurer were based upon judgments rendered against insured before the insolvency decree, or those where the cause of action arose before the order of liquidation and were settled thereafter; or those where the accident occurred prior thereto but the claims were thereafter brought against it and settled.[7]

[5] Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Martin, 163 Ky. 12, 173 S. W. 307. See subdiv. (k) this section.

[6] Appel v. Peoples Surety Co. 132 N. Y. Supp. 200, 148 App. Div. 70, 41 Ins. L. J. 589, s. c. 128 N. Y. Supp. 200, 143 App. Div. 931, s. c. 121 N. Y. Supp. 1116 (the last part of the above text is in substance the opinion of the court, per Miller, J., distinguishing St. Louis Dressed Beef Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 201 U. S. 173, 26 Sup. Ct. 400, 50 L. ed. 712; O'Connell v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. Co. 187 Mass. 272, 72 N. E. 979). See also White v. Maryland Casualty Co. 123 N. Y. Supp. 840, 139 App. Div. 279, 39 Ins. L. J. 1357.

[7] Empire State Surety Co., In re

If assured is forced into bankruptcy and payment of judgments against it enjoined, the policy condition is held not to apply which stipulates that no action shall lie against insurer respecting any loss unless brought by assured himself to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment.[8]

(u) Final judgment: "court of last resort:" effect and conclusiveness of judgment.—If assurer is to have control of the defenses and it is not to be liable until the loss has been adjusted and settled by it and the right of appeal on assurer's part is absolute under the contract the final judgment determines the liability.[9] So a judgment against insured which is appealed from by assurer is held a "final judgment."[10] And if assurer, having assumed control of the case against insured, neglects to appeal, it cannot seriously urge that there has been no adjudication by a court of last resort.[11]

A judgment by default after insurer has withdrawn from the case and disclaimed liability on the ground of failure to give the required notice of the accident is a "judgment of a court of last resort" and where insured pays such judgment it is a judgment paid and satisfied and insurer is liable.[12]

A judgment against an insured subcontractor obtained by a pedestrian is res judicata as to insurer's liability where the latter has failed to deny liability.[13] And where the controversy turns upon the question whether the employee was within the classification covered by the policy terms, and, a jury trial being waived, the court without special findings enters judgment for a recovery, it is conclusive of the facts determined, unless the lack of evidence to sustain the finding has been suggested by a request for a ruling thereon, or a motion for judgment, or some motion proper to present to the court the issue of law so involved, before close of the trial.[14] A judgment, however, which is recovered (Hasbrouck v. Buffalo House Wrecking & Salvage Co.) 214 N. Y. 553, 108 N. E. 825, aff'g 150 N. Y. Supp. 567, 165 App. Div. 135, appealed by permission in 151 N. Y. Supp. 1114.

[8] Beacon Lamp Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 61 N. J. Eq. 59, 47 Atl. 579.

As to parties to action: employee against insurer: insolvency of assured, see § 3658d, herein.

[9] Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 135 Mich. 189, 97 N. W. 685, 33 Ins. L. J. 180.

[10] Cannon Manufacturing Co. v. Employers' Indemnity Co. 161 N. Car. 19, 76 S. E. 536.

[11] Rosenbloom v. Maryland Casualty Co. 137 N. Y. Supp. 1064, 153 App. Div. 23, 42 Ins. L. J. 180.

[12] Tighe v. Maryland Casualty Co. 218 Mass. 463, 106 N. E. 135, 44 Ins. L. J. 603.

[13] Creem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 126 N. Y. Supp. 555, 141 App. Div. 493, 40 Ins. L. J. 600, s. c. 116 N. Y. Supp. 1042, 132 App. Div. 241.

[14] Pennsylvania Casualty Co. v.

against assured in an action for injuries sustained both prior and subsequent to the insurance, will be insufficient where it does not appear therefrom which injury was the one for which damages were recovered and therefore whether or not the injury was one covered by the policy.[15]

Insurer is also obligated to pay when the liability of assured is finally determined.[16] But assurer does not become obligated to pay so much of the judgment against assured as does not exceed the stipulated indemnity as soon as the suit against the latter is finally determined on appeal when an appeal is taken.[17]

(v) Judgment: collateral attack: fraud and collusion.—A judgment of record in a suit by an employee against assured cannot be collaterally attacked, in a suit by said employee against assured and assurer on the ground that insured and insurer had colluded to defraud said employee in procuring such judgment. The court, per Martin, D. J., said: "I recognize the principle of law that fraud may vitiate a contract, and extrinsic fraud may vitiate even a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction under proper proceedings brought for that purpose, but not by collateral proceedings." [18]

(w) Judgment or payment: whether analogous to proofs of loss.—It is declared in a New Jersey case that the judgment resembles the proof of loss required to be furnished an ordinary insurer against fire, etc., as a prerequisite to liability.[19] But it is held that in so far as the requirement of the payment of a loss actually sustained, etc., is required as a condition precedent to suing assurer, and whether or not there has been a waiver of such condition by the repudiation by assurer of liability after unsuccessfully defending the employee's accident suit against assured, it is declared that "The cases in which the filing of proof of loss and the like have been held to be waived by an absolute repudiation of liability have no application. Proofs of loss are required to enable Whiteway, 210 Fed. 782, 127 C. C. A. 332, 43 Ins. L. J. 663.

[15] Reigler v. Sherlock, 66 Ark. 215, 49 S. W. 1080.

[16] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420, 27 Ins. L. J. 233.

[17] Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420, 27 Ins. L. J. 232.

[18] Morris v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 189 Fed. 211, 40 Ins. L. J. 2054. Citing United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93; French v. Raymond, 82 Vt. 156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 994, 72 Atl. 324, and adding in this connection: "This principle of law is too familiar to require the citation of further authorities."

As to impeaching judgment, see §§ 3487, 3529 herein.

As to defense of fraud and deceit, see §§ 3732 et seq. herein.

[19] Ross v. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 41, 38 Atl. 22.

the insurer to adjust the loss, and of course, an unqualified refusal to pay indicates an intention to waive the doing of the thing which is thereby rendered useless." [20]

(x) Action by assurer against third person whose negligence caused employee's injury.—In case assurer has paid the loss and seeks recovery from a third person whose negligence occasioned the injury to the employee and consequent loss to assured under his policy, there is no merit in the contention by way of defense that it does not appear that judgment was actually taken against assured, thereby raising the implication that the liability was settled without judgment, for even if actual payment of the liability was a prerequisite to recovery in an action of this character, the only effect of the judgment would be its value as evidence to establish liability.[1]

(y) Pleadings.—The complaint should sufficiently set forth the hazards undertaken or the terms of the policy, and where this is not done or the policy annexed a general averment is demurrable, where the complaint declares that insurer contracted to insure plaintiff "on certain terms and conditions in said contract of insurance specified" against the "hazards enumerated and set forth upon a certain premium schedule to said contract of insurance annexed." [2] A motion by assured for leave to file a supplemental answer by setting up a settlement between assured and the injured employee of the latter's pending suit contrary to the policy stipulation forbidding such settlement without assurer's consent is properly refused where the facts alleged do not constitute a prima facie showing that they are material to the defense and occurred after the prior pleading or that at that time assured was ignorant thereof; nor is it error to refuse a motion to conform the pleadings to facts alleged to have been proven as to said compromise by assured and the employee of the latter's damage suit where such amendment would substantially change the defense contrary to the code provision governing the same.[3] An answer in an action to recover from insurer the loss on a judgment paid by insured need not allege that the injury to the employee was contributed to by a violation of law where the defense relied on was that the injured person was a minor employed in violation

[20] Appel v. Peoples' Surety Co. 132 N. Y. Supp. 200, 148 App. Div. 70, 41 Ins. L. J. 589. Miller, J. s. c. 128 N. Y. Supp. 1112, 143 App. Div. 931, s. c. 121 N. Y. Supp. 1116.

[1] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Great Lakes Engineering Works Co. 184 Fed. 426, 107 C. C. A. 20, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 60, 40 Ins. L. J. 1078. See §§ 3579b, 3658h herein.

[2] Todd v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 74 N. Y. Supp. 1062, 70 App. Div. 52.

[3] Pickett v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 60 S. Car. 477, 38 S. E. 160, 629; under Code Civ. Proc. sec. 194.

of law contrary to the provisions of the policy exempting assurer in such case.[4] If a waiver is relied on, a complaint is insufficient where it neither properly avers performance nor sets forth the facts and circumstances which constitute the claimed waiver.[5] So a complaint in an action against assurer and assured, brought by an employee to recover for injuries sustained by him while in assured's employ is insufficient and too indefinite where it alleges fraud, collusion, and negligence between assured and assurer, but no particular act is set forth as having been performed by any particular person acting for and in behalf of said insured and assurer and there is no averment as to the persons, officers, or counsel of either assurer or assured who had to do with the claimed deceit, while the only specific act alleged is that a stipulation upon which the judgment was rendered for a certain sum paid in satisfaction was fraudulently procured by false representations to be signed by said employee, a minor.[6]

§ 2801. "Personal injury and loss of human life" caused by explosion: recovery back of money paid therefor by insured.—If the insured contracts for indemnity for money paid out by him, for which he is liable "for personal injury and loss of life" when caused by said boilers or any machinery of whatever kind connected therewith and operated thereby, and if an explosion is directly caused by reason of the fact that a steam pipe connected with the boilers heated and operated a starch kiln, the assurer is liable for the amounts paid out by assured for loss of life and injuries caused by said explosion.[7]

§ 2802. Personal injuries to several by one cause constitutes separate accidents and not one accident.—If one cause operates upon several at one time, this is not one accident, but each individual injured is a separate accident, within the meaning of an insur-

[4] Wind River Lumber Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 196 Fed. 340, 116 C. C. A. 160.

[5] Todd v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 74 N. Y. Supp. 1062, 70 App. Div. 52.

[6] Morris v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 189 Fed. 211, 40 Ins. L. J. 2054.

[7] Chicago Sugar Refining Ins. Co. v. American Steam-Boiler Co. 48 Fed. 198, 21 Ins. L. J. 59. It will be noted that in stating the above rule we have used the words "if an explosion be directly caused by," etc. In the case cited and relied on the explosion was held to have been "directly" caused, but if there is any doubt upon the point whether it was "directly" caused or not it would not change the rule in the text, for the principle is undoubtedly correct. This case is reversed as to the point that under the facts the fire was not the proximate cause of the loss, but that the explosion was merely an incident of the fire; 57 Fed. 294, 6 C. C. A. 336, 21 L.R.A. 572. See chapter herein on excepted risks and losses by fire.

ance contract in a specified sum against liability to pay claims for personal injuries or damages caused by accidents by vehicles of assured, and the amount specified applies to each separate accident, and not to all of them as one accident.[8]

§ 2803. Personal injuries to persons not employees: against liability or for losses paid.[9]—(a) Generally.—Protection to a person against loss or liability by reason of personal or bodily injury to others than employees is afforded under various forms of insurance or indemnity contracts.[10] And the right of assured to recover thereunder must depend both upon the terms or stipulations of the particular contract and upon the facts involved and properly before the court.

A policy insuring against loss for injuries, fatal or otherwise, to employees will be construed to also cover loss by reason of liability to the public where there is an agreement attached to the policy extending liability to include that of insured for personal injuries only to the public, caused by said insured or its workmen.[11] If the indemnity under policies issued to employers and

[8] South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Sickness & Accident Assurance Assoc. 60 L. J. Q. B. 47, 63 L. T. 807, [1891] 1 Q. B. 402, 55 J. P. 168.

[9] See § 2800, subdiv. (a) herein.

[10] In a Massachusetts case the court makes the following statement and classification: "The 'horse or vehicle policies' have not been issued as separate contracts, but have been either attached to employer's liability policies, or included in the outside liability policies. By this contract the employer is insured against claims for compensation for accidental personal injuries to others than employees caused by any horses, teams or vehicles owned by the assured, if engaged in his business and in charge of his employees, the injuries being those for which assured is legally liable.

"The 'elevator policies' are issued as separate contract, or an elevator clause may be inserted in a general liability policy. By the elevator policy or clause the petitioner insures against claims for compensation for accidental personal injuries caused to persons by the elevator of the assured, or its appurtenances, and for which injuries he shall become liable.

"The 'general liability policies' insure against claims for accidental personal injuries to any persons other than employees or persons injured by elevator, for which assured may be legally liable in his capacity as landlord or tenant of certain described premises, and, as noted, may also include an elevator clause.

The 'outside liability policies' are issued to builders and contractors, and insure against claims for compensation for accidental personal injuries to workmen, employed by other contractors, and to the public, caused by the assured and by his own workmen, but not caused by a subcontractor or his workmen; and, as noted, the horse and vehicle clause is sometimes also inserted in these policies." Employers Liability Assurance Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 406, 407, 29 N. E. 529, per Barker, J. (italics are ours) a case where action was to determine whether petitioner was illegally issuing certain forms of policies.

[11] Creem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co.

railroad companies, is for damages for which they may be legally charged for accidents, etc., the liability depends not upon the intrinsic character of the accident, but the test is whether or not a judgment shall be rendered thereon against insured. In such case it is declared that the judgment resembles the proof of loss to be furnished an ordinary insurer against fire, etc., before suit as prerequisites to liability. Another point is that the liability relates back to the time of the accident itself, even though it is legally fixed at the time of the judgment.[12]

If the contract is against loss "arising solely" from insurers "contingent liability" as owner, from common law or any statute, for damages on account of bodily injuries, fatal or nonfatal, accidentally suffered by any person or persons during the construction of a certain building, and resulting from the negligence of any contractor or subcontractor engaged in construction, and the work is to be done by contract at the risk of the contractor or subcontractors, but assurer does not assume any liability for losses on account of bodily injuries suffered by any person or persons by reason of the negligence of any contractor or subcontractor, the words "contingent liability" in this connection mean that the loss for which assured was to be indemnified was that which arose, not through its own negligence, but only that loss for which it was contingently liable as owner for negligent acts of an independent contractor or those under him, and the word "contingent" is construed to be a liability which depends upon an uncertain event. In other words insurer incurred no liability and was not obligated to indemnify assured unless someone, during the construction of the building by an independent contractor, actually suffered bodily injury through the negligence of the contractor or of N. Y. 126 N. Y. Supp. 555, 141 App. Div. 493, 40 Ins. L. J. 600, s. c. 116 N. Y. Supp. 1042, 132 App. Div. 241.

[12] Ross v. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 41, 38 Atl. 22. There were two forms of policies in this case. In one, insurer issued an "Employers' Liability Policy" providing that, "said company will pay to the insured all damages with which the insured may be legally charged under the common law, or any statute (not exceeding the amount hereinafter limited) for, or by reason of, any accidental injuries, fatal or otherwise, happening to any employee or employees of the insured," etc. A policy was also issued to railroads called a "Railroad Liability Policy" which stipulated: "That said company will pay to the insured, or their legal representatives, all damages with which the insured may be legally charged or which the insured may be required to pay (not exceeding the amount hereinafter limited) for or by reason of any liability on account of injuries inflicted upon the person or property of any person or persons whomsoever while traveling on the railroad of the insured."

a subcontractor for which negligence assured was only contingently liable as owner and in nowise directly liable as causer or doer of the negligent act.[13]

(b) Injuries, risks, or losses covered.[13a]—Assured may sustain a loss from liability to the public on account of personal injuries caused by them, or their workmen, and such loss be brought within the terms of the policy by circuity of action and the case be as plainly within the policy terms as though the injured person's suit had been brought against them in the first instance.[14] And if a policy indemnifies assured, who are performing work for a city under contract, against loss from liability imposed by law upon them on account of bodily injuries accidentally suffered by any person while in or about the construction of said work, the indemnity contemplated covers any loss that assured is compelled to pay to said city, a stranger to the contract of insurance, because of damages to injured persons from negligence: as where said city is sued by the injured person and a judgment is recovered against it and paid by it, and the amount thereof is deducted from the sum due insured under its contract with the city. The contention, therefore, will not be sustained that in such case the policy contemplates indemnity only against direct actions by injured persons against insured, and not losses for which it might suffer

[13] American Cereal Co. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 211 Fed. 96, 138 C. C. A. 24, 43 Ins. L. J. 834. Citing the following cases:

United States.—Allen v. Gilman, McNeil & Co. 145 Fed. 881, 76 C. C. A. 265, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958.

Illinois.—London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. American Cereal Co. 251 Ill. 123, 95 N. E. 1064.

Iowa.—Cushman v. Carbondale, 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509.

Kansas.—Carter v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 76 Kan. 275, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155, 91 Pac. 178.

Maine.—Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395.

Massachusetts.—Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981.

New York.—Rosenbloom v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. Supp. 1135, 38 Misc. 744.

Utah.—State (ex rel. Breeden) v. Sheets, 26 Utah, 105, 72 Pac. 334.

See also Words & Phrases, 1501.

[13a] See § 2800, subdiv. (a) herein.

[14] Creem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 126 N. Y. Supp. 555, 141 App. Div. 493, 40 Ins. L. J. 600 (s. c. 116 N. Y. Supp. 1042, 132 App. Div. 241). "The recoveries in the Johnston suits were upon the theory that Kate Johnston was injured by falling over an obstruction in the street, caused by the assured in the performance of a contract between them and the Phoenix Bridge Co. (Johnston v. Phoenix Bridge Co. 44 App. Div. 581, 60 N. Y. Supp. 947, aff'd 169 N. Y. 581, 62 N. E. 986), wherefore the latter recovered in the suit on the Bernard Johnston judgment, on the principle that one who has been held legally liable for damages, which another ought to pay, is entitled to indemnity from the latter (Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Creem, 102 App. Div. 354, 92 N. Y. Supp. 855). The right to indemnity in such case exists independently of contract. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., Ltd.

by reason of being liable over to said city for any sum it was compelled to pay because of damages to injured persons in the negligent performance of the work, for the city's liability in such case for damages for said injury does not lessen the liability "imposed by law upon the assured for damages" to persons injured because of assured's negligence in doing the work contracted for with the city, even though damages are recovered against the latter in the first instance.[15]

Replacing with a new one a roof destroyed by fire, constitutes making such repairs as are necessary for the care of the premises so as to render assurer liable to insured for injuries suffered by a third person who is on the premises during said repairs, where the policy agrees to indemnify assured against liability for bodily injuries occurring on its premises.[16] Insurer is also liable for injuries suffered by a pedestrian occasioned by negligence of assured's workmen while erecting a fire escape over a theater, where such negligent acts are not within a policy exception from liability covering assured's noncompliance with a city ordinance affecting the safety of persons.[17] And the fact that a third person on whose land employees of an insured telephone company, who were engaged in putting up lines, refused permission to continue the trimming of trees on said land unless a tree already cut was trimmed as he desired, does not preclude recovery against insurer, where a person not employed by insured was accidentally killed

v. Compania Transatlantica Espanola, 134 N. Y. 461, 31 N. E. 987, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685, and cases cited by Follett, C. J., particularly Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co. 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. St. Rep. 324. By cercuity of action, then, these plaintiffs have sustained a loss from liability to the public on account of personal injuries, caused by them or their workmen, and the case is as plainly within the terms of the policy as though the Johnston suits had been brought in the first instance against them." Id. per Miller, J.

[15] Kibler v. Maryland Casualty Co. 74 Wash. 159, 132 Pac. 878, 42 Ins. L. J. 1390.

[16] Harbor & Suburban Building & Savings Assoc. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. Ltd. of L. Eng. 140 N. Y. Supp. 717, aff'd 143 N. Y. Supp. 1120, 159 App. Div. 900, aff'd 213 N. Y. 677, 107 N. E. 1078. See Kresge v. Maryland Casualty Co. 154 Wis. 627, 143 N. W. 668, 43 Ins. L. J. 146. See §§ 1708, 2191 et seq., 2800, subdivs. (d), (e) herein.

Under a manufacturers' public liability policy.—The questions are for the jury concerning what repairs are "usual and necessary to the care and maintenance of the premises;" also what constitutes "all usual or special operations incident thereto" or "unusual alteration or repair of premises" as applied to the repair of a platform on the premises; and in such case it is not error to refuse a nonsuit or direct a verdict. John Summer Faucet Co. v. Commercial Casualty Co. — N. J. —, 99 Atl. 342. See § 2632a herein.

[17] W. N. Kratzer & Co. v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 238 Pa. 515, 86 Atl. 303.

while said tree was being trimmed, for in such case the accident will be held to have been suffered within a provision of a policy indemnifying assured against damage to any person not employed by assured from the operation of the telephone plant and limiting loss from liability to injuries happening during the "immediate doing of the work of construction." [18] So where the policy is one of indemnity against loss to assured arising from claims for personal injuries to others than employees on assured's premises, it covers loss consequent upon the killing of a person by a car run upon a tramway of the kind usual and customary in assured's business where it also appears that assurer knew of the use of said tramway, had examined the premises and had paid one claim arising there and had never protested that the operation of this tramway was not within the policy terms; nor can it be successfully insisted in such case that the operation thereof is within an excepted liability for loss "caused by any draught or driving animal or vehicle, or any person in charge thereof." [19] Assurer is also liable for injuries sustained by commercial travelers while being transported over assured's private railroad, used by them and assured, in direct connection with its business, said method of conveyance being assented to by them and assured; and this applies where the policy insures a lumber company against loss from liability to every person who should sustain accidental bodily injuries under circumstances imposing on assured a common law or statutory liability; and even though liability was limited or excepted by the stipulation that the insurance covered accidents upon the railroad only when it was used for assured's own lumbering purposes, assured was not aided thereby where said travelers had come to assured's premises to transact business with it in the matter of taking orders to supply its stores with stock or merchandise necessary to be kept for sale to its agents and workmen.[20]

Assurer is not released from liability nor the policy forfeited where assured is sometimes driven to business in a buggy not within the protection of the policy, the application for which specified the vehicles covered and the insurance is against liability for bodily injury caused by the horses or vehicles used by insured in his business, conditioned to be avoided by failure to report an increase in the number of vehicles unless an additional [18] Camden & Atlantic Telephone Co. v. United States Casualty Co. 227 Pa. 242, 75 Atl. 1077.

[19] South Knoxville Brick Co. v. Empire State Surety Co. 126 Tenn. 402, 150 S. W. 92, 42 Ins. L. J. 192.

[20] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Wild River Lumber Co. 83 Fed. 977, 28 C. C. A. 127, 50 U. S. App. 256, 27 Ins. L. J. 428.

premium is paid.[1] If the policy is issued to the members of a partnership for loss resulting from casualties caused by the operation of their automobile, it covers not only losses as to the partnership funds, but also such losses as either firm member may sustain as individuals through the operation of said automobile by another partnership composed of said members and another to whom the car had been loaned.[2] Again where the owner of a motor car through his negligence causes his guest to suffer injury, the fact that said owner is entitled to be reimbursed under an insurance policy for loss sustained if recovery is had against him, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction of an action to recover damages for such injury, even though insurer is not a party and his rights are affected and the action might not have been brought except for the fact that insured was thus protected.[3]

(c) Injuries, risks, or losses not covered.[4]—An injury to a trespasser on insured's premises is not within a policy against loss from liability imposed by law on insured for damages for injuries suffered by persons who are not employees while in or about or during the prosecution of insured's work.[5] And if the alleged accident to another than an employee for which assured has been held liable is not within the terms of the policy in that it did not occur within or upon its premises at the location described or the premises or ways adjacent thereto, recovery from insurer is precluded even though to the description of the location is added the words, "and elsewhere in service of employers," for these words are held not to extend the risk to all places where insured was engaged in any business but confined the same to the location described, notwithstanding the policy included "all operations incidental to the business" "and covered accidental injuries suf-

[1] Gray v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. 170 Mass. 558, 49 N. E. 921.

[2] Hartigan v. Casualty Co. of America, 161 N. Y. Supp. 145, 97 Misc. 464.

When insurance of owner and driver of automobile not permitted.—A policy "against loss from liability imposed by law for damages and expenses incurred on account of bodily injuries, including death resulting therefrom, accidentally suffered by any person or persons by reason of the maintenance, use, loading and unloading of" said automobile and against loss from "liability imposed by law on the insured for damages to property, and resulting from any accident caused directly by" said automobile. See American Fidelity Co. v. Bleakley, 157 Iowa, 442, 138 N. W. 508, 42 Ins. L. J. 166; Code Supp. 1907, § 1709, subd. 5, cl. 1, 2, see §§ 338b, 338c herein.

[3] Fitzjarrell v. Boyd, 123 Md. 497, 91 Atl. 547.

[4] See § 2800, subdiv. (a) herein.

[5] Henderson Lighting & Power Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 153 N. Car. 275, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1105, 69 S. E. 234, 40 Ins. L. J. 127.

fered by persons other than employees" "by reason of the operation of the trade or business described." Another point in the case holding as above was, however, that the injury sustained was consequent upon an assault although the decision rested upon what is above stated.[6] In case a statute gives a new right of action to personal representatives where death is suffered and not a right of action to deceased which survives, cases of instantaneous death without conscious suffering through injuries for which assured is responsible are not covered by a policy insuring a railroad company against loss for liability to persons who accidentally sustain personal injuries while traveling on its road under circumstances which impose upon assured a common-law or statutory liability.[7] Again, if insurer contracts for indemnity to assured for losses paid persons not employees for injuries sustained by reason of accidents resulting from the use of particular kinds of vehicles specified, the insurer is not liable for losses occasioned by the use of a vehicle which is not one of the kind designated, although under particular circumstances it is customary to use such vehicles temporarily.[8]

An insured corporation cannot by voluntarily defending an action against its stockholder, to which it was not a party, and paying the judgment, make insurer indemnify such stockholder against the consequences of his negligence and for which loss insured would not otherwise be liable; and this applies where the policy was issued to reimburse insured against loss actually sustained and paid in money after trial of the issue in satisfaction of final judgment, consequent upon injuries to persons or property caused by insured's automobile, and while insured's chauffeur was conveying therein said stockholder and others to certain places the property of another was injured.[9]

(d) Landlord's contingent policy.—In the case of a landlord's contingent policy which indemnifies the owner of the building, who is not in control or occupation thereof, for sums paid in

[6] Graustein & Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp. Ltd. of L. 214 Mass. 421, 101 N. E. 1073.

[7] Worcester & S. St. R. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 180 Mass. 263, 57 L.R.A. 629, 91 Am. St. Rep. 275, 62 N. E. 364.

[8] Phillipsburg Horsecar Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 160 Pa. St. 350, 28 Atl. 823.

As to exception of liability for violation of law allowing a minor to drive auto in city contrary to ordinance and killing child by running over it, no recovery. See Royal Indemnity Co. v. Schwartz, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 172 S. W. 581.

[9] Rock Springs Distilling Co. v. Employers Indemnity Co. of Phila. 160 Ky. 317, 169 S. W. 730, 44 Ins. L. J. 704.

As to payment of judgment or loss in claim of injured person against insured, see § 2800, subdivs. (n) et seq. herein.

liquidation of claims by reason of personal injuries sustained because of defects in the building or the owner's neglect and which are chargeable to him at law, it appeared that at the time the policy was issued and at all times the building was in the possession of tenants; that a considerable portion of the cornice, on a quiet evening with only a little air stirring, fell and injured several pedestrians and insured settled the injured persons' claims and sued to recover the amount from insurer. It was expressly stipulated that the policy was issued with the understanding that assured was the owner of the property, but not in occupation or control of it, the actual occupation and control being in a lessee or lessees; and it was further agreed that insurer should not be responsible for any loss unless occasioned by some fault or neglect on the part of assured or chargeable to him by law notwithstanding that the property was leased or beyond his control. A distinction was made between "occupation" or "control," and "possession," and it was held that the former words related to the property and not merely to the roof or the cornice. It was found that the injuries received by pedestrians were caused by some fault or neglect on insured's part as to said cornice and that they were properly chargeable to it by law and a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed.[10]

(e) Physician's liability policy.—If assurer's liability, under a policy insuring a physician against loss from liability for bodily injuries or death suffered in consequence of error or malpractice by any employee assistant, is qualified by the words "while acting under" his "instructions," said words will not be given a meaningless construction by treating them as covering general instructions for thereby insurer's liability would be neither expanded nor restricted; accordingly assurer will not be held liable upon a judgment for damages against assured rendered by reason of a mistaken diagnosis by one of his assistants who acted in conformity only with prior general instructions prevailing under the contract between said assistant and assured, and the latter evidently was without knowledge of the case so treated, and had given no personal attention to the patient, but had left the entire matter of diagnosis and treatment to said assistant.[11]

(f) Pleadings.—A complaint is insufficient which alleges that assurer assumed his contract obligation and took charge and control of the defense until after a jury trial when it so carelessly, negligently and improperly conducted the same as to cause other

[10] De Mun Estate Corp. v. Frankfort General Ins. Co. — Mo. App. —, 187 S. W. 1125.

[11] Seay v. Georgia Life Ins. Co. 132 Tenn. 673, 179 S. W. 312.

defendants than assured to be discharged and relieved; that it abandoned the defense after said trial, notwithstanding assured's protest and notified assured that it would be required to conduct the same on its own account and at its own expense, disclaiming all liability; that in consequence thereof assured undertook said defense and incurred expenses in a certain amount and finally settled the action for a specified sum which was reasonable. In such case there is no estoppel unless assured was injured, and if assurer outside of its contract obligation assumed the defense of a personal injury action in which others were also directly liable with assured, the latter could not be injured since there could be no contribution, or liability over among the joint-feasors, and it appears that the pleader is careful not to allege that after the trial a verdict was returned and a final judgment entered against assured although it is alleged as aforesaid that assurer notified assured after the trial that it would withdraw from the case and thereupon the latter undertook the defense.[12] Where it is clear from the policy that assurer is not obligated to indemnify assured unless during the construction of a building by an independent contractor, someone suffered bodily injury through the negligence of a contractor or subcontractor for which assured was only contingently liable as owner of said building, a complaint which fails to charge that the injury was occasioned by the negligence of an independent contractor or a subcontractor which would make assured liable as such owner, is insufficient, for such injuries may have been occasioned through the fault of the injured person himself, or of others for whose negligence assured as owner was not answerable over.[13] If a risk excepted by the policy is set up in defense in an action by insured upon the policy, and the latter relies upon an estoppel against assurer to set up such defense, it should plead the same where it has ample opportunity to do so, otherwise said estoppel will be held to have been waived, although the court, per Marshall, J., declared that the rule "had been rather softened in recent years, and probably should be administered equitably—not technically." [14]

[12] American Cereal Co. v. London Guarantee Co. 211 Fed. 96, 138 C. C. A. 94, 43 Ins. L. J. 834. See London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. American Cereal Co. 251 Ill. 123, 95 N. E. 1064, 159 Ill. App. 537, 41 Natl. Corp. Rep. 833. (The court in the Federal case [211 Fed.] per Baker, C. J., cites on the point of no estoppel Empire Surety Co. v. Pacific National Lumber Co. 200 Fed. 224, 118 C. C. A. 410; Employers Liability Assurance Corp. v. Chicago & Big Muddy Coal Co. 141 Fed. 962, 73 C. C. A. 278; Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981, and also says that the allegations of the court were no bar to believing that certain supposititious circumstances may have actually existed in that assured was misled into undertaking the defense by reason of certain misrepresentations of assured and that the latter came into charge of the defense de novo).

[13] American Cereal Co. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co. 211 Fed. 96, 138 C. C. A. 24, 43 Ins. L. J. 834. See London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. American Cereal Co. 251 Ill. 123, 95 N. E. 1064; 159 Ill. App. 537, 41 Natl. Corp. Rep. 833.

§ 2804. Pirates, rovers, assailing thieves: marine risks.—Piracy, under the statutes both in England and here, includes various acts not within the common-law definition, which latter comprehends acts of robbery and depredation committed upon the high seas, and which if perpetrated on land would be a felony. It is a brigandage, a cruising at sea and plundering of ships without authority, differing herein from acts of cruising at sea by privateers lawfully commissioned by authority of a sovereign state, or of a de facto government exercising sovereign powers and recognized as a belligerent, exercised against declared enemies, and being acts of hostility in so far as they are confined within the limits and purposes contemplated under the law of nations by the authority granted, but a privateer may commit acts of robbery and piracy upon the high seas.[1] Contracts calculated to encourage fitting out

[14] Stearns Lumber Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 159 Wis. 627, 150 N. W. 991, 45 Ins. L. J. 553.

[1] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. secs. 28, 35, 27, pp. 412, 437, 441 et seq.; 2 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *556 et seq.; Rev. Stats. U. S. secs. 2324, 5323–25, 5368–76; 1 Hawk. P. C. 98–100; Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co. 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 836; The Malek Adhel, 2 How. (43 U. S.) 210, 11 L. ed. 239; Marianna Flora, 11 Wheat. (24 U. S.) 1, 6 L. ed. 405; The Antelope, 10 Wheat. (23 U. S.) 66, 67, 6 L. ed. 268; United States v. Pirates, 5 Wheat. (18 U. S.) 184, 5 L. ed. 64; The Joseph Segunda, 5 Wheat. (18 U. S.) 338, 5 L. ed. 104; The States v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (18 U. S.) 153, 5 L. ed. 57; United States v. Klintock, 5 Wheat. (18 U. S.) 144, 5 L. ed. 55; United States v. Furlong, 5 Wheat. (18 U. S.) 184, 5 L. ed. 64; United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 610, 4 L. ed. 471; L'Invincible, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 238, 252, 4 L. ed. 80; The Exchange v. McFladen, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 147, 3 L. ed. 297; United States v. Peters, 3 Dall. (3 U. S.) 121, 127, 1 L. ed. 535; United States v. Haskell, 4 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 402, Fed. Cas. No. 15,321; United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 209, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494; United States v. Howard & Beebe, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 340, 344, Fed. Cas. No. 15,404; United States v. Tully, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 247, Fed. Cas. No. 16,545; Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 394, 421, Fed. Cas. No. 3,966, s. c. 6 Allen (88 Mass.) 373; United States v. Baker, 5 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 6, Fed. Cas. No. 14,501; United States v. Kessler, 1 Bald. (U. S. C. C.) 15, 27, Fed. Cas. No. 15,528; Dole v. Merchants' Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 51 Me. 465; Swinnerton v. Columbian Ins. Co. 37 N. Y. 174, s. c. 93 Am. Dec. 560, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 361; Fifield v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 47 Pa. St. 166, 86 Am. Dec. 523; Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. St. 491; Le Louis, 2 Dods. 210.

For definition of piracy, see article by Francis Wharton, "Insurgents as Belligerents," 33 Alb. L. J. 125.

of privateers by neutrals in a neutral port, and cruising against one belligerent under another belligerent's flag, are unlawful and void.[2] Acts done under a commission by a government in fact exercising supreme power within its jurisdiction, with resources of men and money and engaged in war, and recognized as a belligerent, are not acts of piracy or of assailing thieves.[3] Mutiny of the crew will render insurers liable under a clause as to pirates and rovers.[4] So also of a loss of a cargo of corn caused by a mob taking possession of a vessel lying in harbor and running her upon a reef.[5] But it may be a question for the jury whether the act was done by a mob, or as an act of war and of hostility, where a vessel lying in harbor was seized and sunk by men professing to act under authority of the state of Virginia during the Civil War.[6] And under the Marine Insurance Act of 1906 of England "the term 'pirates' includes passengers who mutiny and rioters who attack the ship from the shore."[7]

The wrongful seizure and sale of a cargo by a consul of the United States is not covered by the clause "pirates and assailing thieves."[8] It is held in Tennessee that the word "thieves" does not render the insurers liable for a loss by simple theft, but only [2] Pond v. Smith, 4 Conn. 297.

Where loss not due to "piracy" seizure not for private but political object; seizure on river, see Bolivia Republic v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 78 L. J. K. B. 596, [1909] 1 K. B. 785, 100 L. T. 503, 11 Asp. M. C. 218, 14 Com. Cas. 156, 53 S. J. 266, 25 T. L. R. 254.

Under Declaration of Paris, 1856, signed by representatives of all European Powers, and acquiesced in or acceded to by all except United States, Spain and Mexico, "I. Privateering is and remains abolished."

[3] Dole v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cliff. (C. C.) 394, Fed. Cas. No. 3.966, s. c. 6 Allen (88 Mass.) 373; Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co. 6 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 18 L. ed. 836; Dole v. Merchants' Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 51 Me. 465; Fifield v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 47 Pa. St. 166, 86 Am. Dec. 523; Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. St. 491. But see United States v. Klintock, 5 Wheat, (18 U. S.) 144, 5 L. ed. 55.

[4] Brown v. Smith, 1 Dow, 349, 14 R. R. 78. See Naylor v. Palmer, 10 Exch. 382, 22 L. J. Ex. 329, 23 L. J. Ex. 323, 21 L. T. (O. S.) 168, 24 L. T. (O. S.) 83, 91 R. R. 731, 8 Exch. 739. But see Dixon v. Reed, 5 Barn. & Ald. 597, 1 D. & R. 207, 24 R. R. 481. As to what acts of seamen or officers and crew are piracy, see Rev. Stats. U. S. sec. 5369; United States v. Gilbert, 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 19, Fed. Cas. No. 15,204.

[5] Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 Term Rep. 783, 2 R. R. 519, per Lord Kenyon.

[6] Swinnerton v. Columbian Ins. Co. 37 N. Y. 174, s. c. 93 Am. Dec. 560, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 361. See Babbitt, Goode & Co. v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 314.

[7] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I. r. 8 (rules of construction); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) pp. 425–427; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) pp. 907, 908.

[8] Paddock v. Commercial Ins. Co. 2 Allen (84 Mass.) 93.

by robbery,[9] while in New York "thieves" is held to cover a loss by simple larceny, as well as by "assailing thieves." [10] And in a line within this decision it is also held in another case in the same state that the insurer against loss by "thieves" is liable for thefts by persons not connected with the vessel, whether furtive or violent.[11] Under the Marine Insurance Act 1906, of England, "the term 'thieves' does not cover clandestine theft, or a theft committed by any one of the ship's company, whether crew or passengers." [12]

§ 2805. Passage money: loss of.—If passage money for the transportation of passengers is insured, said money being paid for in advance for the entire voyage, and the ship is never heard of after sailing, the owners are liable to refund said passage money to the representatives of the deceased, and the insurers are liable therefor.[1] But the loss of passage money by an unjust claim prosecuted by passengers and followed by a decree at a port of necessity is held not a loss for which the underwriters are liable, even though the decree was justified by the evidence.[2] So insurers are not liable for the cost in excess of the passage money of maintaining passengers at a port of necessity consequent upon delay for repairs.[3]

[9] Marshall v. Nashville Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 Humph. (20 Tenn.) 99.

[10] American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 25, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 563, 37 Am. Dec. 278. The policy here was against "thieves," etc., "barratry of the master and mariners." See 3 Kent's Commentaries, 303.

[11] Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Storrow, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 285, 295. See De Rothschild v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. 7 Exch. 734, 14 Eng. L. & Eq 327; Bonbrett v. Hentigg, Holt N. P. 149, 17 R. R. 625; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 642, sec. 1106. Emerigon notes two kinds of theft: "Simple theft, called 'furtum,' and theft accompanied with violence, called 'latrocinium.' The first is not placed in the rank of perils cas fortuits; the law presumes that it might have been prevented by vigilance; 'furtum non est casus fortuitus,' says Cujus. The second is considered as a case fatal, which could neither be foreseen nor prevented, latrocinium fatale damnum seu casus fortuitus est. Hence it follows: 1. That the insurers are not responsible for simple theft committed on board the vessel, because it is presumed with reason that the accident has happened through the fault of the captain or crew:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 29, p. 419; and to same effect see 3 Kent's Commentaries, 303, n.; 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 822, *818; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 771.

[12] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) Sched. I. r. 9 (rules of construction); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) pp. 425–427; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) pp. 907, 908.

[1] Ogden v. Mutual Ins. Co. 35 N. Y. 418.

[2] Marks v. Nashville Co. 6 La. Ann. 127.

[3] Willis v. Cooke, 5 El. & B. 641, 25 L. J. Q. B. 16, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 1164, 4 W. R. 54.

§ 2805a. Plate glass insurance.—Insurer may agree to indemnify against loss by breakage of plate glass by a third party and its liability in such case, as well also as its right to subrogation, may depend upon recovery by insured from the person occasioning the injury and assurer's knowledge thereof.[4] And it is held that although there was a hole near the center of the glass and that it was subsequently found broken its entire length it does not follow that the glass was uninsurable or that the break was occasioned by reason of such defect.[5] Inasmuch, however, as questions arising under this class of insurance are for the greater part those which relate to excepted risks and losses in connection with fire, explosion, windstorms and tornado, they have been considered thereunder and reference is made thereto.[6]

§ 2805b. Plate glass insurance: window breaking by suffragists: "civil commotion" or "rioting."—Window breaking by members of a woman's social and political union, even though done by prearrangement in different localities, does not constitute "civil commotion" or "rioting," where in each case a woman went quietly alone and without assistance and broke one or more windows, there being at that time no crowd and no excitement and where there was no resistance to arrest nor any attempt at rescue, and although a crowd collected where the window was broken, still it was orderly, did not take part in the proceedings, and shortly dispersed. The following definition of civil commotion was adopted: "A civil commotion is this: An insurrection of the people for general purposes, although it may not amount to a rebellion, where there is an usurped power." [7]

§ 2806. Profits.—In determining the liability of insurers for a loss on profits in marine risks, there should be borne in mind the difference between the rule in this country and that in England, since the former does not require proof that profits would have been realized had the goods arrived,[8] while in England some proof

[4] Weaver v. New Jersey Fidelity & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 56 Colo. 112, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 414, 136 Pac. 1180.

[5] McMyler v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 84 N. Y. Supp. 170.

[6] See § 2634 herein.

[7] London & Manchester Plate Glass Ins. Co. v. Heath, 82 L. J. K. B. 1183; (1913) 3 K. B. 411; (1913) W. C. & I. Rep. 696; 108 L. T. 1009, 29 L. T. R. 581, adopting Lord Mansfield's definition of "civil commotion" in Langdale v. Mason, reported in Park on Mar. Ins. 7th ed. p. 667, 8th ed. p. 965.

[8] Alsop v. Commercial Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 451; Fed. Cas. No. 262; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. 28 (U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659; Fosdick v. Norwich Ins. Co. 3 Day (Conn.) 108; Loomis v. Shaw, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36; Abbott v. Sebor, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 39, 2 Am. Dec. 139. See French v. Hope Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 Mass.) 397.

to that effect is necessitated.[9] And, as stated elsewhere, the insured may recover a total or an average loss on profits, according as the loss of the goods is total or partial.[10] So that if an insurance be effected upon profits valued, and the cargo having arrived is lost by a peril insured against before the goods can be landed, the insurers are liable, even though it is not shown that profits would have been realized had no peril intervened.[11] But the assured cannot sell his goods and then recover from the underwriters for a loss on the profits.[12] Under an open policy where the ship was captured, but five-eighths of the goods were restored, it was held, an abandonment being made as for a total loss on profits, that insured was entitled to recover three-eighths as a partial loss, and it was also held in this case that insured was entitled to share pro rata.[13] It may be stated as a rule that if profits are not specially insured they cannot be recovered as such.[14] And in such case insured cannot recover under a fire risk, as a part of the damages, profits of a business which are not realized at the time of the loss, such damages being too remote and difficult to ascertain, even approximately. Thus, a loss of tolls sustained by the insured on its road while a bridge destroyed by fire is rebuilding is not covered by a policy on the bridge. "If the bridge was totally destroyed, the loss would be the total amount of the insurance, but if only partially destroyed, it would be the value of the injury. Under no circumstances can there be a legitimate measure of liability on a fire insurance policy which represents the loss of profits of a business which might be carried on at the structure destroyed if it were standing. Such is not the contract of the parties," and the court also said that there could be no recovery "for any other advantage which may have been denied from its use."[15] Nor does a policy on a building cover a loss of profits during repairs.[16] But insurance under fire policies may [9] Hodson v. Glover, 6 East, 316, 8 R. R. 495. See Barclay v. Cousins, 2 East, 544, 6 R. R. 505.

[10] Abbott v. Sebor, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 39, 2 Am. Dec. 139; Putnam v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 5 Met. (46 Mass.) 386, 391. See § 1019 herein. See total loss and constructive total loss.

[11] Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659.

[12] Tom v. Smith, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 245.

[13] Loomis v. Shaw, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36.

[14] See § 1760 herein. But see Holbrook v. Brown, 2 Mass. 280.

On insurance against loss of profits, see note in L.R.A.1917C, 726.

[15] Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. New Holland Turnpike Road, 122 Pa. St. 37, 15 Atl. 563.

As rents are said to be analogous to profits, see § 2814 herein.

[16] Wright & Pole, Matter of, 1 Ad. & E. 621; Niblo v. North American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Sand. (N. Y.) 551.

cover, by express stipulation, profits unearned because of the destruction by fire of property, by the use of which they may have been secured; for the right to profits is an insurable interest, capable of supporting the contract of profits as the inevitable result of the destruction of property by fire; as in the case of royalties.[17] And where there is an insurance on "profit due" derivable from the use of hotel rooms agreed to be of a specified value fixed in the policy and it does not appear that insurer issued the policy with respect to any options or contingencies, and the property is so damaged by fire that it cannot be used for the purposes contemplated, the fixed amount governs the recovery and assured is entitled to the full sum in the policy.[17a]

§ 2807. Profits of lessee.—If a lessee insures his interest, he is entitled in case of loss to the profits lost, owing to the suspension of rent under his sublease.[18]

§ 2808. Promise of insurer to pay although loss not covered by policy.—If property is insured and the loss thereto is not covered by the policy, it is held that the insurers may render themselves liable to pay therefor upon the performance of certain conditions to which the parties have agreed at the time of making the promise to pay; for although such promise is void when made, yet the performance constitutes a consideration which relates back to the making of the promise; as where the insurers promise the assured that if he will find the damaged property, have it inspected, and sold at auction, they will pay the deficiency, and assured performs these acts, it has been declared that he is entitled to recover the deficiency.[19]

§ 2809. Promissory note.—Insurers may become liable for the loss where it affects a policy guaranteeing the prompt payment of a promissory note, the statute under which the company is organized permitting such insurances to be effected, and the form of the contract is immaterial and the policy negotiable.[20]

§ 2810. Railroad, right to recover from, although insurance paid.—The fact that a party has recovered insurance for a loss of his property by fire will not prevent him from recovering from a railroad company, whose negligence caused the fire, the entire [17] Employer's Liability Assurance Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404, 29 N. E. 529; National Filtering Oil Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 106 N. Y. 535, 60 Am. Rep. 473, 13 N. E. 337.

[17a] O'Brien v. North River Ins. Co. 212 Fed. 102, 128 C. C. A. 618, 44 Ins. L. J. 48.

[18] Carey v. London Provincial Fire Ins. Co. 33 Hun (N. Y.) 315.

[19] Willetts v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 45, 6 Am. Rep. 31.

[20] Ellicote v. United States Ins. Co. 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 166. This case, however, could not be strictly called one of insurance.

amount of his loss.[1] A railroad company is not entitled to any part of the insurance contracted for and collected by the owner of property destroyed by a fire communicated from a railroad locomotive, although the railroad company is given by statute an insurable interest in such property, with the right to insure it for its own protection.[2]

§ 2811. Removal of goods in case of threatened fire: damages and expenses incurred.—Although there has been some question on this point, yet the rule seems to be this, that if the danger from fire to the insured goods or to the building in which they are contained is so imminent that a prudent uninsured person would, under the circumstances, hardly have omitted the precaution to remove his goods from the building, then the insured will also be justified in using such reasonable precaution to protect them from the impending or threatened peril, exercising in their removal such care as, under the circumstances, a prudent uninsured man could reasonably be assumed to have used, and insurer is liable, within the limits of this rule, even though the building be not actually consumed or burned, for the loss, damage, and injury sustained by their removal, as well as for such expenses incurred in their removal as are reasonable under the circumstances.[3]

[1] Lake Erie & Western Ry. Co. v. Griffin, 8 Ind. App. 47, 35 N. E. 396. Examine St. Louis Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 139 U. S. 223, 35 L. ed. 154, 11 Sup. Ct. 554, per Gray, J.; Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans Railroad Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 139 U. S. 79, 35 L. ed. 97, 11 Sup. Ct. 490, per Harlan, J.; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie & Western Transp. Co. 117 U. S. 312, 320, 29 L. ed. 873, 6 Sup. Ct. 1176; Mobile & Montgomery Railway Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 28 L. ed. 527, 4 Sup. Ct. 566; Hart v. Railroad Co. 13 Met. (54 Mass.) 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719, per Shaw, C. J.; Weber v. Railroad Co. 35 N. J. L. 409, 10 Am. Rep. 253.

[2] Matthews v. St. Louis & Santa Fe Ry. Co. 121 Mo. 298, 25 L.R.A. 161, 24 S. W. 29, aff'd 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243.

[3] United States. — Holtzman v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (U. S. C. C.) 295, Fed. Cas. No. 3,561.

Kentucky.—Leibner v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 630, 99 Am. Dec. 695.

Louisiana. — Balestracci v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 844; Talaman v. Home & Citizens Mutual Ins. Co. 16 La. Ann. 426.

Maine.—White v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. 57 Me. 91, 2 Am. Rep. 22.

North Carolina. — Whitehurst v. Fayetteville Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Jones L. (51 N. C.) 352.

England.—Thompson v. Montreal Ins. Co. 6 U. C. Q. B. 319. See Wood's Mayne on Damages, sec. 442; Case v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Ill. 676. See § 2821, on theft and fire risks. "The insurer is liable where the thing insured is rescued from a peril insured against that would otherwise have caused a loss if in the course of such rescue the thing is exposed to a peril insured against which permanently deprives the insured of its possession, in whole or in part; or where a loss is caused by

This rule applies even though the policy is "on goods whilst they shall be and remain in said building."[4] So where there was a furious fire in the neighborhood and the building was burned to some extent and a stock of frangible goods was considerably damaged and broken by removal, the company was held liable, even though the property burned would have neither burned or have been injured if it had been left in the house.[5] So damages resulting from efforts made in good faith to save property from a fire, by breakage, removal, water, or from loss by theft consequent thereto, are within the loss covered by a policy against damage by fire, unless expressly excepted therefrom by stipulation.[6] Again, where there was a conflagration and the building being in imminent danger of destruction the goods were removed from the store to the pavement, where they were injured, the insurers were held liable for the damage sustained as well as for expenses of removal.[7] The court in this case says: "The question presented is one of considerable difficulty, and one upon which the authorities are at variance. While the supreme court of Illinois, in a case like the one at bar, have held that the underwriters are liable for the damage to the goods and the expense of removing them, the court in Pennsylvania have denied their liability.[8] We think the liability of the underwriters in these and similar cases depends very much upon the imminence of the peril and the reasonableness of the means used to effect the removal. . . . The imminence of the peril must be apparent, and such as would prompt a prudent uninsured person to remove the goods; it must be such as to inspire a conviction that to refrain from removing the goods would be a violation of a manifest moral duty; the damage and expense of removal, too, must be such as might reasonably be incurred under the circumstances of the occasion.[9] When such a case exists, we think it the better opinion to hold that the underwriters are chargeable for the damage and expense of removing the goods, as this result seems most in accordance with reason, the analogies of the law, and public policy."

efforts to rescue the thing insured from a peril insured against:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2627.

[4] Holtzman v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (U. S. C. C.) 295. Fed. Cas. No. 3,561.

[5] Balestracci v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 34 La. Ann. 844.

[6] Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Cuff, 29 Okla. 106, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892 (annotated on loss by theft during fire), 116 Pac. 435.

[7] White v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. 57 Me. 91, 2 Am. Rep. 22.

[8] Case v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Ill. 676; Hillier v. Alleghany Ins. Co. 3 Pa. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 656. But see Agnew v. Insurance Co. 3 Phila. (Pa.) 193, 15 L. I. 308, aff'd 34 Pa. 96, 75 Am. Dec. 368.

[9] Angell on Fire Ins. sec. 117.

§ 2812. Same subject: duty of assured: stipulation.—If the policy stipulates that assured shall, in case of exposure of the insured goods to loss or damage by fire, use all possible diligence to preserve the property, or that he shall labor for the protection thereof, and that insurer shall not be liable for losses arising from failure or neglect so to do, the question as to the necessity for removal is dependent upon the circumstances existing at the time. If the danger of destruction from the threatened peril is so imminent, direct and immediate that it would be gross negligence for the assured not to effect its removal, then the insurer is responsible, whether loss or damage is reasonably and necessarily sustained by such removal, for the fire will then be regarded as the proximate cause of the loss. So also if the danger is reasonably imminent, within the limits of the rule stated under the last section, the assured would not only be justified in removing the goods to protect them from threatened loss, but would be obligated under a stipulation of the kind above mentioned to use reasonable efforts in removing the goods.[10] And if due care and reasonable means, under the circumstances, is not exercised at or after the fire to preserve the property as required by the stipulation recovery is precluded for the amount of loss of property which could have been saved;[11] nor can insurer be held liable for the value of property destroyed by a fire, if the owner exerted no proper diligence to save it, although there was ample time and opportunity to do so, and the policy contained a stipulation that the insurer should not be liable for loss caused directly by neglect of the insured to use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property at and after a fire, or when the property is endangered by fire in neighboring premises.[12] So where goods insured under a policy containing a like clause were being removed during a dark night and sustained damage by flood, mud, and water, the insurers were held liable therefor.[13] And where it clearly appears from uncontroverted evidence that no effort was made to save the personal property destroyed and there was ample opportunity to do so no recovery under the policy can be had.[14] And the rejection of evidence as to the feasibility of the removal of goods from a part of the build-

[10] Case v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Ill. 676; Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 11 Mich. 425. See last section, and under § 2821, theft.

[11] Beavers v. Security Mutual Ins. Co. 76 Ark. 595, 90 S. W. 13.

[12] First National Bank v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873.

[13] Talamon v. Home & Citizens' Mutual Ins. Co. 16 La. Ann. 426.

[14] First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899.

ing during the early part of the fire is immaterial and harmless error where insured had admitted that they could have been removed at that time but no effort was made to do so.[15]

But a provision in a fire policy that "it shall be the duty of the insured to use their best endeavors for saving and preserving the property" defines the duty of the insured when the property covered by the policy is on fire, or when it is menaced by fire in its vicinity and damage is likely to result, does not apply to some action by which the risk of the property taking fire might be increased.[16] So the requirement in a policy against loss by the accidental discharge of an automatic fire extinguishing apparatus, that assured must use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property insured, refers to care to be taken after an accidental discharge of the apparatus, and not to care to prevent an accident.[17]

§ 2813. Same subject: how far assured must exert himself to save property.—In cases where there is no stipulation, although the rule as to removal of goods or other efforts to save property cannot be more strictly enforced than as stated under the last section, nevertheless the assured is obligated to act in good faith, and to do all that he can to lighten the burden of probable or possible loss, and to exert himself to save, as far as he reasonably can, the property from threatened destruction, but in applying this rule all the circumstances of the particular case must be considered. The assured ought not to negligently or carelessly stand by and permit the destruction of the property by the peril insured against, or the injury or damage to said property by others, when it is in his power to avert the same by the exercise of ordinary prudence, such as an uninsured man would use under the same circumstances. To do so would, as a general rule, be an evidence of that want of honesty and good faith which parties to contracts of insurance are presumed to exercise. No arbitrary rule can, however, be laid down which will govern all cases.[18] So in marine insurances the master and crew, as a part of their bounden duty to the ship in the capacity in which they are employed, must see the ship through the hazards of the voyage, and bestow their best efforts and entire possible service for the preservation of the ship and cargo.[19]

[15] Palatine Ins. Co. v. Santa Fe Mercantile Co. 13 N. Mex. 241, 82 Pac. 363.

[16] Siemers v. Meeme Mutual Home Protection Ins. Co. 143 Wis. 114, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1083, 126 N. W. 669, 39 Ins. L. J. 1138.

[17] Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co. v. United States Casualty Co. 172 Mo. 135, 61 L.R.A. 766, 72 S. W. 635.

[18] See last two sections and § 2081, sue and labor clause, etc.; 2 Wood on Fire Ins. (2d ed. 1056) sec. 492.

[19] Miller v. Kelly, Abb. Adm. 564, Fed. Cas. No. 9,577, per the court; Schooner John Perkins (U. S. C. C.)

§ 2814. Rents.—Unless otherwise stipulated, if the premises are destroyed by fire there is no liability for rent of the premises; the liability of the insurer, if the building is never restored, is not for the loss of the use or rental of the property, but for the value of the loss.[20] But the insurance even though a fire policy may expressly provide for indemnity for the loss of rents by failure of tenants to promptly pay the same, and also from the loss of rents during a specified period occasioned by a peril specified, or it may insure the tenant againt loss from liability to pay rent.[1] If the policy insures against a loss of rents from a specified building not exceeding four months in any one year, and the term of the policy was for one year, terminating June 7, 1891, and there was a total loss of the building by fire on June 5, 1891, the insured may recover the loss of the rent for the four months specified.[2] The parties to a contract of rent insurance may stipulate for a method of ascertaining and computing the loss, notwithstanding the statute provides that the sole object of insurance is indemnity.[3] And where the policy stipulates for a reasonably necessary time for the restoration of the building to a tenantable condition the same as before the fire does not operate as a limitation to the time actually spent for repairs but includes time necessarily spent in placing the contract therefor, and the loss of rents during such period as was reasonably necessary for such restoration of the building is recoverable.[4] The gross rentals, and not the amount less cost of janitor and other service to which the landlord is subject, are covered, by a policy providing that the insurer shall be liable for the actual loss of rent, based on rentals in force at the time of fire, and requiring the assured to carry insurance in an amount equal to the annual rents of the premises, in the absence of which the assured shall be held as a coinsurer in the amount of the deficiency.[5] But insurer is not liable for rents consequent upon delay

3 Ware, 87, 89, Fed. Cas. No. 10,252, rev'd Fed. Cas. No. 7,360, 21 L. R. 87, per Curtis, J.

[20] Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. New Holland Turnpike Road, 122 Pa. St. 37, 15 Atl. 563, per Green, J.

[1] "Fire insurance is now made to cover rents lost by the destruction of buildings by fire:" Employer's Liability Assur. Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404, 29 N. E. 529, per Barker, J. See § 2820 herein.

On construction of policy or contract insuring against loss of rents, see notes in 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1055; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 123; and L.R.A. 1916F, 694.

[2] Becker v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. (C. of A. Parish of New Orleans, 1893) 22 Ins. L. J. 227.

[3] Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 155 Cal. 521, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 123, 101 Pac. 911, 18 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 512.

[4] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Pires, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 165 S. W. 565.

[5] Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 155 Cal. 521, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 123n, 101 Pac. 911.

necessitated by a city ordinance relocating street lines, etc., which delayed the issuing of building permits, where it is stipulated that insured shall rebuild in as short a time as the nature of the case will admit and the policy also provides an exemption where loss is occasioned by ordinance or law regulating construction or repairs of buildings, or by interruption of business, etc., or otherwise; nor in such case is there a liability for loss of rents consequent upon interruption of business caused by delay in rebuilding owing to the fall of debris throughout the burnt district.[6]

If there is a contract to convey ground rents and to build on unimproved lands and to give a guaranty bond for completion of such building the measure of recovery for failure to complete said buildings is the market value of the uncompleted buildings and the difference between said value and the market value of the ground rent had the contract been fulfilled.[7]

§ 2814a. Repairs of building by assurer: assured's liability to third persons.—Although an owner's building is in the hands of an insurance company for repairs, after a fire, this does not relieve him of his duty to see that it is in a safe condition. It is especially his duty, after the fire, to see how that occurrence has affected the situation, and he cannot, as between himself and the public, shift this responsibility from himself to the insurance company by leaving the latter to determine the necessity and extent of repairs. He is still liable for the condition of the building, and must respond in damages, if anyone is injured by one of its falling walls.[8]

§ 2815. Shipowner's liability.—To the extent that the shipowner may protect his interests and cover his liability by insurance he should do so, and the nature and extent of that liability may therefore be briefly considered here. At the common law the shipowner is responsible up to the full extent of the damage or loss caused to goods or to another ship by the acts of the master and mariners, and this is the rule also of the civil law and of England and this country, except so far as legislative provisions provide otherwise.[9] In England, however, the responsibility of shipowners has been

[6] Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 109 Md. 100, 71 Atl. 775, 38 Ins. L. J. 432, s. c. 107 Md. 341, 68 Atl. 484, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1055, s. c. 152 Fed. 922, 82 C. C. A. 70, 36 Ins. L. J. 616.

[7] German-American Title & Trust Co. v. Citizens Trust & Surety Co. 190 Pa. 247, 42 Atl. 682.

[8] Steppe v. Alter, 48 La. Ann. 363, 55 Am. St. Rep. 281, 19 So. 147.

[9] Abbott on Shipping (6th Am. ed.) 394, and notes; Maclachlan on Shipping, 121 et seq.; 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 217; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *775; 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 734; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 802, pp. 1004 et seq. See note under § 2751 herein.

On law covering limitation of liability, see note in L.R.A.1916B, 642.

limited by legislative enactments.[10] So also in the United States under the acts of Congress there are certain limitations on the shipowner's liability.[11] Under the act of 1851,[12] the destruction of goods on land by fire communicated by a vessel is not an included liability, even though the vessel is duly licensed and engaged in the coast trade.[13] A loss of goods by fire on board the vessel upon which they are shipped, the fire happening by the neglect of the corporation owning the vessel, is not a loss incurred without the privity or knowledge of the owners of the vessel under the United States Statutes of 1851, chapter 43, limiting the liability of shipowners.[14] The act of Congress of 1884,[15] limiting the individual liability of a shipowner for any debt contracted on account of the ship, does not affect the liability of owners of fishing vessels, which remains as at common law.[16] The Harter or carriers act, 1893, exempts from liability the vessel, owners, etc., under certain conditions as to seaworthiness where the vessel is engaged in transporting merchandise to or from any port in the United States

[10] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 734, citing shipping act 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, sec. 503, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, secs. 54, 55; Preamble 7 Geo. II. c. 15; Gale v. Lawrie, 5 Barn. & C. 156, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 149, 7 D. & R. 711, 29 R. R. 199, per Lord Tenterden; Brown v. Wilkinson, 16 L. J. Ex. 34, 36, 15 M. & W. 391, per Parke, B. See also as to present English statutes 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 802, pp. 1004 et seq.

[11] See Rev. Stats. U. S. secs. 4282, 4284, 4285. The act of Congress (act of June 19, 1886, 24 U. S. Stats. p. 80) extending the limited liability of owners to all vessels is not retroactive, nor is the act which excepts lighters from the limited liability of shipowners (act of March 3, 1851, 9 U. S. Stats. p. 635; Rev. Stats. U. S. sec. 4283, repealed by the act of June 26, 1884, 23 U. S. Stats. p. 57; Chappell v. Bradshaw, 35 Fed. 923.

On applicability to government of statutes limiting liability of shipowners, see note in L.R.A.1917C, 1110.

[12] Acts of March 3, 1851, 9 U. S. Stats. p. 635, Rev. Stats. U. S. sec. 4283, limiting the liability of shipowners to their interest in the vessel and pending freight "for any embezzlement, loss, or destruction by any person of any property, goods, or merchandise shipped or put on board of such vessel, or for any loss, damage, or injury by collision, or for any act, matter, or thing, loss, damage, or forfeiture done, occasioned, or occurred without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners." See Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mills Transportation Co. 155 Fed. 11, 83 C. C. A. 807, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 769 and note (on lack of knowledge or privity on part of owners as a condition of limitation of liability under act of 1884); Loughlin v McCaulley, 186 Pa. 517, 48 L.R.A. 33, 40 Atl. 1029. See note § 2751 herein.

[13] Goodrich Transportation Co. v. Gagnon, 36 Fed. 123.

[14] Hill Manufacturing Co. v. Providence & New York Steamship Co. 113 Mass. 495, 18 Am. Rep. 527.

[15] U. S. Stats. 1884, c. 121, sec. 18. See Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mills Transportation Co. 155 Fed. 11, 88 C. C. A. 607, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 769. See note under § 2751 herein.

[16] Simpson v. Story, 145 Mass. 497, 14 N. E. 641.

and also in case of losses from damages of the sea or other navigable waters, acts of God or public enemies, etc., faults or errors in navigation or management of the vessel or from saving or attempting to save life or property at sea, or from any deviation in rendering such service.[17] But it is held that said act does not remove liability for damage done by careless navigation which had become fixed at the time of its passage;[18] nor for loss of cargo by fire during deviation.[18a]

Exactly where the responsibility of the owner or master as carriers of goods commences and ends is not definitely determined, the matter being largely dependent upon the practice and customs of particular ports or places where the voyage begins and ends.[19] Where a common carrier by water is notified that the goods are perishable, and must not be put out in rainy weather; and he places the property on the dock on a day unsuitable for landing and cartage because raining during the greater part thereof, and without reasonable notice to the consignee, to enable him to have them weighed, carted, and protected from the weather, the carrier is guilty of negligence, and is liable for a breach of his duty.[20]

Although a carrier by water may land goods on a wharf, it is his duty to give the consignee due notice of their arrival and landing, and afford him a reasonable time to take charge of and secure them. The consignee has also a reasonable time to inspect goods on the wharf before he determines whether he will accept them. Time, place, the character of the weather, and other circumstances are all material factors, and until acceptance, such as to release the carrier, the latter must take charge of them for the owners. The acts of acceptance, upon notice or otherwise, may, however, be [17] Act of Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, sec. 3, 27 Stat. 445, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2946.

[18] Humboldt Lumber Manufacturing Assoc. v. Christopherson, 73 Fed. 239, 19 C. C. A. 481, 44 U. S. App. 434, 46 L.R.A. 264. As to loss or liability for damage to cargo by peril of the seas, under this act of 1893, see Hanson v. Haywood Bros. & Wakefield Co. 152 Fed. 401, 81 C. C. A. 527. Ship must be seaworthy; insufficient that due diligence exercised. Insurance Co. of North America v. North German Lloyd Co. (U. S. D. C.) 106 Fed. 973. Affirmative proof required, under act, that vessel was seaworthy. Bradley v. Lehigh Valley Rd. Co. 153 Fed. 350, 82 C. C. A. 426, aff'g 145 Fed. 569. See note § 2751 herein. See also for construction of said act, Congdon's General Average (ed. 1913) pp. 189 et seq.

[18a] The Indrapura (U. S. D. C.) 171 Fed. 929, 38 Ins. L. J. 1163; U. S. Rev. Stat. secs. 4282, 4283, Comp. St. 1906, p. 2943.

[19] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) *778.

[20] McAndrew v. Whitlock, 52 N. Y. 40, cited and considered in Constable v. National Steamship Co. 154 U. S. 51, 80, 82, 38 L. ed. 918, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062 (in dissenting opinion); McKinney v. Jewett, 90 N. Y. 267, 270; Richmond v. Union Steamboat Co. 87 N. Y. 240, 245.

such as to relieve the carrier of responsibility.[1] A carrier by water is not excused from liability for loss by the act of God operating upon an unseaworthy vessel, when such act would have proved harmless to a seaworthy vessel.[2] And it is held that the owners of a tugboat are not common carriers, and that they are bound only by ordinary care.[3] The owners are not liable for any injury caused by a defect in the tackle arising from the ordinary wear and tear, unless a knowledge of such defect is brought home to them.[4] Goods should not be improperly stowed,[5] and the carrier is liable if they are.[6] Thus, it is bad and improper stowage to stow bags of ripe seed over chalk in the hold of a vessel,[7] or salt over iron, so that water may chance to come through.[8] So damage to goods from other goods stowed in the hold is held chargeable to the general owners of a ship.[9] The general owners of a vessel are not liable for damages occasioned by a collision happening through the fault or negligence of the master of the vessel, who

[1] United States.—Constable v. National Steamship Co. 154 U. S. 51, 38 L. ed. 918, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062; Richardson v. Goddard, 23 How. (64 U. S. 28, 16 L. ed. 412, same case Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Bark Tangier, 1 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 396, Fed. Cas. No. 12,266; 3 Ware, 110, Fed. Cas. No. 12,267; Schooner Treasurer (U. S. C. C.) Sprague, 473, Fed. Cas. No. 14,159; Vose v. Allen, 3 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 289, Fed. Cas. No. 17,006.

Louisiana.—Northern v. Williams, 6 La. Ann. 578.

New York.—Tarbell v. Royal Exchange Shipping Co. 110 N. Y. 170, 181, 6 Am. St. Rep. 350, 17 N. E. 721; McAndrew v. Whitlock, 52 N. Y. 40, 11 Am. Rep. 657; Goodwin v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 154, 10 Am. Rep. 457; Price v. Powell, 3 Comst. (3 N. Y.) 322.

England.—Hyde v. Trent & Mersey Navigation Co. 5 Term Rep. 389, 1 Esp. 36, 2 R. R. 620.

[2] Packard v. Taylor, 35 Ark. 402, 37 Am. Rep. 37.

[3] Varble v. Bigley, 14 Bush (77 Ky.) 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435; Arctic Fire Ins. Co. v. Austin, 69 N. Y. 470, 25 Am. Rep. 221; Hays v. Millar, 77 Pa. St. 238, 18 Am. Rep. 445. That a towboat is a common carrier, see Bussey & Co. v. Mississippi Valley Transportation Co. 24 La. Ann. 165, 13 Am. Rep. 120.

[4] Thus, the owners of a vessel are not liable to the employee of a stevedore who has full charge of the unloading of the vessel for injury to the employee caused by defective tackle furnished by the vessel, when it is shown that the tackle had no apparent defect, and that the stevedore was an experienced and competent one who had the exclusive employment of his laborers and control of the work: Riley v. State Line Steamship Co. 29 La. Ann. 791, 29 Am. Rep. 349.

[5] As to goods carried on deck, see Wood v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 1 Fed. 235.

[6] Alston v. Herring, 11 Exch. 822.

[7] The Bitterne, 35 Fed. 927.

[8] The Nith, 36 Fed. 86, 383.

[9] Gillespy v. Thompson, 6 El. & B. 477, n. 483, 2 Jur. (N. S.) 712, in note to Baxter v. Leland, 1 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 526, Fed. Cas. No. 1,125.

As to damage to cargo: negligence: bad storage: carrier's liability, see Insurance Co. of North America v. Frederick Leyland & Co. Ltd. (U. S. D. C.) 171 Fed. 524.

controls her pro hac vice and is sailing her "on shares." [10] Under a marine policy insuring against the usual perils, including barratry, the underwriters are not liable to repay to the insured damages paid by him to the owners of another vessel and cargo suffered in a collision occasioned by the negligence of the master or mariners of the vessel insured.[11] If a vessel is insured for a part only of its value, the owner is a co-insurer as to the uninsured part, and in case of loss to that part which is called the owner's risk, it must be taken into consideration in fixing the proportion of their loss to be paid by the insurers.[12]

2815a. Smallpox: assumption by assured of risk of: warranty.—If insured in answer to a question states that he has never been successfully vaccinated and that until he is he waives all claims under his certificate should his death result from smallpox, and he also states that "for the purposes of this application I declare and warrant the foregoing answers and statements to be correct," and the certificate is also stipulated to be null and void "if any of the statements or declarations" "shall be found in any respect untrue," and said answer was false in that he had prior thereto been successfully vaccinated, said statement is not a warranty and its falsity does not operate as a waiver of all claims under the certificate, and assured was not required to waive his claim under his certificate except in the interim between making the application and the time when he was successfully vaccinated.[13] The same question and the same waiver appear in a Mississippi case as existing under an amended constitution and by-law at the time of assured's death, although they were in a different form in assured's application, but in this case the member was successfully vac-

[10] Somes v. White, 65 Me. 542, 20 Am. Rep. 718.

[11] General Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 351, 14 L. ed. 452.

Cited: United States.—The Barnstable, 181 U. S. 464, 469, 45 L. ed. 954, 958, 21 Sup. Ct. 684; The Manitoba, 104 Fed. 145, 156; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & Western Transportation Co. 10 Biss. 18, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 11,112.

Massachusetts.—Wharf v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 68, 69, 10 N. E. 513; Emery v. Huntington, 109 Mass. 437, 12 Am. Rep. 725.

New York.—Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 9, 19.

South Carolina.—Street v. Augusta Ins. & Banking Co. 12 Rich. L. (So. Car.) 13, 22, 75 Am. Dec. 714.

[12] Egan v. British Foreign Marine Ins. Co. 193 Ill. 295, 86 Am. St. Rep. 342, 61 N. E. 1081.

As to right of owner of vessel to policy proceeds when insured as freighter, etc., for account of whom it may concern, see Symmers v. Carroll, 134 N. Y. Supp. 170, 149 App. Div. 641, 41 Ins. L. J. 976, aff'd 207 N. Y. 632, 101 N. E. 698, 42 Ins. L. J. 1063, s. c. 134 N. Y. Supp. 1147, 150 App. Div. 902; Symmers v. Howard (N. Y.) 42 Ins. L. J. 695.

[13] Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Gray, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 457, 64 S. W. 801.

cinated and died of smallpox and it was held no defense that he had so died. There was, however, no question here of warranty.[14] In still another case a waiver of death from smallpox because of nonvaccination was attempted to be availed of as a defense, in that assured died from smallpox but the waiver was part of the application and it was held that the claim could not be defeated on the ground of death from smallpox, neither the application nor a copy thereof being attached to the policy.[15]

§ 2816. Stranding defined: marine risk.—Stranding is where the ship takes ground or strikes some obstruction to navigation, such as a rock or reef or submerged piles, and is arrested and remains fixed for some space of time, or settles, being forced thereto by some accidental or extraneous cause, or by some unusual, extraordinary, and unexpected casualty, or by force of the winds or seas, and not a grounding caused solely by those natural causes necessarily incident to the ordinary and usual course of navigation; as in case of the ebb and flow of the tide in tide rivers or harbors. It is also distinguished from a mere temporary stoppage; as where the ship merely strikes or runs against or into some obstruction, but is not fixed or settled, but passes on. This is not a stranding, and the degree of damage sustained by the ship is important in determining whether there has been stranding.[16] But if the con-

[14] Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Woodruff, 80 Miss. 546, 32 So. 4.

[15] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Edwards, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 469, 85 S. W. 701; Ky. Stat. 1903, sec. 679.

[16] Potter v. Insurance Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 197, Fed. Cas. No. 11,339; Lake v. Columbus Ins. Co. 13 Ohio, 48, 42 Am. Dec. 188; McDougle v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 4 Camp. 283, 1 Stark. 130, 4 Maule & S. 503, 16 R. R. 532, per Lord Ellenborough; Wells v. Hopwood, 3 Barn. & Ald. 20, 26, 34, 37 R. R. 307, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 200, per Lord Tenterden; Fletcher v. Inglis, 2 Barn. & Ald. 315, 20 R. R. 448; Leitchford v. Oldham, L. R. 5 Q. B. D. 538, 49 L. J. Q. B. 458, 28 W. R. 789; Mitchell v. Calder, 1 Shaw & D. 276, 298; Magnus v. Buttemer, 21 L. J. Com. P. 119, 11 Com. B. 876, 16 Jur. 480, 87 R. R. 795; Kingsford v. Marshall, 8 Bing. 458, 1 Moore & S. 657, 1 L. J. C. P. 135, 34 R. R. 756, per Tinsdale, C. J.; Baker v. Towry, 1 Stark. 436, 18 R. R. 803; Rayner v. Godmond, 5 Barn. & Ald. 225, 24 R. R. 335; Harman v. Vaux, 3 Camp. 429, 14 R. R. 773; De Mattos v. Saunders, 7 L. R. Com. P. 570, 27 L. T. 120, 20 W. R. 801; Thomson v. Murison, 14 R. R. 773, 6 C. C. S. 1120, 16 Scot. Jur. 491; Hearne v. Edmunds, 1 Brod. & B. 388, 4 Moore, 15, 21 R. R. 660; Carruthers v. Sydebotham, 4 Maule & S. 77, 16 R. R. 392; Corcoran v. Gurney, 1 El. & B. 456, 22 L. J. Q. B. 113, 17 Jur. 1152, 1 W. R. 129, 93 R. R. 232, per Lord Campbell; Bishop v. Pentland, 7 Barn. & C. 214, 219, 1 Man. & R. 49, 6 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 6, 31 R. R. 177; Dobson v. Bolton, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *240; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 13, pp. 323 et seq.

See § 2699 herein.

sequences of the stranding are such as not to be capable of adjustment, because so indefinite that no estimate or evidence can be given as to the damage sustained, there is no liability therefor on the part of insurers.[17] Stranding may also be voluntary; as where the ship is intentionally run aground in what appears the least perilous place to escape a more pressing danger, such as shipwreck, an enemy, foundering, or sinking, the object being the common safety or the general benefit.[18] If the words used are "strand or ground" and "grounding" or "stranding" they are to be taken in their ordinary and accepted meaning and do not cover a sinking in deep water, even though the vessel did undoubtedly come to the ground at the bottom of the sea.[19]

§ 2817. Stranding: cases.—It is a stranding where the ship is forced by the wind into a mud bank and remains two hours;[20] or where having her head moved she is forced by the wind to so change her position that at the ebbing of the tide she is greatly strained and springs a leak;[1] or where breaking a rope at her moorings, it being an unforeseen accident, she falls over on her side;[2] or where she runs on piles under water a short space from shore

[17] Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 21 Pick. (38 Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Sage v. Middletown Ins. Co. 1 Conn. 239.

[18] See the following cases:

United States.—Fowler v. Rathbone, 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 102, 20 L. ed. 281; The Star of Hope, 9 Wall. (76 U. S.) 203, 19 L. ed. 638, per Clifford, J.; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 331, 10 L. ed. 186; Caze v. Reilley, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 298, Fed. Cas. No. 2,538; Bales of Cotton, 8 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 221, Fed. Cas. No. 4,319; Stringess v. Cary, 2 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 59, Fed. Cas. No. 13,572; Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Olc. Adm. 89, Fed. Cas. No. 9,981.

Massachusetts.—Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co. 22 Pick. (39 Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727; Bedford Commercial Ins. Co. v. Parker, 2 Pick. (19 Mass.) 1, 13 Am. Dec. 388.

New York.—Bradhurst v. Columbian Ins. Co. 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 9.

Pennsylvania. — Meech v. Robinson, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 360; Bevan v. Bank of United States, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 301.

England.—Barrow v. Bell, 4 Barn. & C. 736, 7 Dowl. & R. 244, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 47, 28 R. R. 468; Burnett v. Kensington, 7 Term Rep. 210, 1 Esp. 416, Peake's Add. Cas. 71, 4 R. R. 424, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 187; Corcoran v. Gurney, 1 El. & B. 456, 22 L. J. Q. B. 113, 17 Jur. 1152, 1 W. R. 129, 93 R. R. 232.

Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 13, p. 324. See chapter on general average.

[19] Baker-Whitely Coal Co. v. Marten, 26 Times L. R. 314.

That stranding is loss by perils of the sea, see American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. v. Bennett & Goodall, 207 Fed. 510, 125 C. C. A. 172, 42 Ins. L. J. 1783.

[20] Harman v. Vaux, 3 Camp. 429, 14 R. R. 773. See § 2699 herein.

[1] Wells v. Hopwood, 3 Barn. & Adol. 20, 37 R. R. 307, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 200.

[2] Bishop v. Pentland, 7 Barn. & C. 214, 219, 1 Man. & R. 49, 6 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 6, 31 R. R. 177. See and remains until cut away;[3] or where a vessel, being forced by stress of weather and leaking takes ground, founders on making port and is fixed there;[4] or where having suffered the loss of her anchors and masts she is taken in tow by sailors and placed on the bank, where she lies over on her side for several tides.[5] So also if she is forced upon a rock and is there fixed even though for only about fifteen minutes;[6] or where being necessary to draw off the water to repair artificial inland navigation the vessel grounds on piles not known to be there;[7] or where for the common safety she slips her cables and under sail enters a tide harbor at low water, and is grounded and floats only about eight days during the month;[8] or where she springs a leak by running upon an anchor upon entering a harbor of necessity, and upon being moored she is warped higher up to prevent sinking and takes the ground.[9] It is not a stranding if a ship strikes and bilges and passes without stopping;[10] nor where she strikes a rock and remains there about a minute and a half;[11] nor where she takes ground in a tide harbor on the ebbing of the tide, either after being moved or while entering, this being incident to the ordinary course of navigation.[12] If the policy insures against injury resulting in liability while vessels are in tow it does not extend to stranding resulting from negligently cutting the hawser and sending the tow adrift or abandoning her.[13] Where a vessel, seaworthy at the commencement of her voyage, would have completed it in safety except for delays caused by stranding causing her boilers to develop leaks, the policy is not invalidated as stranding is a peril covered by the policy.[14] Again, a wind, which is strong enough to break a rope

Carruthers v. Sydebotham, 4 Maule & S. 77, 16 R. R. 392.

[3] Dobson v. Bolton, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *240.

[4] Mitchell v. Calder, 1 Shaw & D. 276, 298.

[5] De Mattos v. Saunders, 7 L. R. Com. P. 570, 27 L. T. 120, 20 W. R. 801, 1 Asp. M. C. 377.

[6] Baker v. Towry, 1 Stark. 436, 18 R. R. 803.

[7] Rayner v. Godmond, 5 Barn. & A. 225, 24 R. R. 335.

[8] Corcoran v. Gurney, 1 El. & B. 456, 22 L. J. Q. B. 113, 17 Jur. 1152, 1 W. R. 129, 93 R. R. 232.

[9] Barrow v. Bell, 4 Barn. & C. 736, 7 Dowl. & R. 244, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 47, 28 R. R. 468.

[10] Lake v. Columbus Ins. Co. 13 Ohio, 48, 42 Am. Dec. 188.

[11] MacDougle v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 1 Stark. 130, 4 Maule & S. 503, 4 Camp. 283, 16 R. R. 532.

[12] Hearne v. Edmunds, 1 Brod. & B. 388, 4 Moore, 15, 21 R. R. 660; Magnus v. Buttemer, 21 L. J. Com. P. 119, 11 Com. B. 876, 16 Jur. 480, 87 R. R. 795; Kingsford v. Marshall, 8 Bing. 458, 1 Moore & S. 657, 1 L. J. C. P. 135, 34 R. R. 756.

[13] Cahill v. Standard Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. 124 N. Y. Supp. 496, 139 App. Div. 780, aff'd 204 N. Y. 190, 97 N. E. 486, 41 Ins. L. J. 773.

[14] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co. 157 Fed. 625, 87 C. C. A. 14, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

connecting a barge with a steamer, and causes the latter to strand, comes under the term "stress of weather" in a policy containing the clause "that no claim will be made for loss, damage or expense resulting from stranding or grounding, unless caused by stress of weather;" and it is not necessary to constitute "stress of weather" that the wind in such case should be a tornado or extraordinary or unusual in the section where the stranding occurred.[14a]

§ 2818. Sue and labor clause: rescue clause: marine risk.—The object of this clause was to enable the assured to do that which it was formerly assumed he could not do without losing his right to abandon; that is, to take every measure necessary for the preservation and recovery of the property, and this it is his duty to do under the stipulation, the underwriters being bound to contribute to the charges under a Lloyds' policy, where there are several subscriptions, "each one according to the rate and quality of his sum herein assured." [15] Under the suing and laboring clause the underwriters are liable for a proportion of any reasonable expenses incurred in preserving the property from the operation of the perils insured against,[16] and for expenses incurred in attempting [14a] Huntington, Ashland & Big Sandy Transportation Co. v. Western Assur. Co. (Transportation Co. v. Western Assur. Co.) 61 W. Va. 324, 57 S. E. 140.

As to rights and liabilities under contract to release stranded vessel, see Klauck v. Federal Ins. Co. 115 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 131 App. Div. 519.

[15] One form is as follows: "In case of any loss or misfortune resulting from any peril insured against, the party insured hereby engages for himself or themselves, his or their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labor, and travel, and use all reasonable and proper means for the security, preservation, relief, and recovery of the property insured, or any part thereof, and also to use all proper and legal means to recover, through general average or otherwise, from any parties interested in hull, freight, or cargo, either or all sums due to the vessel or its owners on account of sacrifices, losses, or expenses incurred for the general safety or common good, to the charges whereof this company will contribute in proportion as the sum insured is to the whole sum at risk, nor shall the acts of the insured or insurers in recovering, saving, and preserving the property insured in case of disaster be considered as a waiver or an acceptance of abandonment:" See Mitchell v. Edie, 1 Term Rep. 608, 1 R. R. 318, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 132; Kidtson v. Empire Marine Ins. Co. L. R, 1 Com. P. 535, L. R. 2 Com. P. 357, 36 L. J. C. P. 156, 12 Jur. (N. S.) 665, 16 L. T. 119, 286, 15 W. R. 769, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 247, per Willis, J.; Booth v. Gair, 33 L. J. Com. P. 99, 15 C. B. (N. S.) 291, 9 Jur. (N. S.) 1326, 9 L. T. 286, 12 W. R. 186. The master's duty is not only to navigate the ship in favorable weather, but it is his duty in adverse weather inducing shipwreck to exert himself to save as much of the ship and cargo as he can. This a part of his bounden duty in his character as seaman of that ship: The Neptune, 1 Hagg, Adm. 227, 236, per Lord Stowell.

[16] Cory v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14.

to recover the property in addition to the payment of a total loss;[17] So insurers of the cargo of a vessel against loss by a collision with ice, under a policy containing a sue and labor clause, are liable for the cost of moving the cargo overland, when, the vessel having been delayed by low water in ascending a river to its destination until formation of ice compelled laying it up for the winter, it was moved with the consent of the underwriter to avoid the effect of the ice upon its breaking up in the spring, and the goods, being perishable, could not have been otherwise preserved.[18] The cost of getting boats which are part of a vessel's cargo from the point where she is wrecked to a place of safety may be recovered under a marine insurance policy upon them, although they are not injured by the disaster, where the policy requires insured to labor to secure the property insured, and binds the insurer to contribute to the expense thereof in proportion as the sum insured is to the whole sum at risk while the policy covers the whole value of the property.[19] And liability of insurer of the cargo of a steamer is not destroyed by the fact that, to reach its destination on the course of a river, the cargo is transferred and divided between a smaller steamer and a barge. And the expense of such transportation is within the sue and labor clause.[20] One adjusting the liability of an underwriter for expense of moving a cargo overland to avoid a threatened peril may properly consider the expense vouchers, the question whether or not the goods have been exposed to a peril covered by the sue and labor clause of the policy, and whether insured properly incurred expenses in averting the loss, and, if so, what.[1] But expenses incurred in defending an insured tug in a suit to establish its liability are not within the sue and labor clause where said tug is merely insured against liability for loss or damage to its tows by collision or stranding.[2] And under this clause

[17] Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283. See Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 21 Pick. (38 Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Providence & Stonington Steam Ship Co. v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. 559, 562.

[18] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co. 157 Fed. 627, 87 C. C. A. 14, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

On right to recover under "sue and labor" clause in policy of marine insurance for moving cargo overland, see note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

[19] Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. Nome Beach Lighthouse & Transportation Co. 133 Fed. 636, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1095.

[20] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co. 157 Fed. 625, 87 C. C. A. 14, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

[1] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co. 157 Fed. 625, 87 C. C. A. 14, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

[2] Munson v. Standard Marine Ins. Co. 156 Fed. 44, 84 C. C. A. 210, 209 U. S. 543, 52 L. ed. 919, 28 Sup. Ct. 570.

assurers are not liable where there is no necessity to defend safeguard or recover property; as in case where expense is unnecessarily incurred in employing a tug in searching for boats reported adrift, which had not in fact gone adrift but were tied up in a safe place.[3] The clause has references to charges not covered by the insurance, and where expenditures are incurred to repair losses caused by the risks insured against, such as for temporary repairs to make the vessel seaworthy, she being safe in port, these are not covered.[4] Nor is insured bound to defend an attempt to condemn property captured, but he may abandon on notice thereof.[5] The question is whether such reasonable and proper means were used for the safety, care, preservation, and recovery of the property as a prudent uninsured owner would have used under the circumstances, and not whether all the care was used that possibly could have been exercised, or whether the plan pursued was the best one that could have been adopted.[6] In the case of memorandum articles of one species, such as hides, the underwriters are not liable for salvage under the sue and labor clause, unless perhaps an actual loss of the cargo may have been prevented by the salvage.[7] Although where there was a partial loss under the ten per cent, excepted by the warranty free from average, and expenses were incurred to save the goods under the sue and labor clause, the insurers were held liable for such expenses.[8] Nor is the liability that of particular average under such clause.[9] Where the insured was obligated to labor for the safeguard and recovery of a steamboat in case of accident, the expense incurred in launching the boat, which has run upon a bar or flat and is in danger of loss, was held to be at the charge of the insurer.[10] Insurers have no right by virtue of this clause to take possession of the ship and make permanent repairs; the clause has reference only to relief from present peril and temporary care,[11] although if the assured fails to recover and repair, the insurers after the disaster may do so.[12] Neither ex-

[3] Barney Dumping Boat Co. v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 14 U. S. C. C. A. 408, 67 Fed. 341.

[4] Alexandre v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 253. See Lohre v. Atchison (Aitchison v. Lohre, 3 Q. B. D. 558, 4 App. Cas. 755, 764, 49 L. J. Q. B. 123, 41 L. T. 323, 28 W. R. 1, 4 Asp. M. C. 168) 2 Q. B. D. 501, 509.

[5] Gardere v. Columbian Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 514.

[6] Franklin Ins. Co. v. Cobb, 2 Cinc. Supr. Ct. 87.

[7] Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 415, 3 L. ed. 389.

[8] Shultz v. Ohio Ins. Co. 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 336.

[9] Kidston v. Empire Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 1 Com. P. 535, 2 C. P. 357, 36 L. J. C. P. 156, 12 Jur. (N. S.) 665, 16 L. T. 119, 286, 15 W. R. 769, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 247.

[10] Dix v. Union Ins. Co. 23 Mo. 57.

[11] Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, 2 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 322, Fed. Cas. No. 5,487.

[12] Cincinnati Mutual Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Ohio, 211.

penses for ascertaining the amount of the loss nor expenses of refitting the property for market are covered.[13] Expenses incurred in saving or preserving sea damaged goods whereby a loss to the insurers is diminished is covered by this clause.[14] The insurers have the undoubted right to save and restore the vessel and render it certain that there is no total loss, and if they act in good faith they are entitled to reimbursement for their expenses out of the vessel or the insured under a rescue clause giving the underwriters the right "to interfere and save the vessel" in case of loss or misfortune, and in case the insurance is "against total loss only, and no claim for the same is sustained, then the whole of such expenditure and the amount paid or incurred by insurers should be a lien upon the vessel, and recoverable against the vessel or insured at the option of the insurers." [15] An insurer of the cargo of a vessel which agrees to have it removed from the vessel to avoid a threatened peril after being notified of the cost, cannot escape payment of the cost by claiming that the expenditure was disproportionate to the interests of the case.[16] Where cattlemen supplied by the shipper refused to work and the master deviated to discharge them and supply others and expenses are incurred solely to prevent the mortality of cattle and incidentally the loss of freight which was insured, insurers are liable for the expenses incurred in such deviation.[17] The sue and labor clause does not impose any obligation on insurer to recover the vessel and repair her. It has a right, however, for the protection of their interests to have the vessel renewed and repaired.[18]

In another case a vessel was insured for a voyage, "against war risk only as excluded by the f. c. and s. clause in marine policies, including risk of mines, torpedoes and bombs." All claims arising from delay were excluded, and the usual sue and labor clause was also in the policy. On her voyage from Raumo to Garston she was stopped by German war vessels and put into Grimstadt where she discharged her cargo, subsequently they chartered two vessels and reshipped the cargo to England. A claim was made for the [13] Cory v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14.

[14] Kidston v. Empire Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 1 Com. P. 535, 2 C. P. 357, 36 L. J. C. P. 156, 12 Jur. (N. S.) 665, 16 L. T. 119, 286, 15 W. R. 769, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 247.

[15] Carr v. Security Ins. Co. 109 N. Y. 504, 17 N. E. 369, per Andrews, J.

[16] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co. 157 Fed. 625, 87 C. C. A. 14, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

[17] Tweedie Trading Co. v. Western Assur. Co. 179 Fed. 103, 102 C. C. A. 397, 39 Ins. L. J. 1343, aff'g 168 Fed. 962.

[18] Searles v. Western Assur. Co. 88 Miss. 260, 40 So. 866.

expenses of the storage of the cargo and the reshipping, said claim was allowed, it being also declared that the clause excluding all claims from delay in any way, affected the sue and labor clause. There was also a claim that the goods were safe when they were landed and stored at Grimstadt and that the assured had sued and labored to avert a loss which was not covered by the policy, but the claim was not sustained, the court declaring that: "If the loss was incurred by the perils insured against—namely, war risk—it covered particular average loss as well as total loss; and it seems to me there was at all events a partial loss here. . . . On the evidence, however, I think that if the plaintiffs had acted with reasonable diligence they would have had the ship ready to load the cargo for carriage . . . at a lower rate of freight than they in fact paid. The proportion of the expenses of storage and reshipping which they are entitled to recover from the defendant must therefore be calculated upon that footing." [18a]

[18a] Wilson Bros. Bobbin Co. v. Green, 86 L. J. K. B. 713, [1917] 1 K. B. 860. As to the last point Bray, J., said: "Counsel relied mainly on the case of Great Indian Peninsular Railway v. Saunders (31 L. J. Q. B. 206, 2 B. & S. 266, 9 Jur. N. S. 198, 6 L. T. 297, 10 W. R. 520, 127 R. R. 363, 30 L. J. Q. B. 218, 1 B. & S. 41, 124 R. R. 446). That case has to be very carefully considered. The facts were that the plaintiffs shipped at London for Bombay certain rails, 'freight for the said goods to be paid here, ship lost or not.' They paid the freight, and by a policy in the common form insured for the voyage the rails value at 4,500*l* 'warranted free from particular average, unless the ship be stranded, sunk or burned.' Soon after sailing the ship was, in consequence of damage by perils of the sea, compelled to put back into Plymouth in such a state as not to be worth repairing. The rails were landed and sent by the plaintiffs to London, and thence in other vessels to Bombay, the plaintiffs having to pay 825*l* as freight. It was held that this extra freight was particular average, and therefore within the warranty, and consequently was not recoverable from the underwriters, and further, that the plaintiffs could not recover the amount under the suing and laboring clause. Mr. Justice Blackburn, in giving the judgment of the court of Queen's Bench, said (30 L. J. Q. B. at p. 222, 1 B. & S. at p. 52): 'It was, however, further argued, by Mr. James, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover under the clause which authorizes the insured to sue and labor for the preservation of the subject matter of the insurance. It is not necessary to decide whether an underwriter on a policy against total loss only is, under this clause, liable for expenses incurred by the assured for the purpose of rescuing the subject matter of an insurance from a state of peril which might have resulted in a total loss but did not. There are reasons both for and against this stated by Mr. Phillips in his Treatise on Insurance (5th ed.) sec. 1777; and the question seems never to have been actually decided. But in the present case it does not arise. The expenses here were incurred for the purpose of forwarding the subject matter of insurance to its destination, at a time when the iron was not in any peril of total loss, either actual or constructive. Had the insured chosen, in-

§ 2819. Telegraph cable.—An insurance upon the Atlantic telegraph cable to "cover and include the successful working of the cable when laid and all and every danger, accident, and risk that may be incurred on sea or on land in all and any boat, ship, and craft whatsoever and wheresoever until the final, complete, and successful laying" thereof from shore to shore, does not render the insurers liable for a loss not caused by any mechanical action of the sea, but by the chemical action of the sea water, owing to the copper wire being insufficiently protected, but does cover a loss of a portion thereof by a peril of the sea during an attempt to lay it. This in the former case may be ascribed to natural causes consequent upon inherent defects.[19] In another case, where the policy covered, "in addition to all perils and casualties specified," "every risk and contingency attending the conveyance and successful laying of the cable," it was held that it was the adventure, the successful laying of the cable, that was insured, and not merely the cable itself, and that insurers were responsible for the breaking of the cable during an attempt to remedy defective portions.[20]

§ 2820. Tenant's liability to pay rent: release of insurer.—If a company insures a tenant against loss from liability to pay rent

stead of paying this extra freight, to sell the rails in England, as he might have done if he pleased, he could have made no claim on the underwriters; for it would not have been a constructive total loss, according to Rosetto v. Gurney [1851] (20 L. J. C. P. 257, 11 C. B. 176, 15 Jur. 1177, 17 L. T. O. S. 242, 87 R. R. 629), unless the amount of the extra freight exceeded the value of the goods when forwarded, which is not the case here; and an actual total loss is out of the question. It seems to us that the plaintiffs here cannot in any way recover, unless we deprive the warranty of the effect which it was intended to have. We therefore give judgment for the defendant.' Counsel for the plaintiffs said that since Sanday's case (British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. v. Sanday, 85 L. J. K. B. 550, [1916] 1 A. C. 650, 114 L. T. 521, 21 Com. Cas. 154, 60 S. J. 253, 32 L. T. 266) that was no longer law. I do not think Sanday's case (85 L. J. K. B. 550, [1916] 1 A. C. 650) laid down new law at all, but merely enunciated what was the law long before the passing of the marine insurance act, 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41)—namely, that what was insured in a policy of this kind on goods was their safe arrival at the port of destination. The unanimous judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in Great Indian Peninsular Railway v. Saunders (30 L. J. Q. B. 218, 1 B. & S. 41) was affirmed by the Court of Exchequer Chamber (31 L. J. Q. B. 206, 2 B. & S. 266) and I cannot at Nisi Prius say that it was wrongly decided. In my opinion, however, it was clearly distinguishable. It was decided upon the ground that the loss was a particular average loss, and the policy contained a warranty that it was free from particular average. The policy in this case contains no such clause."

[19] Paterson v. Harris, 1 Best & S. 336, 30 L. R. Q. J. 361, 31 L. J. Q. B. 277, 7 Jur. (N. S.) 1276, 9 Jur. (N. S.) 173, 2 Best & S. 814.

[20] Wilson v. Jones, 36 L. J. Ex. 78, 4 Hurl. & C. 221, L. R. 2 Ex. 139, 15 L. T. 669, 15 W. R. 435, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 299.

while the building, owing to fire, remains uninhabitable, a re-entry of the landlord to rebuild after a fire, under an agreement that the tenant shall continue to pay rent, releases the insurer, for the right to collect rent ceases upon re-entry, and the company is not holden by any agreement to the contrary.[1] Insurance against loss by reason of having to pay rent for a building under a lease while it is untenantable by reason of fire, will cover the time during which the landlord is in possession for the purpose of rebuilding the burned building under an agreement with the tenant that such possession shall not effect the tenant's liability for rent under the lease until the completion of the new building.[2] An insurance company's letter stating that it could not, by reason of the landlord entering for the purpose of rebuilding, be discharged from liability on a policy insuring a tenant against liability for rent in case the leased buildings are burned, and that such defense would not be raised, will not estop the company from asserting its discharge from further liability by reason of an entry by the landlord under an agreement with the tenant to continue the payment of the rent.[3]

§ 2821. Theft: fire risk: burglary or automobile risks.—(a) Theft: fire risk.—If insured, owing to imminent danger to the goods from fire, is justified in their removal, and uses the caution which a prudent uninsured man would reasonably be expected to use under the circumstances, or if he uses his utmost exertions to protect and secure the property at, during, and after the fire, or if in compliance with the stipulations of the policy he labors for the protection and safety of the goods, loss by theft or larceny of the goods falls upon the insurers, even though the goods are stolen after the fire is extinguished, such theft being directly occasioned by the fire; the precise time when the theft occurred is not material.[4] But

[1] Royal Ins. Co. v. Heller, 133 Pa. St. 152, 7 L.R.A. 411, 19 Atl. 349, 47 Phila. Leg. Intel. 202.

[2] Heller v. Royal Ins. Co. 177 Pa. 262, 34 L.R.A. 600, 35 Atl. 726.

[3] Heller v. Royal Ins. Co. 133 Pa. 152, 7 L.R.A. 411, 19 Atl. 349.

[4] Kentucky.—Leiber v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 6 Bush (Ky.) 639, 99 Am. Dec. 695.

Louisiana.—Talaman v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 16 La. Ann. 426.

Maine.—Witherell v. Maine Ins. Co. 49 Me. 200.

Missouri.—Newmark v. Liverpool-Lancashire Fire & Life Ins. Co. 30 Mo. 160, 77 Am. Dec. 608.

Oklahoma.—Farmers & Merchants Ins. Co. v. Cuff, 29 Okla. 106, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 892, 116 Pac. 435.

Pennsylvania.—Independent Mutual Ins. Co. v. Agnew, 34 Pa. St. 96, 75 Am. Dec. 638, aff'g 3 Phila. 195.

England.—Thompson v. Montreal Ins. Co. 6 U. C. Q. B. 319.

See also Tilton v. Hamilton Fire Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 367; Whithurst v. Fayetteville Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Jones L. 51 (N. C.) 352.

Thieves; marine risk, see § 2804 herein.

such loss by theft must result as one of the consequences of the fire.[5] So insurers are liable for stolen goods while being removed at the instance of the company's agent to avoid impending loss by fire.[6] But insurer is not liable for property stolen during its removal from a burning building merely because the fire warden advised its removal.[7] And if it is expressly stipulated that loss by theft is an excepted risk recovery is precluded in cases of the first mentioned character.[8]

(b) Construction: burglary: theft, etc., automobile risk.—The rule of construction against assurer is applied to a policy insuring against loss or damage caused by theft, robbery or pilferage of an automobile,[9] also to a policy covering loss by burglary,[10] or theft.[11] It is declared, however, that even though it may be conceded that where a policy is of doubtful tenor that interpretation which is more exacting should be applied against insurer, still where there is no ambiguity or uncertainty the courts may not make a new contract under the guise of construction; for when the parties to a contract adopt a provision which contravenes no principle of public policy, and contains no element of ambiguity, the courts have no right to relieve one of them from disadvantageous terms which he has actually made by a process of interpretation and this is asserted in connection with the construction of the clause "visible marks, actual force and violence" and the words "forcible and violent entrance" etc., in a burglary policy.[12] Nor will the rule of construction against insurer apply to a policy insuring against loss where the entry into a safe is made by the use of tools or explosives applied directly to the outside of a safe, so as to make it cover theft by the use of force to a cash box on the inside of said safe when there are no doubtful, conflicting or ambiguous terms in relation thereto, and there is therefore no room for construction.[13]

[5] Farmers & Merchants Ins. Co. v. Cuff, 29 Okla. 106, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892, 116 Pac. 435.

[6] Leiber v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 6 Bush (Ky.) 639, 99 Am. Dec. 695.

[7] Fernandez v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 17 La. Ann. 131.

[8] Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Cuff, 29 Okla. 106, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892, 116 Pac. 435.

Loss by theft: excepted risk, see § 2596 herein.

[9] Federal Ins. Co. v. Hiter, 164 Ky. 743, L.R.A.1915E, 575, 176 S. W. 210.

[10] First National Bank of Monrovia v. Maryland Casualty Co. 162 Cal. 61, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1170, 121 Pac. 321.

[11] Duschenes v. National Surety Co. of N. Y. 139 N. Y. Supp. 881, 79 Misc. 232.

[12] Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co. 207 N. Y. 162, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561, 100 N. E. 716, 42 Ins. L. J. 323, Hiscock, J., s. c. 128 N. Y. Supp. 553, 143 App. Div. 362, 40 Ins. L. J. 1301, s. c. 124 N. Y. Supp. 905, 39 Ins. L. J. 968. See also First National Bank of Monrovia v. Maryland Casualty Co. 162 Cal. 61, 69, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1170, 121 Pac. 321.

[13] Frankel v. Massachusetts Bond-

(c) Burglary generally.—If the policy indemnifies against burglary from premises of the occupant of a fourth floor of a specified building the protection is limited thereby and does not extend to the entire building;[14] and this would also apply as to a loss dependent upon the requirement that a private watchman be kept within the premises.[15] And property in a safe which it is evident from the policy terms was intended to be covered as a risk will be held protected where the doubtful clause in this respect has reference only to the amount of insurance carried on the property in the safe and the premium rate thereon.[16] An insurer under a burglary policy is liable and no "change in the conditions and circumstances of the risk" is effected by the employment by assured of workmen in relaying floors and painting his house without insurer's written consent, where his servants remained in the house and assured himself or some member of his family slept therein except on Saturday or Sunday nights when they were in the country.[17]

(d) Burglary: "forcible and violent entrance," etc., construed.—The New York court of appeals in construing the words "forcible and violent entrance upon the premises or exit therefrom" in a policy insuring against direct loss by burglary of any merchandise, etc., declares that in thus specifying by the use of said words the particular manner in which the "burglary" must be committed the language of the policy should receive its ordinary and common meaning, and that in order to constitute burglary under this clause there must be an entrance or an exit upon or from the premises which is accompanied by such acts as would constitute force or violence in the ordinary acceptation of those terms rather than the somewhat technical force by breaking which would satisfy legal definitions; that is, that it is doubtful whether the meaning of said words "forcible and violent entrance," etc., is to be measured by reference to the meaning of such words as "break" and "forcibly break" as those terms have been construed in defining the crime

ing & Ins. Co. — Mo. App. —, 177 S. W. 775, 46 Ins. L. J. 392.

[14] Axe v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 239 Pa. 569, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 574, 86 Atl. 1095. Compare Michaels v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 128 Mo. App. 18, 105 S. W. 783, considered under § 1745 herein.

[15] Axe v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 239 Pa. 569, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 574, 86 Atl. 1095. As to employment of watchman, see § 2112 herein.

[16] Casner v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 116 Mo. App. 354, 91 S. W. 1001.

[17] Graf v. National Surety Co. 131 N. Y. Supp. 548, 146 App. Div. 782, 41 Ins. L. J. 184.

As to alterations and repairs, see §§ 2191 et seq. 1708, herein.

of burglary, and which construction demanded only a very small degree of force in entering premises.

While the above statement is said by the court to be only important, if at all, as bearing upon another following clause which exempted assurer from liability unless there should be "visible marks upon the premises of actual force and violence used in making entry into said premises and exit therefrom," nevertheless said assertion is entitled to weight and it is accordingly presented as it stands having in view the discussion of this point in this same case in the lower courts, having also in view the distinction between real rather than technical force made by the court in applying the aforesaid words "actual force and violence" used in making entry into or exit from the premises words are thereby employed "whose meaning is not easily satisfied by that somewhat theoretical force which has been held to meet the demands of legal definitions of burglary, but which rather acquires substantial violence." This case turned upon the point of construction of this entire clause narrowed down to the determination of whether there were visible marks upon the premises of such force and violence and upon the evidence it was held that insurer was not liable.[18]

(e) Burglary: what losses not covered.—Where the loss is caused by the use of tools on a safe and not on an inner steel burglar proof chest which is opened by manipulating the combination, recovery is precluded under a policy provision that no recovery shall be had for a loss of money from such inner chest unless it shall have been abstracted therefrom after entry into both the safe and the chest by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon.[19] So where the indemnity is for direct loss of money in current use, bullion securities, uncanceled United States government postoffice or revenue stamps, in consequence of the felonious abstraction of the same from the safe by any person who shall have "made entry into such safe or safes by the use of tools or explosives applied directly to the outside thereof," a loss is not covered where the contents of an inside cash box were taken without the tools or explosives being applied thereto until after the whole frame work of the interior of the safe had been removed to an upper floor where the money box was broken into and no tools or explosives were applied to the outer doors having the combination lock and none were applied to the middle doors; nor in such case is assured aided by the use of the words "safe or safes" where the terms of the policy evidence that only one safe was intended to be covered by the clause as to the use of tools and explosives applied directly to the outside.[20] In another case the policy indemnified against all loss by burglary of money, bullion, bank notes, etc., in consequence of the felonious abstraction thereof from the safe or safes of a bank and also for all loss of said property feloniously or violently or forcibly taken from that part of the banking room partitioned off by suitable guard rails, etc., and provided for the exclusive use of the officers and clerks of the bank, etc., in the transaction of its business, but it is stipulated that insurer is not to be liable where there is an inner steel burglar proof chest unless the money is taken therefrom by an entry effected into it by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon; nor for any loss by any robbery whatever not occasioned by forcible, violent, and felonious robbery commonly known as a "hold up," nor at all unless the regular working force is at work in the bank. It was held that insurer was not liable when after the money was put into the inner chest of the safe and after the bank's working force had left, there was a holdup at night of a bank officer who was required to open the bank and safe, and the money was abstracted therefrom; and the word "tools" as used in said policy means burglars tools and explosives.[1]

[18] Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co. of Balt. 207 N. Y. 162, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 561, 100 N. E. 716, 42 Ins. L. J. 323, rev'g judgment below (above text is substantially the language of Hiscock, J.) s. c. 128 N. Y. Supp. 553, 143 App. Div. 362, 40 Ins. L. J. 1301 (wherein Code secs. 498, 499, as to burglary and the meaning of "break" therein is fully discussed, as is also common law burglary), which affirms 124 N. Y. Supp. 905, 39 Ins. L. J. 968. See § 3794 herein.

[19] First National Bank of Monrovia v. Maryland Casualty Co. 162 Cal. 61, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1170, 121 Pac. 321.

(f) Burglary: when recovery limited.—If there is a limitation of the amount for which insurers assume liability and in addition thereto there is an annexed special agreement excluding loss in excess of a specified sum on any one article, and this limitation is very much less than that stated in the policy, recovery will be excluded for loss in excess of the sum stipulated in such special agreement even though it is admitted that the property taken by a burglar was of a very much greater value.[2]

(g) Theft, etc., of automobile: what losses covered.—It constitutes a conversion, within a policy insuring against loss or theft, robbing or pilfering, of an automobile, if a person borrows it and [20] Franckel v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. — Mo. App. —, 177 S. W. 775, 46 Ins. L. J. 392.

[1] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ballard County Bank, 134 Ky. 354, 120 S. W. 301, 38 Ins. L. J. 934. As to forcible entry by use of tools and explosives directly upon safe and on the outside, see also Britt v. Metropolitan Surety Co. 113 N. Y. Supp. 476, s. c. 115 N. Y. Supp. 1126, 130 App. Div. 901.

[2] Wormser v. General Accident Assurance Corp. Ltd. 87 N. Y. Supp. 974, 94 App. Div. 213.

fails to return it; and insurer is liable to the extent that such conversion and wrongful use diminishes the value of the property.[3]

(h) Theft, etc., of automobile: what losses not covered.—The taking of an automobile under a claim of ownership by a former owner is not within a policy against direct loss by burglary, theft or larceny.[4] Where the elements of what constitute a larceny of a car must be determined by common law principles, a felonious intent is included and must be shown in order to justify a recovery against insurer; and while such inference of felonious intent may be created by proof of taking by trick or device, still if insured merely resorted to a trick or device to obtain a car to the possession of which he honestly believes he is entitled the above inference will be rebutted and under such circumstances there can be no recovery notwithstanding insured has been thus wrongfully deprived of its possession, the felonious intent in taking not being proven.[5] So under another decision only intentional stealing is covered by a policy on an automobile indemnifying against theft, etc.[6] So, inasmuch as an intent to steal is an essential element to a conviction for theft, robbery, or pillage, recovery is precluded where a car is wrongfully taken with an intent merely to use and return the same and while so using it the taker wrecks, and abandons said machine where it is broken and wrecked.[7] And the taking of a machine after working hours for a joy ride by an employee of a shop where it had been left for repairs with intent to return it, and, returning it damaged, does not constitute larceny for which a recovery can be had under the policy for there must be a criminal intent to permanently deprive the owner of his property in order to constitute larceny and every essential of that crime must exist and be proven.[8] And where insured puts an automobile in the possession of a garage keeper in the expectation of receiving a certain amount therefor upon the sale thereof, he passes over the dominion of said car and if said garage keeper disposes of the car and appropriates the proceeds of the sale to his own use and benefit

[3] Federal Ins. Co. v. Hiter, 164 Ky. 743, L.R.A.1915E, 575, 176 S. W. 210.

[4] Bigus v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. 145 Mo. App. 170, 129 S. W. 982.

[5] Rush v. Boston Ins. Co. 150 N. Y. Supp. 457, 45 Ins. L. J. 245.

[6] Staht v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 90 Wash. 576, 156 Pac. 557.

[7] Michigan Commercial Ins. Co. v. Wills, 57 Ind. App. 256, 106 N. E. 725 (Hottel, J., also said: "We find no decisions in our own state where this precise question has been decided," and quotes from Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Wimbish, 12 Ga. App. 712, 78 S. E. 265, as directly in point).

[8] Valley Mercantile Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 49 Mont. 430, L.R.A.1915B, 327, 143 Pac. 559.

there is not such a theft, larceny or pilferage as to render insurer liable.[9]

(i) Burglary, larceny, etc.: pleading.—The allegations of a complaint that the safe was broken into and robbed and that the burglars drilled into and damaged the safe worth a specified sum and that the contents, describing them as United States postage stamps, postal funds and money order funds, were feloniously taken therefrom is sufficient on demurrer to render insurer liable under a policy insuring against direct loss by burglary or larceny of such property "after entry into such safe by such burglars effected by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon" and "for direct loss by damage caused to said" safe "by such burglarious entry or any attempt thereat;" and even if such petition were defective it is cured by issue raised by pleading over, a reply thereto, proper instructions to the jury and a finding as a fact that the safe was entered by means of tools and explosives, especially so where the evidence is sufficient to support such finding.[10] And where a person obtained from assured by misrepresentations jewelry which he never returned, an averment in an action on the policy is sufficient where it shows that during the term thereof jewelry of the value of over a specified amount was without assured's consent taken from her apartment by a certain person who had surreptitiously and fraudulently obtained access thereto and that the same had never been recovered.[11] But in an action to recover under a policy covering loss by burglary, larceny, or theft, an allegation that the property stolen was that covered by such policy is essential to the cause of action, the failure to make such averment is fatal.[12] Under a burglary policy, attempting to cheat and defraud insurer by exaggerating the amount of the claim is new matter which may be set up and if established by competent proof, will constitute a defense to an action to recover on the policy.[13]

§ 2822. Title insurance: same, mortgagee: defects in mortgagor's title.—As we have elsewhere stated contracts of title guaranty are [9] Siegel v. Union Assur. Soc. of L. 153 N. Y. Supp. 662, 90 Misc. 550, 46 Ins. L. J. 228 (Personal Property L. consol. L. c. 41; L. 1909, c. 45, L. 1911, c. 571, sec. 100, as to goods delivered on sale or return construed).

[10] General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp. Ltd. v. Stratton, 165 Ky. 754, 178 S. W. 1060, 46 Ins. L. J. 767.

As to evidence: burglary insurance, see § 3794 herein.

[11] Smith v. National Surety Co. 77 Oreg. 17, 149 Pac. 1040.

[12] Kricki v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. Ltd. 143 N. Y. Supp. 750, 82 Misc. 400, 43 Ins. L. J. 153.

[13] Spingarn v. National Surety Co. of N. Y. 134 N. Y. Supp. 817, 76 Misc. 248, 41 Ins. L. J. 1125, s. c. 136 N. Y. Supp. 1148, 152 App. Div. 886, see 131 N. Y. Supp. 721.

those of insurance and of indemnity,[14] the sole object or purpose of which is to cover possibilities of loss through defects that may cloud or invalidate titles; to protect or save insured harmless from loss consequent upon defects, liens or encumbrances that may burden his title when it is taken:[15] but this protection does not relate to matters that may arise during a specified term commencing after the policy is issued, for the insurance or risks end where those under other kinds of insurance begin. There is therefore no liability as a general rule when insured obtains a good title for thereupon the covenant of insurer has been fulfilled and there exists no liability.[16]

Beyond what is above stated it is difficult in this class of insurance contracts to formulate any governing rule by reason of the various contingencies and policy conditions applicable thereto. What follows under this section is, therefore, necessarily confined to statements of points raised and issues determined under the policy stipulations and circumstances in particular cases.

Loss, within the meaning of a title insurance policy, occurs while one in possession, claiming a fee under a will, is subsequently deprived of a half interest in the property because the title under the will proves defective and the true title appears to be only a half interest by descent, even though insured never owned the title he supposed he did, and which was insured.[17]

Where the contract for a sale of lands required the vendee to accept the premises subject to any liens for assessments which should accrue subsequent to a specified day, and a title guaranty company which insured the title for the vendee in the enumeration of liens for which it would not be liable, did not include the lien of an assessment which accrued after the day set for the contract of sale for the assumption of liens by the vendee, the insurer is not liable for the moneys paid by the vendee to satisfy said lien, for under the circumstances the vendee suffered no loss but only met the obligations which he assumed under the contract of sale.[18] And if the vendee refuses to take title until certain assessments other than those specified in the policy are paid such assessments must be paid or the premises have been sold in enforcement of the same before insured can maintain suit upon the policy.[19] But where a policy by a schedule attached thereto shows what liens are not within its pro-

[14] See §§ 27i, 339g herein.

[15] See § 13 herein.

[16] Trenton Potteries Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. 176 N. Y. 65, 69, 68 N. E. 132.

[17] Foehrenbach v. German American Title & Trust Co. 217 Pa. 331, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465, 118 Am. St. Rep. 916, 66 Atl. 561.

[18] Empire Development Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. 157 N. Y. Supp. 68, 171 App. Div. 116.

[19] Palliser v. Title Ins. Co. of New York, 115 N. Y. Supp. 545.

tection, that is those liens "which do or may now exist and against which the company does not agree to insure or indemnify," there is an inference therefrom that there was a willingness on assurer's part to assume the risk of any loss by reason of an omitted lien or encumbrance rather than the inference that because a lien was omitted it is practically non-existent.[20]

Encroachments upon the premises for several inches of parts of the adjoining property under a policy insuring the title of real estate against them and renders insurer liable in an amount equal to the difference between the value of the property when purchased with such encroachments and the value which the property would have had without them.[1]

A policy condition that no right of action shall accrue thereunder, "unless the insured has contracted to sell the estate or interest insured, and the title has been declared by a court of last resort of competent jurisdiction defective or unencumbered by reason of a defect or encumbrance for which the company would be liable under this policy," is not available to the insurance company, in an action on the policy, where the land was not only in the actual adverse possession of another at the time the policy issued, but has been absolutely lost by reason of a defect in the insured title.[2] So the fact that one surrenders the possession of property, the title to which has been insured, upon the rendition of an adverse decree, without waiting to be expelled from the property, does not deprive him of his rights of action against insurer.[3] Again, the clause "tenancy of the present occupants," used in the policy as a defect in the title not insured against, does not include the claim of one in actual adverse possession asserting ownership in fee against the insured title, but must be construed as meaning the tenancy which arises through the occupation or temporary possession of the premises by those who are "tenants" in the popular sense of that term.[4] Claims of "tenure" by present occupants excepted in the policy together with liens, encumbrances, etc., not shown by any public record do not include claims resting alone upon adverse possession but covers the record title only, for the word tenure covers any holding from mere possession to the owning of the inheritance

[20] Fidelity Ins. Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Earle, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 449.

[1] Glyn v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. 117 N. Y. Supp. 424.

[2] Place v. St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co. 67 Minn. 126, 64 Am. St. Rep. 404, 69 N. W. 706, 26 Ins. L. J. 809.

[3] Foehrenbach v. German American Title & Trust Co. 217 Pa. 331, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465, 118 Am. St. Rep. 916, 66 Atl. 961.

[4] Place v. St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co. 67 Minn. 126, 64 Am. St. Rep. 404, 69 N. W. 706, 26 Ins. L. J. 809.

although it also signifies the mode by which one estate in land is held.[5]

Where a title insurance company covenanted to indemnify, keep harmless, and insure for a specified period the mortgagee from all loss or damage, not exceeding a certain sum, by reason of defects in the mortgagor's title in the real estate or interest mortgaged, or by reason of liens or encumbrances, and agreeing in case of suit to defend upon notice for and in the mortgagor's name, or pay the claim on which the suit was brought, or pay the insured the amount of liability stipulated, and the insurer undertakes to defend, he must protect the insured through all stages of the actions or proceedings, even after foreclosure sale, or else by timely notice place him in a position to protect himself, and provide him with the requisite information to enable him so to do, and if after notice the insurer defends, this operates as a withdrawal of notice.[6] And if one purchases a fraudulent and forged mortgage on notes on insured under a policy indemnifying it against all loss and damage by reason of defects in the title to the mortgage, said assured must it is held, sustain the loss although it is innocent in the transaction.[7] In a Federal case insurer agreed to indemnify, keep harmless and insure a mortgagee from all loss or damage not to exceed a specified sum, the amount of the mortgage debt, which he or his assigns might sustain by reason of defects in the title to the mortgaged premises, or by reason of liens and encumbrances thereon existing at the policy date. The property was sold to satisfy mechanics' liens upon the property at the date of the policy. Insurer refused to pay said liens or to pay insured the amount bid for the property at the foreclosure sale, which was the amount of the mortgage debt. Insured was compelled to redeem the property from the mechanics' lien sale as a necessary protection to his security and title. The property also provided that the satisfaction or discharge of the mortgage debt, except by foreclosure of the mortgage, should terminate and avoid the policy and release insurer from all liability thereunder. It was held that insurer was liable, and was obligated either to buy the property for the amount bid at the sale, or to redeem it from the sale under the liens and that insured was entitled to recover the amount paid by it for that purpose. The court also refused to sustain assurers' contention that the foreclosure of the [5] Bothin v. California Title Ins. & Trust Co. 153 Cal. 718, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 634, 96 Pac. 500; Civ. Code § 1213, construed.

[6] Quigley v. St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co. 60 Minn. 275, 62 N. W. 287, aff'd 64 Minn. 149, 66 N. W. 364.

[7] Union Trust Co. v. Real Estate Title Ins. & Trust Co. 27 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 187.

mortgaged premises by the mortgagee for the full amount of the mortgage debt canceled said debt as completely as though it had been paid in cash, and that such satisfaction inured to insurer's benefit and absolved it from liability as fully as if the mortgage debt had been extinguished by a cash payment made by the mortgagor.[8]

Inasmuch as a title insurance is solely a contract of indemnity, an insured or plaintiff by declaring thereon is entitled to recover only his actual loss and cannot make said contract one of profit to him.[9] So recovery is limited to the actual damages sustained where the insurance is against all loss not exceeding a specified amount by reason of defects in title.[10] But under proper allegations such damage may be proven as are naturally and legally the consequences presumably resulting from the injury.[11] There must be a specific averment in a declaration upon a title insurance policy setting out that the loss was consequent upon one or more of certain causes, against loss from which the contract guarantees indemnity, where the policy conditions also provide as to the manner in which such losses shall be ascertained.[12] An eviction by a paramount title by due process of law or a disturbance of title or possession under a paramount title equivalent to an eviction must be set out in order to constitute a cause of action upon a covenant in a title insurance policy based upon assured's eviction from the land; it is not sufficient in such case to allege a claim of title or of eviction under an adverse title.[13]

§ 2823. Warehouseman: storage of goods in which assured has no interest: limited liability.—If the policy provides that goods in storage must be specifically and separately insured, and limits the liability of insurer to a loss affecting assured's interest, an assured warehouseman cannot sustain an action for the benefit of merchandise on storage in which assured has no interest, and which the depositors thereof have specifically and separately assured as their own, for the insurers are not liable to the warehouseman therefor, and there can be no contribution, there being no double insurance.[14]

[8] Minnesota Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Drexel, 70 Fed. 194, 17 C. C. A. 56, 36 U. S. App. 50.

[9] Empire Development Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. 157 N. Y. Supp. 68, 171 App. Div. 116.

[10] Palliser v. Title Ins. Co. of New York, 115 N. Y. Supp. 545.

[11] Glyn v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. 117 N. Y. Supp. 424.

[12] Taylor v. New Jersey Title Guarantee & Trust Co. 68 N. J. L. 74, 52 Atl. 281.

[13] Barton v. West Jersey Title & Guaranty Co. 64 N. J. L. 24, 44 Atl. 871.

[14] Home Ins. Co. v. Gwathmey, 82 Va. 923, 1 S. E. 209.

Carrier: liability of warehouseman, see § 2750 herein.

Goods on shore or in warehouses awaiting shipment; temporarily land-

A warehouseman will be liable to a carrier on goods to the extent that it has neglected to effect insurance thereon, where it agrees to receive said goods and to insure the same for the carrier's benefit.[15] But a defect in the warehouse where goods are stored will not render the warehouseman liable for a loss of the goods by fire which is not shown to have resulted from or been in any way connected with the exposure of the goods from such defect.[16]

If it is the custom of a warehouse company to insure oil at its own expense, and the purpose of its organization is to transport store, and insure petroleum, it may effect policies on said property and recover for a loss thereon, even though it is not an owner of the oil insured, there being no representation as to ownership made or required, and the insurers in such case are bound with a knowledge of assured's business and its nature.[17]

§ 2824. Water used to extinguish fire and save property.—The damage for which fire companies are liable is not confined to loss by actual burning and consuming, but they are liable for all losses which are the immediate consequences of fire or burning, or of all losses of which fire is the proximate cause.[18] So where water is ed in government warehouses, etc., see § 1565 herein.

Warehousemen; insurable interest of, see §§ 828, 926 herein.

[15] Deming v. Merchants' Cotton Press & Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89.

See S. E. Olson Co. v. Brady, 76 Minn. 8, 78 N. W. 864; Soule v. Lowenthal, 81 N. Y. Supp. 622, 40 Misc. 186.

[16] Lancaster Mills v. Cotton Press & Storage Co. 89 Tenn. 1, 25 Am. St. Rep. 586, 14 S. W. 317.

Liability of warehouseman for loss of property by fire; generally, see Gulf Compress Co. v. Harrington, 90 Ark. 256, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1205n, 119 S. W. 249; Pope v. Farmers Union & Mill Co. 130 Cal. 139, 53 L.R.A. 673, 62 Pac. 384; Locke v. Wiley, 81 Kan. 443, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1117, 105 Pac. 11; Moses v. Teetors, 64 Kan. 149, 57 L.R.A. 267, 67 Pac. 526; Fleischman v. Southern R. Co. 76 S. Car. 237, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 519, 56 N. E. 974; Same, burden of proof, see Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. Co. v. Hughes, 94 Miss. 242, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 975n, 47 So. 662.

[17] Western & Atlantic Pipe Lines v. Home Ins. Co. 145 Pa. St. 346, 27 Am. St. Rep. 703, 21 Ins. L. J. 24, 22 Atl. 665.

[18] Illinois.—Case v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Ill. 676, 680, per Turnbull, J.

Michigan.—Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 11 Mich. 425.

New York.—City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258; Babcock v. Montgomery Ins. Co. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 637, per Pratt, J.

Pennsylvania.—Hillier v. Allegheny Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Pa. St. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 656.

England.—White Cross Wire & Iron Co. v. Savill, L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 653, 51 L. J. Q. B. 426, 46 L. T. 643, 30 W. R. 588, 4 Asp. M. C. 431.

See next chapter herein, on proximate and remote cause, see also §§ 2811–2813 herein.

Exception of liability; duty of assured to preserve and save property, see § 2596a herein.

used to extinguish fire and save property, the insurers are liable for the damage and loss sustained; as in case where goods, which would have burned otherwise, were damaged by water used to extinguish a fire in the building in which the goods were contained, the insurers were held liable.[19] Cases of this character are analogous to those where a building is destroyed by explosion or otherwise to arrest the progress of a conflagration,[20] as well as to cases of removal of goods in imminent danger of destruction from fire.[1]

§ 2824a. Water supply system useless.—In the absence of express exceptions in the policy, a fire insurance company is not relieved from liability for loss by fire by the fact that, at the time of the fire, the water supply system of the municipality was useless because of bursted or disconnected pipes. And under a policy insuring property against destruction by fire, but providing that the insurer shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by order of any civil authority to prevent the spread of fire, or by explosion of any kind or from any cause, or earthquake, or hurricane, etc., insurer is liable for loss from fire caused by an earthquake and originating in the property or building insured, or spreading from its point of origin to such property or building, and when from the occurrence of the earthquake, the water mains and pipes were disconnected, and the prevention of the system of fire was thereby rendered impossible.[2]

[19] Louisiana.—Geisek v. Crescent Mutual Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 297.

Maine.—White v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. 57 Me. 91, 2 Am. Rep. 22, per Dickenson, J.; Witherell v. Maine Ins. Co. 49 Me. 200.

Massachusetts.—New York & Boston Despatch & Express Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 377, 381, 42 Am. Rep. 440.

North Carolina.—Whitehurst v. Fayetteville Ins. Co. 6 Jones L. 51 (N. C.) 352.

Pennsylvania.—Independent Mutual Ins. Co. v. Agnew, 34 Pa. St. 96, 7 P. L. J. 113.

England.—Thompson v. Montreal Ins. Co. 6 U. C. Q. B. 319.

[20] City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258, per Bronson, J.

[1] White v. Republic Ins. Co. 57 Me. 91, 2 Am. Rep. 22, per Dickenson, J., exertions to protect property from fire, see §§ 2811–2813 herein.

[2] McEvoy v. Security Fire Ins. Co. 110 Md. 275, 22 L.R.A.(N.S) 964, 132 Am. St. Rep. 428, 73 Atl. 157, 38 Ins. L. J. 895 (see this case under § 2582g herein). See also Pacific Union Club v. Commercial Assur. Co. 12 Cal. App. 503, 107 Pac. 728, 39 Ins. L. J. 729, wherein the court cites and considers Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Pacific Union Club, 169 Fed. 776, 95 C. C. A. 242 (between same parties); New York Express Co. v. Traders Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 377, 42 Am. Rep. 440 (where companies were held liable for fire losses for breach of their contract to have water available to extinguish fires. The vessel in which goods were lost met with a collision and was sunk, but the fire disabled the engines so that the pumps could not be operated). See notes

§ 2825. Wind: tornado: hurricane.—Insurance may be effected against the effect of wind and tornado.[3] If a building is weakened by the effect of fire, and the walls fall by reason of a gale of wind seven days after the fire, the insurers are not liable.[4] A high wind may be a "hurricane."[5] A severe storm may be shown to be a "tornado" by proof of its effects upon property in the vicinity,[6] and a loss by tornado may be covered by an insurance against lightning where there are electrical disturbances in the tornado presenting the usual characteristics of lightning.[7]

But a provision contained in a "lightning clause," attached as a rider to a fire policy, that the policy shall not cover loss or damage by cyclone, tornado, or wind storm, is limited to the rider, and does not apply to or vary the contract as contained in the policy.[8] And a policy against loss or damage by wind storms, cyclones, or tornadoes does not cover damage by hail, though accompanied by damage caused by wind, under a provision of the policy denying liability for damage "from hail or lightning, directly or indirectly, or by the blowing down of chimneys, loose clapboards, weather vanes, and shingles, unless other damage occur," since the words "unless other damage occur" are restricted to the last member of the sentence referring to damage by wind, and do not affect the clause as to damage from hail or lightning.[9]

Where a river overflowed and a high wind increasing in violence drove the water against certain buildings covered by the policy whereby their foundations became loosened and they were overthrown, but probably neither the overflow nor the high wind alone

21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 103; 132 Am. St. Rep. 442; 17 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 1097.

As to excepted risks and losses: earthquake; proximate cause, see §§ 2582f, 2582g, 2586, 2833a herein.

[3] Sexton v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 99, 28 N. W. 462; Poggensea v. Mutual Fire, Lightning & Tornado Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 157, 58 Am. Rep. 215, 28 N. W. 485.

As to proximate and remote cause: loss by cyclones, windstorms and tornadoes, see § 2833, herein. (Near end of same.)

[4] Gaskarth v. Law Union Ins. Co. 6 Ins. L. J. 159, Civil Ct. Manchester (Eng.)

[5] Pelican Ins. Co. v. Troy Co-operative Assoc. 77 Tex. 225, 13 S. W. 980.

[6] Poggensea v. Mutual Fire, Lightning & Tornado Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 157, 58 Am. Rep. 215, 28 N. W. 485.

For definitions of "tornado," "hurricane," "windstorm," "blizzard," see Jordan v. Iowa Mutual Tornado Ins. Co. 151 Iowa, 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 266, 130 N. W. 177, 40 Ins. L. J. 1065.

[7] Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894 (two judges dissenting).

[8] Russell v. German Fire Ins. Co. 100 Minn. 528, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 326, 111 N. W. 400, 36 Ins. L. J. 481. See § 2790 herein.

[9] Holmes v. Phenix Ins. Co. 98 Fed. 240, 39 C. C. A. 45, 47 L.R.A. 308. See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 64 Kan. 115, 67 Pac. 440.

would have caused the damage, it was held that recovery was precluded under an insurance against all direct loss or damage by tornado, wind storm or cyclone, but loss or damage occasioned directly or indirectly by high water or overflow was an excepted risk, for, if there had been no overflow the water would not have been blown against the building, and the flood was therefore held to be at least the indirect if not the direct cause of the loss.[10] So the fact that water is driven by the wind and destroys a dwelling house on the seashore nevertheless makes the loss one occasioned by water within an exception of liability for loss so caused.[11] But damage to insured property from a "sudden rise of the water" or a flood, is damage by accident within the meaning of an insurance policy indemnifying against loss from any accidental damage "excepting only damage by fire or lightning." [12]

§ 2825a. Workmen's compensation: insurance risk.—Where a policy agreed to assume and perform each and every obligation imposed by the Workmen's Compensation Act of Michigan, which was required of it to do and perform on account of personal injuries including death resulting therefrom, sustained by any employee or employees of assured while the policy was in force and arising out of and in the course of employment and in connection with and in the operation of the specified business, the liability is limited to cases of employment in connection with and in the operation of assured's business and does not extend to all injuries, etc., in any employment, and therefore does not include work whether done gratuitously or for a consideration which has no connection with the business specified in the policy, especially so where the character of the employment is particularly described therein.[13] In another case the proceeding was under the workmen's compensation act of Massachusetts and the question was whether a workman received his injury in the course of and arising out of his employment, and whether the conducting of a retail store was under said enactment. The policy was issued under said statute to a shoe manufacturer and the employee had been engaged in a position equivalent to a manager of one of insured's retail stores. At the time of the injury, said

[10] National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crutchfield, 160 Ky. 802, L.R.A.1915B, 1094, 170 S. W. 1087.

[11] Newark Trust Co. v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 237 Fed. 788, 150 C. C. A. 542.

[12] Hey v. Guarantor's Liability Indemnity Co. 181 Pa. St. 220, 59 Am. St. Rep. 644, 37 Atl. 402.

[13] Bayer v. Bayer, 191 Mich. 423, 158 N. W. 109. Acts No. 10. Public Acts, Mich. Extra Session 1912.

As to injury to employee causing insanity and consequent death by suicide; Workmen's Compensation, see note 17, p. 4466 herein.

As to Workmen's Compensation: insurance feature of Connecticut statute, see Wright v. Barnes, 1 Conn. Compensation Dec. 248.

employee was working overtime and was injured by falling down stairs in the evening while answering a telephone call from his daughter, and the evidence warranted the conclusion that it was his duty to answer telephone calls even outside of the usual business hours, and it did not appear that the time spent in this particular instance was longer than necessary in answering a call, accordingly the injury was held to be one sustained or received in the course of and arising out of his employment. It was also declared that the fact that the terms of the policy applied only to the factory at a certain place, was not of much importance so far as the employee was concerned; that the statute fixed the scope of the insurance so far as the rights of the employees were concerned; that if the employer became a "subscriber" under said enactment then the rights of the employee could not be narrowed down by contract between the employer and insurer. The court, per Rugg, C. J., said: "It may be that the terms of the contract of insurance might be so narrow as not to bring the employee within the act. But the present is not such a case. The obligation of the policy is 'to pay the compensation . . . provided for by the Workmen's Compensation Act . . . to any person . . . to whom such compensation . . . shall become due.' The insurer, therefore, has assumed an obligation as broad as the Act, and the employer was a subscriber. The proceeding does not relate to the rights and duties between the insurer and the employer." [13a]

In an English case a small farmer employing only one laborer, his son, took out a policy under the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1906 of England, and in the proposal he agreed to render at the end of each period of insurance a statement in the form required by the society of all wages actually paid and to pay premium on the wages in excess of the amount estimated in the contract; and there was also a provision requiring a wages book to be kept showing the name of every employee and the amount of wages, salary, and other earnings paid to him such wages book to be at all times subject to inspection by said society. The laborer met with an accident which would have entitled him to compensation under [13a] Cox's Case, 225 Mass. 220, 114 N. E. 28 (the contract of insurance was to pay the compensation and to furnish the medical and hospital services and medicines provided for by the workmen's compensation act, viz.: Part II. of chapter 751 of the Massachusetts Acts & Resolutions of 1911, and amendments and additions thereto to any person or persons to whom such compensation or services shall become due and to indemnify the insured under provisions of section 22 of Part IV. of said Act, for or on account of personal injuries including death resulting at any time therefrom received or suffered by any employee or employees of the insured, etc.).

the above-stated statute the condition as to keeping a wages book was not complied with, but it was held that a recovery was not precluded thereby as the condition under the rule of construction in favor of the policyholder would be deemed to refer to the statement in the proposal which assured agreed to render at the end of each period of insurance and ought not to be regarded as a condition precedent and it was further declared that it would be unreasonable to hold that the society could escape all liability by reason of failure to comply with said condition.[14]

[14] Bradley & Essex & Suffolk Accident Indemnity Soc. Ltd. In re, 81 L. J. K. B. 523, [1912] 1 K. B. 415, 105 L. T. 919, 28 T. L. R. 175, [1912] W. C. Rep. 6; Fletcher Moulton, L. J. dissenting; Farwell, L. J., concurring said in conclusion: "The condition if it be one is to keep 'a proper wages book;' that must mean in my opinion, 'proper under the circumstances of the case, and for the business or trade of the insurer.' Take the case of a lodging house keeper with one maid. I think it would be absurd to lay it down as a matter of law, without evidence, that it is proper or usual for such a woman to keep a wages book; and I think the same observation applies to a small farmer (even though he also adds a carrier's business to his farming) who employs his son as his only servant," and he also assents: "I think it the duty of all insuring companies to state in clear and plain terms as conditions precedent, those provisions only which are such,—not to wrap them up in a number of clauses which are not conditions precedent at all; and I think, further, that it is their duty to call attention to such conditions in the forms of proposal, so as to make sure that the insurers understand their liabilities" the conditions were set out in small print in the policy.

LAW LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY
AA 000 742 917 8